

346.4 Mx North

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

THE
ALL ENGLAND
LAW REPORTS

OF CASES DECIDED IN

THE HOUSE OF LORDS

THE PRIVY COUNCIL

ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT

AND

COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1947
VOLUME 1

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, K.C.

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, K.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN,

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

Published by the Proprietors of
THE LAW JOURNAL, 11 & 12 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS.

CONSULTING EDITOR :

SIR ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.,
Recorder of Cambridge.

MANAGING EDITOR OF HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, HAILSHAM EDITION

CONSULTING EDITOR FOR CHANCERY CASES :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, Esq., K.C.,
Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

CONSULTING EDITOR FOR TAXATION CASES :

CYRIL KING, Esq., K.C.,
Bencher of the Middle Temple.

GENERAL EDITOR :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, Esq.,
of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

REPORTERS :

House of Lords	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Privy Council	C. R. L. PHILLIPS	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 1 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 2 ..	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 3 ..	R. L. ZIAR, B.A. (CANTAB.)	Barrister-at-Law
Chancery Division ..	R. D. H. OSBORNE	Barrister-at-Law
King's Bench Division ..	{ M. D. CHORLTON, M.A. (OXON.) W. J. ALDERMAN F. A. AMES, B.A. (LEEDS) GWYNEDD LEWIS }	Barristers-at-Law
Court of Criminal Appeal, and Railway and Canal Commission Cases	{ R. HENDRY WHITE }	Barrister-at-Law
Probate and Divorce ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law
Ecclesiastical Cases ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME I

	PAGE		PAGE
ADLARD, HOUGHTON v. Re HOLLIDAY'S WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	695	BRAIN v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	892
AGAR v. BERMEJO ESTANCIA Co., LTD. LEDINGHAM v. SAME [K.B.D.]	749	BRETT v. BINGHAM. Re GOLDSMITH'S WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	451
ALSTON, LEAN v. [C.A.]	261	BRERLEY v. PHILIPS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	269
AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD., WILDS v. SAME v. SAME [C.A.]	551	BRIGHTON CORPORATION, TAYLOR v. [C.A.]	864
ANDREW v. VINE, Re NORMAN [CH.D.]	400	BRIMS, CLARK AND WIFE v. [K.B.D.]	242
ANDREWS v. CORDINER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	777	BROOKES v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD [K.B.D.]	506
APLEY ESTATES Co. v. DE BERNALDES [C.A.]	213	BROOKS, WILLIS v. [K.B.D.]	191
APT (OTHERWISE MAGNUS) v. APT [DIV.]	620	BUCHLER v. BUCHLER [C.A.]	319
ARNO, RE HEALEY v. ARNO [C.A.]	64	BUCK v. HOWARTH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	342
ARTILLERY MANSIONS, LTD. v. MABARTNEY [K.B.D.]	686	BUENOS AYRES GREAT SOUTHERN RY. Co., LTD., Re , THE COMPANY v. PRESTON [CH.D.]	729
ASKEW v. BOWTELL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	883	BULL v. VAZQUEZ [C.A.]	334
ASSOCIATED PROVINCIAL PICTURE HOUSES, LTD. v. WEDNESBURY CORPN. [K.B.D.]	498	BURLEY (C.), LTD. v. STEPNEY CORPN. [K.B.D.]	507
ATRINS, LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. Re JAMES [CH.D.]	402	BURRIDGE v. DOUGHTY, Re DOUGHTY [C.A.]	207
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, COTTESLOE v., Re MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT [CH.D.]	345	CAKEREAD v. HOPPING BROS. (WHETSTONE), LTD. [C.A.]	389
ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NORTHWOOD ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER Co., LTD. [C.A.]	483	CALVERT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WAINWRIGHT [K.B.D.]	282
ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WEST MONMOUTHSHIRE OMNIBUS BOARD [CH.D.]	248	CARTLIDGE, ELKINS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	829
ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CANADA, ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO v. (ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF QUEBEC INTERVENING) [P.C.]	137	CATALINAS WAREHOUSES AND MOLE Co., LTD., Re [CH.D.]	51
ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CANADA, (ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF QUEBEC INTERVENING) [P.C.]	137	CHANDLER v. STREVETT [C.A.]	164
ATWOOD v. BENETT-STANFORD, Re BENETT-STANFORD SETTLEMENT TRUSTS [CH.D.]	888	CHESTERTON R.D.C. v. RALPH THOMPSON, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	273
AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.]	600	CHRISTIE v. LEACHINSKY [H.L.]	567
BALL, Re , HAND v. BALL [CH.D.]	458	CLARK AND WIFE v. BRIMS [K.B.D.]	242
BALL, R. v. [C.A.]	518	CLENCH, WALLACE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	175
BARBER, WALKER & Co., LTD., HALLIDAY v. [H.L.]	595	COE, PAYNE v. [CH.D.]	841
BARCLAYS BANK, LTD., JARRETT v. NASH v. JARRETT [C.A.]	72	COLLINS v. COLLINS AND DOVE [DIV.]	793
BARNESLEY v. MARSH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	874	COLLINS v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D.]	633
BARNESLEY CORPORATION, Ex parte , R. v. LUDLOW [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	880	COLLINS, R. v. [C.A.]	147
BAUGHAN, Re . OFFICIAL RECEIVER (TRUSTEE) v. A. H. BENNETT AND WALLIS & STEEVENS, LTD. [CH.D.]	417	COMBE v. SWATHLING [CH.D.]	838
BAWN (W. B.) & Co., LTD., SHARPLIN v. [C.A.]	436	COMPTON D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOEREN-BOND BELGE S.A. v. LOUIS DE RIDDER LIMITADA. THE JULIA [K.B.D.]	118
BAXTER v. BAXTER [C.A.]	387	COMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), MANN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. MANN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	742
BENETT-STANFORD SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re , ATWOOD v. BENETT-STANFORD [CH.D.]	888	CONGREVE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	168
BENNETT (A. H.) AND WALLIS & STEEVENS, LTD., OFFICIAL RECEIVER (TRUSTEE) v. Re BAUGHAN [CH.D.]	417	CORDINER, ANDREWS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	777
BERMEJO ESTANCIA Co., LTD., LEDINGHAM v. AGAR v. BERMEJO ESTANCIA Co., LTD.	749	COTTESLOE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Re MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT [CH.D.]	345
BINGHAM, BRETT v. Re GOLDSMITH'S WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	451	COUCHMAN v. HILL [C.A.]	103
BODMIN JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte McEWEEN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	109	COVENTRY CORPN., ROBERTS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	308
BOGGAN, PARKER v. [K.B.D.]	46	CRAWSHAY, Re , HORE-RUTHVEN v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE [CH.D.]	643
BOLLARD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	704	CROYDON CORPN. v. THOMAS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	239
BOLSOVER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BOLSOVER COLLIERY Co., LTD. [CH.D.]	130	DAILEY v. DAILEY (OTHERWISE SMITH) [DIV.]	847
BOMFORD v. SOUTH WORCESTERSHIRE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	299	DAVEY, Re [C.A.]	90
BOOTLE CORPN., SUTTON v. [C.A.]	92	DAVIS (W.) (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. HUNTLEY [K.B.D.]	246
BOTIBOL (deceased), Re , BOTIBOL v. BOTIBOL [CH.D.]	26	DE BERNALDES, APLEY ESTATES Co. v. [C.A.]	213
BOUCHER v. ROWSELL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	870	DEBTOR (No. 707 of 1939), Re A. OFFICIAL RECEIVER AND TRUSTEE v. UNITED AUTO AND FINANCE CORPN., LTD. AND INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	417
BOURNE, PHILLIPS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [K.B.D.]	374	DENERLEY v. SPINK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	835
BOWTELL, ASKEW v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	883	DEVON, SPENCER TRADING Co., LTD. v. (FIXOL AND STICKPHASE, LTD., THIRD PARTIES) [K.B.D.]	284
BOYCE, WILTSHIRE COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	820	DICKER (deceased), Re [CH.D.]	317
BRACEGIRDLE v. OXLEY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	126	DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, Re DIPLOCK v. WINTLE, (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS) [CH.D.]	522

	PAGE
DOULTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), PEARCE v. [K.B.D.]	378
DOVE AND COLLINS, COLLINS v. [Div.]	793
DREDGE v. DREDGE (OTHERWISE HARRISON) [Div.]	29
DUNCAN, HORDERN RICHMOND, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	427
DUNGEY v. TURNBRIDGE WELLS PROPERTIES, LTD. [Ch.D.]	785
DUNN v. LOCKWOOD (A. G.) & CO. [C.A.]	446
EARP v. ROBERTS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	136
EAST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL, Ex p. , R. v. ESSEX J.J. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	775
EAST KESTEVEN RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, R. v. Ex parte SLEAFORD AND DISTRICT WHITE CITY SPORTS STADIUM CO. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	310
EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. RUSSELL [K.B.D.]	500
EDWARDS v. JONES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	830
EDWARDS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	379
EDWARDS, R. v. Ex parte JOSEPH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	314
ELKINS v. CARLIDGE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	829
ELLIOT, LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	79
ELLIS (JOHN T.), LTD. v. HINDS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	337
ENGEL, WEINGARTEN v. [K.B.D.]	425
ENGLISH SEWING COTTON CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	679
ESSEX J.J., R. v. Ex p. EAST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	775
EYRE v. REA [K.B.D.]	415
FABERI v. MORRIS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	315
FOLLETT v. LUKE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	35
FORSYTH v. FORSYTH [Div.]	406
FRANKLIN v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [K.B.D.]	396
—, [C.A.]	612
FRASER v. FRASER [Div.]	334
FURBY v. HOEY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	236
FURNISHED HOUSES RENT TRIBUNAL FOR PADDINGTON AND ST. MARLYBONE, R. v. Ex parte KENDAL HOTELS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	448
FUSSELL v. SOMERSET QUARTER SESSIONS LICENSING COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	44
GARDNER v. GARDNER [Div.]	630
GARDNER, MOUNTAIN AND D'AMBREMENIL, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	650
GIDDYS v. HORSFALL [K.B.D.]	460
GINGER COOTE AIRWAYS, LTD., LUDDITT v. [P.C.]	328
GLASGOW CORPN., GRAHAM (OR MILLER) v. [H.L.]	1
GOLDSMITH'S WILL TRUSTS, Re , BRETT v. BINGHAM [Ch.D.]	451
GOODWIN, KELLEY v. [C.A.]	810
GOODWIN v. STORRAK [K.B.D.]	203
GRAHAM (OR MILLER) v. GLASGOW CORPN. [H.L.]	1
GREAT WESTERN RY. CO., PEGLER v. [C.A.]	355
GUBERTINI v. WALLER [K.B.D.]	746
GUGENHEIM v. LADBROKE & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	292
HALL v. JORDAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	826
HALLIDAY v. BARBER, WALKER & CO., LTD. [H.L.]	595
HAND v. BALL, Re BALL [Ch.D.]	458
HARRIS v. HAWKINS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	312
HARRIS, THOMAS v. [C.A.]	444
HARVEY, Re PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HOSKIN [Ch.D.]	349
HAWKINS, HARRIS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	312
HAWKINS v. PRICE [Ch.D.]	689
HEALD v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	748
HEALEY v. ARNO, Re ARNO [C.A.]	64
HENDON BOROUGH COUNCIL v. STANGER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	877
HENRY RICHARDSON, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	275
HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, COLLINS v. [K.B.D.]	633
HIGH DUTY ALLOYS, LTD., NASH v. [C.A.]	363
HILL, COUCHMAN v. [C.A.]	103
HILL v. HILL [C.A.]	54
HILL AND LLOYD, LLOYD v. [Div.]	383
HINDS, JOHN T. ELLIS, LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	337
HOEY, FURBY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	236
HOGG v. SCOTT [K.B.D.]	788
HOLBORN v. HOLBORN [Div.]	32
HOLLIDAY'S WILL TRUSTS, Re , HOUGHTON v. ADLARD [Ch.D.]	695
HOLLORN v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	124
HOLT v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	148
HOPPING BROS. (WHETSTONE), LTD., CAKEBREAD v. [C.A.]	389
HORDERN RICHMOND, LTD. v. DUNCAN [K.B.D.]	427

	PAGE
HORE-RUTHVEN v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE, Re CRAWSHAY [Ch.D.]	643
HORSFALL, GIDDYS v. [K.B.D.]	460
HOSKIN, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. Re HARVEY [Ch.D.]	349
HOUGHTON v. ADLARD Re HOLLIDAY'S WILL TRUSTS [Ch.D.]	695
HOWARTH, BUCK v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	342
HUNTLEY, DAVIS (W.) (SEITALEFIELDS, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	246
ILES, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [K.B.D.]	798
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY [H.L.]	600
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., CONGREVE v. [C.A.]	168
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., DIXON & GAUNT, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	723
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., ENGLISH SEWING COTTON CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	679
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., GARDNER, MOUNTAIN AND D'AMBREMENIL, LTD. v. [H.L.]	650
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., HENRY RICHARDSON, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	275
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., HOLT v. [C.A.]	148
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ILES [K.B.D.]	798
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., MANN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. MANN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. COMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [K.B.D.]	742
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., NEILD v. [C.A.]	480
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. NORTHERN ALUMINIUM CO., LTD. [H.L.]	608
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	699
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	704
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., WILLIAMS' (SIR H. J.) TRUST, TRUSTEES v. [H.L.]	513
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. AND UNITED AUTO AND FINANCE CORPN., LTD., OFFICIAL RECEIVER AND TRUSTEE v. Re A DEBTOR (NO. 707 OF 1939) [Ch.D.]	417
I.T.P. (LONDON), LTD. v. WINSTANLEY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	177
J. & E. HALL, LTD., ROCHMAN, LTD. [K.B.D.]	895
JAMAICA STREET, STEPNEY, Re 36, 38, 40 & 42 [C.A.]	754
JAMES, Re , LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. ATKINS [Ch.D.]	402
JARRETT v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. NASH v. JARRETT [C.A.]	72
JIGGINS AND SPRING, SPRING v. [Div.]	886
JOHN T. ELLIS, LTD. v. HINDS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	337
JONES, EDWARDS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	830
JONES, ROUTH v. [Ch.D.]	179
—, [C.A.]	758
JORDAN, HALL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	826
JORDAN v. MAY [C.A.]	231
JOSEPH, Ex parte , R. v. EDWARDS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	314
JULIA, THE, COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA [K.B.D.]	118
KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	699
KELLEY v. GOODWIN [C.A.]	810
KENDAL HOTELS, LTD., Ex parte , R. v. FURNISHED HOUSES RENT TRIBUNAL FOR PADDINGTON AND ST. MARLYBONE [K.B.D.]	448
KENNEDY, OUZMAN v. [C.A.]	99
KILBURN ENVOY, LTD., M.W. INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	710
KIMBER v. WILLIAM WILLET, LTD. [C.A.]	361
KINNEL, CANNELL AND COKING COAL CO., LTD., DOUDIE v. [H.L.]	6
KINSETH, Re [Ch.D.]	201
KIRBY, SMITH (A. J.) & CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	459
KLIGER v. SADWICK [K.B.D.]	840
KNIGHTS, THOMSON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	112
KNOWLER, RENNISON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	302
LADBROKE v. WILLIAMSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	824
LADBROKE & CO., LTD., GUGENHEIM v. [C.A.]	292
LE JEAN, LTD., SALES AFFILIATES, LTD. v. [Ch.D.]	287
LEACHINSKY, CHRISTIE v. [H.L.]	567
LEAMINGTON SPA LICENSING JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte PINNINGTON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	114
LEAN v. ALSTON [C.A.]	261
LEDINGHAM v. BERMEJO ESTANCIA CO., LTD. AGAR v. SAME [K.B.D.]	749
LLOYD v. LLOYD AND HILL [Div.]	388
LLOYD-DAVIES v. LLOYD-DAVIES [C.A.]	161

LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. ATKINS, Re JAMES [Ch.D.]	402
LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. ELLIOT [K.B.D.]	79
LOCKWOOD (A. G.) & Co., DUNN v. [C.A.]	446
LOEWENTHAL v. VANHOUTE [K.B.D.]	116
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, MARTIN v. [K.B.D.]	783
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD, BROOKES v. [K.B.D.]	506
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD, WILKIE v. [C.A.]	258
LOWE, PEACH v. [C.A.]	441
LUDDITT v. GINGER COOTE AIRWAYS, LTD. [P.C.]	328
LUDLOW, R. v., Ex parte BARNSELY CORPORATION [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	880
LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA, COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. THE JULIA [K.B.D.]	118
LUKE, FOLLETT v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	35
MABARTNEY, ARTILLERY MANSIONS, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	686
MCCULLOUGH, THOMPSON v. [C.A.]	265
MCDONALD (D. P.) & SONS, LTD. v. SHARPE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	271
MC EWEN, Ex parte , R. v. BODMIN JUSTICES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	109
MAGNESIUM CASTINGS & PRODUCTS, LTD., OLSEN v. [C.A.]	333
MAIN (deceased), Re , OFFICIAL SOLICITOR v. MAIN [Ch.D.]	255
MANN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. COMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), SAME v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	742
MARSH, BARNSELY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	874
MARTIN v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D.]	783
MAY, JORDAN v. [C.A.]	231
MERCHANT NAVY SUPPLY ASSOCN., LTD., Re [Ch.D.]	894
MERVYN, SEABROOK v. [C.A.]	295
MIDDLESBROUGH ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, A. RICHARDSON & SON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	884
MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT, Re , COTESLOE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL [Ch.D.]	345
MIDGLEY HARMER, LTD., Ex parte , R. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL [C.A.]	196
MINISTER OF HEALTH, PRICE v. [K.B.D.]	47
MINISTER OF HEALTH, RODWELL v. [K.B.D.]	80
MINISTER OF HEALTH, SUMMERS v. [K.B.D.]	184
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, BRAIN v. [K.B.D.]	802
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, EDWARDS v. [K.B.D.]	379
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, HEALD v. [K.B.D.]	748
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, HOLLORN v. [K.B.D.]	124
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, STAYNINGS v. [K.B.D.]	347
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, X.Y. v. [K.B.D.]	38
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, FRANKLIN v. [K.B.D.]	396
—, [C.A.]	612
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, PHOENIX ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	454
MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING, ROBINSON v. [C.A.]	851
MONMOUTHSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, NEWPORT BOROUGH COUNCIL v. MONMOUTHSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. NEWPORT BOROUGH COUNCIL [H.L.]	900
MORRIS, FABRI v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	315
M.W. INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. KILBURN ENVOY, LTD. [C.A.]	710
NASH v. HIGH DUTY ALLOYS, LTD. [C.A.]	363
NASH v. JARRETT, JARRETT v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. [C.A.]	72
NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte MIDGLEY HARMER, LTD. [C.A.]	196
NEILD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	480
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME CORPN. v. WOLSTANTON, LTD. [C.A.]	218
NEWPORT BOROUGH COUNCIL v. MONMOUTHSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. NEWPORT BOROUGH COUNCIL [H.L.]	900
NORMAN, Re , ANDREW v. VINE [Ch.D.]	400
NORTH WEST NORFOLK ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, PRATT v. [H.L.]	920
NORTHERN ALUMINIUM CO., LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.]	608
NORTHWOOD ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER CO., LTD., ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. [C.A.]	483
OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF BOMBAY, TRUSTEE v. Re TEMPLE, Ex parte OFFICIAL RECEIVER [Ch.D.]	592
OFFICIAL RECEIVER, Ex parte , Re TEMPLE, TRUSTEE v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF BOMBAY [Ch.D.]	592

OFFICIAL RECEIVER AND TRUSTEE v. UNITED AUTO AND FINANCE CORPN., LTD. AND INLAND REVENUE COMRS. Re A DEBTOR (No. 707 OF 1939) [Ch.D.]	417
OFFICIAL RECEIVER (TRUSTEE) v. A. H. BENNETT AND WALLIS & STEEVENS, LTD. Re BAUGHAN [Ch.D.]	417
OFFICIAL SOLICITOR v. MAIN, Re MAIN (deceased) [Ch.D.]	255
O'KEEFE, WILLIAMSON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	307
OLSEN v. MAGNESIUM CASTINGS & PRODUCTS, LTD. [C.A.]	333
OUZMAN v. KENNEDY [C.A.]	99
OXLEY, BRACEGIRDLE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	126
PARKER v. BOGGAN [K.B.D.]	46
PARKER v. ROSENBERG [C.A.]	87
PAYNE v. COE [Ch.D.]	841
PEACH v. LOWE [C.A.]	441
PEARCE v. DOULTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [K.B.D.]	378
PEGLER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. [C.A.]	355
PERRINS v. PYE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	872
PERRINS, SKELDING v. [C.A.]	490
PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN, POTTER & CLARKE, LTD. v. [C.A.]	802
PHILLIPS, BRIERLEY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	269
PHILLIPS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BOURNE [K.B.D.]	374
PHOENIX ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [K.B.D.]	454
PINNINGTON, Ex parte , R. v. LEAMINGTON SPA LICENSING JUSTICES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	114
POCOCK v. VICKERS, Re VICKER'S LEASE [Ch.D.]	195
—, [C.A.]	707
POTTER & CLARKE, LTD. v. PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN [C.A.]	802
POULTER, SMITH v. [K.B.D.]	216
PRATT v. NORTH WEST NORFOLK ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [H.L.]	920
PRESTON, THE COMPANY v. Re BUENOS AYRES GREAT SOUTHERN RY. CO., LTD. [Ch.D.]	729
PRICE, HAWKINS v. [Ch.D.]	689
PRICE v. MINISTER OF HEALTH [K.B.D.]	47
PRIESTLEY'S CONTRACT, Re [Ch.D.]	716
PROGRESS BUILDING, LTD. v. WESTMINSTER CITY CORPN. [K.B.D.]	684
PRYOR v. PRYOR [Div.]	381
PUBLIC TRUSTEE, HORE-RUTHVEN v., Re CRAWSHAY [Ch.D.]	643
PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HOSKIN, Re HARVEY [Ch.D.]	349
PUNTSCHART, TWYFOED v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	773
PYE, PERRINS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	872
R. v. BALL [C.C.A.]	818
R. v. BODMIN JUSTICES, Ex parte McEWEN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	109
R. v. COLLINS [C.C.A.]	147
R. v. EAST KESTEVEN RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ex parte SLEAFORD AND DISTRICT WHITE CITY SPORTS STADIUM CO. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	310
R. v. EDWARDS, Ex parte JOSEPH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	314
R. v. ESSEX JJ., Ex p. EAST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	775
R. v. FURNISHED HOUSES RENT TRIBUNAL FOR PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE, Ex parte KENDAL HOTELS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	448
R. v. LEAMINGTON SPA LICENSING JUSTICES, Ex parte PINNINGTON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	114
R. v. LUDLOW, Ex parte BARNSELY CORPORATION [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	880
R. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, Ex parte MIDGLEY HARMER, LTD. [C.A.]	196
R. v. RECORDER OF LEICESTER, Ex parte WOOD [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	928
R. v. STEANE [C.C.A.]	813
R. v. WEYMOUTH CORPN., Ex parte TELETAX (WEYMOUTH), LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	779
RALPH THOMPSON, LTD., CHESTERTON R.D.C. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	273
RATING AUTHORITY FOR THE MARLBOROUGH AND RAMSBURY RURAL DISTRICT, WILTSHIRE COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	820
REA, EYRE v. [K.B.D.]	415
READ v. DONOVAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	37
RECEIVING ORDER (IN BANKRUPTCY) Re A [Ch.D.]	843
RECORDER OF LEICESTER, R. v. Ex parte WOOD [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	928
REEVES (E. A. M.) v. REEVES (T. A.) [Div.]	793
RENNISON v. KNOWLER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	302
RICHARDSON (A.) & SON v. MIDDLESBROUGH ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	884

	PAGE
RICHES v. WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. [H.L.]	469
ROBERTS v. COVENTRY CORPN. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	308
ROBERTS, EARP v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	136
ROBINSON v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [C.A.]	851
ROBINSON v. THAMES MEAD PARK ESTATES [CH. D.]	366
ROCHMAN v. J. & E. HALL, LTD. [K.B.D.]	895
RODWELL v. MINISTER OF HEALTH [K.B.D.]	80
ROMAN v. ROMAN [C.A.]	434
ROSENBERG, PARKER v. [C.A.]	87
ROUTH v. JONES [CH.D.]	179
—, C.A.	758
ROWSELL, BOUCHER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	870
ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE v. DONALD. Re DONALD (deceased)	764
RUSHDEN HEEL CO. LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	699
RUSSELL, EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. [K.B.D.]	500
"SADO MARU," PART CARGO ex S.S. [ADM.]	430
SADWICK, KLIGER v. [K.B.D.]	840
SAGE v. SAGE [DIV.]	492
SALES AFFILIATES, LTD. v. LE JEAN, LTD. [CH.D.]	287
SAS, SOCHACKI v. [K.B.D.]	344
SCOTT, HOGG v. [K.B.D.]	783
SEABROOK v. MERVYN [C.A.]	295
SEARLE v. WALLBANK [H.L.]	12
SHARPE, MACDONALD (D. P.) & SONS, LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	271
SHARPLIN v. BAWN (W. B.) & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	436
SHORT v. TREASURY COMMISSIONERS [K.B.D.]	22
SKELDING v. PERRINS [C.A.]	490
SLEAFORD AND DISTRICT WHITE CITY SPORTS STADIUM CO., Ex parte . R. v. EAST KESSEVEN RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	310
SMITH, Re [C.A.]	769
SMITH v. POULTER [K.B.D.]	216
SMITH, THORNE v. [C.A.]	39
SMITH (A. J.) & CO., LTD. v. KIRBY [K.B.D.]	459
SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	704
SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	704
SOCHACKI v. SAS [K.B.D.]	344
SOLICITOR, Re A., Re TAXATION OF COSTS [CH.D.]	369
SOMERSET QUARTER SESSIONS LICENSING COMMITTEE, FUSSELL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	44
SOUTH SOMERSET AND DISTRICT ELECTRICITY CO., LTD., YEovil RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [C.A.]	669
SOUTH WORCESTERSHIRE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, BOMFORD v. [C.A.]	299
SPENCER TRADING CO., LTD. v. DEVON [FIXOL AND STICKPHAST, LTD., THIRD PARTIES] [K.B.D.]	284
SPINK, DENERLEY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	835
SPRING v. SPRING AND JIGGINS [DIV.]	886
SPROULE, TENDLER v. [C.A.]	193
STANGER, HENDON BOROUGH COUNCIL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	877
STARKEY v. WHITWICH COLLIERY CO., LTD. [C.A.]	464
STAYNINGS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	347
STEANE, R. v. [C.C.A.]	813
STENEY CORPN., BURLEY (C.), LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	507
STOCKBRIDGE v. STOCKBRIDGE [DIV.]	492
STORRAR, GOODWIN v. [K.B.D.]	203
STREVETT, CHANDLER v. [C.A.]	164
SUMMERS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH [K.B.D.]	184
SUTTON v. BOOTLE CORPN. [C.A.]	92
SWAYTHLING, COMBE v. [CH.D.]	838
TAYLOR v. BRIGHTON CORPORATION [C.A.]	864
TELETAX (WEYMOUTH), LTD., Ex parte . R. v. WEYMOUTH CORPN. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	779
TEMPLE, Re . Ex parte THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER. THE TRUSTEE v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF BOMBAY [CH.D.]	592

	PAGE
TENDLER v. SPROULE [C.A.]	193
THAMES MEAD PARK ESTATES, LTD., ROBINSON v. [CH.D.]	366
THOMAS, CROYDON CORPN. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	239
THOMAS v. HARRIS [C.A.]	444
THOMAS, WATT (OR THOMAS) v. [H.L.]	582
THOMSON v. KNIGHTS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	112
THOMPSON v. MCCULLOUGH [C.A.]	265
THORNE v. SMITH [C.A.]	39
TREASURY COMMISSIONERS, SHORT v. [K.B.D.]	22
TRUSTEE v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF BOMBAY. Re TEMPLE. Ex parte OFFICIAL RECEIVER [CH.D.]	592
TUNBRIDGE WELLS PROPERTIES, LTD., DUNGEY v. [CH.D.]	785
TWYFORD v. PUNTSCHART [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	773
UNITED AUTO AND FINANCE CORPN., LTD. AND INLAND REVENUE COMRS., OFFICIAL RECEIVER AND TRUSTEE v. Re A DEBTOR (NO. 707 OF 1939) [CH.D.]	417
VANHOUTE, LOEWENTHAL v. [K.B.D.]	116
VAZQUEZ, BULL v. [C.A.]	334
VICKER'S LEASE, Re , POCOCK v. VICKERS [CH.D.]	195
—, [C.A.]	707
VINE, ANDREW v. Re NORMAN [CH.D.]	400
WAINWRIGHT, CALVERT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [K.B.D.]	282
WALLACE v. CLENCH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	175
WALLBANK, SEARLE v. [H.L.]	12
WALLER, GUBERTINI v. [K.B.D.]	746
WALLIS & STEVENS, LTD. AND A. H. BENNETT, OFFICIAL RECEIVER (TRUSTEE) v. Re BAUGHAN [CH.D.]	417
WASSELL v. WEST CANNOCK COLLIERY CO., LTD. [C.A.]	106
WATT (OR THOMAS) v. THOMAS [H.L.]	582
WEATHERLEY v. WEATHERLEY [H.L.]	563
WEDNESBURY CORPN., ASSOCIATED PROVINCIAL PICTURE HOUSES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	498
WEINGARTEN v. ENGEL [K.B.D.]	425
WEST CANNOCK COLLIERY CO., LTD., WASSELL v. [C.A.]	106
WEST MONMOUTHSHIRE OMNIBUS BOARD, A.-G. v. [CH.D.]	248
WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD., RICHES v. [H.L.]	469
WESTMINSTER CITY CORPORATION, PROGRESS BUILDINGS, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	684
WEYMOUTH CORPN., R. v., Ex parte TELETAX (WEYMOUTH), LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	779
WHITLEY v. WHITLEY [C.A.]	667
WHITWICH COLLIERY CO., LTD., STARKEY v. [C.A.]	464
WICKS v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS [H.L.]	205
WILDS v. AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD. SAME v. SAME [C.A.]	551
WILKIE v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD [C.A.]	258
WILLETT, (WILLIAM), LTD., KIMBER v. [C.A.]	361
WILLIAM WILLETT, LTD., KIMBER v. [C.A.]	361
WILLIAMS' (SIR H. J.) TRUST, TRUSTEES v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	513
WILLIAMSON, LABRUM v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	824
WILLIAMSON v. O'KEEFE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	307
WILLIAMSON v. WILSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	306
WILLIS v. BROOKS [K.B.D.]	191
WILSON, WILLIAMSON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	306
WILTSHIRE COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE v. BOYCE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	820
WILTSHIRE COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE v. RATING AUTHORITY FOR THE MARLBOROUGH AND RAMSBURY RURAL DISTRICT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	820
WINSTANLEY, I.T.P. (LONDON), LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	177
WINTLE (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS), DIPLOCK v. Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE [CH.D.]	525
WOLSTANTON, LTD., NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME CORPN. v. [C.A.]	218
WOOD, Ex parte . R. v. RECORDER OF LEICESTER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	928
X.Y. v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	38
YEovil RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SOUTH SOMERSET AND DISTRICT ELECTRICITY CO., LTD. [C.A.]	669

INDEX

	PAGE
ACQUISITION OF LAND
Compensation—Owner also a shareholder and director of tenant company—Possible depreciation of shares through notice to quit— Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919 (c. 57), s. 2 [ROBERTS v. COVENTRY CORPN.]	308
Acquisition of Land, compulsory, see Public Health (Housing)
Action, striking out, see Practice
Administration, order of application of assets, variation of statutory order, "property specifically appropriated for payment of debts," property specifically given "after payment of debts," exoneration of residue..	402
Adoption, see Infants and Children
Adultery, see Divorce
Advertisement, cure for tuberculosis, advertisement, circular and letter together amounting to advertisement..	136
AGENCY
Remuneration—Commission—Estate agent—Contract to pay commission on introduction of "party prepared to purchase"—Willing purchaser found—Vendor's refusal to complete [GIDDYS v. HORSFALL]	460
Agricultural land, protection by planning authority	310
Agriculture, rating, valuation, worker's cottage, limitation of value by amount in respect of cottage which may be deducted from wages	299
Alteration of area, of local authority, see Local Government ANIMALS
Trespass—Horse on highway—Escape through gap in fence of field adjoining highway—Collision with cyclist—Duty so to maintain gates and fences that escape of animals impossible—Duty to take reasonable care to prevent escape [SEARLE v. WALLBANK]	12
Appeal, see Practice
—, see Privy Council
Appeal (to House of Lords), leave to appeal, appellant a poor person, consideration of respondent's position as to costs	12
Arbitration, limitation of time, statutory arbitration, arbitration under Railways Act, 1921, sched. III, para. 4	355
Assignment, equitable, see Equitable assignment
Assisting the enemy, see Criminal Law
Assurance Company, assessment to income tax, branch in United Kingdom, head office abroad, profits, income from investments of life assurance fund, inclusion of income from tax-free investments	600
Auction, stipulations in catalogue and conditions of sale excluding auctioneer from responsibility for misdescriptions, verbal assurance of condition, warranty, breach, right of buyer to damages	103
Avoidance of tax, see Income Tax
Bailee, negligence, hospital, patient's property deposited on admission, liability of hospital for loss	783
BANKRUPTCY
Discharge—Suspension—Jurisdiction—Exercise of discretion— Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), ss. 26, 108 [Re SMITH]	769
Receiving order—Registration at Land Registry—Re-registration—Discharge of bankruptcy—Re-registration 16 years later— Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 6 (1) (c), 3— Bankruptcy Rules, 1915 , r. 181A [Re A RECEIVING ORDER (IN BANKRUPTCY)]	843

	PAGE
Successive bankruptcies—First bankruptcy in England—Second bankruptcy in India—Assets available after second bankruptcy—Conflict of laws— Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 21 (2), 39 (as substituted by Bankruptcy Act, 1926 (c. 7), s. 3) [Re TEMPLE. Ex parte THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER. THE TRUSTEE v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF BOMBAY]	592
Surplus available for distribution—Application—Priority—Statutory interest on debts proved—Excess interest on money-lender's claims—Claim by trustee of bankrupt's marriage settlement— Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), ss. 30 (3), 33 (7) (8), 42 (2)— Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 9 (1) [Re A DEBTOR (No. 707 of 1939) AND Re BAUGHAN]..	417
BASTARDY
Application for order—Adjournment—Procedure— Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 4—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 16 [BARNESLEY v. MARSH]	874
Bastardy, evidence of non-access, regimental record of husband	777
Bona vacantia, company, winding up, distribution of surplus assets, clause in memorandum prohibiting transfer of income and property of company to members by way of profit, no provision in memorandum or articles in regard to disposal of surplus assets on winding up	894
Breach of Duty, statutory duty, see Negligence Building Lease, see Landlord and Tenant
Building Licence (under Defence Regulations), condition restricting selling price of house built, jurisdiction of justices, place of sale..	314
BUILDING SOCIETIES
Mortgage—Interest—Compound interest—Right to charge—No agreement for compound interest in mortgage deed [EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. RUSSELL]	500
Winding up—General meeting—Notice of meeting to be sent to all members—Register of members destroyed—Notice to members by public advertisement— Building Societies Act, 1874 (c. 42), s. 32 (4) [PAYNE v. COE]	841
Carriage of Goods, see Carriers CARRIERS
Carriage of goods—Implied warranty that goods not dangerous—Disposal of refuse by barge—Warranty negatived by contract—Negligence— Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (c. 50), ss. 92, 304 [C. BURLEY, LTD. v. STEFNEY CORPN.]	507
Carriage of passengers—General duty to carry with due care—Special contract excluding liability—Validity— Canadian Transport Act, 1933 (c. 53), s. 25 (1) [LUDDIT v. GINGER COOTE AIRWAYS, LTD.]	328
"Cattle," inclusion of pigs, Income Tax Act, 1918 , sched. D, case III, r. 4..	374
Certiorari, national service, reinstatement in civil employment, decision of umpire, dissatisfaction of employer	880
—, see also Crown Practice
CHARITIES
Charitable purposes—Gift to editors of missionary magazine—For such objects as they may think fit—Trustees of charity [Re NORMAN ANDREW v. VINE]	400

	PAGE
Charitable trusts—Charitable purposes—Trust to maintain institute to give social, education, etc., amenities to Welsh people [TRUSTEES OF SIR HOWELL JONES WILLIAMS' TRUSTS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	513
Chemist, see Medicine and Pharmacy
Child, illegitimate child, included in gift in will to class of children	317
Cinematograph, see Theatres and Places of Entertainment
Coal Mine, see Mines
Commission, estate agent, contract to pay commission on introduction of "party prepared to purchase," willing purchaser found, vendor's refusal to complete	460
Common Employment, see Master and Servant

COMPANIES

Dissolution—Avoidance—Form of order—Effect on property vested before date of order—Companies Act 1929 (c. 23), ss. 294 (1), 296 [Re C. W. DIXON, LTD.]	279
Dividends—Preference shareholders—Right to annual payment of fixed dividend "out of profits of company"—"Profits of the company"—Article authorising directors to carry profits, as required, to reserve fund—Right to carry profits to reserve before paying any dividend on preference shares [Re BUENOS AYRES GREAT SOUTHERN RY. CO., LTD., THE COMPANY v. PRESTON]	720
Winding up—Distribution of surplus assets—Clause in memorandum prohibiting transfer of income and property of company to members by way of profit—No provision in memorandum or articles in regard to disposal of surplus assets on winding up—Right of Crown to surplus assets as bona vacantia—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 247 [Re MERCHANT NAVY SUPPLY ASSOCIATION, LTD.]	894
Profits—Rights of shareholders—Right to dividend in respect of period before winding up—Necessity for declaration of dividends—Construction of articles [Re CATALINAS WAREHOUSES AND MOLE CO., LTD.]	51
Compulsory Purchase, see Public Health (Housing)
Compulsory Purchase Order, see Public Health (Housing) Condition, implied, see Sale of Goods
Condonation, see Divorce
Conflict of Laws, bankruptcy, successive bankruptcies, first bankruptcy in England, second bankruptcy in India, assets available after second bankruptcy	592

CONTRACT

Construction—Loan to company—Waiver of interest—"Until such time as the company is in a position to pay"—Company induced to continue business—Consideration [LEDINGHAM v. BERMEJO ESTANCIA CO., LTD. AGAR v. SAME]	749
Equitable assignment—Erection of tombstone on father's grave—Assurance policies handed to son by father before his death, with request to erect tombstone and pay for it out of the policy moneys—Son's lien on policies for cost of tombstone [THOMAS v. HARRIS]	444
Implied term—Work to be done in safe manner—Carpet taken up for cleaning—Floor left in dangerous condition [KIMBER v. WILLIAM WILLET, LTD.]	361
Impossibility of performance—Frustration—Sale of goods—Contract expressed to be on c.i.f. terms—Payment of price against receipt of delivery order addressed to sellers' agents—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery—Right of buyers to return of sum paid [COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA. THE JULIA]	118
Contract, sale of land, see Sale of Land
—, theatrical engagement, "run of play," right of owner or producer to determine	746

Control of Undertaking, see Emergency Legislation Conviction, uncertainty, see Criminal Law Costs, see Practice
—, taxation, non-contentious business, gross or lump sum, "bill," application for taxation six years after payment, discretion of court to order delivery of bill	369
Costs (divorce), see Divorce
Costs, of litigation, deduction in computing profits for excess profits tax	699
—, deduction in computing profits for income tax	699
—, specific performance, sale of land, purchaser's costs of suit, lien on property, deposit paid to stakeholder	833

COUNTY COURTS

Adjournment—Action for recovery of possession—Vested right of action—Application by tenant for registration of premises under Defence Regulations—Refusal by local authority—Adjournment pending application to High Court for order of mandamus—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 as amended) reg. 68C.B. [OUZMAN v. KENNEDY]	99
Court (Emergency Powers), see Emergency Legislation

CRIMINAL LAW

Assisting the enemy—Intent—Duress—Burden of proof—Direction to jury—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S. R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 2A [R. v. STEANE]	813
Conviction—Uncertainty—Street traffic—Having charge of motor vehicle when under influence of drink or a drug—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 15 (1) [THOMSON v. KNIGHTS]	112
Offences under temporary statute—Offence committed during currency of statute—Prosecution and conviction after expiry—Effect of expiry on operation "as respects things previously done"—Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 11 (3) [WICKS v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS]	205
Sentence—Outstanding charge—Taking into consideration—Conviction of receiving stolen property—Outstanding charge under Road Traffic Acts [R. v. COLLINS]	147
Probation—Breach of recognisance—Sentence of one day's imprisonment instead of fine—Sentence of Borstal detention for original offence—Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (c. 58), s. 10 (1)—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 7 (4) [R. v. BALE]	818

CROWN PRACTICE

Certiorari—When order granted—Fraud—Perjury [R. v. RECORDER OF LEICESTER, Ex parte WOOD]	928
—, When order granted—Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 [R. v. FURNISHED HOUSES RENT TRIBUNAL FOR PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE, Ex parte KENDAL HOTELS, LTD.]	448
—, Justices interviewing witness in absence of accused and advisers [R. v. BODMIN JUSTICES, Ex parte MCWEEN]	109
Certiorari, see Crown Practice
Cruelty (as for ground for divorce), see Divorce
Custody (of children), see Infants and Children
Custom, theatrical profession, "run of play," right of owner or producer to determine	746

DAMAGES

Measure of damages—Breach of contract—Coupons material supplied for manufacture—Failure to deliver manufactured articles—Reduction of turnover—Loss of profit [KLIGER v. SADWICK]	840
Damages, measure, landlord and tenant, breach of covenant	415

negligence, hospital, patient's property deposited on admission, liability of hospital for loss	783
Damages (slander), see Libel and Slander
Dangerous Driving, see Street and Aerial Traffic
Dangerous Machinery, see Factories and Shops
Decree absolute, appeal pending, discretion of trial judge	161

DEED

Escrow—Conveyance executed, but purchase money not paid in full [THOMPSON v. McCULLOUGH]	265
--	-----

Dentist, see Medicine and Pharmacy
De-rating. See Rates and Rating.
Desertion, see Divorce
Diversion, of highway, see Highway Dividends, see Companies

DIVORCE

Condonation—Revival—Effect on liability of co-respondent [LOYD v. LLOYD AND HILL]	383
---	-----

Costs—Poor person—Liability of poor person to pay or right to receive costs—Security for costs—Order against poor person—R.S.C. Ord. 16, r. 28 (1)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, (S. R. & O., 1944, No. 389, r. 74, (2) (b) and (4) [COLLINS v. COLLINS AND DOVE. REEVES v. REEVES]	793
---	-----

Security for wife's costs—Appeal by wife against decree nisi granted to husband [ROMAN v. ROMAN]	434
--	-----

Cruelty—Wife's unnatural sexual relations with other women—Neglect of marital home and duties—Husband no willing party to sexual irregularities [GARDNER v. GARDNER]	630
--	-----

Decree absolute—Appeal pending—Discretion of trial judge—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 31 (1) (e), 183 (1), 184 (1) [LLOYD-DAVIES v. LLOYD-DAVIES]	161
---	-----

Desertion—Constructive desertion—Need to prove both factum and animus on part of respondent—Conduct equivalent to expulsion of other spouse—Inference of intention to end consortium—Husband's association with male servant—Persistence despite wife's threat to leave matrimonial home [BUCHLER v. BUCHLER]	319
---	-----

Wilful and unjustifiable refusal to continue sexual relations—Parties continuing to reside in matrimonial home—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2 [WEATHERLEY v. WEATHERLEY]	563
--	-----

Evidence—Admission by wife of adultery with co-respondent—Admissibility against co-respondent [SPRING v. SPRING AND JIGGINS]	886
--	-----

Incurable unsoundness of mind—Care and treatment for five years—Admission of wife as temporary patient on application of husband—Detention "in pursuance of order"—No statement by visiting committee as to propriety of continuance of detention—Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (c. 23), s. 5 (9) (10) (11)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, (c. 57), ss. 2 (2), 3 (a) [WHITLEY v. WHITLEY]	667
---	-----

Maintenance—Secured maintenance—Liberty to apply as to nature of security—Variation of order—Power of court—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1)—Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938 (c. 63), s. 14 [FRASER v. FRASER]	384
--	-----

Nullity—Maintenance—Conduct of parties—Matters to be taken into consideration—Refusal of intercourse by wife without contraceptives—Assent of husband—Ignorance of parties of legal position—Age of wife at time of decree—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1) [DAILEY v. DAILEY (OTHERWISE SMITH)]	847
---	-----

Marriage by proxy—Validity [APT (OTHERWISE MAGNUS) v. APT]	620
Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Result of decree to bastardise child—Wife pregnant by husband at date of marriage—Child born subsequently—Delay—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) [DREDGE v. DREDGE (OTHERWISE HARRISON)]	29

Wife insisting on use of contraceptives by husband—Acquiescence by husband—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) [BAXTER v. BAXTER]	387
--	-----

Parties—Co-respondent—Naming and making alleged adulterer co-respondent—Discretion of court to dispense with necessity—"Special grounds"—Burden of proof—Matters for consideration of court—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 177 (1)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 5 [SAGE v. SAGE. STOCKBRIDGE v. STOCKBRIDGE]	492
---	-----

DOMINIONS

Legislative powers—Establishment of Supreme Court with exclusive and final appellate jurisdiction—Exclusion of appeals to Privy Council from dominions and provinces—British North America Act, 1867 (c. 66), ss. 91, 92, 101—Statute of Westminster, 1931 (c. 4) [A.-G. OF ONTARIO v. A.-G. OF CANADA (A.-G. OF QUEBEC INTERVENING)]	137
Drainage, see Public Health
Dustbin, owner of building required to provide, right of appeal to justices	239

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION

Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Contract of sale—Validity of notice—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A) [LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. ELLIOTT]	79
---	----

Control of undertaking—Compulsory acquisition of company—Transfer of shares to government nominee—Price to be paid for shares—Price on Stock Exchange at date of transfer—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 78 (5) [SHORT v. TREASURY COMMISSIONERS]	22
--	----

Courts (Emergency Powers)—Exercise of remedy—Realisation of security—Mortgage by wife to secure joint banking account of herself and her husband—Bankruptcy of wife—Husband allowed by trustee to reside and carry on business on mortgaged property—Death of wife—Husband appointed executor—Sale of property by mortgagee—Sale alleged to be at undervalue—Right of husband to complain of sale—Right of husband and wife to be made respondents to mortgagee's application for leave to realise security—"Person affected"—Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (v)—Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 1113), r. 20 (1) (2) [JARRETT v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. NASH v. JARRETT]	72
---	----

Essential work—Wages—Head firemen—Bona fide rearrangement of duties by employer—Refusal to work as ordinary fireman—Essential Work (Coaling Industry) Order, 1943 (S.R. & O. 1943, No. 505), art. 4 (1) (d) [WASSALL v. WEST CANNOCK COLLIERY CO., LTD.]	106
--	-----

Liabilities adjustment order—Relief from payment of rent—Quantum—Discretion of court—"Lettable value"—Development of shopping centre arrested—Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941 (c. 24), s. 6—Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1944 (c. 40), s. 6 [RE DAVEY]	90
--	----

Maximum prices—Sale of eggs for purposes of hatching—Whether purchaser a "consumer"—Eggs (Control and Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 880), art. 7 (1) (c); sched. II, part II (f) [BRIERLEY v. PHILLIPS]	269
---	-----

National Arbitration Tribunal—Jurisdiction—"Trade dispute"—Claim by employees for increase in wages following an agreement between an employers' confederation and trade unions—Employers in question not parties to agreement—Employers already paying higher rate of wages than that mentioned in agreement—Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), arts. 5, 7 [K. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, Ex parte MIDDLEY HARMER, LTD.]	196
Price control—Prosecution for selling goods at a price in excess of the maximum price—Period within which summary proceedings may be brought—Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (c. 10), s. 2 (1), (3)—Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10 (1) [WALLACE v. CLENCH]	175
Requisition of land—Damage to land—Protection against breach of covenant to repair—"Land" Electric plant—Storage battery—Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944 (c. 5), s. 1 (1) JORDAN v. MAY]	231
Requisition of premises—Transfer of possession—Power of competent authority—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 as amended), regs. 49, 51 [PROGRESS BUILDING, LTD. v. WESTMINSTER CITY CORPORATION]	684
Sale of food—False labelling—Conspiracy—Proceedings begun more than six months from date of commission of offence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 as amended), regs. 90 (1), 93 (2)—Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 1553), reg. 1 (1), 4 [D. P. MACDONALD & SONS, LTD. v. SHARPE]	271
War damage—Cost of works—"Direct result" of enemy action—Structural damage to defective walls—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), ss. 2 (1) (a), 6, 8 (2), 10 (1), sched. III, r. 3 (1) [Re 36, 38, 40 & 42, JAMAICA STREET, STEPNEY]	754
Emergency Legislation, Justices, see Magistrates offence under temporary statute (Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939), offence committed during currency of statute, prosecution and conviction after expiry, effect of expiry on operation "as respects things previously done"	205
registration of premises, Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB, retrospective effect	99
Equitable assignment, erection of tombstone on father's grave, assurance policies handed to son by father before his death with request to erect tombstone and pay for it out of policy moneys, son's lien on policy for cost of tombstone	444
Escrow, see Deed
Essential Work Orders, see Emergency Legislation ESTATE DUTY
Sale of land situated in Ireland and arising out of strict settlement—Investment of proceeds in United Kingdom—Whether investments "situate out of United Kingdom"—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (2) [Re MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT, COTTESLOE v. H.M.A.-G.]	345
EVIDENCE
Admissibility—Documentary evidence—Regimental record—Bastardy proceedings by married women—Evidence of non-access by husband—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 [ANDREWS v. CORDINER]	777
Evidence, divorce, admission by wife of adultery with co-respondent, admissibility against co-respondent	886
Excess Profits Tax, see Revenue EXECUTORS
Apportionment between capital and income—Settlement by will of residuary estate—Power to postpone conversion—Tenants for life entitled to retain income of wasting or hazardous assets—Residue including absolute interest in income-producing fund subject to annual charge on income [Re HOLLIDAY'S WILL TRUSTS, HOUGHTON v. ADLARD]	695
Order of application of assets—Variation of statutory order—"Property specifically appropriated for payment of debts"—Property specifically given "after payment of debts"—Exoneration of residue—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 34 (3), sched. I, pt. II [Re JAMES, LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. v. ATKINS]	402
FACTORIES AND SHOPS
Dangerous machinery—Fencing—Exception—"Examination or adjustment"—Tests after toolsetting operation—Need for dangerous works to be exposed—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 16 [NASH v. HIGH DUTY ALLOYS, LTD.]	363
Woodworking machinery—Circular saw—Employers' duty to maintain guard in position—Delegation to workman—Negligence of workman—Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196), reg. 21—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) [CAKEBREAD v. HOPPING BROS. (WHETSTONE), LTD.]	389
Regulations—Breach—Registration and certification of "machine attendants"—Inclusion of tool setters—Operation at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 641), reg. 1 (ii), 2 [NASH v. HIGH DUTY ALLOYS, LTD.]	363
Factory, premises used for testing concrete	877
False imprisonment, see Trespass
Fire, negligence, lodger leaving fire in grate during absence, doctrine in Rylands v. Fletcher, res ipsa loquitur	344
FIREARMS
"Lethal weapon"—Signal pistol not designed as weapon but capable of inflicting injury—Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), ss. 1 (2) (a), 32 (1) [READ v. DONOVAN]	37
Fishing rights, grant for term of years, retention by owner of "a rod for her own use," effect of retention	195, 707
Food, sale, false labelling, Defence Regulations	271
FOOD AND DRUGS
Watered whisky—Defence—Warranty—Exercise certificate—Spirits Act, 1880 (c. 24), ss. 105 (5), 108 (2), sched. IV—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 84 (1) (a) [FOLLETT v. LUKE]	35
Football Pool Coupons, sale by newsgast by agreement with promoters, "in connection with trade or business"	177
Frustration, see Contract
Furnished houses rent tribunal, complaint of decision, certiorari	448
GAMING AND WAGERING
Lottery—Forecast of scores of football teams—Prizes for forecast of highest scores, lowest scores, and combinations of high and low scores—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 22 (1) (b) (f) [BOUCHER v. ROWSELL]	870
Prize competition—Conducted "in connection with trade or business"—Football pool coupons sold by newsgast and tobacconist by agreement with promoters—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 26 (1) (a) [I.T.P. (LONDON), LTD. v. WINSTANLEY]	177
GAS
Local authority owning gas pipes laid under public highways by virtue of statutory powers—Right to subjacent support—Damage to pipes from subsidence of surface land caused by mining operations—Right of authority to damages—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 15), s. 6—Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883 (c. 37), s. 4 [NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME CORPN. v. WOLSTANTON, LTD.]	218
Goods, carriage of, see Carriers

GUARANTEE

- Mortgage—Surety—Proviso that surety's liability should cease if "amount owing in respect of advance" reduced below certain sum—Inclusion of compound interest, solicitors' charges and fines in "amount" [EASTERN COUNTIES BUILDING SOCIETY v. RUSSELL]...* 500
- Hackney carriage, licence, change of ownership of carriage, new owner's right to amendment of licence and register... 779

HIGHWAYS

- Diversion—Powers of quarter sessions—No appeal against diversion order—Highways Act, 1835 (c. 50), ss. 84, 85 [R. v. ESSEX JJ., Ex p. EAST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL]...* 775
- Wilful obstruction of footway—Business not carried on in normal manner—Selling from window of, and not inside, shop—Liability of shop-keeper—Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 72 [FABRI v. MORRIS]...* 315
- Hospital, liability for negligence of members of staff... 633
- , negligence, patient's property deposited on admission, liability of hospital for loss... 783
- House of Lords, appeal to, leave to appeal, appellant a poor person, consideration of respondent's position as to costs... 12
- Housing, see Public Health

HUSBAND AND WIFE

- Maintenance—Jurisdiction—Husband ordinarily resident in Scotland—Wife residing in England at wish of husband—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), ss. 2, 4 [FORSYTH v. FORSYTH]...* 406
- Maintenance of wife—Necessaries—Desertion by husband—No money paid to wife for her support—Payments made by third party to provide necessaries—Recovery by third party from husband of sums advanced [WEINGARTEN v. ENGEL]...* 425
- Summary jurisdiction—Maintenance order—Separation order—Wilful neglect to maintain—Persistence by husband in revoluting or inordinate demands—Justification of wife in withdrawing from cohabitation [HOLBORN v. HOLBORN]...* 32

INCOME TAX

- Assessment—Interest of money—Interest included in judgment for debt or damages—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, para. 1 (b), All Schedules Rules, r. 21—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 3 (1) [RICHES v. WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD.]...* 469
- Profit from trade—Cattle dealer—Lands insufficient for the keep of the cattle—"Cattle"—Inclusion of pigs—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case III, r. 4 [PHILLIPS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BOURNE]...* 374
- , Tips given to taxicab-driver—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. E, r. 1 [CALVERT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WAINWRIGHT]... 282
- Assurance company—Branch in United Kingdom—Head office abroad—Profits—Income from investments of life assurance fund—Inclusion of income from investments exempted from United Kingdom tax—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case III, r. 3 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY]...* 600
- Deductions against profits—Cost of litigation—Appeal in respect of incidence of excess profits tax—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Rules applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 18 (1) [RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]...* 699
- , Expenses of ascertaining profits—Appeal vital to retain services of valuable employee—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)

- [SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]... 704
- , Repairs to premises—Premises kept open for business during rehabilitation work—Increased cost of work [MAXN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. COMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SAME v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]... 742
- Exemption—Charity—Trust to maintain institute in London to give social, educational and other amenities to Welsh people or people connected with Wales—Trust Property comprising houses—Direction to trustees to apply rents and profits from settled properties to carrying on institute and maintaining properties—Rent and properties so applied—Whether trust for charitable purposes—Whether moneys applied for charitable purposes only—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 37 (1) (a), sched. A [TRUSTEES OF SIR HOWELL JONES WILLIAMS' TRUSTS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]...* 513
- Schedule A—Deductions—Depreciate of value of lease—Premiums on insurance policy to produce sum equivalent to purchase price—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. A, No. I (1); No. V, r. 3 (1) [PEARCE v. DOULTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)]...* 378
- Sur-tax—Avoidance of tax—Transfer of assets to company abroad—Transfer of assets to company in United Kingdom subsequently moved abroad—By whom transfer to be made—"Associated operation"—What income deemed income of transferor—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 18 (1) [CONGREVE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]...* 168
- Industrial building, town planning scheme, premises used for testing concrete... 877
- Industrial disease, compensation, see Workmen's Compensation
- INFANTS AND CHILDREN
- Adoption—Dispensing with consent to order—"Person whose consent ought to be given"—Whether limited to person who has failed to contribute to support of infant—Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 2 (3) [HARRIS v. HAWKINS]...* 312
- Custody—Divorce proceedings—Death of parent obtaining order for custody—Application by third party for custody—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 193 (1) [PRYOR v. PRYOR]...* 381
- Maintenance—Maintenance order granted to wife under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5—Wife's subsequent application to justices for custody of children and weekly sum for their maintenance under Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (2)—Competence [Re KINSETH]...* 201
- Insanity, ground of divorce, see Divorce
- Insurance motor vehicle, see Street and Aerial Traffic
- Intent, proof of, see Criminal Law
- Interest, interest included in judgment for debt or damages, "interest of money," assessment to income tax... 469
- , sale of land, unpaid purchase money, purchaser in possession before date fixed for completion, delay in completion, default of vendor in deducing title... 716
- INTOXICATING LIQUORS
- Licensing—Ordinary removal of licence—Removal from county licensing division to borough within same county—Jurisdiction of borough justices to hear the application—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 24 (3) [R. v. LEAMINGTON SPA LICENSING JJ.'s, Ex parte PINNINGTON]...* 114
- Offences—Sale of liquor by retail without licence—Place of sale—Order at licensed premises—Delivery postponed pending instructions—Liquor collected and*

	PAGE
delivered to and paid for at unlicensed club after permitted hours—Appropriation—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 50 (3) [FURBY v. HOEY] . . .	236
Joint tortfeasors, contribution, no representative of dead joint tortfeasors estate, power of court to appoint representative . . .	261

JURIES

Qualification—Householder—Rateable value—Aggregation of properties—Juries Act, 1825 (c. 50), s. 1 [PERRINS v. PYE] . . .	872
--	-----

JUSTICES

Constitution of bench—Desirability of uneven number of justices [BARNSELY v. MARSH] . . .	874
Justices, bastardy, application for order, adjournment, procedure . . .	874

LAND CHARGES

Vacation of entry in registry—Receiving order in bankruptcy made in 1927—Discharge of bankrupt in 1930—Re-registration by Official Receiver in 1946—Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 6 (1) (c) (3), 5 [Re A RECEIVING ORDER (IN BANKRUPTCY)] . . .	843
--	-----

LANDLORD AND TENANT

Building lease—Option to renew—Performance of covenants—Delay in performance—Obligation satisfied before date for renewal of lease although not at date specified in agreement—Right to renewal [ROBINSON v. THAMES MEAD PARK ESTATES, LTD.] . . .	366
Contract for sale of other disposition of land or interest in land—Option to purchase—Option to take new lease—Memorandum of contract—Inclusion in new lease of option to purchase—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40 [HILL v. HILL] . . .	54
Covenant—Breach—Damages—Measure—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 18 [EYRE v. REA] . . .	415
Landlord's duty to licensee—Lift—Accident—Tampering by unauthorised person [ROCHMAN v. J. & E. HALL, LTD.] . . .	895
Lease—Lease for duration of hostilities—Lessee's option for further term—Time for exercise of option—Validation of War-Time Leases Act, 1944 (c. 34), ss. 1, 3 (3), 7 [DUNGEY v. TUNBRIDGE WELLS PROPERTIES, LTD.] . . .	785
Lease for term of years or duration of hostilities, whichever the longer—Lessee's option for further term—Validation of War-Time Leases Act, 1944 (c. 34), ss. 1, 3 (3), 7 (3) [M. W. INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. KILBURN ENVOY, LTD.] . . .	710
Notice to quit—Date from which notice runs—Lease determinable by 3 months' notice at any time—No date for possession specified in notice [W. DAVIS (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. HUNTLEY] . . .	246
Effect of subsequent notice to quit [LOEWENTHAL v. VANHOUTE] . . .	116
Validity—Notice given by purchaser after execution of conveyance, but before payment of purchase money in full [THOMPSON v. MCCULLOUGH] . . .	265
Weekly tenancy—Month's notice given to quit on May 4—Subsequent week's notice to quit on April 20 [THOMPSON v. MCCULLOUGH] . . .	265
Rent restriction—Action for possession—Lease of flat with "attendance" Separate charge stipulated for attendance—Total rent—Whether attendance "substantial part of whole rent"—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1) [ARTILLERY MANSIONS, LTD. v. MABARTNEY] . . .	686
Furnished letting—Value of landlord's furniture to tenant—Tenant possessed of furniture, but willing to accept furnished tenancy to secure premises—Subsequent removal of furniture by landlord and use by tenant of his own

Conversion of tenancy into protected tenancy—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1) [SEABROOK v. MERVYN] . . .	295
House "reasonably required by the landlord . . . for occupation . . . for himself"—Part of house only required—Hardship—Financial position of tenant—Steps taken by tenant to obtain accommodation—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. 1, para. (h) [KELLEY v. GOODWIN] . . .	810
Possession—Order obtained by misrepresentation—Compensation for damage or loss sustained by tenant—Misrepresentation by landlord that premises required for own occupation—Consent by tenant to order for possession—Immediate sale of premises with vacant possession—Compensation for damage or loss sustained as result of order—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (6) [THORNE v. SMITH] . . .	39
Recovery of possession—Breach of an obligation of the tenancy—Covenant not to use premises for any business but only "as a private dwelling-house"—Tenant taking in paying guests—Reasonableness of order for possession—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1) (a), sched. 1, para. (a) [TENDLER v. SPROULE] . . .	193
House required by landlord—"Landlord"—Beneficiary under will—Trustees enabled to permit beneficiary use of house or to receive net rents and profits—Beneficiary not party to letting of house—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. 1 (h) (i) [PARKER v. ROSENBERG] . . .	87
Premises not in reasonable state of repair—Certificate of sanitary authority—Whether ipso facto bar to landlord's right of possession—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 12, sched. 1 (b) [PEACH v. LOWE] . . .	441
Premises required by landlord for own occupation—Hardship—How far question of fact—Matters for consideration—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. 1 (h) [CHANDLER v. STREVETT] . . .	164
Procedure—County court to be preferred to High Court—Landlord electing to proceed in High Court—Need for court to be informed of facts—Rent in arrear—Reasonableness of order for possession—Duty of Court—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 [SMITH v. POULTER] . . .	216
Rent—Premises not in reasonable state of repair—Certificate of sanitary authority—Whether obligation to pay suspended in toto—Rent Restrictions (Notices of Increase) Act, 1923 (c. 13), s. 3 (3) [PEACH v. LOWE] . . .	441
Recovery of possession—Costs—Amount of rent claimed, £370—Action brought in High Court—Whether claim arising out of Rent Act—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 17 (2). [A. J. SMITH & CO., LTD. v. KIRBY] . . .	459
Right to new lease—Claim by tenant seeking new lease that old lease still subsisting—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1) (i), 5 (1) [W. DAVIS (SPITALFIELDS), LTD. v. HUNTLEY] . . .	246
Small tenement—Possession—Oral permission to occupy for life—Licence or tenancy—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 54—Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1 [BUCK v. HOWARTH] . . .	342
Underlease—Consent of landlord—Refusal—Reasonableness—Proposed under-lessee entitled to diplomatic privilege [PARKER v. BOGGOIN] . . .	46
Landlord and Tenant, "fixtures," electric plant, storage battery . . .	231

LEASE

- Fishing rights—Grant for a term of years—Retention by owner of "one rod for her own use"—Effect of retention [Re VICKER'S LEASE; POCOCK v. VICKERS] 195, 707*
Lease, see also Landlord and Tenant
Lethal Weapons, see Firearms
Liabilities Adjustment, see Emergency Legislation

LIBEL AND SLANDER

- Slander—Damages—Assessment—Judge sitting without jury—Right to award heavy damages—Grounds on which Court of Appeal will interfere with award [BULL v. VAZQUEZ] 334*
Statement actionnable per se—Words reflecting on a man in his profession—Publication at a time when pursuing that profession—Army officer—Indefinite Parliamentary leave [BULL v. VAZQUEZ] 334
Trade Union—Right of union to sue—Allegation against union of "rigging" a ballot [WILLIS v. BROOKS] 191
Licence, hackney carriage, see Hackney Carriage
Licencee, infant, recreation ground, injuries caused by defective swing, local authority ignorant of defect, liability 92
—, landlord's duty to, lift accident, tampering by unauthorised person 395

LICENSING

- General annual licensing meeting—Application for new licence—Bench equally divided—Adjournment of meeting—Application granted at adjourned meeting—Confirming authority—Jurisdiction to confirm licence [FUSSELL v. SOMERSET QUARTER SESSIONS LICENSING COMMITTEE] 44*
Licensing, see Intoxicating Liquors
Lien, purchaser's lien, costs of suit, deposit paid to stakeholder 338
Limitation, arbitration, see Arbitration

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

- Amendment of statement of claim—Action against public authority alleging negligence in the conduct of a hospital—Allegation in statement of claim that authority responsible for negligence of house surgeon and surgeon—Amendment to include responsibility for pharmacist—New particulars and new cause of action—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61), s. 1—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 21 [COLLINS v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL] 634*
Public authority—Commissioner of Metropolitan Police—Dismissal of police officer—Claim by officer that dismissal illegal—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 21 [HOGG v. SCOTT] 788
—, Joinder as third party—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 39), s. 21—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6 (1) (c) [HORDERN RICHMOND, LTD. v. DUNCAN] 427
When time begins to run—Simple contract debts—Company—Contract depending on contingency—Acknowledgment in balance sheet—Acknowledgment by board of debt owed to themselves as trustees [LEDINGHAM v. BERMEJO ESTANCIA CO., LTD. AGAR v. SAME] 749

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

- Alteration of area—Extension of county borough to include part of county area—Financial adjustments—Increased burden on county ratepayers—Method of assessing compensation—Arbitrator's duty—Interest on amount payable—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 152 (1) (b), sched. V, r. 1—Newport Extension Act, 1934 (c. liii), s. 58 [NEWPORT BOROUGH COUNCIL v. MONMOUTHSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL. MONMOUTHSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. NEWPORT BOROUGH COUNCIL] 900*
Lottery. See Gaming and Wagering.

MAGISTRATES

- Indictable offence triable summarily—Necessity for judicial exercise of jurisdiction—Order to pay costs—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 24 (1) [R. v. BODMIN JUSTICES. Ex parte MCEWEN] 109*
Perverse decision—Remittance by High Court of Case Stated with direction to convict [BRACEGIRDLE v. OXLEY] 126
Summary Jurisdiction—Information—Two or more offences charged in one information—"Defect in substance or form"—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), ss. 1, 10 [EDWARDS v. JONES] 830
Limitation of time—Prosecution under Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 6—Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (c. 10), s. 2 (1) (3)—Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10 (1) [WALLACE v. CLENCH] 175
Maintenance (of married women), maintenance order granted to wife under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, wife's subsequent application to justices for custody of children and weekly sum for their maintenance under Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, justices' jurisdiction to hear 201
Maintenance (of wife), see Divorce
—, see Husband and Wife
Maintenance Order, see Husband and Wife
Marriage, by proxy, validity 620
Marriage settlement. See Settlement.

MASTER AND SERVANT

- Common employment—"Common work"—Electric trams in collision on highway—Injury to conductress [GRAHAM (OR MILLER) v. GLASGOW CORPN.] 1*
Master and Servant, essential work orders, see Emergency Legislation
Maximum Prices (under Emergency Orders), see Emergency Legislation Measure of Damages, see Damages

MEDICINE AND PHARMACY

- Advertisement—Advertisement referring to an article as a cure for tuberculosis—Advertisement, circular and letter together amounting to an advertisement—Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941 (c. 42), s. 8 (1) [EARP v. ROBERTS] 136*
Chemists and druggists—Offence—Title or description calculated to suggest qualification—Business carried on as "Spink's, the Chemists"—No qualified chemist at branch shop—Card displayed stating no qualified assistant in charge—Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933 (c. 25), s. 3 (2) [DENERLEY v. SPINK] 835
Dentist—Practice of dentistry by unregistered person—"Advice . . . in connection with the fitting . . . of artificial teeth"—Alteration to denture—Dentists Act, 1921 (c. 21), ss. 1, 14 (2) [TWYFORD v. PUNTSCHEAT] 773
Disclosure of composition—"Sale by unauthorised persons"—Substance recommended as a medicine—"Substance known to public as supposed remedy for particular ailment—Name of substance and dosage given on label, but no reference to any ailment—Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941 (c. 42), ss. 11 (1), 12 (1), 17 [POTTER & CLARKE, LTD. v. PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN] 802
Medical practitioner—Pharmacist—Negligence—Liability of hospital—Dangerous and negligent system—Injection of lethal dose of cocaine—Apportionment of damages between joint tortfeasors—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6 (2) [COLLINS v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL] 633
Memorandum, of contract for sale of land, see Sale of Land
Metropolis, metropolitan police force, summary dismissal, power of Commissioner, officer convicted of theft 788

MINES

Coal mine—Seams passing under sanitary works—Notice of intention to work—Particular seams not specified—Validity of notice—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, (c. 17), s. 22—Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883 (c. 37) [BOLSOVER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BOLSOVER COLLIERY CO., LTD.] 130

MISTAKE

Mistake of law—Money paid under a mistake as to the construction of a will—Residue of testator's estate paid to charitable institutions by executors—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Right of those entitled under an intestacy to recover from institutions sums paid—Money had and received—Personal claim in equity [Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, DIPLOCK v. WINTLE (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS)] 522

MONEY

How far money can be followed—Money paid to charitable institutions by executors under a mistake as to the construction of a will—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Right of those entitled under an intestacy to trace [Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, DIPLOCK v. WINTLE (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS)] 522

Motor vehicle, offence, see Street and Aerial Traffic

—, uninsured driver, disqualification for holding licence, see Street and Aerial Traffic —, —, "special reason," see Street and Aerial Traffic —, —, liability of person other than owner of vehicle 307

—, —, permitting vehicle to be driven without policy in force, exception of vehicle driven by unlicensed driver, need for policy to cover driver's liability, knowledge of owner, constructive knowledge 337

National Arbitration Tribunal, see Emergency Legislation

National Defence Contribution, see Revenue

NATIONAL SERVICE

Reinstatement in civil employment—Decision of umpire—Dissatisfaction of employer—Certiorari—Reinstatement in civil Employment Act, 1944 (c. 15), ss. 1 (1), 9 (1) (2), 10 (1) (2) [R. v. LUDLOW, Ex parte BARNSELEY CORPN.] 880

Necessaries, duty of husband to provide, desertion by husband, payments to wife by third party, right to recover from husband 425

NEGLIGENCE

Bailee — Hospital — Patient's property deposited on admission — Liability of hospital for loss—Measure of damages [MARTIN v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL] 783

Breach of statutory duty—Duty imposed under sanction of penalty—Failure to carry rear light on car during hours of darkness—Whether separate remedy available to person aggrieved—Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (c. 37), ss. 1, 10 [CLARK AND WIFE v. BRIMS] 242

Defence—Acceptance of compensation under Workmen's Compensation Acts—Onus of proof—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 29 (1) [OLSEN v. MAGNESIUM CASTINGS & PRODUCTS, LTD.] 333

Fire—Outbreak—Lodger leaving fire in grate during absence—Doctrine in Rylands v. Fletcher—Res ipsa loquitur [SOCHACKI v. SAS] 344

Landlord—Lift in business premises—Accident to tenant—Liability for unauthorized tampering with lift—[ROCHMAN v. J. & E. HALL, LTD.] 895

Licensee—Infant—Recreation ground—Injuries caused by defective swing—Local authority ignorant of defect—Liability [SUTTON v. BOOTLE CORPN.] 92

Railway train—Underground train—Duty of company's servants to shut doors before departure of train—Contributory negligence [BROOKES v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD] 506

Negligence, disposal of refuse by barge, implied warranty that refuse not dangerous 507

—, public service vehicle, negligence of transport board, limitation of liability, "contract for conveyance of passenger," free travelling pass granted to employee of board, condition excluding liability for damage by negligence, employee injured while boarding omnibus, Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 97 258

New Town, see Town and Country Planning

Notice to Quit, see Landlord and Tenant

Nullity, see Divorce

Omnibus, omnibus undertaking, operation by local authority, revenue to be applied "in maintaining" omnibuses, garages, etc., new omnibuses required for replacements or as additions, purchase out of capital or revenue 248

Passenger, carriage, general duty to carry with care, special contract excluding liability 328

Passing-off, see Trade Marks and Trade Names

Pensions, see Royal Forces

Pigs, inclusion in "cattle," Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, case III, r. 4 374

POLICE

Metropolitan Police Force—Summary dismissal—Power of Commissioner—Officer convicted of theft—Metropolitan Police Act, 1829 (c. 44), s. 5—General Orders of Metropolitan Police Force, s. 5 (9) [HOGG v. SCOTT] 788

Poor person, divorce suit, costs, liability to pay and right to receive costs, security for costs, order against poor person 793

POWERS

Fraudulent exercise—Special power of appointment among nephews and nieces—Power exercised in favour of a nephew—Agreement by appointee to benefit appointor's children [Re CRAWSHAY, HORE-RUTHVEN v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE] 643

PRACTICE

Appeal—Judge without jury—Question of fact—Principles on which court acts [WATT v. THOMAS] 582

Appeal to House of Lords—Leave to appeal—Appellant a poor person—Consideration of respondent's position as to costs [SEARLE v. WALLBANK] 12

Costs—Taxation—"Taxation as between solicitor and client"—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (11) [GOODWIN v. STORRAR] 203

Striking out action—Frivolous or vexatious—Account statement arising out of betting transactions—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4 [GUGENHEIM v. LADBROKE & CO., LTD.] 292

Third-party procedure—Joint tortfeasors—Contribution—No representative of deceased joint tortfeasor's estate—Power of court or judge to appoint representative—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 46 [LEAN v. ALSTON] 261

Preference Shareholders, right to annual payment of fixed dividend "out of profits of company," right of directors to carry profits to reserve before paying preference dividend 729

Price Control, see Emergency Legislation

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeals—Power of Dominion legislature to exclude appeals from dominion and provincial courts—British North America Act, 1867 (c. 66), ss. 91, 92, 101—Statute of Westminster, 1931 (c. 4) [A.-G. OF ONTARIO v. A.-G. OF CANADA, (A.-G. OF QUEBEC INTERVENING)] 137

Prize Competition, see Gaming and Wagering

PRIZE LAW

Freight—Ship of neutral country carrying contraband—Seizure with hostile intent—Neutral country becoming belligerent enemy [PART CARGO ex S.S. SADO MARU]	430

Public Authorities Protection, see Limitation of Actions

PUBLIC HEALTH

Drainage—New building—Satisfactory provision for drainage of building—Drains of particular building—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 37 [CHESTER- TON R.D.C. v. RALPH THOMPSON, LTD.] ..	273
Dustbin—Provision—Owner of building required by local authority to provide—Right of appeal to justices—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 75 [CROYDON CORPN. v. THOMAS] ..	239
Housing—Compulsory acquisition of land—"Persons employed or paid by county council"—Superintendent of police—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 57), s. 97 [ROD- WELL v. MINISTER OF HEALTH] ..	80
Compulsory purchase order—Confirmation by Minister—Matters to be considered by Minister—Originating notice of motion entered at Crown Office within 6 weeks after publication of notice of confirmation, but notice of motion not served on Minister or local authority within the 6 weeks—Whether notice of motion out of time—Power of court to enlarge time for service—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), sched. II, para. 2—R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74; Ord. 64, r. 7 [SUMMERS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH] ..	184
Regard had by Minister to letters from local authority received by him while acting administratively—Right of Minister to use knowledge gained by him extra-judicially—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 29 (1), sched. 1 (4) [PRICE v. MINISTER OF HEALTH] ..	47
Limitation of purchase price of houses constructed under building licence—Sale of registered land at price exceeding limit—Place of Sale—Jurisdiction of justices—Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), ss. 7 (1), 9 (3) [R. v. EDWARDS, Ex parte JOSEPH] ..	314
Railway, negligence, duty of company's servants to shut doors before departure of train	506

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways—Amalgamation—Employee's position worsened—Compensation from amalgamated company—Claim—Limitation—"Cause of arbitration" equivalent to "cause of action"—Date from which time runs—Railways Act, 1921 (c. 55), sched. III, para. (3)—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), ss. 2 (1), 27 (1) (6) [PEGLER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.] ..	355
--	-----

RATES AND RATING

Assessment—Basis—Profits basis—Electricity undertaking—Calculation of profits—Deduction of excess profits tax [YEovil RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SOUTH SOMERSET AND DISTRICT ELECTRICITY CO., LTD.] ..	669
Derating—Industrial hereditament—Egg packing station—Adapting for sale—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1) [A. RICHARDSON & SON v. MIDDLESBROUGH ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] ..	884
Exemption—Land belonging to a vicarage—Exemption from parochial rates under Inclosure Act—Exemption from general rate imposed by Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, s. 2—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), ss. 2 (1), (2), (3) (a), 64 (1) (b), (2) (a) (b) [WILT- SHIRE COUNTY VALUATION COMMITTEE v. BOYCE] ..	820
Valuation—Agricultural dwelling-house—Limitation of value by amount in respect of the dwelling-house which may be deducted from wages—Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17), s. 72 [BOMFORD v. SOUTH WORCESTERSHIRE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] ..	299

PAGE

PAGE

Valuation list—Revaluation—Validity of large-scale revaluation—Proposals by county valuation committee to increase large proportion of assessments in area—Systematic examination of all assessments with a view to revaluation—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 37 (1) [PRATT v. NORTH WEST NORFOLK ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] ..	920
--	-----

RECEIVER

Action against—Breach of contract—Necessity for leave of court [Re BOTIBOL (deceased), BOTIBOL v. BOTIBOL] ..	26
Registration of premises, Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 65CB, retrospective effect ..	99
Rent restriction, see Landlord and Tenant

RENTCHARGES AND ANNUITIES

Annuities given by will—To "be paid without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of 5s. in the £"—Reliefs and allowances—Whether annuitant accountable to trustees [Re ARNO, HEALEY v. ARNO] ..	64
Requisition of land, see Emergency Legislation
Requisition, of premises, see Emergency Legislation Restraint of trade, see Trade

REVENUE

Appeals—Case Stated—Reference back—Reasonable doubt about finding [NEILD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	480
Excess profits tax—Computation of capital employed in business during chargeable accounting period—Deduction of debts—"Debt"—Rebate paid to customer—Consequent reduction of profit—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. II, para. 2 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. NORTHERN ALUMINIUM CO., LTD.] ..	608
Cost of litigation—Expenses of ascertaining profits—Appeal vital to retain services of valuable employee—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1) [SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	704
Deductions against profits—Cost of litigation—Appeal in respect of incidence of tax—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1) [RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	699
"Directors' remuneration"—Secretary of company also a director—Salary received as secretary and fees as director—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 33 (5) [HENRY RICHARDSON, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	275
Disposal of company's stock at under market value—Disposal for benefit of person holding controlling interest in the company—Purchase of shares from sole shareholder—Liability to tax of vendor of shares—Finance Act, 1943 (c. 28), s. 24 (1) (2) (4) [HOLT v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	148
Exemption—Profession—Profits dependent on personal qualifications—Questions for consideration—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (3) [NEILD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	480
Practice—Appeal to Special Commissioners—Burden of proof—Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), s. 35 (1)—Finance Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 33 (2) [DIXON & GAUNT, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	723
Principal company beneficial owner of stock in American subsidiary company—Stock compulsorily made security for loan by U.S.A. Government to H.M. Government—Treasury statutory mandatory to carry out terms of agreement—Whether principal company's beneficial interest lost [ENGLISH SEWING COTTON CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	679

	PAGE
—, Profits arising from a trade or business —Trade or business—Sand and gravel merchant—Royalties received by him from licensees permitted to win gravel from his land— Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (2) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ILES] ..	798
National defence contribution—Computation of profits—Chargeable accounting period—Underwriting agents—Commission not ascertainable and not payable until 2 years after underwriting of risk—When earned— Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), ss. 19, 20; sched. IV, para. 1 [GARDNER, MOUNTAIN AND D'AMBURNIL, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	650
—, Deductions against profits —Repairs to premises—Premises kept open for business during rehabilitation work—Increased cost of work [MANN, CROSSMAN & PAULIN, LTD. v. COMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SAME v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	742
Stamp duty—Receipt—Electricity pre-payment meter card—Entry by collector—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 103 (1) [ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NORTHWOOD ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER CO., LTD.] ..	483

ROYAL FORCES

Pension —Appeal to High Court—Notification of leave—Retraction—Chairman of tribunal unable to state case—Reasons of tribunal in lieu—Pensions Appeals Tribunals (England and Wales) Rules, 1943 (S. R. & O., 1943, No. 1757/L. 39), r. 23 [HEALD v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] ..	748
—, Appeal tribunal —Determination of appeal—Need of unanimity—Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943 (c. 39), sched. para. 3 (1) [BRAIN v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] ..	892
—, Attributability —Anxiety state resulting from fear of overseas service [HOLLORN v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] ..	124
—, Compelling presumption —Medical examination and attestation before outbreak of war—No further examination when embodied for war service—Royal Warrant concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943, art. 4 (3) [EDWARDS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] ..	379
—, Suicide by serving soldier after receiving letter from fiancé breaking off engagement—Evidence—Statements of witnesses at, and findings of military court of inquiry [X.Y. v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] ..	38
—, Mercantile marine—War injury —Abnormal conditions on board ship—Service in cable ship on Iceland station—Complaint of tinned food and bad living conditions—Pensions (Mercantile Marine) Act, 1942 (c. 26), s. 1 (2) (d) [STAYNINGS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] ..	347

SALE OF GOODS

Contract expressed to be on c.i.f. terms—Special clause for payment against delivery order—Payment on receipt of delivery order addressed to sellers' agents—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery—Right of buyers to return of sum paid [COMPTEIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LOUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA THE JULIA] ..	118
Implied condition—Fitness—"Goods of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply"—Goods within general description, though taking special form or designed for special use—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 14 (1) [SPENCER TRADING CO., LTD. v. DEVON (FIXOL AND STICKPHAST, LTD., THIRD PARTIES)] ..	284
Warranty—Auction—Stipulations in catalogue and conditions of sale excluding auctioneer from responsibility for misdescription—Verbal assurance of condition—Breach—Right of buyer to damages [CUCHEMAN v. HILL] ..	103

SALE OF LAND

Interest on unpaid purchase money—Purchaser in possession before date fixed for completion—Delay in completion—Default of vendor in deducing title—Special conditions incorporating Law Society's Conditions of Sale "so far as not varied or inconsistent"—Law Society's Conditions of Sale, cl. 6, 7 [RE PRIESTLEY'S CONTRACT] ..	716
Memorandum of contract—Material term not included in memorandum—Term exclusively for benefit of one party—Right to waive and proceed on agreement as evidenced by memorandum—Terms specifying date of vacant possession—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40 (1) [HAWKINS v. PRICE] ..	689
Purchaser's lien—Costs of suit—Deposit paid to stakeholder [COMBEE v. SWAYTHLING] ..	838
Sanitary Works, seams of coal mine passing under, notice of intention to work, particular seams not specified, validity of notice ..	130
Security for costs, divorce, see Divorce
Sentence, see Criminal Law
Separation Order, see Husband and Wife

SETTLEMENTS

Marriage settlement—Children of marriage to attain vested interest at 21—Covenant to settle after-acquired property on original trusts or "as near thereto as circumstances will permit"—Death of only child to attain a vested interest—Child's property left to mother—Whether property brought into settlement after death of child to be held for benefit of child or on ultimate trusts in default of issue attaining vested interest [RE BENETT-STANFORD SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, ATWOOD v. BENETT-STANFORD] ..	888
Tenant for life and remainderman—Capital or income—Dividends of company paid out of capital profits [RE DOUGHTY, BURRIDGE v. DOUGHTY] ..	207
Settlement, apportionment between capital and income, settlement of residuary estate including absolute interest in income-producing fund subject to annual charge on income ..	695
Slander, see Libel and Slander
Small tenement, see Landlord and Tenant

SOLICITOR

Costs—Taxation—Non-contentious business—Gross or lump sum—"Bill"—Application for taxation six years after payment—Discretion of court to order delivery of bill—Solicitors' Remuneration Act General Order, 1882, cl. 2 (a), 2 (c)—Solicitors' Act, 1932 (c. 37), ss. 64, 66—Solicitors' Remuneration (Gross Sum) Order, 1934 (S. R. & O., 1934, No. 548), art. 1 [RE A SOLICITOR, RE TAXATION OF COSTS] ..	369
Offence—Penalty—Pretending to be qualified to act as solicitor—Dismissal of information under Probation of Offenders Act, 1907—Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (c. 17), s. 1 (1)—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 46—Solicitors Act, 1941 (c. 46), s. 22; sched. III [HALL v. JORDAN] ..	826
Specific performance, costs, sale of land, purchaser's costs of suit, lien on property, deposit paid to stakeholder ..	838
Stamps, stamp duty, receipt, electricity pre-payment meter card, entry by collector ..	483

STATUTES

Operation—Temporary statute—Expiry—Effect of expiry on operation "as respects things previously done" [WICKES v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS] ..	205
Taxing Act—Construction—Machinery provision read as reference to charge of tax—"Assessment"—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), sched. V, pt. 1 —[ENGLISH SEWING COTTON CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	679

STREET AND AERIAL TRAFFIC

Hackney carriage—Licence—Change of ownership of licensed hackney carriage—New owner's right to amendment of licence and register—Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 89), s. 37 [R. v. WEYMOUTH CORPN. Ex parte TELETAX (WEYMOUTH), LTD.]	779
Motor vehicle—Being in charge of motor vehicle under influence of drink—"Public place"—Parking enclosure at rear of inn—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), ss. 15 (1), 121 [ELKINS v. CARTLIDGE]	829
—, Dangerous driving—Excessive speed—"Not in fact, dangerous to the public"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 11 (1) [BRACEGIRDLE v. OXLEY]	126
—, Insurance against third-party risks—Causing a motor vehicle to be used on the road without a policy of insurance being in force—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for refraining from disqualification—Assured misled as to effect of policy—Proposal form signed for general cover—Temporary general cover certificate issued, but policy limited to named driver—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (2) [LABRUM v. WILLIAMSON]	824
—, Misapprehension of legal effect of policy—Date from which disqualification runs where quarter session allow appeal against disqualification—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) 2 [RENNISON v. KNOWLER]	302
—, Permitting vehicle to be used on road without policy of insurance being in force—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for refraining from disqualification—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1), (2) [WILLIAMSON v. WILSON]	306
—, Exception of vehicle driven by unlicensed driver—Need for policy to cover driver's liability—Knowledge of owner—Constructive knowledge—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) [JOHN T. ELLIS, LTD. v. HINDS]	337
—, Using vehicle on road without policy of insurance being in force—Whether persons other than owner of vehicle can be guilty of the offence—"Any person"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) [WILLIAMSON v. O'KEEFFE]	307
Offences—Two offences in one information—Dangerous driving and driving without due care and attention—Procedure—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), ss. 11, 12 (1)—Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 35 [EDWARDS v. JONES]	830
Omnibus undertaking—Local authority operating omnibus undertaking under local Act—Revenue to be applied "in maintaining" omnibuses, garages, etc.—New omnibuses required for replacement or as additions—Purchase out of capital or revenue—Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council Act, 1926 (c. lxxv), ss. 90, 91 [ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WEST MONMOUTHSHIRE OMNIBUS BOARD]	248
Public service vehicle—Negligence of transport board—Limitation of liability—"Contract for conveyance of passenger"—Free travelling pass granted to employee of board—Condition excluding liability for damage by negligence—Employee injured while boarding omnibus—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 97 [WILKIE v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD]	258
Tramway car—Unlawfully endangering safety of passengers—Injury through driver not stopping at compulsory stop—Conductor collecting fares on top of car—No negligence on part of conductor—Stage Carriages Act, 1832 (c. 120), s. 48 [ASKEW v. BOWTELL]	883
Street Traffic, offence, conviction, having charge of motor vehicle "when under the influence of drink or drug," uncertainty—, offences under Road Traffic Acts, outstanding offence, taking into consideration on conviction of receiving	147

Striking out action, see Practice
Summary Jurisdiction, see Magistrates
Sunday, cinematograph performance, condition qualifying permission, prohibition of admission of child under 15	498
Surety, mortgage, surety's liability to see if "amount owing in respect of advance" reduced below certain sum, inclusion of compound interest, solicitor's charges and fines in "amount"	500
Sur-tax, see Income Tax
Taxation (of costs), see Costs
—, see Practice (Costs)

THEATRES AND PLACES OF ENTERTAINMENT

Cinematograph—Sunday performance—Permission—Condition—Prohibition of admission of child under 15—Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (c. 51), s. 1 [ASSOCIATED PROVINCIAL PICTURE HOUSES, LTD. v. WEDNESBURY CORPN.]	498
Professional contracts—"Run of play"—Right of owner or producer to determine—Custom of profession [GUBERTINI v. WALLER]	746
Third Party Procedure, see Practice
"Tips," given to taxicab driver, assessability to income tax	282

TORTS

Liability—Joint Tortfeasors—Agreement not to sue one joint tortfeasor—Operation as discharge of other tortfeasors [APLEY ESTATES CO. v. DE BERNALES]	213
---	-----

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

Agricultural land—Refusal to permit construction of a sports stadium—Overriding need of agriculture—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 10 (5) [R. v. EAST KESTEVEN RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ex parte SLEAFORD AND DISTRICT WHITE CITY SPORTS STADIUM CO.]	810
New town—Duty of Minister—Quasi-judicial capacity—Need to support proposed Order by evidence at public enquiry—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1); sched. 1 (3) [FRANKLIN v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	396
—, Objections—Onus of proof—Duty of Minister—Need to support proposed order by evidence at public enquiry—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1); sched. 1 (3) [FRANKLIN v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	612
Resolution to prepare scheme—Scheme to include prohibition of use of land for certain purposes without consent of local authority—Validity—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), ss. 1, 11 [TAYLOR v. BRIGHTON CORPN.]	864
Town planning scheme—Industrial building—Factory—Premises used for testing concrete—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 13 (1) (c)—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 151 (1) [HENDON BOROUGH COUNCIL v. STANGER]	877
War Damage—Re-development of land—Compulsory purchase—Order by Minister—Powers of Minister—Town and Country Planning Act, 1944 (c. 47), s. 1 (1) [PHOENIX ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	454
[ROBINSON v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	851
Town Planning Scheme. See Town and Country Planning

TRADE

Restraint of trade—Reasonableness—Covenant by doctor in "assistantship" agreement—Covenantees general practitioners—Covenant not to "practise" in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery nor accept nor fill any professional appointment" within 10 miles for 5 years—Onus of proof—Special circumstances justifying restraint [ROUTH v. JONES]	758
--	-----

	PAGE
not to "practise or cause or assist any other person to practise in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery nor accept nor fill any professional appointment" within 10 miles for 5 years—Severability [ROUTH v. JONES] ..	179
TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES
Passing off — Knowingly purporting to give named process using other than branded articles—Misrepresentation analogous to passing off [SALES AFFILIATES, LTD. v. LE JEAN, LTD.] ..	287
TRADE UNIONS
Libel against union—Right of union to sue—Allegation of "rigging" a ballot [WILLIS v. BROOKS] ..	191
Tramway car, endangering safety of passengers, injury through driver not stopping at compulsory stop, conductor collecting fares on top of car, no negligence on part of conductor ..	883
TRESPASS
False imprisonment—Need to make charge known to person arrested—Arrest without warrant—Charge of unlawful possession under local Act—Charge not justifying original arrest or continuing detention under arrest—Reasonable and probable cause for suspecting felony—Dismissal of charge at police court—Re-arrest inside the court—Subsequent charge of larceny—Charge dismissed—Liverpool Corporation Act, 1921 (c. lxxiv), ss. 507, 513 [CHRISTIE v. LEACHINSKY] ..	567
Trespass, Horse on highway, escape through gap in fence of field adjoining highway, collision with cyclist, duty so to maintain gates and fences that escape of animals impossible, duty to take reasonable care to prevent escape ..	12
Underlease, see Landlord and Tenant
Underwriting Commission, national defence contribution, computation of profits, chargeable accounting period, commission not ascertainable and not payable until two years after underwriting of risk ..	650
Valuation, for rating, see Rates and Rating
War damage, re-development of land, compulsory purchase, order by minister, powers of minister ..	851
—, see Emergency Legislation ..	84
Warranty, see Contract ..
—, excise certificate ..	35
WILLS
Ademption—Gift of undivided shares in hand—Will made in 1912—Statutory trusts imposed in 1926—Conversion of undivided shares into personally—Codicil made in 1927, containing reference to will but not to gift—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 35, sched. I, pt. IV, para. I [Re HARVEY, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HOSKIN] ..	349
Condition—Gift subject to condition precedent—Gift of freehold property after death of testator's widow, subject to payment of £800 to testator's estate within 6 months of testator's death—Whether time specified of the essence of the matter [Re GOLDSMITH'S WILL TRUSTS, BRETT v. BINGHAM] ..	451
Construction — "Dependants" [Re BALL, HAND v. BALL] ..	458
— Gift dependant on one of two events—Express mention of only one event—Effect given to testator's intention [Re MAIN (deceased), OFFICIAL SOLICITOR v. MAIN] ..	255
— Gift to a class of children or an only child—Illegitimate child [Re DICKER (deceased)] ..	317
— Ungrammatical use of tense and inaccurate references to time—"Children living at the death of J., of nephews and nieces who shall have died in the life-time of J."—Nephew dying before J. born leaving issue living at death of J.—Intention of testator [Re DONALD (deceased), ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE v. DONALD] ..	764

	PAGE
Settlement — Apportionment between capital and income—Settlement or residuary estate including absolute interest in income-producing fund subject to annual charge on income [Re HOLLIDAY'S WILL TRUSTS, HOUGHTON v. ADLARD] ..	695
— Tenant for life and remainderman—Capital or income—Trust funds including shares in company—Dividends paid out of capital profits [Re DOUGHTY, BURIDGE v. DOUGHTY] ..	207
Winding-up of Company, see Companies
Woodworking Machinery Regulations, see Factories and Shops
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION
Compensation — Amount — Partial incapacity—Difference between current and pre-accident earnings—Changes in economic position of labour market—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 9 (3) (i) [SHARPLIN v. W. B. BAWN & CO., LTD.] ..	436
—, Workman receiving compensation for partial incapacity—Second accident resulting in total incapacity—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 9 (1) (c) [DOUDIE v. KINNEIL, CANNELL AND COKEING COAL CO., LTD.] ..	6
—, Industrial Disease — Cataract—Compensation only payable for 4 months from date of disablement unless workman has undergone operation—Proviso enabling arbitration to continue payments if "satisfied on the advice of the medical referee that an operation could not for medical reasons be performed within 4 months"—"Could not for medical reasons"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 43, sched. III—Workmen's Compensation (Industrial Diseases) Consolidation Order, 1929 (S. R. & O., 1929, No. 2), para. (3), proviso (a)—Workmen's Compensation (Cataract) Order, 1932 (S. R. & O., 1932, No. 424) [SKELDING v. PERRINS] ..	490
Costs—Travelling expenses of workman attending for examination by medical referee—No arbitration actual or pending—Jurisdiction of county court judge—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 19 (2), sched. I (7)—Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1926 (S. R. & O., 1926, No. 448), rr. 57 (9), 76 (4) [HALLIDAY v. BARBER, WALKER & CO., LTD.] ..	595
Course of employment—Accident on way to work—Contractual obligation to proceed by most expeditious route—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1) [DUNN v. A. G. LOCKWOOD & CO.] ..	446
Industrial disease — "Notional accident"—Total incapacity—Further "notional accident" during incapacity caused by first "accident"—Partial capacity recovered—Right to compensation in respect of second "notional accident"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), ss. 1, 9, 43, 47—Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943 (S. R. & O., 885 of 1943), para. 9 (3) [WILDS v. AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD.] ..	551
Termination of compensation — Objection by workman—Reference to medical referee—Medical referee's certificate—Interpretation by registrar—Arbitration proceedings started by workman—Jurisdiction of judge to entertain pending decision by registrar—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), ss. 12 (3), 19 (2) [STARKEY v. WHITWHICH COLLIERY CO., LTD.] ..	464
Workmen's Compensation, acceptance of compensation, defence to claim for negligence, onus of proof ..	333

CASES REFERRED TO

	PAGE
Abraham v. Talbot, [1944] 1 All E.R. 642; [1944] A.C. 204; 113 L.J.K.B. 369; 171 L.T. 53; 26 Tax Cas. 166; Digest Supp. 651, 662, 663, 664, 666
Acatos v. Burns (1878), L.R. 3 Ex.D. 282; 47 L.J.Q.B. 566; 26 W.R. 624, C.A.; 41 Digest 453, 2841	508, 510 583, 585
Adair v. Adair, 1924 S.C. 798; 1924 S.L.T. 749
Adams v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co. (1869), L.R. 4 C.P. 739; 38 L.J.C.P. 277; 20 L.T. 850; 8 Digest 78, 536	506
Addie (R.) & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck, [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; Digest Supp.	92, 96
Adrema, Ltd. v. Jenkinson, [1945] 2 All E.R. 29 [1945] K.B. 446; 114 L.J.K.B. 313; 173 L.T. 318; 109 J.P. 138; Digest Supp.	106, 108
Ainsworth v. Wilding, [1896] 1 Ch. 673, 677; 65 L.J.Ch. 432; 74 L.T. 193; Digest Practice 473, 1539	40, 41
Alderman v. Great Western Ry. Co., [1937] 2 All E.R. 408; [1937] A.C. 454; 106 L.J.K.B. 335; 156 L.T. 441; 30 B.W.C.C. 64; Digest Supp.	446, 447
Aldham v. United Dairies (London), Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 522; [1940] 1 K.B. 507; 109 L.J.K.B. 323; 162 L.T. 71; Digest Supp.	13, 21
Allen v. Farquharson Bros. & Co. (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 59; Digest Supp.	700, 702
Allen v. Siddons (1932) 25 B.W.C.C. 350; Digest Supp.	446, 447
Allen v. Tinsley Park Collieries, Ltd. (1944) 37 B.W.C.C. 28; Digest Supp.	552, 555
Allhusen v. Whittell (1867), L.R. 4 Eq. 295; 36 L.J.Ch. 929; 16 L.T. 695; 23 Digest 464, 5358	695, 699 689, 693
Allsopp v. Orchard, [1923] 1 Ch. 323; 92 L.J.Ch. 257; 128 L.T. 823; 42 Digest 449, 209 Anchor Trust Co., Ltd. v. Bell, [1926] Ch. 805; 95 L.J.Ch. 564; 135 L.T. 311; 35 Digest 572, 2425	73, 78
Anderson v. Midland Railway Co. (1861), 3 E. & E. 614; 30 L.J.Q.B. 94; 3 L.T. 809; 25 J.P. 405; 7 Jur. N.S. 411; 121 E.R. 573; 30 Digest 390, 537	343 415
Angell v. Burn (1933), 77 Sol. Jo. 337; Digest Supp.	407, 408
Anghinelli v. Anghinelli, [1918] P. 247; 87 L.J.P. 175; 119 L.T. 227; 27 Digest 553, 6078	407, 408
Anglo-Persian Oil Co., Ltd. v. Dale, [1932] 1 K.B. 124; 100 L.J.K.B. 504; 145 L.T. 529; 16 Tax Cas. 253, C.A.; Digest Supp.	742, 744
Anglo-Scottish Beet Sugar Corp. v. Spalding Urban District Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 335; [1937] 2 K.B. 607; 106 L.J.K.B. 885; 157 L.T. 450; Digest Supp.	522, 523, 527, 528
Armytage v. Armytage, [1898] P. 178; 67 L.J.P. 90; 78 L.T. 689; 27 Digest 264, 2327	407, 408, 409
Ashcroft v. Ashcroft and Roberts, [1908] P. 270; 71 L.J.P. 125; 87 L.T. 229; 27 Digest 501, 5360	848, 849
Associated Newspapers, Ltd. v. London Corp., [1916] 2 A.C. 429; 85 L.J.K.B. 1786; 115 L.T. 419; 80 J.P. 393; 30 Digest 475, 350	820, 821
Atkinson, Re, Webster v. Walter, [1930] 1 Ch. 47; 99 L.J.Ch. 35; 142 L.T. 129; Digest Supp.	402, 404
A.-G. v. Carlton Bank, [1899] 2 Q.B. 158; 68 L.J.Q.B. 788; 81 L.T. 115; 63 J.P. 629; 39 Digest 294, 748	484, 485, 487
A.-G. v. Christ Church, Oxford (Dean), Ex. p. Maddox (1842), 13 Sim. 214; 12 L.J.Ch. 28; 6 Jur. 1007; 60 E.R. 83; 40 Digest 198, 1654	716, 721
A.-G. v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, [1924] A.C. 262; sub nom. Re Tetley, A.-G. v. National Provincial and Union Bank of England, 93 L.J.Ch. 231; 131 L.T. 34; affg., S.C. sub nom. Re Tetley, National Provincial and Union Bank of England, Ltd., [1923] 1 Ch. 258, C.A.	514, 518
A.-G. v. Public Trustee and Tuck, [1929] 2 K.B. 77; 98 L.J.K.B. 462; 141 L.T. 398; Digest Supp.	350, 352
A.-G. for Ontario v. A.-G. for Canada, [1912] A.C. 571; 81 L.J.P.C. 210; 106 L.T. 916; 17 Digest 428, 96	138, 144
Attwood v. Lamont, [1920] 3 K.B. 571; 90 L.J.K.B. 121; 124 L.T. 108; 43 Digest 20, 131	179, 181, 182, 759, 763
Bacon v. Chesney (1816), 1 Stark. 192; 26 Digest 103, 709	501, 503
Bacon v. Wills (A. W.) & Sons, Ltd., [1933] 2 K.B. 493; 26 B.W.C.C. 374; 102 L.J.K.B. 611; 149 L.T. 385; Digest Supp.	552, 557
Badham v. Lambs, Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 295; [1946] 1 K.B. 45; 115 L.J.K.B. 180; 173 L.T. 139	243, 246 256, 257
Bainbridge v. Cream (1852), 16 Beav. 25; 44 Digest 783, 6409	620, 624
Baindall v. Baindall, [1946] 1 All E.R. 342; [1946] P. 122; 115 L.J.P. 651; 174 L.T. 320	514, 519
Baker v. Sutton (1836), 1 Keen. 224; 5 L.J.Ch. 264; 8 Digest 298, 750
Baldry v. Marshall, [1925] 1 K.B. 260; 94 L.J.K.B. 208; 132 L.T. 326, C.A.; 39 Digest 448, 762	285
Ball v. Hunt (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1912] A.C. 496; 81 L.J.K.B. 782; 106 L.T. 911; 5 B.W.C.C. 459; 34 Digest 395, 3228	436, 437, 552, 554
Bamfield v. Goole & Sheffield Transport Co., Ltd., [1910] 2 K.B. 94; 79 L.J.K.B. 1070; 103 L.T. 201, C.A.; 41 Digest 315, 1752	508, 510
Banque Belge Pour L'Etranger v. Hambrouck, [1921] 1 K.B. 321; 90 L.J.K.B. 322; 35 Digest 168, 9	524, 534, 535
Barking Rating Authority v. Central Electricity Board, [1940] 3 All E.R. 477; [1940] 2 K.B. 493; 109 L.J.K.B. 778; 163 L.T. 214; 104 J.P. 363; Digest Supp.	670, 675, 678
Barton v. Fincham, [1921] 2 K.B. 291; 90 L.J.K.B. 451; 124 L.T. 495; 85 J.P. 145; 31 Digest 579, 7286	40, 43, 216, 217
Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Reid (1858), 3 Macq. 266; 31 L.T.O.S. 255; 22 J.P. 560; Bartons- hill Coal Co. v. McGuire (1858), 3 Macq. 300; 31 L.T.O.S. 258; 34 Digest 126, 972	2, 3
Bastin v. Bidwell (1881), 18 Ch.D. 238; 44 L.T. 742; 31 Digest 75, 2209	367, 368
Batchelor v. Murphy, [1925] Ch. 220; affd., [1926] A.C. 63; 95 L.J.Ch. 89; 134 L.T. 161; 30 Digest 498, 1567	55, 60, 61
Bates, Re, Mountain v. Bates, [1928] Ch. 682; 97 L.J.Ch. 240; 139 L.T. 162; Digest Supp.	208, 210, 211, 212
Bates' Will Trusts, Re, Jenks v. Bates, [1945] 2 All E.R. 688; [1946] Ch. 83; 115 L.J.Ch. 142; 174 L.T. 305; Digest Supp.	64, 68, 69, 72
Batson v. London School Board (1904), 69 J.P. 9; 31 Digest 490, 6376	415
Batting v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1941] 1 All E.R. 228; Digest Supp.	634, 635, 641
Baylis v. Bishop of London, [1913] 1 Ch. 127; 82 L.J.Ch. 61; 107 L.T. 730; 35 Digest 156, 526	524, 529
Beard v. Beard, [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.	883, 884

- Beckwith v. Philby (1827), 6 B. & C. 635; 9 Dow. & Ry. (K.B.) 487; 4 Dow. & Ry. M.C. 394; 5 L.J.O.S.M.C. 132; 14 Digest 177, 1544 568, 578, 581
- Bell v. Bell, [1941] S.C. (H.L.) 5; Digest Supp. 407, 414, 563, 566
- Bell v. Lever Brothers, Ltd., [1932] A.C. 161; 101 L.J.K.B. 129; 146 L.T. 258; reversg., S.C., sub nom. Lever Bros., Ltd. v. Bell, [1931] 1 K.B. 557; Digest Supp. 524, 528
- Benyon v. Thorpe (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 705; sub nom. Beynon v. Thorpe, 14 Tax Cas. 1; Digest Supp. 282, 284
- Berkley v. Thompson (1884), 10 App. Cas. 45; 54 L.J.M.C. 57; 52 L.T. 1; 49 J.P. 276; 3 Digest 393, 312 407, 409, 410, 411, 412
- Berkeley (Countess) v. R. G. W. Berkeley, [1946] 2 All E.R. 154; [1946] A.C. 555; 115 L.J.Ch. 281; 175 L.T. 153 350, 354
- Bernstein v. Bernstein, [1893] P. 292; 69 L.T. 513; sub nom. Bernstein v. Bernstein, Turner and Sampson, 63 L.J.P. 3; 27 Digest 341, 3213 383, 384
- Berthiaume v. Dastous, [1930] A.C. 79; 99 L.J.P.C. 66; 142 L.T. 54; Digest Supp. 620, 623, 627
- Bessant v. Great Western Ry. Co. (1860), 8 C.B.N.S. 368; 38 Digest 286, 216 13, 21
- Bevan v. Energlyn Colliery Co., [1912] 1 K.B. 63; 81 L.J.K.B. 172; 105 L.T. 654; B.W.C.C. 169; 34 Digest 414, 3366 436, 438
- Bevan v. Nixon's Navigation Co., Ltd., [1929] A.C. 44; 139 L.T. 647; 21 B.W.C.C. 237; Digest Supp. 436, 438, 439, 440
- Biddell Brothers v. Clemens (E.) Horst Co., [1911] 1 K.B. 934; reversd., sub nom., E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A.C. 18; 81 L.J.K.B. 42; 105 L.T. 563; 17 Com. Cas. 55; 39 Digest 575, 1801 118, 121, 123
- Birch v. Joy (1852), 3 H.L. Cas. 565; 10 E.R. 222, H.L.; varying S.C. sub nom. Joy v. Birch, Birch v. Joy, Sturgis v. Birch (1848), 12 L.T.O.S. 365, 40 Digest 198, 1656 717, 721
- Birchall, Re, Re Valentine, Kennedy & Birchall, [1940] 1 All E.R. 545; [1940] Ch. 424; 109 L.J.Ch. 129; 162 L.T. 261; Digest Supp. 765, 768
- Bird v. Philpot, [1900] 1 Ch. 822; 69 L.J.Ch. 487; 82 L.T. 110; 4 Digest 500, 4504 73, 75
- Blair's Trustees v. Payne (1884), 12 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 104; 22 Sc.L.R. 54; 42 Digest 103, r Blake, Re, Berry v. Geen, [1938] 2 All E.R. 362; 107 L.J.Ch. 173; 54 T.L.R. 703; sub nom., Berry v. Geen, [1938] A.C. 575; 159 L.T. 122; Digest Supp. 317, 318
- Blake, Re, Re Minahan's Petition of Right, [1932] 1 Ch. 54; 100 L.J.Ch. 251; 145 L.T. 42; Digest Supp. 524, 533, 545
- Blakiston v. Cooper, [1909] A.C. 104; 78 L.J.K.B. 135; 100 L.T. 51; sub nom. Cooper v. Blakiston, 5 Tax Cas 347; 28 Digest 86, 495 282, 283
- Blee v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1937] 4 All E.R. 270; [1938] A.C. 126; 107 L.J.K.B. 62; 158 L.T. 185; 30 B.W.C.C. 364; Digest Supp. 446, 447, 448
- Blest v. Brown (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 367; 6 L.T. 620; 26 Digest 108, 759 501, 503
- Blyth v. Blyth, [1942] 2 All E.R. 469; [1943] P. 15; 112 L.J.P. 4; 167 L.T. 411; Digest Supp. 385, 386
- Bond v. Barrow Haematite Steel Co., [1902] 1 Ch. 353; 71 L.J.Ch. 246; 86 L.T. 10; 9 Digest 587, 3934 52, 54, 730, 740, 741
- Bouch v. Sproule (1887), 12 App. Cas. 385; 56 L.J.Ch. 1037; 57 L.T. 345; 40 Digest 665, 2035 208, 210
- Bowker v. Burdekin (1843), 11 M. & W. 128; 12 L.J.Ex. 329; 152 E.R. 744; 17 Digest 211, 231 265, 267
- Bowman, Re, South Shields (Thames Street) Clearance Order, 1931, [1932] 2 K.B. 621; 101 L.J.K.B. 798; 147 L.T. 150; 96 J.P. 207; Digest Supp. 852, 862
- Brackenborough v. Spalding U.D.C., [1942] 1 All E.R. 34; [1942] A.C. 310; 111 L.J.K.B. 100; 166 L.T. 108; 106 J.P. 81; Digest Supp. 12, 18
- Brass v. Matland (1856), 6 E. & B. 470; 26 L.J.Q.B. 49; 27 L.T.O.S. 249; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 710; 4 W.R. 647; 41 Digest 314, 1750 508, 510
- Bridgewater Navigation Co., Re, [1891] 2 Ch. 317; 60 L.J.Ch. 415; 64 L.T. 576; 10 Digest 1005, 6977 52, 53
- Bristol Tramways, Etc., Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., [1910] 2 K.B. 831; 79 L.J.K.B. 1107; 103 L.T. 443; 26 T.L.R. 629, C.A.; 39 Digest 445, 743 285
- Britannic Merthyr Coal Co. v. David, [1910] A.C. 74; 79 L.J.K.B. 153; 101 L.T. 833; 34 Digest 740, 1168, H.L.; affg. S.C. sub nom. David v. Britannic Merthyr Coal Co., [1909] 2 K.B. 146, C.A. 243, 245
- British Coal Corp'n. v. R., [1935] A.C. 500; 104 L.J.P.C. 58; 153 L.T. 283; Digest Supp. 138, 143, 144, 145
- British Economical Lamp Co., Ltd. v. Empire, Mile End, Ltd. (1913), 29 T.L.R. 386; 31 Digest 186, 3205 231, 235
- British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Ltd. v. Atherton, [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; 10 Tax Cas. 155; 28 Digest 52, 264 742, 743, 744
- British Reinforced Concrete Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Schelft, [1921] 2 Ch. 563; 91 L.J.Ch. 114; 126 L.T. 230; 43 Digest 35, 310 179, 183
- Bromley v. Staveley Coal & Iron Co., Ltd., Drew v. Staveley Coal & Iron Co., Ltd. (1923), 129 L.T. 620; 16 B.W.C.C. 77; 34 Digest 396, 3238 436, 441
- Brook v. Brook (1861), 9 H.L. Cas. 193; 4 L.T. 93; 25 J.P. 259; 11 Digest 414, 506 620, 623, 624, 625, 627
- Brooke v. Bove, [1928] 2 K.B. 578; 97 L.J.K.B. 511; 139 L.T. 376; Digest Supp. 344
- Brooks & Co. v. Blackburn Benefit Society (1884), 9 App. Cas. 857; 54 L.J.Ch. 376; 52 L.T. 225; affg., S.C. sub nom., Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe, Brooks & Co. (1882), 22 Ch.D. 61; 7 Digest 489, 214 524, 547
- Brooks' Settlement Trusts, Re, Lloyds Bank, Ltd. v. Tillard, [1939] 3 All E.R. 920; [1939] Ch. 993; 109 L.J.Ch. 28; 161 L.T. 158; Digest Supp. 643, 646
- Brown and Others v. Minister of Pensions, 1946 S.C. 471 379, 380
- Brown v. Sherwood Colliery Co., Ltd., [1940] 2 All E.R. 25; [1940] 1 K.B. 726; 109 L.J.K.B. 761; 162 L.T. 316; Digest Supp. 596, 597
- Brueton v. Woodward, [1941] 1 K.B. 680; [1941] 1 All E.R. 470; 110 L.J.K.B. 645; 165 L.T. 348; Digest Supp. 356, 358
- Buckridge v. Glasse (1841), Cr. & Ph. 126; 10 L.J.Ch. 134; 43 Digest 1018, 4539 524, 538
- Bugge v. Taylor, [1941] 1 K.B. 198; 110 L.J.K.B. 710; 164 L.T. 312; 104 J.P. 467; Digest Supp. 829
- Bullington Rural District Council v. Oxford Corp'n., [1936] 3 All E.R. 875; Digest Supp. 901, 917
- Butterfield v. Forrester (1809), 11 East 60; 1 Man. & G. 571, n; 36 Digest 112, 745 390, 392
- Cadbury Bros., Ltd. v. Sinclair (1933), 103 L.J.K.B. 29; 149 L.T. 412; 18 Tax Cas. 157; Digest Supp. 600, 601, 603, 605, 606, 607
- Cairncross v. Lorimer (1860), 3 L.T. 130; 21 Digest 328, 1227, H.L. 749, 752
- Camberwell Assessment Committee v. Ellis, [1900] A.C. 510; 69 L.J.Q.B. 828; 83 L.T. 207; 65 J.P. 132; 38 Digest 642, 1601 921, 924, 925, 926

	PAGE
Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. v. Manganese Bronze & Brass Co., Ltd., [1934] A.C. 402; 103 L.J.K.B. 289; 151 L.T. 142; 50 T.L.R. 350; 39 Com. Cas. 194, H.L.; Digest Supp.	285
Canada Atlantic Grain Export Co. (Inc.) v. Eilers (1929), 35 Com. Cas. 90; Digest Supp.	285
Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, [1921] 2 K.B. 403; 90 L.J.K.B. 461; 125 L.T. 108; 12 Tax Cases 258	276, 277
Cardiff Corp'n. v. Hall, [1911] 1 K.B. 1009; 80 L.J.K.B. 644; 104 L.T. 467; 4 B.W.C.C. 159; 34 Digest 402, 3284	436, 438 469, 479
Carmichael v. Caledonian Ry. Co., 8 M. H.L. 108
Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 103 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; Digest Supp.	390, 392, 506
Caterham Urban District Council v. Godstone Rural District Council, [1904] A.C. 171; 78 L.J.K.B. 589; 90 L.T. 653; sub nom. , Re Godstone Rural District Council and Caterham Urban District Council , 68 J.P. 429; 33 Digest 26, 124, H.L.; reversg. , S.C. sub nom. , Re Godstone Rural District Council and Caterham Urban District Council , [1903] 1 K.B. 554, C.A.	901, 920
Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) v. Cannon Brewery Co., Ltd., [1919] A.C. 744; 88 L.J.Ch. 464; 121 L.T. 361; 83 J.P. 261; 11 Digest 548, 512	23, 26
Central London Property Trust, Ltd. v. High Trees House, Ltd., [1947] 1 K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77. 175 L.T. 332	749, 752 811, 813
Chandler v. Strevett, [1947] 1 All E.R. 164; 176 L.T. 300
Charing Cross Electricity Supply Co. v. Hydraulic Power Co., [1914] 3 K.B. 772; 83 L.J.K.B. 1352; 111 L.T. 198; 78 J.P. 305; 36 Digest 189, 315	344
Chesterfield's (Earl) Trusts, Re (1883), 24 Ch.D. 643; 52 L.J.Ch. 958; 49 L.T. 261; 20 Digest 368, 1065	695, 697, 698, 699
Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson, [1944] 2 All E.R. 60; [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J.Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141; Digest Supp.	523, 528
Child (Childs) v. Hearn (1874), L.R. 9 Ex. 176; 43 L.J.Ex. 100; 2 Digest 236, 231	374
Chudley v. Chudley (1893), 69 L.T. 617; 27 Digest 312, 2900	407, 414
Clarke v. Edinburgh & District Tramways Co., 1919 S.C. (H.L.) 35	583, 587
Clarke v. West Ham Corp'n., [1909] 2 K.B. 858; 79 L.J.K.B. 56; 101 L.T. 481; 73 J.P. 461; 8 Digest 7, 14	328, 332 746, 747
Clayton-Greene v. De Courville (1920), 36 T.L.R. 790; 42 Digest 917, 126
Coates v. Rawtenstall Borough Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 602; 157 L.T. 415; 101 J.P. 483; Digest Supp.	92, 96, 97 213, 214
Cocke v. Jennor (1614), Hob. 66; 80 E.R. 214; 43 Digest 375, 32	292, 293
Cocking v. Ward (1845), 1 C.B. 858; 15 L.J.C.P. 245; 135 E.R. 781; 12 Digest 165, 1200	552, 557
Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd. (1933), 26 B.W.C.C. 560; Digest Supp.	749, 753
Coliseum (Barrow), Ltd. Re , [1930] 2 Ch. 44; 99 L.J.Ch. 423; 143 L.T. 428; Digest Supp.
Collins v. Stimson (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 142; 52 L.J.Q.B. 440; 48 L.T. 828; 47 J.P. 439; 5 Digest 732, 6347	525, 550
Collins (Edward) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 1925 S.C. 151; 12 Tax Cas. 773; Digest Supp.	651, 662
Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan (1874), L.R. 5 P.C. 417; 43 L.J.P.C. 39; 30 L.T. 237; 16 Digest 440, 3060	928
Combe, Re , Combe v. Combe, [1925] 1 Ch. 210; 94 L.J.Ch. 267; sub nom. Re Coombe , Coombe v. Coombe, 133 L.T. 473; 37 Digest 527, 1181	843
Commonwealth v. Farmers' & Shippers' Tobacco Warehouse Co. (1899), 52 South-western Reporter 799	621, 628 431, 433 469, 477
Constantia Harlessen, The (1810), Edw. 232; 165 E.R. 1093; 37 Digest 656, 1137
Cook v. Fowler (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 27; 43 L.J.Ch. 855; 35 Digest 177, 67	247
Cook v. Jax Stores, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 502; [1941] 1 K.B. 577; 110 L.J.K.B. 416; 165 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.	524, 528
Cooper v. Philbbs (1867), L.R. 2 H.L. 149; 16 L.T. 678; 35 Digest 93, 27	789, 791
Cooper v. Wilson, [1937] 2 All E.R. 726; [1937] 2 K.B. 309; 106 L.J.K.B. 728; 157 L.T. 290; 101 J.P. 349; 35 L.G.R. 436; Digest Supp.	112, 113
Cotterill v. Lempriere (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 634; 62 L.T. 695; 54 J.P. 583; 42 Digest 728, 1504
Coventry v. Wilson, [1939] 1 All E.R. 448; 160 L.T. 103; 103 J.P. 59; 37 L.G.R. 155; Digest Supp.	789, 792
Cowen v. Cowen, [1945] 2 All E.R. 197; [1946] P. 36; 114 L.J.P. 57; 173 L.T. 176; Digest Supp.	387, 388, 848, 849, 850 568, 577
Cowles v. Dunbar and Callow (1827), 2 C. & P. 565; Mood. & M. 37; 14 Digest 177, 1542	12, 18, 21, 22 23, 26
Cox v. Burbridge (1863), 13 C.B.N.S. 430; 32 L.J.C.P. 89; 2 Digest 233, 218
Craddock v. Zevo Finance Co., Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 566; Digest Supp.
Crawshay, Re , Crawshay v. Crawshay (1890), 43 Ch.D. 615; 59 L.J.Ch. 395; 62 L.T. 489; 37 Digest 514, 1056	643, 646, 649, 650 465, 466, 468 52, 54
Crewe v. John Rhodes, Ltd. (1925), 133 L.T. 650; 18 B.W.C.C. 303, C.A.; 34 Digest 377, 3055	138, 146
Crichton's Oil Co., Re , [1902] 2 Ch. 86; 71 L.J.Ch. 531; 86 L.T. 787; 10 Digest 1006, 6930
Croft v. Dumphy, [1933] A.C. 156; 102 L.J.P.C. 6; 148 L.T. 62; Digest Supp.	798, 799 723, 728
Croft v. Sywell Aerodrome Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 110; [1942] 1 K.B. 317; 111 L.J.K.B. 215; 24 Tax Cas. 126; Digest Supp.	138, 145
Crown Bedding Co., Ltd. v. I.R.C., [1946] 1 All E.R. 452
Crown Grain Co., Ltd. v. Day, [1908] A.C. 504; 78 L.J.P.C. 19; 99 L.T. 740; 17 Digest 441, 173
Cumming & West, Re , Ex. p. Neilson & Craig v. Trustee, (1929) 1 Ch. 534; 141 L.T. 61; sub nom. , Re Cumming , Ex. p. Neilson & Craig v. Adamson (Trustee), 98 L.J.Ch. 83; [1929] B. & C.R. 4; Digest Supp.	418, 421
Currie's Settlement, Re , Re Rooper, Rooper v. Williams, [1910] 1 Ch. 329; 79 L.J.Ch. 285; 101 L.T. 899; 43 Digest 644, 793	889, 892
Dalluaine-Talisker Distilleries v. Inland Revenue., 1930 S.C. 878; 15 Tax Cas. 613; Digest Supp.	651, 662, 666
Dalton v. Angus, [1881] 6 A.C. 740; 19 Digest 7, 4; sub nom. , Public Works Commissioners v. Angus & Co., Dalton v. Angus & Co., 50 L.J.Q.B. 689; 44 L.T. 844	219, 227
Darby, Re , Russell v. Macgregor, [1939] 3 All E.R. 6; [1939] Ch. 905; 108 L.J.Ch. 347; 160 L.T. 602; Digest Supp.	695, 699
David v. Frowd (1833), 1 My. & K. 200; 2 L.J.Ch. 68; 24 Digest 793, 8240	524, 529, 531
Davies v. Bristow, Penrhos College v. Butler, [1920] 3 K.B. 428; 90 L.J.K.B. 164; 123 L.T. 655; 31 Digest 459, 6065
Davies v. Davies (1882), 47 L.T. 40; 30 W.R. 918; 44 Digest 1159, 10037	247
Davies v. Warwick, [1943] 1 All E.R. 309; [1943] 1 K.B. 329; 112 L.J.K.B. 245; 169 L.T. 130; Digest Supp.	765, 768
Davis v. Davis (1889), 14 P.D. 162; 58 L.J.P. 88; 27 Digest 534, 5788	216, 217 381, 382

Davison v. Gillies (1879), 16 Ch.D. 347, n; 50 L.J.Ch. 192, n; 44 L.T. 92, n; 9 Digest 595, 3978	730, 736
Dawson v. Dawson, 1925 S.C. 221; 27 Digest 457, t	583, 586
Dawson & Co. v. Bingley Urban Council, [1911] 2 K.B. 149; 80 L.J.K.B. 842; 104 L.T. 659; 75 J.P. 289; 42 Digest 753, 1772	242, 245
Day v. Glaister (1900), 2 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 963; 37 Sc.L.R. 736; 8 S.L.T. 55; 39 Digest 293, 734x	484, 487, 488
Deare v. Soutten (1869), L.R. 9 Eq. 151; 21 L.T. 523; 34 J.P. 244; 18 W.R. 203; 27 Digest 205, 1773	425
Debtor (No. 231 of 1936), Re , Debtor v. Petitioning Creditors & Official Receiver, [1936] 3 All E.R. 641; 156 L.T. 9; sub nom. , Re Debtor (No. 231 of 1936), [1937] Ch. 181; 106 L.J.Ch. 189; [1936-7] B. & C.R. 113; Digest Supp.	418, 424
Deen v. Davies, [1935] 2 K.B. 282; 104 L.J.K.B. 540; 153 L.T. 90; Digest Supp.	12, 19, 21
Delany, Re , Conoley v. Quick, [1902] 2 Ch. 642; 71 L.J.Ch. 811; 87 L.T. 46; 51 W.R. 27; 18 T.L.R. 741; 8 Digest 245, 50	400, 401
Delaville (G.B.), Ltd. v. Stanley (1946), 63 R.P.C. 103	287, 291
Deloitte, Re , Griffiths v. Deloitte, [1926] Ch. 56; 95 L.J.Ch. 154; 135 L.T. 150; 37 Digest 149, 752	317, 318
Delta Mill (1919), Ltd. v. Blakemore (1935), 104 L.J.K.B. 459; sub nom. , Blakemore v. Delta Mill (1919), Ltd. (1935), 28 B.W.C.C. 193; Digest Supp.	436, 439
Denbigh Cowan & Co. & Atcherley (R.) & Co., Re (1921), 90 L.J.K.B. 836; 125 L.T. 388; 39 Digest 580, 1834	118, 120, 121
Dent v. London Tramways Co. (1880), 16 Ch.D. 344; 50 L.J.Ch. 190; 44 L.T. 91; 9 Digest 601, 4012	730, 734, 736, 737
Derry v. Peek (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L.J.Ch. 864; 61 L.T. 265; 54 J.P. 148; revers. S.C. sub nom. , Peek v. Derry (1887), 37 Ch.D. 541; 35 Digest, 27 185	40, 41
Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's Case (1816), 1 Mer. 529, 572; 12 Digest 483, 3961	524, 536, 537, 546
Dillwyn v. Llewelyn (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 517; 31 L.J.Ch. 658; 6 L.T. 878; 25 Digest 538, 264	523, 525, 548, 549
Doc d. Briery v. Palmer (1812), 16 East 53; 104 E.R. 1009; 37 Digest 457, 6049	116, 117
Doc d. Hull v. Wood (1845), 14 M. & W. 682; 15 L.J.Ex. 41; 6 L.T.O.S. 102; 9 Jur. 1060; 153 E.R. 649; 31 Digest 53, 2010	343
Doc d. Rochester (Bp.) v. Bridges (1831), 1 B. and Ad. 847; 9 L.J.O.S.K.B. 113; 42 Digest 750, 1737	243, 245
Dolan v. MacDermot (1867), L.R. 5 Eq. 60; affy. (1868), L.T. 3 Ch. App. 676, L.C.; 8 Digest 298, 751	514, 519
Dorin v. Dorin (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 568; 45 L.J.Ch. 652; 33 L.T. 281; 39 J.P. 790; 44 Digest 809, 6616	317, 318
Doudie v. Kinnil Cannell & Coking Coal Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 6; 176 L.T. 125 552, 557, 558, 559	558, 559
Duck v. Maycu, [1892] 2 Q.B. 511; 62 L.J.Q.B. 69; 67 L.T. 547; 57 J.P. 23; 12 Digest 510, 4206	213, 214
Dudley Corporation v. Dudley's (Earl) Settled Estates Trustees, 45 L.T. 733; 46 J.P. 340; sub nom. , Re Dudley Corporation (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 86; 51 L.J.Q.B. 121; 41 Digest 36, 264	219, 228, 229, 230
Duffy v. Duffy, 1946 Sessions Notes 116	583, 589
Dumbell v. Roberts, [1944] 1 All E.R. 326; 113 L.J.K.B. 185; 170 L.T. 227; 108 J.P. 139; Digest Supp.	568, 570, 572
Dunn v. Dunn's Trustees, 1930 S.C. 131; Digest Supp.	583, 584, 588
Dunne v. Byrne, [1912] A.C. 407; 81 L.J.P.C. 202; 106 L.T. 394; 8 Digest 294, 718	400, 401, 514, 519
Durnell v. Scott, [1939] 1 All E.R. 183; Digest Supp.	126, 128, 129
Dwyer and another v. Mansfield, [1946] 2 All E.R. 247; [1946] K.B. 437; 175 L.T. 61; Digest Supp.	315, 316
Dykes v. Baird, 1929 S.C. (Ct. of Sess.) 555; 22 B.W.C.C. 792; Digest Supp.	436, 439
Dyson v. Attorney-General, [1911] 1 K.B. 410; 80 L.J.K.B. 531; 103 L.T. 707; 27 T.L.R. 143	293, 294
Easson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1944] 2 All E.R. 425; [1944] 1 K.B. 421; 113 L.J.K.B. 449; 170 L.T. 234; Digest Supp.	506
Eastham v. Eastham, [1943] 1 All E.R. 659; [1943] P. 53; 112 L.J.P. 69; 168 L.T. 348; Digest Supp.	493, 494
Edwards v. Edwards & Wilson, [1897] P. 316; 67 L.J.P. 1; 77 L.T. 406; 27 Digest 385, 3788	493, 495
Edwards v. Edwards (otherwise Cowtan), [1934] P. 84; sub nom. , E.V.E. (otherwise C.) (1934), 103 L.J.P. 37; 151 L.T. 36; Digest Supp.	848, 849
Elliot v. Boynton, [1924] 1 Ch. 236; 93 L.J.Ch. 122; 130 L.T. 497; 31 Digest 553, 7003	415
Ellis v. Banyard (1911), 106 L.T. 51; 2 Digest 234, 225	12, 19
Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 454; [1938] 1 K.B. 212; 107 L.J.K.B. 84; 157 L.T. 380; 101 J.P. 469; Digest Supp.	92, 96, 97, 896, 897, 898
English Dairies, Ltd. v. Phillips, English Dairies, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1927), 11 Tax Cas. 597; Digest Supp.	651, 654
Entick v. Carrington (1765), 19 St. Tr. 1029; 2 Wils. 275; 14 Digest 189, 7694	568, 571
Errington v. Minister of Health, [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; Digest Supp.	48, 49, 50, 185, 186, 455, 852, 862, 863
Evans v. Evans (1790), 1 Hag. Cons. 35; 27 Digest 281, 2522	583, 585
Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (No. 1), [1939] 2 All E.R. 358; 32 B.W.C.C. 51 552, 557, 560	552, 557, 560
Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (No. 2), [1940] 2 All E.R. 201; [1940] 1 K.B. 702; 109 L.J.K.B. 493; 164 L.T. 17; 33 B.W.C.C. 122, C.A.; Digest Supp.	6, 9, 11, 551, 552, 557, 560
Evans (Joseph) & Co., Ltd. v. Heathcote, [1918] 1 K.B. 418; 87 L.J.K.B. 593; 118 L.T. 556; 12 Digest 289, 2375; 583, 4868	292, 293
Eve, Re , Edwards v. Burns, [1909] 1 Ch. 796; 78 L.J.Ch. 388; 100 L.T. 874; 44 Digest 812, 6646	317, 318
Eyling v. Israel & Oppenheimer, [1918] 1 Ch. 101; 87 L.J.Ch. 341; 118 L.T. 99; 9 Digest 591, 3959	730, 739
Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington (1932), 146 L.T. 391; Digest Supp.	12, 20
Farley v. Westminster Bank, [1939] 3 All E.R. 491; [1939] A.C. 430; 108 L.J.P.C. 307; 161 L.T. 103	514, 519
Farmer v. Glyn-Jones, [1903] 2 K.B. 6; 72 L.J.K.B. 523; 89 L.T. 64; 67 J.P. 240; 34 Digest 563, 252	802, 808
Farnham v. Farnham (otherwise Daniels), [1936] 3 All E.R. 776; [1937] P. 49; 106 L.J.P. 6; 155 L.T. 621; Digest Supp.	29, 30
Feilden v. Byrne, [1926] Ch. 620; 95 L.J.Ch. 445; 135 L.T. 107; 31 Digest 174, 3067	415

	PAGE
Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 122; [1943] A.C. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 433; 167 L.T. 101; Digest Supp.	118, 120
Filliter v. Phippard (1847), 11 Q.B. 347; 17 L.J.Q.B. 89; 10 L.T.O.S. 225; 11 J.P. 903; 36 Digest 54, 334	344
Fisher v. Black & White Publishing Co., [1901] 1 Ch. 174; 71 L.J.Ch. 175; 84 L.T. 305; 9 Digest 602, 4021	730, 738, 740, 741
Fisher v. Oldham Corp., [1930] 2 K.B. 364; 99 L.J.K.B. 569; 143 L.T. 281; 94 J.P. 132; Digest Supp.	81, 83
Fitch v. Dewes, [1921] 2 A.C. 158; 90 L.J.Ch. 436; 125 L.T. 744; 43 Digest 84, 276	179, 180, 181, 182, 759, 760, 763
Fitzpatrick v. Bate, Mitchell v. Page (1934), 151 L.T. 17; 98 J.P. 215; Digest Supp.	236
Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L.R. 1 Exch. 265; 4 H. & C. 263; 35 L.J.Ex. 154; 14 L.T. 523; 30 J.P. 436; 2 Digest 228, 195	12, 18
Fletcher v. Sondes (Lord) (1826), 3 Bing. 501; 1 Bli. N.S. 144; 42 Digest 672, 336	374, 377
Flint v. Lovell, [1935] 1 K.B. 354; 104 L.J.K.B. 199; 152 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.	335, 336
Fludyer v. Cocker (1805), 12 Ves. 25; 33 E.R. 10; 40 Digest 199, 1660	716, 721
Forth v. Forth (1867), 36 L.J.P. & M. 122; 16 L.T. 574; 27 Digest 494, 5274	583, 586, 589
Fortuna, The (1807), unreported	431, 432
Fortuna, The (1809), Edw. 56, 2 Eng. Pr. Cas. 17; 165 E.R. 1031; 37 Digest 660, 1196	431, 432
Foster (W.) & Son, Ltd., Re, [1942] 1 All E.R. 314; 111 L.J.Ch. 221; 167 L.T. 121; Digest Supp.	52, 53
Foundling Hospital (Governors and Guardians) v. Crane, [1911] 2 K.B. 367; 80 L.J.K.B. 853; 105 L.T. 187, C.A.; 17 Digest 205, 166	265, 268
Fourteen Appeals, Re, Reports of Selected War Pension Appeals, Vol. 11, p. 465	892
Fowler (John) & Co. (Leeds), Ltd. v. Duncan & Crabtree, [1941] 2 All E.R. 577; [1941] Ch. 450; 110 L.J.Ch. 161; 165 L.T. 123; Digest Supp.	23, 26
France Fenwick Tyne & Wear Co., Ltd. v. H.M. Procurator-General, [1942] A.C. 667; [1942] 2 All E.R. 453; 58 T.L.R. 388; sub nom. The Prins Knud S.S., France Fenwick Tyne & Wear Co., Ltd. v. H.M. Procurator-General, 111 L.J.P.C. 126; 167 L.T. 278; Digest Supp.	431, 433
Francis v. Cockrell (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 501; 10 B. & S. 950; 39 L.J.Q.B. 291; 23 L.T. 460; 34 Digest 166, 1296	92, 98
Fraser v. Pate (1923), S.C. 748	12, 19
Frewen v. Frewen (1875), 10 Ch. App. 610; 33 L.T. 43; 44 Digest 404, 2367	350, 352
Frith v. Cartland (1865), 2 Hem. & M. 417; 34 L.J.Ch. 301; 12 L.T. 175; 43 Digest 1021, 4609	524, 535
Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 432; 99 L.J.K.B. 403; 143 L.T. 77; 15 Tax Cas. 266; Digest Supp.	798, 799, 800
Furber, Re, [1898] 2 Ch. 538; 47 W.R. 184; sub nom. Re Furber, Ex p. Furber, 67 L.J.Ch. 593; 79 L.T. 266; sub nom. Re Furber, Ex p. Watkins, 42 Sol. Jo. 718; 42 Digest 234, 2672	370, 372
Fussell v. Somerset Quarter Sessions Licensing Committee, [1947] 1 All E.R. 44; [1947] 1 K.B. 276; 176 L.T. 304	874, 877
Garrard, Re, Gordon v. Craigie, [1907] 1 Ch. 382; 72 L.J.Ch. 240; 96 L.T. 357; 23 T.L.R. 256; 51 Sol. Jo. 209; 8 Digest 294, 716	400, 401
Gaskell, Re, [1904] 2 K.B. 478; 73 L.J.K.B. 656; 91 L.T. 221; 4 Digest 575, 5284	769, 771
Gaylor & Pope, Ltd. v. Davies (B.) & Son, Ltd., [1924] 2 K.B. 75; 93 L.J.K.B. 702; 131 L.T. 507; 36 Digest 64, 474	12, 19
Gee v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 161; 42 L.J.Q.B. 105; 28 L.T. 282; 8 Digest 78, 533	506
General Council of the Bar (England) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1907] 1 K.B. 462; 76 L.J.K.B. 212; 96 L.T. 267; 71 J.P. 117; 3 Digest 333, 231	481, 484
Genese, Re, Ex p. District Bank of London (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 700; 55 L.J.Q.B. 118; 4 Digest 482, 4340	418, 423
George v. Mitchell and King, [1943] 1 All E.R. 233	106, 108
George Edwardes (Daly's Theatre), Ltd. v. Comber (1926), 42 T.L.R. 247; 42 Digest 917, 127	746, 747
Giles v. Randall, [1915] 1 K.B. 290; 84 L.J.K.B. 786; 112 L.T. 271; Digest Practice 948, 4881	203, 204
Gillespie v. Alexander (1827), 3 Russ. 130; 23 Digest 432, 5035	524, 529, 531
Glamorgan Coal Co. v. Glamorganshire Standing Joint Committee and others, [1916] 2 K.B. 206; 85 L.J.K.B. 1193; 114 L.T. 717; 80 J.P. 289; 37 Digest 185, 191	81, 86
Glanely (Lord) v. Wightman, [1933] A.C. 618; 102 L.J.K.B. 456; 149 L.T. 121; 17 Tax Cas. 634; Digest Supp.	798, 800
Glasgow Corp. v. Taylor, [1922] 1 A.C. 44; 91 L.J.P.C. 49; 126 L.T. 262; 86 J.P. 89; 36 Digest 70, 453	92, 96, 97
Glead v. Glead (1927), 43 T.L.R. 678; Digest Supp.	493, 495
Glenboig Union Fireclay Co. Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1922] S.C. (H.L.) 112; 12 Tax Cas. 427; Digest Supp.	469, 474, 477, 480
Gloucester Railway Carriage and Wagon Co., Ltd. v. Comrs. of Inland Revenue, [1925] A.C. 469; 94 L.J.K.B. 397; 133 L.T. 1; 12 Tax Cas. 720	798, 801
Gold v. Essex County Council, [1942] 2 All E.R. 237; [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 112 L.J.K.B. 1; 167 L.T. 166; 106 J.P. 242; Digest Supp.	634, 638
Goldsmith v. Deacon (1935), 150 L.T. 157; 98 J.T. 4; Digest Supp.	639, 640
Gollin v. I.R.C., [1943] 1 All E.R. 346; 168 L.T. 274; 25 Tax Cas. 161; sub nom. Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gollin, 112 L.J.K.B. 343; Digest Supp.	243, 246
Goode v. Howells (1838), 4 M. & W. 198; 1 Horn. & H. 199; 7 L.J.Ex. 312; 3 J.P. 513; 31 Digest 447, 5943	149, 153
Goodman v. Saltash Corp. (1882), 7 App. Cas. 633; 52 L.J.Q.B. 193; 48 L.T. 239; 47 J.P. 276, H.L.; revsg., S.C., sub nom. Saltash Corp. v. Goodman (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 106, C.A.; 8 Digest 327, 1099	247
Goodwin, Re, Ainslie v. Goodwin, [1924] 2 Ch. 26; 93 L.J.Ch. 331; 130 L.T. 822; 44 Digest 474, 2933	514, 521
Gordon, Re, Watts v. Rationalist Press Association, Ltd., and Kemp, [1940] Ch. 769; [1940] 3 All E.R. 205; 109 L.J.Ch. 289; 163 L.T. 308	451, 452, 453, 454
Gordon v. Metropolitan Police Chief Commissioner, [1910] 2 K.B. 1080; 79 L.J.K.B. 957; 103 L.T. 338; 74 J.P. 437; 12 Digest 280, 2297	402, 405, 406
Goss v. Nugent (Lord) (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 58; 2 Nev. & M.K.B. 28; 2 L.J.K.B. 127; 110 E.R. 713; 12 Digest 354, 2941	390, 391
Graham v. Graham (1878), 5 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1093	55, 59
Graham v. Graham, [1923] P. 31; 92 L.J.P. 26; 128 L.T. 639; Digest Supp.	583, 585
	407, 408

	PAGE
Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Robinson, [1915] A.C. 740; 84 L.J.P.C. 194; 113 L.T. 350; 8 Digest 104, 694	328, 330
Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills, Ltd., [1936] A.C. 85; 105 L.J.P.C. 6; 154 L.T. 18; 52 T.L.R. 38; 79 Sol. Jo. 815, P.C.; Digest Supp.	285
Grason, Re, Ex p. Taylor (1879), 12 Ch.D. 366; 41 L.T. 6; 4 Digest 484, 4357	418, 422
Grayson (H. & C.) v. Ellerman Lines, Ltd., [1920] A.C. 466; 89 L.J.K.B. 924; 123 L.T. 65 H.L.; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , Ellerman Lines, Ltd. v. Grayson (H. & G.), [1919] 2 K.B. 514, C.A.; 36 Digest 116, 730	344
Great Northern Ry. Co. v. L.E.P. Transport and Depository, Ltd., [1922] 2 K.B. 742; 91 L.J.K.B. 807; 127 L.T. 664; Digest Supp.	328, 332, 508, 510
Greig v. Somerville (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 338; 23 Digest 432, 5036	524, 529, 531
Grinham v. Grinham and Pascoe, [1916] P. 1; 85 L.J.P. 20; 113 L.T. 1216; 27 Digest 423, 4290	793, 797
Grove (Dudley Revenue Officer) v. Lloyd's British Testing Co., Ltd., [1931] A.C. 450; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; revg. , [1931] 1 K.B. 385, C.A.; Digest Supp.	878, 884, 886
Grove-Grady, Re, Plowden v. Lawrence , [1929] 1 Ch. 557; 98 L.J.Ch. 261; 140 L.T. 659, C.A.; varied on appeal, sub nom. , A.-G. v. Plowden, [1931] W.N. 89; 171 L.T. Jo. 308; H.L.; Digest Supp.	514, 520
Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 67 L.J.Q.B. 862; 79 L.T. 284; 42 Digest 760, 1853	243, 245
Gullan v. Gullan (otherwise Goodwin), [1913] P. 160; 82 L.J.P. 118; 109 L.T. 411; 27 Digest 509, 5469	848, 849
Gunter v. James (1908), 72 J.P. 448; 26 Digest 431, 1502	344
Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 17 Digest 93, 101	361, 362
Hadley v. Perks (1866), L.R. 1 Q.B. 444; 7 B. & S. 375; 35 L.J.M.C. 177; 14 L.T. 325; 30 J.P. 485; 14 Digest 178, 1561	568, 578
Hadwell v. Righton, [1907] 2 K.B. 345; 76 L.J.K.B. 891; 97 L.T. 133; 71 J.P. 499; 2 Digest 233, 222	12, 19
Hall, Re, Branston v. Weightman (1887), 35 Ch.D. 551; 56 L.J.Ch. 730; 57 L.T. 42; 44 Digest 819, 6703	317, 318
Hall v. Burke (1886), 3 T.L.R. 165, C.A.; 39 Digest 442, 709	285
Hall v. Taylor (1858), E.B. & E. 107; 27 L.J.Q.B. 311; 31 L.T.O.S. 151; 13 Digest 417, 1370	81, 83
Hallett's Estate, Re, Knatchbull v. Hallett (1880), 13 Ch.D. 696; sub nom. Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v. Hallett, Cottrell v. Hallett , 49 L.J.Ch. 415; 42 L.T. 421; 43 Digest 1021, 4614	523, 524, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546
Hanson v. Newman, [1934] Ch. 298; 103 L.J.Ch. 124; 150 L.T. 345; Digest Supp.	415, 416
Hardyman, Re, Teesdale v. McClintock , [1925] Ch. 287; 94 L.J.Ch. 204; 133 L.T. 175; 44 Digest 385, 2196	350, 354
Harman v. Butt, [1944] 1 All E.R. 558; [1944] K.B. 491; 114 L.J.K.B. 99; 170 L.T. 355; 108 J.P. 229; 60 T.L.R. 341; Digest Supp.	498, 499, 500
Harris v. Harris (No. 2) (1861), 29 Beav. 110; 32 Digest 506, 1665	524, 529
Harris v. Lee (1718), 1 P. Wms. 482; sub nom. , Anon., 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 135; 27 Digest 192, 1593	425
Harris & Sons v. Plymouth Varnish & Colour Co., Ltd. (1933), 49 T.L.R. 521; 38 Com. Cas. 316; Digest Supp.	285
Harrison v. Cronk & Sons, Ltd., [1936] 3 All E.R. 747; [1937] A.C. 185; 106 L.J.K.B. 70; 156 L.T. 20; sub nom. , Cronk & Sons, Ltd. v. Harrison, 20 Tax Cas. 612; Digest Supp.	651, 654, 655, 662, 663, 664, 666
Harrison v. Kirk, [1904] A.C. 1; 73 L.J.P.C. 35; 89 L.T. 566; 24 Digest 791, 8222	524, 529
Harrods, Ltd. v. Geneen, [1938] 4 All E.R. 493; 55 T.L.R. 139; Digest Supp.	460
Harrods, Ltd. v. Harrod (R.), Ltd. (1923), 40 T.L.R. 195; 41 R.P.C. 74; C.A. 43 Digest 294, 1205	287, 290
Harvey v. Farnie (1882), 8 App. Cas. 43; 52 L.J.P. 33; 48 L.T. 273; 47 J.P. 308; 11 Digest 429, 932	621, 626
Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co., [1913] 2 K.B. 158; 82 L.J.K.B. 414; 108 L.T. 283; 6 B.W.C.C. 225; 34 Digest 348, 2803	6, 8, 9, 552
Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; Digest Supp.	896, 898
Hatch, Re, Hatch v. Hatch , [1919] 1 Ch. 351; 88 L.J.Ch. 147; 120 L.T. 694; 35 Digest 95, 36	522, 524, 528, 532
Havana Cigar & Tobacco Factories, Ltd. v. Oddenino, [1924] 1 Ch. 179; 93 L.J.Ch. 81; 130 L.T. 423; 40 T.L.R. 102; 68 Sol. Jo. 164; 41 R.P.C. 47; 43 Digest 279, 1106	287, 291
Heath's Garage, Ltd. v. Hodges, [1916] 2 K.B. 370; 85 L.J.K.B. 1289; 115 L.T. 129; 80 J.P. 321; 2 Digest 234, 226	12, 13, 19
Henderson v. Meade-King, Robinson & Co. (1935), 22 Tax Cas. 79; Digest Supp.	742, 745
Hennan & Co., Ltd. v. Duckworth (1904), 90 L.T. 546; 20 T.L.R. 436; 48 Sol. Jo. 436; 34 Digest 564, 222	773, 774
Henry v. Foster (A.), Henry v. Foster (J.), Hunter v. Dewhurst (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 605; sub nom. , Dewhurst v. Hunter, 146 L.T. 510; Digest Supp.	282, 284
Herbert v. McQuade (1902), 4 Tax Cas. 439; [1902] 2 K.B. 631; 71 L.J.K.B. 884; 87 L.T. 349; 66 J.P. 692; 28 Digest 86, 492	282, 283
Herbert Morris, Ltd. v. Saxelby, [1916] 1 A.C. 688; 85 L.J.Ch. 210; 114 L.T. 618; 43 Digest 24, 154	179, 181, 759, 763, 764
Higgins v. Searle (1909), 100 L.T. 280; 73 J.P. 185; 2 Digest 234, 223	12, 18, 19
Hill v. Crook (1873), L.R. 6 H.L. 265; 42 L.J.Ch. 702; 44 Digest 808, 6614	317, 318
Hill (R. A.) v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 720; 144 L.T. 65; sub nom. , Re Hill (Richard), Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, 99 L.J.P.C. 191	208, 210, 212
Hilliard v. Fulford (1876), 4 Ch.D. 389; 46 L.J.Ch. 43; 35 L.T. 750; 24 Digest 853, 8830	522, 524, 531, 532, 538
Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital (Governors), [1909] 2 K.B. 820; 78 L.J.K.B. 953; sub nom. , Hillyer v. London Corp., etc. (Governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital), 101 L.T. 368; 73 J.P. 501; 34 Digest 550, 37	634, 638, 639
Hilton v. Granville (Lord) (1844), 5 Q.B. 701; 1 Dav. & Mer. 614; 13 L.J.Q.B. 193; 2 L.T.O.S. 419; 114 E.R. 1414; 34 Digest 703, 923	218, 221, 223
Hines (Ipswich Revenue Officer) v. Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Association, Ltd., [1931] A.C. 456; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.	884, 885, 886
Hobbs v. Branscomb (1813), 3 Camp. 420; 14 Digest 178, 1557	568, 578
Hobson v. Tulloch, [1898] 1 Ch. 424; 67 L.J.Ch. 205; 78 L.T. 224; 40 Digest 320, 2713	193, 194
Hocker v. Solomon (1921), 91 L.J.Ch. 8; 727 L.T. 144; 31 Digest 560, 7070	686, 687
Holden (Isaac) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1924), 12 Tax Cas. 768; Digest Supp.	651, 654, 666

Holland v. Hodgson (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 328; 41 L.J.P.C. 146; 26 L.T. 709; 31 Digest 188, 3225	231, 234
Holman v. Johnson (1775), 1 Cowp. 341; 12 Digest 279, 2288	390, 391, 395
Holt v. Markham, [1923] 1 K.B. 504; 92 L.J.K.B. 406; 128 L.T. 719; 35 Digest 157, 533	523, 527, 528
Holywell Union and Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co., [1895] A.C. 117; 64 L.J.M.C. 113; 71 L.T. 818; 59 J.P. 566; 38 Digest 424, 7	219, 225, 227
Home and Colonial Insurance Co., Ltd., Re, [1930] 1 Ch. 302; sub nom. , Re Home & Colonial Insurance Co., May v. Barham, 99 L.J.Ch. 113; 142 L.T. 207; Digest Supp.	293, 294
Honeywill & Stein, Ltd. v. Larkin Bros. (London's Commercial Photographers), Ltd., [1934] 1 K.B. 191; 103 L.J.K.B. 74; 150 L.T. 71; Digest Supp.	344
Hooper v. Lane (1857), 6 H.L. Cas. 443; 27 L.J.Q.B. 75; 30 L.T.O.S. 33; 41 Digest 75, 86	568, 575, 578
Hopper v. Conyers (1866), L.R. 2 Eq. 549; 43 Digest 952, 3917	524, 537
Hopwood v. Muirson, [1945] 1 All E.R. 453; [1945] K.B. 313; 114 L.J.K.B. 267; 172 L.T. 231; 61 T.L.R. 312; 89 Sol. Jo. 224, C.A.; Digest Supp.	335
Horn v. Minister of Health, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1299; [1937] 1 K.B. 164; 105 L.J.K.B. 649; 155 L.T. 835; 100 J.P. 463; Digest Supp.	613
Hotel Regina (Torquay), Ltd. v. Moon, [1940] 2 All E.R. 495; [1940] 2 K.B. 69; 109 L.J.K.B. 582; 162 L.T. 359; 104 J.P. 275; Digest Supp.	236
Houston v. Burns, [1915] A.C. 337; 87 L.J.P.C. 99; 118 L.T. 462; 8 Digest 297, 739	514, 519
Howard de Walden (Lord) v. I.R.C., [1942] 1 All E.R. 287; [1942] 1 K.B. 389; 111 L.J.K.B. 273; 25 Tax Cas. 121; Digest Supp.	149, 151
Howes, Re, [1934] Ch. 49; 150 L.T. 95; [1933] B. & C.R. 133; sub nom. , Re Howes, Trustee v. Gill & Reigate, Ltd., 102 L.J.Ch. 346; Digest Supp.	418, 422, 423
Howley Park Coal and Cannell Co. v. L.N.W.R. Co., [1913] A.C. 11; sub nom. , L.N.W.R. Co. v. Howley Park Coal & Cannell Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 97; 80 L.J.Ch. 537; 104 L.T. 546; 11 Digest 152, 345	219, 230
Huggett v. Miers, [1905] 2 K.B. 278; 77 L.J.K.B. 710; 99 L.T. 326; 31 Digest 100, 2386	896, 899
Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; [1938] A.C. 366; 107 L.J.K.B. 306; 158 L.T. 463; 21 Tax Cas. 472; Digest Supp.	600, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607
Hughes v. Williams, [1943] 1 All E.R. 535; [1943] 1 K.B. 574; 112 L.J.K.B. 275; 168 L.T. 305; Digest Supp.	12, 13, 19
Hulme v. Brigham, [1943] 1 All E.R. 204; [1943] 1 K.B. 152; 112 L.J.K.B. 267; 168 L.T. 7; Digest Supp.	231, 235
Hunnisset v. Southend Corp'n. (1940), 33 B.W.C.C. 50; Digest Supp.	436, 440
Hutton v. Eyre (1815), 6 Taunt. 289; 1 Marsh 603; 16 R.R. 619; 128 E.R. 1046; 12 Digest 511, 4218	213, 214
Hvalfangerselskapet Polaris A-S v. Unilever, Ltd., Lever Bros., Ltd. and another (1933), 46 Ll.L.R. 29	583, 588
Hyde v. Hyde and Woodmansee (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 130; 35 L.J.P. & M. 57; 14 L.T. 188; 11 Digest 413, 800	621, 626, 629
Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsell, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1	514, 518
Indemaur v. Dames (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; Har. & Ruth. 243; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; 36 Digest 35, 203	896, 898
Inglis v. Stock (1885), 10 App. Cas. 263; 54 L.J.Q.B. 582; 52 L.T. 821; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , Stock v. Inglis (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 564; 39 Digest 530, 1433	118, 121
Inland Revenue v. Easson Bros., [1930] S.C. 480	884, 885
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ballantine (1924), 8 Tax Cas. 595; 28 Digest 63, 1	469, 477, 480
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Barnato, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1176; 155 L.T. 211; 20 Tax Cas. 455; Digest Supp.	469, 474, 478
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Blott, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Greenwood, [1921] 2 A.C. 171; 90 L.J.K.B. 1028; 125 L.T. 497; 8 Tax Cas. 101; 28 Digest 107, 663	670, 674
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car Co. (Wimbledon), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 609	798, 800, 801, 802
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 174 L.T. 162	798, 801, 802
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Falkirk Temperance Cafe Trust, 1927 S.C. 261; 11 Tax Cas. 353; Digest Supp.	515, 521
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Fergus (1926), 10 Tax Cas. 665	378
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Maxse, [1919] 1 K.B. 647; 88 L.J.K.B. 752; 12 Tax Cas. 749; Digest Supp.	480, 482
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Newcastle Breweries, Ltd. (1927), 12 Tax Cas. 927; Digest Supp.	651, 654, 666
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Terence Byron, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 636; 114 L.J.K.B. 345; 172 L.T. 389; Digest Supp.	609, 611
Isaac Holden & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1924), 12 Tax Cas. 768; Digest Supp.	609, 610
Jackson v. Barry Railway Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 238; 68 L.T. 472; 2 Digest 379, 424	396, 397, 613
Jackson v. Jackson, [1924] P. 19; 2 Digest 308, 2852	563, 565, 566
Jackson v. Jackson (1932), 146 L.T. 406; 96 J.P. 97; Digest Supp.	32, 33, 36
Jackson v. Jackson & Barwell, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1588; [1936] P. 214; 105 L.J.P. 93; 155 L.T. 324; Digest Supp.	29, 30
Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines, Ltd., [1902] A.C. 484; 71 L.J.K.B. 857; 87 L.T. 372; 12 Digest 243, 1283	620, 626
Jenner v. Morris (1861), 3 De. G. & J. 45; 30 L.J. (Ch.) 361; 3 L.T. 871; 25 J.P. 419; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 375; 9 W.R. 391; 27 Digest 205, 1772	425
Job Edwards, Ltd. v. Birmingham Navigation, [1924] 1 K.B. 341; 93 L.J.K.B. 261; 130 L.T. 522; 36 Digest 214, 375	344
Johnson v. Humphrey, [1946] 1 All E.R. 460; 174 L.T. 324	689, 694
Johnson v. Needham, [1909] 1 K.B. 626; 78 L.J.K.B. 412; 100 L.T. 493; 73 J.P. 117; 83 Digest 323, 376	830, 831, 832
Johnstone v. Johnstone, [1929] P. 165; 98 L.J.P. 76; 140 L.T. 451; Digest Supp.	434, 435
Joint Stock Discount Co. v. Brown (1869), L.R. 8 Eq. 376; sub nom. , London Joint Stock Discount Co., Ltd. v. Brown, 20 L.T. 844	262, 263
Jones, Re, Jones v. Jones, [1933] Ch. 842; 102 L.J.Ch. 303; 149 L.T. 417; Digest Supp.	64, 69, 70, 71
Jones v. Amalgamated Collieries, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 1; [1944] A.C. 14; 113 L.J.K.B. 49; 170 L.T. 78; 36 B.W.C.C. 195; Digest Supp.; affg. , [1942] 2 All E.R. 600; [1943] K.B. 145	436, 437, 439, 440, 552, 559
Jones v. Jones, [1896] P. 165; 65 L.J.P. 101; 75 L.T. 190; 27 Digest 385, 3782	493, 495
Jones v. Just (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 197; 9 B. & S. 141; 37 L.J.Q.B. 89; 18 L.T. 208; 16 W.R. 643; 39 Digest 434, 632	285
Jones v. Lee (1911), 106 L.T. 123; 76 J.P. 137; 2 Digest 234, 224	12, 19
Jones v. Lowe, [1945] 1 All E.R. 194; [1945] 1 K.B. 75; 114 L.J.K.B. 164; 172 L.T. 18; Digest Supp.	460, 462

Jorden v. Money (1854), 5 H.L. Cas. 185; 23 L.J.Ch. 865; 24 L.T.O.S. 160; 21 Digest 202, 1041	749, 752
Juno, The, [1916] P. 169; 84 L.J.P. 154; 112 L.T. 471; 87 Digest 657, 1151	431, 432
Kaye (Dewsbury Revenue Officer) v. Burrows and Dewsbury Assessment Committee, [1931] A.C. 454; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.	884, 885, 886
Kelly v. Solari (1841), 9 M. & W. 54; 11 L.J.Ex. 10; 35 Digest 151, 437	523, 527
Kemphorne, Re, Charles v. Kemphorne, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J.Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111; Digest Supp.	350, 352, 402, 404, 405
Kemp-Welch v. Kemp-Welch and Crymes, [1910] P. 233; 79 L.J.P. 92; 102 L.T. 787; 27 Digest 442, 4543	434
Keren Kayemeth Le Jisrael, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1932] A.C. 650; 101 L.J.K.B. 459; 147 L.T. 161; 17 Tax Cas. 27; Digest Supp.	514, 520
Kershaw v. Sievier (1904), 21 T.L.R. 40; 25 Digest 409, 128	292, 293
Kilduff v. Wilson, [1939] 1 All E.R. 429; 160 L.T. 103; 103 J.P. 59; 37 L.G.R. 155; Digest Supp.	789, 792
King v. King, [1943] 2 All E.R. 253; [1943] P. 91; 112 L.J.P. 89; 169 L.T. 251; Digest Supp.	434, 435
Kingman v. Seager, [1938] 1 K.B. 397; 107 L.J.K.B. 97; 157 L.T. 535; 101 J.P. 543; Digest Supp.	126, 127, 128, 129
Kingston Union v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1926] A.C. 331; 95 L.J.K.B. 605; 134 L.T. 483; 90 J.P. 69; H.L.; affg., S.C., sub nom., Metropolitan Water Board v. Kingston Union Assessment Committee, [1925] 2 K.B. 509 C.A.; 38 Digest 547, 901	670, 671, 675
Kinnell v. Peebles, 17 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 416	583, 584, 588
Kirkpatrick v. Dunlop, 1916 S.C. 631, n.	583, 587
Kitton v. Hewett, [1904] W.N. 21; 32 Digest 272, 532	838, 839
Lace v. Chantler, [1944] 1 All E.R. 305; [1944] K.B. 368; 113 L.J.K.B. 282; 170 L.T. 185; Digest Supp.	343, 786
Lacy v. Kinnaaston (1701), 3 Salk. 298; Holt, K.B. 178; 90 E.R. 996; 12 Mod. Rep. 548; 1 Ld. Raym. 688; 12 Digest 498, 4076	213, 215
Lamb, Re, Vipond v. Lamb, [1929] 1 Ch. 722; 98 L.J.Ch. 308; 141 L.T. 60; Digest Supp.	402, 404
Lassence v. Tierney (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 15 L.T.O.S. 557; 43 Digest 643, 790	889, 891
Layen v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1944] 1 All E.R. 432; Digest Supp.	356, 360
L.C.C. Ltd. v. G. B. Ollivant, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 510; Digest Supp.	670, 673, 674, 678
Leadbitter, Re (1878), 10 Ch.D. 388; 48 L.J.Ch. 242; 39 L.T. 286; 4 Digest 205, 1886	73, 75
Lea's Trustees v. Dunn, [1912] S.C. 50	469, 479
Leicestershire County Council, Ex parte, [1891] 1 Q.B. 53; 60 L.J.M.C. 45; 64 L.T. 25; 35 Digest 108, 723; 37 Digest 179, 16	81, 86
Lewis v. Cattle, [1938] 2 All E.R. 368; [1938] 2 K.B. 454; 107 L.J.K.B. 429; 159 L.T. 166; Digest Supp.	81, 83
Lewis v. Denye, [1940] 3 All E.R. 299; [1940] A.C. 921; 109 L.J.K.B. 817; 163 L.T. 249; Digest Supp.	390, 393
Lindenhall, The, [1945] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 67; 172 L.T. 229; 61 T.L.R. 284; 78 Lloyd L.R. 215, C.A.; Digest Supp.	508, 510, 511
Littlewood, Re, Clark v. Littlewood, [1931] 1 Ch. 443; 100 L.J.Ch. 243; 144 L.T. 718; Digest Supp.	402, 404, 405, 406
Liversidge v. Anderson, [1941] 3 All E.R. 338; [1942] A.C. 206; 110 L.J.K.B. 724; 116 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.	396, 397, 454, 455, 456, 457, 852, 861, 862
Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co., [1912] A.C. 716; 81 L.J.K.B. 1140; 107 L.T. 531; 34 Digest 129, 991	236, 239
Local Government Board v. Arlidge, [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 38 Digest 97, 708; 33 Digest 217, 518	396, 455, 613, 852, 858
London, Chatham and Dover Ry. Co. v. S.E. Ry. Co., [1893] A.C. 423; 63 L.J.Ch. 93; 69 L.T. 637; 53 J.P. 36; 35 Digest 183, 123	469, 473, 476
London Corpn. v. Associated Newspapers, Ltd., [1915] A.C. 674; 84 L.J.K.B. 1053; 113 L.T. 1; 79 J.P. 273; 38 Digest 475, 351	820, 822, 823
London County Council v. Erith Parish (Churchwardens, etc.) and Dartford Union Assessment Committee, West Ham Parish (Churchwardens, etc.) v. London County Council, St. George's Union Assessment Committee v. London County Council, [1893] A.C. 562; 63 L.J.M.C. 9; 69 L.T. 725; 57 J.P. 821; sub nom., London County Council v. Erith Overseers, London County Council v. West Ham Union, London County Council v. Woolwich Union, London County Council v. St. George's Union, Ryde, Rat. App. (1891-93) 382; 38 Digest 429, 42	670, 671, 673
L.N.E.R. v. B.A. Collieries, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 51; [1945] A.C. 143; 114 L.J.Ch. 23; 172 L.T. 50; Digest Supp.	219, 227
Long v. Millar (1879), 4 C.P.D. 450; 48 L.J.Q.B. 596; 41 L.T. 306; 43 J.P. 797; 12 Digest 141, 956	55, 60, 61, 63
Long Acre Press, Ltd. v. Odhams Press, Ltd., [1930] 2 Ch. 196; 99 L.J.Ch. 479; 143 L.T. 562; Digest Supp.	730, 733, 735, 741
Lucey v. Bawden, [1914] 2 K.B. 318; 83 L.J.K.B. 523; 110 L.T. 580; 31 Digest 100, 2382	896, 899
Lum Lin Ying, Re (1894), 59 Fed. Rep. 682	621, 628
Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; 57 T.L.R. 213; 46 Com. Cas. 120; Digest Supp.	460, 462
Lyon v. Taylor Bros. (1928), 21 B.W.C.C. 415; Digest Supp.	436, 439
Lysons v. Knowles (Andrew) & Sons, Ltd., Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce, [1901] A.C. 79; 70 L.J.K.B. 170; 84 L.T. 65; 65 J.P. 388; 34 Digest 423, 3433	552, 554
McAlister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	12, 16
McCann v. Scottish Co-operative Laundry Assocn., Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 475; 105 L.J.P.C. 58; 154 L.T. 503; 29 B.W.C.C. 1; Digest Supp.	6, 8, 10, 552, 554, 557
Macduff, Re, Macduff v. Macduff, [1896] 2 Ch. 451; 65 L.J.Ch. 700; 74 L.T. 706; 8 Digest 296, 731	514, 518, 524, 528
Mackenzie's Case (1611), 9 Co. Rep. 65, b; Cro. Jac. 279; 14 Digest 313, 3288	568, 572, 579
Mackenzie, Re, [1940] 4 All E.R. 310; [1941] Ch. 69; 110 L.J.Ch. 28; 164 L.T. 375; 57 T.L.R. 107; 84 Sol. Jo. 670; Digest Supp.	346, 347
M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co., Ltd., [1920] S.C. 75; 57 S.L.R. 80; [1919] 2 S.L.T. 263; 13 B.W.C.C. 388	6, 7, 9, 10
Maclean, Re, Few v. Byrne, [1939] 3 All E.R. 81; [1939] Ch. 750; 108 L.J.Ch. 364; 160 L.T. 612; Digest Supp.	64, 68, 69, 71
McLeod (or Houston) v. Buchanan, [1940] 2 All E.R. 179; Digest Supp.	243, 246

	PAGE
Maconochie Bros., Ltd. v. Brand, [1946] 2 All E.R. 778	247
M'Queen v. M'Queen, [1920] 2 Sc.L.T. 405	407, 408, 409, 414
Maguire v. M'Neil (Charles), Ltd., 1922 S.C. 174	583, 588
Main v. Main, 1945 S.C. 469; 1945 S.L.T. 276	583, 586, 589
Maitland v. Raisbeck & Hewitt (R. T. & J.), Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 272; [1944] 1 K.B. 689; 113 L.J.K.B. 549; 171 L.T. 118; Digest Supp.	13, 22, 242, 243
Mallett v. Staveley Coal and Iron Co., Ltd., [1928] 2 K.B. 405; 97 L.J.K.B. 475; 139 L.T. 241; 13 Tax Cas. 772, C.A.; Digest Supp.	742, 744
Manchester Corp'n. v. Williams, [1891] 1 Q.B. 94; 60 L.J.Q.B. 23; 63 L.T. 805; 54 J.P. 712; 13 Digest 408, 724	191, 192
Manchester Liners, Ltd. v. Rea, Ltd., [1922] 2 A.C. 74; 91 L.J.K.B. 504; 127 L.T. 405; 48 T.L.R. 526; 66 Sol. Jo. 421; 27 Com. Cas. 274, H.L.; 39 Digest 445, 744	285
Margrett v. Lowestoft Water and Gas Co. (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 481; Digest Supp.	742, 745
Marshall v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1936] 3 All E.R. 83; Digest Supp.	634, 635, 641
Marshall Castings, Ltd. v. I.R.C., [1946] 2 All E.R. 16	723, 728
Marsden's Trust, Re, (1859) 4 Drew. 594; 28 L.J.Ch. 906; 33 L.T.O.S. 217; 37 Digest 513, 1048	643, 649
Martin v. Pycroft (1852), 2 De G.M. & G. 785; 22 L.J.Ch. 94; 20 L.T.O.S. 185; 16 Jur. 1125; 42 E.R. 1079, L.J.J.; 12 Digest 358, 2975	689, 692, 693
Maskell v. Horner, [1915] 3 K.B. 106; 84 L.J.K.B. 1752; 113 L.T. 126; 79 J.P. 406; 35 Digest 148, 465	523, 527
Mason, Re, [1928] 1 Ch. 385; 97 L.J.Ch. 321; 139 L.T. 477; on appeal, [1929] 1 Ch. 1; Digest Supp.	524, 530, 531
Mason v. Keeling (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 606; 12 Mod. 332; 2 Digest 243, 274	12, 20
Mason v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co., Ltd., [1913] A.C. 724; 82 L.J.K.B. 1153; 109 L.T. 449; 43 Digest 22, 143	179, 181
Matthews v. Harland & Wolff, Ltd. (1932), 102 L.J.K.B. 170; 25 B.W.C.C. 533; Digest Supp. Meacher v. Meacher, [1946] 2 All E.R. 307; [1946] P. 216; 175 L.T. 405	436, 439
Mellish, Re, Clark v. Buchanan (1927), cited in [1929] 2 K.B. at p. 82, n; Digest Supp. Merihian v. A. C. Pope, Ltd., and J. W. Hibbert (Pagnello Third Party), [1945] 2 All E.R. 449; [1946] K.B. 166; 173 L.T. 257; 109 J.P. 231; Digest Supp.	583, 586
Mersey Docks v. Cameron, Jones v. Mersey Docks (1865), 11 H.L. Cas. 443; 20 C.B.N.S. 56; 6 New Rep. 378; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643, H.L.; on appeal from S.C., sub nom., Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Jones, Same v. Cameron (1861), 30 L.J.M.C. 185, 239 Ex. Ch.; 38 Digest 466, 286	350, 352
Mersey Docks v. Liverpool Overseers (1873), L.R. 9 Q.B. 84; 43 L.J.M.C. 33; 29 L.T. 454; 38 J.P. 21; 38 Digest 563, 1016	427, 428
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee, [1901] A.C. 175; 70 L.J.K.B. 584; 84 L.T. 542; 65 J.P. 579; 38 Digest 526, 735	670, 677
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Coggins & Griffiths (Liverpool), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 345; [1947] A.C. 1; 115 L.J.K.B. 465; 175 L.T. 270	670, 676
Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs, Mersey Docks Trustees v. Penhallow (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. 93; 11 H.L. Cas. 686; 35 L.J.E.C. 225; 14 L.T. 677; 30 J.P. 467; 34 Digest 157, 1231	634, 639
Metcalf v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1939] 2 All E.R. 542; 108 L.J.K.B. 733; 160 L.T. 599; 103 J.P. 246; Digest Supp.	635, 640
Middleton v. Magnay (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 233; 10 L.T. 408; 12 W.R. 706; 71 E.R. 452; 32 Digest 270, 507	2, 4
Midland Bank, Ltd.'s Application, Re, [1942] 3 All E.R. 299; [1942] Ch. 61	838, 839
Midland Ry. Co. v. Robinson (1887), 37 Ch.D. 386; affirmed, sub nom., Midland Ry. Co., & Kettering, Thrapston & Huntingdon Ry. Co. v. Robinson (1889), 15 App. Cas. 19; 59 L.J.Ch. 442; 62 L.T. 194; 54 J.P. 580; 11 Digest 150, 328	73, 77, 78
Miller v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 626; 110 J.P. 353	131, 134, 136
Miller v. Race (1758), 1 Burr. 452; 35 Digest 167, 5	187, 188, 189
Mills v. Dunham, [1891] 1 Ch. 576; 60 L.J.Ch. 362; 64 L.T. 712; 43 Digest 62, 641	524, 534
Minister of Health v. Bellotti, [1944] 1 All E.R. 238; [1944] K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; Digest Supp.	174, 181
Minister of Health v. R., Ex p. Yaffe, [1931] A.C. 494; 100 L.J.K.B. 306; sub nom., R. v. Minister of Health, Ex p. Yaffe, 145 L.T. 98; 95 J.P. 125; Digest Supp.	684, 685
Minister of Pensions v. Chennell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 719	852, 863, 878
Mitchell v. Noble (B. W.), Ltd., [1927] 1 K.B. 719; 96 L.J.K.B. 434; 137 L.T. 33; sub nom. Noble (B. W.), Ltd. v. Mitchell, Mitchell v. Noble (B. W.), Ltd.; 11 Tax Cas. 372, C.A.; Digest Supp.	38, 39, 124, 125
Mitchell Cotts & Co. v. Steel Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 K.B. 610; 85 L.J.K.B. 1747; 115 L.T. 606; 32 T.L.R. 533; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 497; 22 Com. Cas. 63; 41 Digest 315, 1753	742, 743
Mitchil v. Alestree (1676), 1 Vent. 295; sub nom., Michell (Michael) v. Alestree, 3 Keb. 650; 2 Lev. 172	508, 510
Mizen v. Old Florida, Ltd., Egan v. Mizen (1934), 50 T.L.R. 349; 78 Sol. Jo. 298; Digest Supp.	13, 21
Monk v. Warbey, [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; Digest Supp.	236, 239
Moore v. Elphick, [1945] 2 All E.R. 155; Digest Supp.	243, 246
Morrell v. Studd and Millington, [1913] 2 Ch. 648; 83 L.J.Ch. 114; 109 L.T. 628; 12 Digest 72, 478	870, 871, 872
Morris v. Harris, [1927] A.C. 252; 96 L.J.Ch. 253; 136 L.T. 587; [1927] B. & C.R. 65, H.L.; Digest Supp.	55, 59
Moss Empires, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1937] 3 All E.R. 381; [1937] A.C. 785; 106 L.J.P.C. 138; 157 L.T. 396; 21 Tax Cas. 264; [1937] S.C. (H.L.) 35; Digest Supp.	279, 280
Murphy Radio, Ltd. v. Welwyn Garden City Rating Authority, [1943] 2 All E.R. 16; 163 L.T. 427; 107 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.	469, 478
Murray v. Murray, [1940] 4 All E.R. 250; [1941] P. 1; 110 L.J.P. 1; 164 L.T. 199; 104 J.P. 447; Digest Supp.	921, 925
Murray v. Scott, Agnew v. Murray, Brimelow v. Murray (1884), 9 App. Cas. 519; 53 L.J.Ch. 745; 51 L.T. 462; affg., S.C., sub nom., Re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (1882), 23 Ch.D. 440; 7 Digest 515, 369	667, 669
Musgrove v. Pandelis, [1919] 2 K.B. 43; 83 L.J.K.B. 915; 120 L.T. 601; 36 Digest 54, 339	524, 542, 544
M.W. Investments, Ltd. v. Kilburn Envoy, Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 710; resq., [1946] 2 All E.R. 567	344
Nachimson v. Nachimson, [1930] P. 217; 99 L.J.P. 104; 143 L.T. 254; 94 J.P. 211; Digest Supp.	786, 787
Nadan v. R., [1926] A.C. 482; 95 L.J.P.C. 114; 134 L.T. 706; Digest Supp.	621, 626
Nairne v. Stephen Smith & Co., Ltd., and Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, [1942] 2 All E.R. 510; [1943] K.B. 17; 112 L.J.K.B. 108; 168 L.T. 175; Digest Supp.	138, 143
	803, 810

National Bank of Wales, Ltd., Re , [1899] 2 Ch. 629; 23 Digest 71, 373; sub nom. , Re National Bank of Wales, Cory's Case, 68 L.J.Ch. 634	469, 471, 473, 478
National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Liddiard, [1941] Ch. 158; sub nom. , Re National Provincial Bank, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 97; Digest Supp.	73, 77, 78
National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian, [1945] 2 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 81; 115 L.J.K.B. 43; 174 L.T. 8	191, 192
Naylor, Benzon & Co. v. Krainische Industrie Gesellschaft, [1918] 1 K.B. 331; 118 L.T. 442; affd. , [1918] 2 K.B. 486; 12 Digest 242, 1975	620, 626
New Moss Colliery v. Manchester Corporation (1908), A.C. 117; 77 L.J.Ch. 392; 98 L.T. 467; 72 J.P. 169; 11 Digest 154, 356	218, 223, 230
Newman, Re , Slater v. Newman, [1930] 2 Ch. 409; 99 L.J.Ch. 427; 143 L.T. 676; Digest Supp.	350, 353, 354
Newton-on-Ayr Gas Co., Ltd. v. Ayr Assessor (1923) (Ct. Sess.), unreported	670, 671, 674, 675, 676
Niboyet v. Niboyet (1878), 4 P.D. 1; 48 L.J.P. 1; 39 L.T. 486; 43 J.P. 140; 11 Digest 423, 894	621, 626
Nisbet v. Nisbet (1896), 4 S.L.T. 142	583, 589
Noakes v. Smith (1942), 107 J.P. 101; Digest Supp.	789, 792
Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co., [1894] A.C. 535; 63 L.J.Ch. 908; 71 L.T. 489; 43 Digest 22, 139	759, 763
Normanton Gas Co. v. Pope & Pearson, Ltd. (1883), 52 L.J.Q.B. 629; 49 L.T. 798; 32 W.R. 134; 11 Digest 154, 359	218, 222, 223, 224, 226, 228
Norris v. Norris, Lawson and Mason (1861), 4 Sw. & Tr. 237; 30 L.J.P.M. & A. 111; 27 Digest 346, 3270	380, 384
North v. Loomes, [1919] 1 Ch. 378; 88 L.J.Ch. 217; 120 L.T. 533; 12 Digest 156, 1109	689, 691, 692, 693, 694
Northern Press and Engineering Co. v. Shepherd (1908), 52 Sol. Jo. 715; 31 Digest 190, 3247	231, 235
Oakes v. Oakes (1852), 9 Hare 666; 44 Digest 413, 2438	350, 354
Oaten v. Auty, [1919] 2 K.B. 273; 88 L.J.K.B. 1072; 121 L.T. 215; 83 J.P. 173; 33 Digest 407, 1172	827, 828
Oatway, Re , Hertslet v. Oatway, [1903] 2 Ch. 356; 72 L.J.Ch. 575; 88 L.T. 622; 43 Digest 1022, 4618	524, 537
Ocean Coal Co. v. Davies, [1927] A.C. 271; 96 L.J.K.B. 364; 136 L.T. 449; 19 B.W.C.C. 429, H.L.; Digest Supp.	465, 467
Offer v. Minister of Health, [1936] 1 K.B. 40; 105 L.J.K.B. 6; 153 L.T. 270; Digest Supp.	45, 50, 185, 187
Oliver v. Woodroffe (1839), 4 M. & W. 650; 7 Dowl. 166; 1 Horn. & H. 474; 8 L.J.Ex. 105; 3 J.P. 85; 23 Digest 144, 41	620, 626
Ottawa v. Hamilton (1878), 3 C.P.D. 393; 47 L.J.Q.B. 725; 38 L.T. 925; 42 J.P. 660; 27 Digest 207, 1796	434
Packard, Re , Packard v. Waters, [1920] 1 Ch. 596; 89 L.J.Ch. 301; 123 L.T. 401; 44 Digest 474, 2932	451, 453, 454
Page v. Newman (1829), 9 B. & C. 378; 4 Man. & Ry. K.B. 305; 7 L.J.O.S.K.B. 267; 35 Digest 179, 85	469, 473
Paine v. Hyde (1841), 4 Beav. 463; 44 Digest 474, 2925	451, 453
Falser v. Grinling, [1946] 2 All E.R. 287; [1946] 1 K.B. 631; [1947] L.J.R. 97; 175 L.T. 204	295, 297, 686, 687, 688
Parker and Great Western Ry. Co., Re Arbitration between, [1944] 1 All E.R. 400; sub nom. , Parker v. Great Western Ry. Co., 170 L.T. 254; Digest Supp.	356, 359
Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1898] A.C. 387; 67 L.J.Q.B. 635; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 42 Digest 1752, 1753; H.L. affd. , S.C., sub nom. , Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council, [1897] 1 Q.B. 625	243, 245
Pasquier v. Neale, [1902] 2 K.B. 287; 71 L.J.K.B. 835; 87 L.T. 230; 67 J.P. 49; 30 Digest 80, 626	236
Patent Castings Syndicate, Ltd. v. Etherington, [1919] 2 Ch. 254; 88 L.J.Ch. 393; 9 Digest 545, 3599	670, 677
Paterson v. Paterson (1850), 3 H.L. Cas. 308; sub nom. , Paterson v. Russell (or Paterson), 15 L.T.O.S. 537; 27 Digest 282, 2533	583, 585
Peagram v. Peagram, [1926] 2 K.B. 165; 95 L.J.K.B. 819; 135 L.T. 48; 90 J.P. 136; Digest Supp.	407, 411
Pearce, Re , Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Francis, [1914] 1 Ch. 254; 83 L.J.Ch. 266; 110 L.T. 163; 44 Digest 810, 6627	317, 318
Peck v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. (1863), 10 H.L.C. 473; 3 New Rep. 1; 32 L.J.Q.B. 241; 8 L.T. 768; 8 Digest 57, 381	328, 330, 332
Pennell v. Deffell (1853), 4 De G.M. & G. 372; 1 Eq. Rep. 579; 23 L.J.Ch. 115; 22 L.T.O.S. 126; 43 Digest 1021, 4612	524, 536
Petrel, The, [1893] P. 320; 62 L.J.P. 92; 70 L.T. 417; 34 Digest 213, 1757	2, 3
Pettit, Re , Le Fevre v. Pettit, [1922] 2 Ch. 765; 91 L.J.Ch. 732; 127 L.T. 491; 39 Digest 167, 587	64, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72
Petty, Re , Holliday v. Petty, [1929] 1 Ch. 726; 98 L.J.Ch. 207; 141 L.T. 31; Digest Supp.	402, 404
Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co., Ltd., [1923] 2 K.B. 832; 93 L.J.K.B. 5; 129 L.T. 777; 42 Digest 870, 197	242, 244, 246
Phillips v. Evans, [1896] 1 Q.B. 305; 65 L.J.M.C. 101; 74 L.T. 314; 60 J.P. 120; 39 Digest 246, 296	827, 828
Phoenix Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 1 All E.R. 454	851, 852, 859, 863
Pletts v. Beattie, [1896] 1 Q.B. 519; 65 L.J.M.C. 86; 74 L.T. 148; 60 J.P. 185; 30 Digest 79, 618	236
Point of Ayr Collieries v. Lloyd George, [1943] 2 All E.R. 546; Digest Supp.	455, 852, 861
Pole-Carew v. Western Counties and General Manure Co., [1920] 2 Ch. 97; 89 L.J.Ch. 559; 123 L.T. 12; 31 Digest 196, 3325	231, 234, 235
Port of London Authority v. Orsett Union Assessment Committee, [1919] 1 K.B. 84; 88 L.J.K.B. 797; 120 L.T. 225; 82 J.P. 501, Div. Ct.; on appeal on another point [1919] 2 K.B. 1, C.A.; [1920] A.C. 278; 89 L.J.K.B. 481; 122 L.T. 722; 84 J.P. 69, H.L.; 38 Digest 563, 1017	669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678
Porter v. Gibbons and Bissett (1904), 48 Sol. Jo. 559; on appeal , 48 Sol. Jo. 814; 31 Digest 158, 2908	193, 194
Porter (William) & Co., Ltd., Re , [1937] 2 All E.R. 361; Digest Supp.	749, 752
Portland (Duke) v. Topham (Lady) (1864), 11 H.L. Cas. 32; sub nom. , Portland (Duke) v. Topham (Lady), Bentinck (Lady) v. Topham (Lady), Bentinck (Lord) v. Topham (Lady), 34 L.J.Ch. 113; 10 L.T. 355; 37 Digest 503, 963	643, 648
Portman v. Latta (1942), 86 Sol. Jo. 119; Digest Supp.	415

	PAGE
Powell, Re , Bodvel-Roberts v. Poole, [1918] 1 Ch. 407; 87 L.J.Ch. 237; 118 L.T. 567; 43 Digest 605, 512	889, 891
Powell v. Fall (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 597; 49 L.J.Q.B. 428; 43 L.T. 562; 45 J.P. 156; 36 Digest 431, 1501	844
Powell v. Streatham Manor Nursing Home, [1935] A.C. 243; 104 L.J.K.B. 304; 152 L.T. 563; Digest Supp.	583, 584, 587
Powys v. Mansfield (1837), 3 My. & Cr. 359; 7 L.J.Ch. 9; 44 Digest 379, 2133	350, 354
Pratt v. L.P.T.B., and Green v. Vandekar, [1937] 1 All E.R. 473; 156 L.T. 265; Digest Supp. (1941)	262, 263, 264
Price, Re , [1928] Ch. 579; 97 L.J.Ch. 423; 139 L.T. 339; Digest Supp.	350, 352, 353
Price v. Minister of Health, [1947] 1 All E.R. 47	852, 863
Price v. Price (1927), 43 T.L.R. 609; Digest Supp.	407, 414
Priestley v. Fowler (1837), 3 M. & W. 1; Murp. & H. 305; 7 L.J.Ex. 42; 34 Digest 202, 1647	2
Produce Brokers New Co. (1924), Ltd. v. Wray, Sanderson & Co., (1931), 39 Lloyd L.R. 257	118, 121
Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294; [1946] 1 K.B. 645; 175 L.T. 192	295, 296, 297, 299
Prosper, The, The Holstein (1890), Edw. 72; 2 Eng. Pr. Cas. 25; 165 E.R. 1037; 37 Digest 658, 1171	431, 432, 433
Pudney v. France (William), Fenwick & Co., Smith v. Leach & Co., [1925] 1 K.B. 346; 94 L.J.K.B. 513; 132 L.T. 430; 17 B.W.C.C. 241, C.A.; 34 Digest 380, 3081	465, 466
Purkis v. Walthamstow Borough Council (1934), 151 L.T. 30; 98 J.P. 244; Digest Supp. 92, 96, 98, 896, 897
R. v. Alleyne (1854), 4 E. & B. 186; Dears C.C. 505; 24 L.T.O.S. 107; 18 J.P. Jo. 755	928
R. v. Aylesbury-with-Walton Inhabitants (1846), 9 Q.B. 261; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 314; 1 New Mag. Cas. 560; 7 L.T.O.S. 226; 10 J.P. Jo. 371; Digest Supp.	820, 821, 823
R. v. Bentley (1850), 14 J.P. 671; 4 Cox C.C. 406; 15 Digest 823, 8989	568, 580
R. v. Bertrand (1867), L.R. 1 P.C. 520; 4 Moo. P.C.C.N.S. 460; 16 L.T. 752; 31 J.P. 531; sub nom., A.-G. of New South Wales v. Bertrand, 35 L.J.P.C. 51; 17 Digest 477, 402	138, 141
R. v. Board of Education, [1910] 2 K.B. 165; 79 L.J.K.B. 595; 74 J.P. 259; sub nom., R. v. Board of Education, Ex p. Swansea, Oxford Street (Church of England) School Managers, 102 L.T. 578; affd., sub nom., Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179, H.L.; 42 Digest 614, 141	613
R. v. Chapple (1804), Russ. & Ry. 77; 2 Digest 293, 635	374, 377
R. v. Chelsea Waterworks Co. (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 156; 2 Nev. & M.K.B. 767; 2 Nev. & M.M.C. 13; 2 L.J.M.C. 98; 110 E.R. 750; 38 Digest 451, 183	213, 225
R. v. Collinson (1931), 75 Sol. Jo. 491; 23 Cr. App. Rep. 49; Digest Supp.	829
R. v. Curvan (1826), 1 Mood. C.C. 132; 15 Digest 786, 8473	568, 580
R. v. Essex J.J., Ex p. Perkins, [1927] 2 K.B. 475; 96 L.J.K.B. 530; 137 L.T. 455; 91 J.P. 94; Digest Supp.	110, 112
R. v. Ford (1817), Russ. & Ry. 329; 15 Digest 784, 8442	568, 572, 581
R. v. Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal for Paddington and St. Marylebone, [1947] 1 All E.R. 448; 176 L.T. 330	880, 882
R. v. Gillyard (1848), 12 Q.B. 527; 3 New Mag. Cas. 43; 3 New Cass. Cass.; 17 L.J.M.C. 153; 11 L.T.O.S. 240; 12 J.P. 456; 16 Digest 443, 3088	928
R. v. Hammersmith Superintendent Registrar of Marriages, Ex p. Mir-Anwaruddin, [1917] 1 K.B. 634; 86 L.J.K.B. 210; 115 L.T. 882; 81 J.P. 49; 27 Digest 54, 335	621, 626
R. v. Howarth (1828), 1 Mood. C.C. 207; 15 Digest 822, 8981	568, 572
R. v. Humphrys, Ex p. Ward, [1914] 3 K.B. 1237; 84 L.J.K.B. 187; sub nom., R. v. Humphreys, Ex p. Ward, 111 L.T. 1110; 79 J.P. 67; 3 Digest 387, 258	407, 410
R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 313; 53 J.P. 84; sub nom., R. v. Income Tax Special Comrs., Ex p. Cape Copper Mining Co., Ltd., 57 L.J.Q.B. 513; 59 L.T. 455; 2 Tax Cas. 332, C.A.; 16 Digest 306, 1781	880, 882
R. v. Jones, Ex p. Thomas, [1921] 1 K.B. 632; 90 L.J.K.B. 543; 124 L.T. 668; 85 J.P. 112; 42 Digest 873, 217	112, 113
R. v. Klein (unrep.)	892, 893
R. v. Lightfoot (1856), 6 E. & B. 822; 25 L.J. (M.C.) 115; 27 L.T.O.S. 235; 20 J.P. 677; 3 Digest 393, 311	407, 410
R. v. Mersey & Irwell Navigation Co. (of Proprietors) (1829), 9 B. & C. 95; 4 Man. & Ry. K.B. 84; 2 Man. & Ry. M.C. 106; 7 L.J.O.S.M.C. 70; 109 E.R. 36; 38 Digest 469, 308	219, 227
R. v. Mills (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 534; 22 Digest 43, 222	621, 629
R. v. Minister of Health, Ex p. Glamorgan County Mental Hospital (Committee of Visitors), [1938] 4 All E.R. 32; [1939] 1 K.B. 232; 159 L.T. 508; 102 J.P. 497; Digest Supp. 448, 449, 880, 882
R. v. Paty (1770), 2 Wm. Bl. 721; 2 East, P.C. 1074; 1 Leach, 72; 2 Digest 292, 626	374, 376, 377
R. v. Shore ditch Assessment Committee, Ex p. Morgan, [1910] 2 K.B. 859; 80 L.J.K.B. 185; 103 L.T. 262; 74 J.P. 361; Konst & W. Rat. App. 203; 38 Digest 564, 1028	670, 676
R. v. Slater, Ex p. Bowler (1903), 67 J.P. 299; 26 Digest 559, 2537	112, 113
R. v. Southampton Docks Co. (1851), 14 Q.B. 587; 6 Ry. & Can. Cas. 428; 4 New Sess. Cas. 460; 20 L.J.M.C. 155; 16 L.T.O.S. 460; 15 J.P.Jo. 145; 38 Digest 527, 741	699, 670, 671, 673, 675, 677
R. v. Surrey J.J., [1908] 1 K.B. 374; 77 L.J.K.B. 167; 98 L.T. 42; 72 J.P. 53; 33 Digest 439, 1488	775, 776
R. v. Wells, etc., J.J., Ex p. Clifford, (1904) 91 L.T. 98; 68 J.P. 392; 42 Digest 873, 216	112, 113
R. v. West Middlesex Waterworks (1859), 1 E. & E. 716; 23 L.J.M.C. 135; 32 L.T.O.S. 388; 23 J.P. 164; 120 E.R. 1078; 38 Digest 450, 171	219, 225, 227
R. v. Whitney (1824), 1 Mood. C.C. 3; 2 Digest 294, 643	374, 377
R. v. Woolmer (1832), 1 Mood. C.C. 334; 15 Digest 784, 8444	568, 580
R. v. Worcestershire J.J. (1854), 3 E. & B. 477; 2 C.L.R. 1333; 23 L.J.M.C. 113; 22 L.T.O.S. 332; 18 Jur. 424; 18 J.P. Jo. 263; 118 E.R. 1221; 33 Digest 439, 1484	775, 776
R. v. Worthing Borough Council and Horsham and Worthing Assessment Committee, Ex p. Burgess, [1937] 2 All E.R. 681; 106 L.J.K.B. 810; sub nom. R. v. Horsham and Worthing Assessment Committee, Ex p. Burgess, [1937] 2 K.B. 408; 157 L.T. 41; Digest Supp.	921, 925
Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; Digest Supp.	1, 2, 3, 4, 5
Read v. J. Lyons & Co., Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 471; 175 L.T. 418	344
Readhead v. Midland Ry. Co. (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 379; 38 L.J.Q.B. 169; sub nom. Redhead v. Midland Ry. Co. 9 B. & S. 519; 20 L.T. 628; 8 Digest 71, 480	328, 329
Reckitt, Re , Reckitt v. Reckitt, [1932] 2 Ch. 144; 101 L.J.Ch. 333; 147 L.T. 275; Digest Supp.	64, 70
Reeve, Ex p. (1804), 9 Ves. 588; 4 Digest 428, 3860	418, 423, 424
Rennison v. Knowler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 302; 176 L.T. 271	824, 825

Rhodes v. Digby Colliery Co., Ltd., Wilson v. Digby Colliery Co., Ltd. (1926), 19 B.W.C.C. 283, C.A.; 34 Digest 451, 3697	464, 465, 466, 468
Richards v. A. G. of Jamaica (1848), 6 Moo. P.C.C. 381; 42 Digest 782, 2174	350, 352
Richardson v. Langridge (1811), 4 Taunt. 128; 128 E.R. 277; 31 Digest 36, 1825	343
Riches v. Westminster Bank, [1943] 2 All E.R. 725; Digest Supp.	901, 918
Ripon (Highfield) Housing Confirmation Order, Re , White & Collins v. Minister of Health, [1939] 3 All E.R. 543; [1939] 2 K.B. 838; 108 L.J.K.B. 769; 161 L.T. 109; 103 J.P. 331; Digest Supp.	455, 852, 862
Rivers, Re , Pullen v. Rivers, [1920] 1 Ch. 320; 88 L.J.Ch. 462; 121 L.T. 57; 24 Digest 596, 6298	524, 531
Robertson v. Robertson and Favagrossa (1881), 6 P.D. 119; 51 L.J.P. 5; 45 L.T. 237; 27 Digest 472, 4960	434
Robins v. National Trust Co., [1927] A.C. 515; 96 L.J.P.C. 84; 137 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.	583, 587
Robinson, Re , McLaren v. Public Trustee, [1911] 1 Ch. 502; 104 L.T. 331; sub nom. Re Robinson, McLaren v. Robinson, 80 L.J.Ch. 381; 43 Digest 960, 4002	524, 529, 530, 531
Rodgers v. Richards, [1892] 1 Q.B. 555; 56 J.P. 281; sub nom. Rogers v. Richards , 66 L.T. 261; 33 Digest 322, 375	830, 831, 832, 834
Rogers v. Ingham (1876), 3 Ch.D. 351; 35 L.T. 677; 35 Digest 93, 25 522, 524, 528, 529, 531, 533, 534	830, 831, 832, 834
Rook v. Fairrie, [1941] 1 All E.R. 297; [1941] 1 K.B. 507; 110 L.J.K.B. 319; 165 L.T. 23; 57 T.L.R. 297; 85 Sol. Jo. 297, C.A.; Digest Supp.	335, 336
Roscoe (James) (Bolton), Ltd. v. Winder, [1915] 1 Ch. 62; 84 L.J.Ch. 236; 112 L.T. 121; 43 Digest 1022, 4619	524, 537
Rose v. Watson (1864), 10 H.L. Cas. 672; 3 New Rep. 673; 33 L.J.Ch. 385; 10 L.T. 106; 10 Jur. N.S. 297; 12 W.R. 535; 11 E.R. 1187, H.L.; 32 Digest 268, 493	838, 839
Ross and Coulter and Others v. Inland Revenue, 1946 S.C. 134	149, 153, 157, 160
Roumanian, The (1914), 1 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas.	431, 432
Rowls v. Bebb, Re Rowls, Walters v. Treasury Solicitor, [1900] 2 Ch. 107; 69 L.J.Ch. 562; 82 L.T. 633; Digest Supp.	695, 698, 699
Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Keene (Inspector of Taxes), Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., p. 699, ante, reversg. , [1946] 2 All E.R. 141	704, 705, 706
Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661	583, 585
Russoff v. Lipovitch, [1925] 1 K.B. 628; 94 L.J.K.B. 355; 132 L.T. 789; 31 Digest 585, 7343	459, 560
Rutherford v. Richardson, [1923] A.C. 1; 92 L.J.P. 1; 128 L.T. 399; 27 Digest 488, 5196	886, 887
Rutland's (Countess) Case (1606), 6 Co. Rep. 52 b; Moore, K.B. 765; 38 Digest 68, 441	568, 572
Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70, H.L.; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L.R. 1 Exch. 265; reversg. (1865), 3 H. & C. 774; 36 Digest 187, 311	12, 18, 334, 345, 507, 508, 510
Ryley v. Master, Sheba Gold Mining Co. v. Trubshawe, [1892] 1 Q.B. 674; 61 L.J.Q.B. 219; 66 L.T. 228; 35 Digest 191, 191	469, 477
Saffell, Re , [1945] 1 All E.R. 321; [1945] K.B. 259; 114 L.J.K.B. 513; 172 L.T. 183; 61 T.L.R. 208; Digest Supp.	347, 348
Salter v. Lusk, [1924] 1 K.B. 754; 93 L.J.K.B. 685; 130 L.T. 323; 31 Digest 577, 7263 40, 44	216, 217
Samuel v. Payne (1780), 1 Doug. K.B. 359; 14 Digest 178, 1555	568, 577
Sanders v. Sanders, [1911] P. 101; 80 L.J.P. 44; 104 L.T. 331; 27 Digest 443, 4554	434
Saunders v. Saunders, [1897] P. 89; 66 L.J.P. 57; 76 L.T. 330; 27 Digest 385, 3734	493, 494, 495
Sawyer v. Birchmore (1837), 1 Keen, 825; 2 My. & Cr. 611; 6 L.J.Ch. 277; 24 Digest 794, 8241	524, 529, 531
Schultze v. Bensted (Surveyor of Taxes) (1915), 7 Tax Cas. 30; 28 Digest 63, q	469, 478, 479, 480
Seymour v. Reed, [1927] A.C. 554; 96 L.J.K.B. 839; 137 L.T. 312; 11 Tax Cas. 625; reversg. , S.C., sub nom. Reed v. Seymour , [1927] 1 K.B. 90; Digest Supp.	282, 283
Sharpe v. Nicholls, [1945] 2 All E.R. 55; [1945] K.B. 382; 114 L.J.K.B. 400; 172 L.T. 368; Digest Supp.	88, 89
Shearn v. Shearn, [1931] P. 1; 100 L.J.P. 41; 143 L.T. 772; Digest Supp.	385, 386
Shelton's Settled Estates, Re , Shelton v. Shelton, [1945] 1 All E.R. 283; [1945] Ch. 158; 114 L.J.Ch. 198; 172 L.T. 237; Digest Supp.	889, 891
Sherry, Re , London and County Banking Co. v. Terry (1884), 25 Ch.D. 692; 53 L.J.Ch. 404; 50 L.T. 227; 26 Digest 91, 633	501, 503
Sherwood v. Tucker, [1924] 2 Ch. 440; 94 L.J.Ch. 66; 132 L.T. 86; 30 Digest 473, 1361	55, 60
Shufflebotham v. Shufflebotham (1923), 128 L.T. 642; 27 Digest 488, 5197	434
Simmons v. Heath Laundry Co., [1910] 1 K.B. 543; 79 L.J.K.B. 395; 102 L.T. 210; 3 B.W.C.C. 200; 34 Digest 21, 15	634, 638
Simpson v. Exors of Bonner Maurice (1929), 14 T.C. 580; Digest Supp.	469, 471, 477
Sinclair v. Brougham, [1914] A.C. 398; 83 L.J.Ch. 465; 111 L.T. 1; varying S.C. sub nom. Re Birbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society, [1912] 2 Ch. 183; 35 Digest 167, 8 523, 524, 534, 535, 556, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 544	546, 550
Siqueira v. Noronha, [1934] A.C. 332; 103 L.J.P.C. 63; 151 L.T. 6; Digest Supp.	292, 293
Slater, Re , Slater v. Slater, [1907] 1 Ch. 665; 76 L.J.Ch. 472; 97 L.T. 74; 44 Digest 405, 2378	350, 354
Smith, Re , Bilke v. Roper (1890), 45 Ch.D. 632; 60 L.J.Ch. 57; 63 L.T. 448; 44 Digest 370, 2042	350, 354
Smith, Re , Public Trustee v. Smith, [1932] 1 Ch. 153; 100 L.J.Ch. 409; 146 L.T. 145; Digest Supp.	514, 520
Smith, Re , Smith v. Smith, [1913] 2 Ch. 216; 83 L.J.Ch. 13; 108 L.T. 952; 23 Digest 497, 5610	402, 405
Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; Digest Supp.	390, 393, 394, 395
Smith v. Cook, [1875] 1 Q.B.D. 79; 45 L.J.Q.B. 122; 33 L.T. 722; 40 J.P. 24; 2 Digest 253, 345	12, 20
Smith v. Penny, [1946] 2 All E.R. 672; [1947] K.B. 230; [1947] L.J.R. 271	811, 812
Smith v. Smith and Rutherford and others, [1920] P. 206; 89 L.J.P. 175; 123 L.T. 174; 27 Digest 423, 4291	793, 796, 797
Smyth (Ross T.) & Co., Ltd. v. Bailey, Son & Co., [1940] 3 All E.R. 60; 164 L.T. 102; Digest Supp.	118, 122
Somerset County Council, Ex p. (1889), 58 L.J.Q.B. 513; 61 L.T. 512; 54 J.P. 182; 33 Digest 107, 719	81, 85
Sottomayer v. de Barros (1879), 5 P.D. 94; 49 L.J.P. 1; 41 L.T. 251; 27 Digest 36, 127	621, 626
South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Mason (R.) & Sons (1886), 56 L.J.Q.B. 255; 57 L.T. 116; 11 Digest 153, 354	131, 133
Southport Corp'n. v. Lancashire County Council, [1937] 2 All E.R. 626; [1937] 2 K.B. 589; 106 L.J.K.B. 609; 157 L.T. 63; 101 J.P. 398; Digest Supp.	901, 917
Stafford v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 621; 110 J.P. 210; sub nom. Mowsley No. 1 Compulsory Order, 175 L.T. 101	48, 51, 185, 186, 187, 188

Stamford, Spalding and Boston Banking Co. v. Ball (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 310; 31 L.J.Ch. 143; 5 L.T. 594; 26 Digest 79, 566	501, 503
Stanford v. Stanford (1886), 34 Ch.D. 362; 44 Digest 1174, 10160	256, 257
Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 78; 92 L.J.K.B. 331; 128 L.T. 402; 39 Digest 529, 1421	118, 121
Stevenson (otherwise Bowerbank) v. Stevenson, [1944] P. 52; 113 L.J.P. 36; 170 L.T. 213; sub nom. S. (otherwise B.) v. S., [1944] 1 All E.R. 439; Digest Supp.	434
Stewart v. Sashalite, Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 1481; Digest Supp.	730, 734
Stokes v. Whicher, [1920] 1 Ch. 411; 89 L.J.Ch. 198; 123 L.T. 23; 12 Digest 143, 967	55, 60, 62
Stoughton, Re, [1941] Irish Reports 166	346, 347
Strong, Re (1878), 1 Tax Cas. 207; 15 Sc. L.R. 704; 28 Digest 85, h	282, 283
Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield, [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 5 Tax Cas. 215; 28 Digest 57, 290	700, 701
Stroyan v. Knowles, Hamer & Same (1861), 6 H. & N. 454; 30 L.J.Ex. 102; 3 L.T. 746; 19 Digest 170, 1187	219, 227
Summers v. Baird (Wm.) & Co., Ltd., 1926 S.C. 762; 1926 S.C. (H.L.) 24; 18 B.W.C.C. 714; 34 Digest 484, 3995, iv	596, 598
Suzanna, Ex p., (1924), 295 Fed. Rep. 713	621, 628
Swabey, Re, Ex p. Swabey (1897), 76 L.T. 534; 4 Digest 569, 5240	769, 771
Sweet v. Macdiarima (or Henderson) (1920), 7 Tax Cas. 640; 28 Digest 63, r	469, 479
Swift v. Board of Trade, [1925] A.C. 520; 94 L.J.K.B. 629; 133 L.T. 49; 25 Digest 138, 558	901, 918, 920
Synge v. Synge, [1901] P. 317; 70 L.J.P. 97; 85 L.T. 83; 27 Digest 375, 3631	563, 565, 848, 850
Tatham, Re, National Bank, Ltd. & Mathews v. Mackenzie, [1945] 1 All E.R. 29; [1945] Ch. 34; 114 L.J.Ch. 9; 172 L.T. 14; Digest Supp.	64, 67, 68
Taylor v. Blakelock (1886), 32 Ch.D. 560; 56 L.J.Ch. 390; 55 L.T. 8; 20 Digest 258, 208	523, 525, 549
Taylor v. Plumer (1815), 3 M. & S. 562; 35 Digest 167, 6	524, 534, 535
Taylor v. Popham (1782), 1 Bro. C.C. 168; 44 Digest 469, 2889	451, 453, 454
Tempus Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Trott (1929), 141 L.T. 19; 22 B.W.C.C. 181, C.A.; Digest Supp.	465, 467
Theatre de Luxe (Halifax), Ltd. v. Gledhill, [1915] 2 K.B. 49; 112 L.T. 519; 79 J.P. 238; 31 T.L.R. 138; 24 Cox C.C. 614; sub nom. Halifax Theatre de Luxe, Ltd. v. Gledhill, 84 L.J.K.B. 649; 42 Digest 920, 921, 160	498, 490
Thomas v. Griffiths (1860), 2 De G.F. & J. 555; 30 L.J.Ch. 465; 3 L.T. 761; 20 Digest 268, 287	524, 529, 531
Thomas v. Thomas, [1924] P. 194; 93 L.J.P. 61; 130 L.T. 716; 27 Digest 315, 2925	32, 34
Thomas Fattorini (Lancashire), Ltd. v. I.R.C., [1942] 1 All E.R. 619; [1942] A.C. 643; 111 L.J.K.B. 546; 167 L.T. 45; 24 Tax Cas. 328, H.L.; Digest Supp.	723, 726, 728
Thompson v. Pinch (1856), 8 De G.M. & G. 560; 25 L.J.Ch. 681; 27 L.T.O.S. 330; 43 Digest 1003, 4445	524, 538
Thompson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1935] 2 K.B. 90; 104 L.J.K.B. 515; 152 L.T. 571; 28 B.W.C.C. 95; Digest Supp.	6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 562, 557, 558, 559
Thomson v. Channorris (Lord), [1900] 1 Ch. 718; 69 L.J.Ch. 337; 82 L.T. 277; 9 Digest 132, 703	177, 178
Thorne v. Madden, [1925] Ch. 547; 31 Digest 158, 2909	193, 194
Thornett & Fehr v. Beers & Son, [1919] 1 K.B. 486; 88 L.J.K.B. 684; 120 L.T. 570; 24 Com. Cas. 133; 39 Digest 451, 733	285
Tobias & Co., Re, Ex p. Tobias, [1891] 1 Q.B. 463; 60 L.J.K.B. 244; 64 L.T. 115; 4 Digest 578, 5311	769, 772
Transoceanica Società Italiana di Navigazione v. Shipton (H. S.) & Sons, [1923] 1 K.B. 31; 92 L.J.K.B. 186; 128 L.T. 319; 38 T.L.R. 318; 16 Asp. M.L.C. 85; 28 Com. Cas. 64; 41 Digest 533, 3608	508, 510
Tregelles v. Sewell (1862), 7 H. & N. 574; 158 E.R. 600; affd. (1863), 7 H. & N. 584, Ex. Ch.; 39 Digest 495, 1119	118, 121, 122
Trende Sodskende, The (Warrant No. 633), unreported	431, 433
Trevillian v. Exeter Corp., (1854), 5 De G.M. & G. 828; 3 Eq. Rep. 896; 24 L.J.Ch. 157; 24 L.T.O.S. 149; 18 J.P. 806; 43 Digest 640, 774	523, 524, 546
Trollope (George) & Sons v. Martyn Bros., [1934] 2 K.B. 436; 103 L.J.K.B. 634; 152 L.T. 88; Digest Supp.	460, 462
Trower & Sons, Ltd. v. Ripstein, [1944] 2 All E.R. 274; [1944] A.C. 254; 113 L.J.P.C. 72; Digest Supp.	407, 411
Trunk Roads Act, 1936, Re the, and Re the London-Portsmouth Trunk Road (Surrey) Compulsory Purchase Order (No. 2), 1938, [1939] 2 All E.R. 464; [1939] 2 K.B. 515; 108 L.J.K.B. 555; 160 L.T. 554; Digest Supp.	612, 613, 617, 619
Tubervill (Tubervil) v. Stamp (1697), Holt K.B. 9; Carth. 425; Skin. 681; Comb. 459; 1 Com. 32; 1 Ld. Raym. 264; 12 Mod. Rep. 152; 1 Salk. 13; 2 Digest 66, 418	344
Tucker, Re, Bowchier v. Gordon (1887), 56 L.J.Ch. 449; 56 L.T. 118; 44 Digest 734, 6411	256, 257
Turner v. Coates, [1917] 1 K.B. 670; 86 L.J.K.B. 321; 115 L.T. 766; 2 Digest 235, 230	12, 19
Turner v. Marriott (1867), L.R. 3 Eq. 744; 15 L.T. 607; 15 W.R. 420; 32 Digest 272, 531..	838, 839
Twee Gebroeders, The, (1800), 3 Ch. Rob. 162; 165 E.R. 422; 37 Digest 594, 309	431, 433
United States ex Rel. Modianos v. Tuttle (1925), 12 Fed. Rep. (2nd series) 927	621, 628
Varley v. Whipp, [1900] 1 Q.B. 513; 69 L.J.Q.B. 333; 48 W.R. 363; 44 Sol. Jo. 263; 39 Digest 432, 616	285
Vatcher v. Paull, [1915] A.C. 372; 84 L.J.P.C. 86; 112 L.T. 737; 37 Digest 492, 865	643, 648
Vaughan v. Menlove (1837), 3 Bing. N.C. 468; 3 Hodg. 51; 4 Scott, 244; 6 L.J.P.C. 92; 36 Digest 21, 95	344
Verge v. Somerville, [1924] A.C. 496; 131 L.T. 107; sub nom. Verge v. Somerville, A.-G. for Australia v. Somerville, 93 L.J.P.C. 173; Digest Supp.	514, 520
Vidal v. Vidal and Wilson (1921), The Times, Oct. 13, 1921	434, 435
Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co., [1927] A.C. 430; 96 L.J.K.B. 597; 136 L.T. 513; Digest Supp.	390, 391, 394, 395
Vulcan Motor and Engineering Co. (1906), Ltd. v. Hampson, [1921] 3 K.B. 597; 90 L.J.K.B. 1866; 125 L.T. 717; 9 Digest 545, 3595	670, 674
Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] 1 K.B. 50; 173 L.T. 330; Digest Supp.	390, 395
Vyse v. Foster (1872), L.R. 3 Ch. App. 309; 42 L.J.Ch. 245; 27 L.T. 774; 43 Digest 916, 3571	469, 477, 478
W. v. Minister of Pensions, [1946] 2 All E.R. 501	88
Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 1 R. 585	285

Walters v. Smith (W. H.) & Son, Ltd., [1914] 1 K.B. 595; 83 L.J.K.B. 335; 110 L.T. 345; 78 J.P. 118; 14 Digest 177, 1549	568, 572, 578
Ward's Will Trusts, Re , Rimgland v. Ward, [1936] 2 All E.R. 773; [1936] Ch. 704; 105 L.J.Ch. 315; 155 L.T. 346; Digest Supp.	208, 210, 211, 212, 213
Warner, Re , Watts v. Silvey, [1918] 1 Ch. 368; 87 L.J.Ch. 234; 118 L.T. 353; 44 Digest 784, 6413	255, 256, 257
Warren, Re , Warren v. Warren, [1932] 1 Ch. 42; 101 L.J.Ch. 85; 146 L.T. 224; Digest Supp.	350, 353, 354
Wath-upon-Deane U.D.C. v. John Brown & Co., Ltd., [1936] Ch. 172; 105 L.J.Ch. 81; 154 L.T. 295; 51 T.L.R. 353; Digest Supp.	219, 230
Watts v. The Official Solicitor, [1936] 1 All E.R. 249; Digest Supp.	262
Webster v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. (1880), 15 Ch.D. 169; 49 L.J.Ch. 769; 43 L.T. 229; 35 Digest 184, 140	469, 476
Wellesley (Lady) v. Mornington (Earl) (1855), 2 K. and J. 143; 37 Digest 505, 933	643, 649
Wenlock (Baroness) v. River Dee Co. (1885), 10 App. Cas. 354; 54 L.J.Q.B. 577; 53 L.T. 62; 49 J.P. 773; 13 Digest 360, 955	524, 547
Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Farley, [1939] A.C. 430; [1939] 3 All E.R. 491; 108 L.J.Ch. 307; 161 L.T. 103; 55 T.L.R. 943, H.L.; Digest Supp.	400, 401
Wheatley v. Bastow (1855), 7 De G.M. & G. 261; 3 Eq. Rep. 859; 24 L.J.Ch. 727; 25 L.T.O.S. 191; 26 Digest 191, 1479	501, 503
Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 756; [1937] 2 K.B. 426; 106 L.J.K.B. 667; 156 L.T. 490; 30 B.W.C.C. 171; Digest Supp.	6, 9, 552, 558, 559
Wheeler, Re , Jameson v. Cotter, [1929] 2 K.B. 81, n; 141 L.T. 322; Digest Supp.	350, 352
Whitbread & Co., Ltd. v. Watt, [1902] 1 Ch. 835; 71 L.J.Ch. 424; 86 L.T. 395; 50 W.R. 442; 32 Digest 271, 519; affg. , [1901] 1 Ch. 911	838, 839
White v. Hurrell's Stores, Ltd. (1941), 164 L.T. 334; 105 J.P. 105; Digest Supp.	827, 828
White v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1931] A.C. 52; 99 L.J.K.B. 633; 144 L.T. 1; 23 B.W.C.C. 330; Digest Supp.	436, 439
Whittall v. Kirby, [1946] 2 All E.R. 552; [1947] K.B. 194, [1947] L.J.R. 234; 175 L.T. 449; 111 J.P. 1	147, 148, 824
Wilding v. Sanderson, [1897] 2 Ch. 534; 66 L.J.Ch. 684; 77 L.T. 57; Digest Practice 622, 2589	40, 41
Wilkes v. Goodwin, [1923] 2 K.B. 86; 92 L.J.K.B. 580; 129 L.T. 44; 31 Digest 560, 7080	295, 297, 686, 687
Wilkinson v. Wilkinson (1893), 69 L.T. 459; 27 Digest 502, 5375	434
Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, [1943] S.C. (H.L.) 61; Digest Supp.	407, 414, 563, 566
Williams, Re , Midland Bank Executor & Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Williams, [1945] 2 All E.R. 102; [1945] Ch. 320; 115 L.J.Ch. 101; 173 L.T. 132; Digest Supp.	64, 66, 68, 71
Williams, Re , Williams v. Templeton, [1936] 1 All E.R. 75; [1936] Ch. 509; 105 L.J.Ch. 362; 154 L.T. 640; Digest Supp.	64, 69
Williams v. Beaumont (1833), 10 Bing. 260; 3 Moo. & S. 705; 3 L.J.C.P. 31; 10 Digest 1220, 8628	191, 192
Williams v. Dawson, unreported	568, 578
Williams v. Smith, [1934] 2 K.B. 158; 103 L.J.K.B. 421; 151 L.T. 112; Digest Supp.	300, 301
Williams v. Williams, [1929] P. 114; 98 L.J.P. 40; 140 L.T. 383; Digest Supp.	434
Williamson v. Gould (1823), 1 Bing. 171; 7 Moore, C.P. 579; 1 L.T.O.S.C.P. 38; 26 Digest 151, 1134	501, 503
Willingle v. Norris, [1909] 1 K.B. 57; 78 L.J.K.B. 69; 99 L.T. 830; 72 J.P. 495; 14 Digest 203, 1326	205, 206
Wilson v. Chatterton, [1946] 1 All E.R. 431; [1946] 1 K.B. 360; 115 L.J.K.B. 381; 175 L.T. 325	754, 758
Wilson & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.	92, 98
Wolstanton, Ltd. v. A.-G. of Duchy of Lancaster & Newcastle-under-Lyme Corpn., [1940] 3 All E.R. 101; [1940] A.C. 860	218, 221
Wood v. Wallace (1920), 90 L.J.K.B. 319; 124 L.T. 539; 84 J.P.Jo. 517; 31 Digest 559, 560, 7069	686, 687
Woods (L. H.) & Co., Ltd. v. City & West End Properties, Ltd. (1921), 38 T.L.R. 98; 31 Digest 565, 7121	686, 687
Worsley Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 349	700, 702, 703
Wrexham, Re , Mold & Connah's Quay Ry. Co., [1899] 1 Ch. 440; 68 L.J.Ch. 270; 80 L.T. 130; 13 Digest 369, 1007	524, 547
Wright, Re , Hegan v. Bloor, [1920] 1 Ch. 108; 88 L.J.Ch. 452; 121 L.T. 549; 37 Digest 453, 555	643, 650
Wright v. Pearson (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 582; 10 B. & S. 723; 38 L.J.Q.B. 312; 20 L.T. 849; 33 J.P. 534; 2 Digest 247, 307	374, 377
Yewens v. Noakes (1880), 6 Q.B.D. 530; 50 L.J.Q.B. 132; 44 L.T. 128; 45 J.P. 8, 468; 34 Digest 21, 14	634, 638
Yorkshire Dale Steamship Co. v. Minister of War Transport, [1942] 2 All E.R. 6; [1942] A.C. 691; 111 L.J.K.B. 512; 187 L.T. 349; Digest Supp.	754, 757
Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39	333
Yvill v. Yvill, [1945] 1 All E.R. 183; [1945] P. 15; 114 L.J.P. 1; 172 L.T. 114; Digest Supp.	583, 584, 588, 591

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO

	PAGE
Juries Act, 1825 (c. 50), s. 1	872
Stage Carriages Act, 1832 (c. 120), s. 48	883
Metropolitan Police Act, 1829 (c. 44), s. 5	788
Highways Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 72	315
—, ss. 84, 85	775
Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1	342
Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 4	874
Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 15), s. 6	218
Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), s. 22	130
Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 89), s. 37	779
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), ss. 1, 10	830
—, s. 16	874
British North America Act, 1867 (c. 66), ss. 91, 92, 101	137
Building Societies Act, 1874 (c. 42), s. 32 (4)	841
Spirits Act, 1880 (c. 24), ss. 105 (5), 108 (2), sched. IV	35
Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883 (c. 37)	130
—, s. 4	218
Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 103 (1)	483
Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61), s. 1	634
Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 14 (1)	284
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (2)	345
Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), ss. 2, 4	406
—, s. 5	201
Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (c. 17), s. 1 (1)	826
Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 50 (3)	236
Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 24 (3)	114
Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (c. 58), s. 10 (1)	818
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 21 (2), s. 39 (as substituted by Bankruptcy Act, 1926 (c. 7), s. 3)	592
—, ss. 30 (3), 33 (7) (8), 42 (2)	417
Bankruptcy Act, 1917 (c. 59), ss. 26, 108	769
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 37 (1) (a), sched. A	513
—, sched. A, No. 1 (1); No. V, r. 8 (1)	378
—, sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)	704
—, sched. D, case III, r. 3 (1)	600
—, sched. D, case III, r. 4	374
—, sched. D, Rules applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)	699
—, sched. D, para. 1 (b), All Schedules Rules; r. 21	469
—, sched. E, r. 1	282
Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919 (c. 57), s. 2	308
—, s. 12 (2)	686
—, s. 17 (2)	459
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (6)	39
Dentists Act, 1921 (c. 21) ss. 1, 14 (2)	773
Railways Act, 1921 (c. 55), sched. III, para. (3)	355
Rent Restrictions (Notices of Increase) Act, 1923 (c. 13), s. 3 (3)	441
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1)	295, 686
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 35, sched. I, pt. IV, para. I	349
—, s. 40	54
—, s. 40 (1)	689
—, s. 54	342
Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 6 (1) (c) 3	843
—, s. 6 (1) (c) (3), 5	843
Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 34 (3), sched. I, pt. II	402
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (2)	201
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 31 (1) (e), 183 (1), 184 (1)	161
—, s. 177 (1)	492
—, s. 190 (1)	384, 847
—, s. 193 (1)	381
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1)	446
—, ss. 1, 9, 43, 47	551
—, s. 9 (1) (c)	6
—, s. 9 (3) (i)	436
—, ss. 12 (3), 19 (2)	464
—, s. 19 (2), sched. I (7)	595
—, s. 29 (1)	333
—, s. 43, sched. III	490
Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 7 (4)	818
—, s. 24 (1)	109
Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), ss. 2 (1) (2), (3) (a), 64 (1) (b), (2) (a) (b)	820
Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), ss. 18, 19, 26, 37 (1)	920
Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 2 (3)	312
Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 9 (1)	417
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1) (i), 5 (1)	246
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 18	415
Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (c. 37), ss. 1, 10	242
Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1)	884
Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17), s. 72	299

	PAGE
Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 247	894
—, s. 294 (1), 296	279
Mental Treatment Act, 1930 (c. 23), s. 5 (9) (10) (11)	667
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 11 (1)	126
—, ss. 11, 12 (1)	830
—, s. 15 (1)	112
—, ss. 15 (1), 121	829
—, s. 35 (1)	307, 337
—, s. 35 (1) (2)	302, 306
—, s. 35 (2)	824
—, s. 97	258
Statute of Westminster, 1931 (c. 4)	137
Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 46	826
—, ss. 64, 66	369
Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), ss. 1, 11	864
—, s. 10 (5)	310
—, s. 13 (1) (c)	877
Sunday Entertainments Act, 1932 (c. 51), s. 1	498
Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933 (c. 25), s. 3 (2)	835
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3	216, 810
—, s. 3 (1), sched. I (h)	164
—, s. 3 (1) (a), sched. I, para. (a)	193
—, s. 12, sched. I (b)	441
—, sched. I (h) (i)	87
Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 152 (1) (b), sched. V, r. 1	900
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 3 (1)	469
Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 22 (1) (b) (f)	870
Newport Extension Act, 1934 (c. lvii), s. 58	900
Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 35	830
—, s. 26 (1) (a)	177
Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6	261
—, s. 6 (1) (c)	427
—, s. 6 (2)	633
Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 18 (1)	168
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 37	273
—, s. 75	239
Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (c. 50), ss. 92, 304	507
Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 29 (1), sched. I (4)	47
—, s. 97	80
—, sched. II, para. 2	134
Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), ss. 1 (2) (a), 32 (1)	37
Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), ss. 19, 20; sched. IV, para. 1	650
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 2	563
—, ss. 2 (a), 3 (a)	667
—, s. 7 (1) (a)	29, 337
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 16	363
—, s. 151 (1)	877
Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1	777
Canadian Transport Act, 1938 (c. 53), s. 25 (1)	328
Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 84 (1) (a)	35
Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938 (c. 63), s. 14	334
Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), ss. 2 (1), 27 (1) (6)	355
—, s. 21	427, 634, 788
Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 11 (3)	205
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (2)	798
—, s. 12 (3)	480
—, s. 14 (1)	699, 704
—, s. 18 (1)	699
—, sched. VII, pt. II, para. 2 (1)	608
Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 33 (5)	275
—, sched. V, pt. I	679
Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941 (c. 24), s. 6	90
Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), s. 35 (1)	723
Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941 (c. 42), s. 8 (1)	136
—, ss. 11 (1), 12 (1), 17	802
Solicitors Act, 1941 (c. 46), s. 22; sched. III	826
Pensions (Mercantile Marine) Act, 1942 (c. 26), s. 1 (2) (d)	347
Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (v)	72
War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), ss. 2 (1) (a), 6, 8 (2), 10 (1), sched. III, 3 (1)	754
Finance Act, 1943 (c. 28), s. 24 (1) (2) (4)	148
Pensioners Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943 (c. 39), sched., para. 3 (1)	892
Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944 (c. 5), s. 1 (1)	231
Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act, 1944 (c. 15), ss. 1 (1), 9 (1) (2), 10 (1) (2)	880
Finance Act, 1944 (c. 28), s. 33 (2)	723
Validation of War-Time Leases Act, 1944 (c. 34), ss. 1, 3 (3), 7	755
—, ss. 1, 3 (3), 7 (3)	710
Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1944 (c. 40), s. 6	90
Town and Country Planning Act, 1944 (c. 47), s. 1 (1)	454, 851
Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (c. 10), s. 2 (1) (3)	175
Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), ss. 7 (1), 9 (3)	314
Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1)	389
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2	443
New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1); sched. I (3)	396, 612
Liverpool Corporation Act, 1921 (c. lxxiv), ss. 507, 513	567
Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council Act, 1926 (c. lxxv), ss. 90, 91	248
R.S.C. Ord. 16, r. 28 (1)	793
—, r. 46	261
—, Ord. 22, r. 14 (11)	203
—, Ord. 25, r. 4	292
—, Ord. 55B, r. 74	184
—, Ord. 64, r. 7	184
Bankruptcy Rules, 1915, r. 181A	843
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 74, (2) (b) and (4)	793

Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1926 (S.R. & O., 1926, No. 448), rr. 57 (9), 76 (4)	PAGE 595
Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 1113), r. 20 (1) (2)	72
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 5	492
Pensions Appeals Tribunals (England and Wales) Rules, 1943 (S. R & O., 1943, No. 1757/L. 39), r. 23	748
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 2A	813
—, regs. 49, 51	684
—, reg. 62 (4A)	79
—, reg. 68CB	99
—, reg. 78 (5)	22
—, regs. 90 (1), 93 (2)	271
Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196), reg. 21	359
Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 641), regs. 1 (ii), 2	363
Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 1553), reg. 1 (1), 4	271
Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10 (1)	175
Solicitors' Remuneration Act General Order, 1882, cl. 2 (a), cl. 2 (c)	369
Workmen's Compensation (Industrial Diseases) Consolidation Order, 1929 (S.R. & O., 1929, No. 2), para. (3), proviso (a)	490
Workmen's Compensation (Cataract) Order, 1932 (S.R. & O., 1932, No. 424)	490
Solicitors Remuneration (Gross Sum) Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 548), art. 1	369
Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940 (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), arts. 5, 7	196
Essential Work (Coalmining Industry) Order, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 505), art. 4 (1) (d)	106
Eggs (Control and Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 880), art. 7 (1) (c); sched. II, part II (f)	269
General Orders of Metropolitan Police Force, s. 5 (9)	788
Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943 (S.R. & O., 885 of 1943), para. 9 (3)	551
Royal Warrant concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943, art. 4 (3)	379
Law Society's Conditions of Sale, cll. 6, 7	716

WORDS AND PHRASES

Accident	551
Advice . . . in connection with the fitting . . . of artificial teeth	773
After payment of debts	402
Amount	500
Amount owing in respect of advance	500
Any person	307
As a private dwelling-house	193
As near thereto as circumstances will permit	888
As respects things previously done	205
Assessment	679
Assistantship	179, 758
Associated operation	168
Attendance	686
Be paid without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of 5s. in the £	64
Bill	369
By means of	172
Cattle	374
Cause of Action	355
Cause of arbitration	355
Children living at the death of J., of nephews and nieces who shall have died in the life-time of J.	764
Common work	1
Consumer	269
Contract for conveyance of passenger	258
Contract for sale or other disposition of land or interest in land	54
Could not for medical reasons	490
Debt	608
Defect in substance or form	830
Dependants	458
Direct result	754
Directors' remuneration	275
Examination or adjustment	363
For such objects as they may think fit	400
Goods of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply	284
In connection with trade or business	177
In maintaining	248
In pursuance of order	667
Land	231
Landlord	87
Lethal weapon	37
Lettable value	90
Machine attendants	363
Notional accident	551
One rod for her own use	195, 707
Out of profits of company	729
Party prepared to purchase	460
Person affected	72

	PAGE
Person whose consent ought to be given	312
Persons employed or paid by county council	80
Practise . . . in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery nor accept nor fill any
professional appointment	758
Profits of the company	729
Property specifically appropriated for payment of debts	402
Public place	829
Reasonably required by the landlord . . . for occupation . . . for himself	810
Rigging	191
Run of play	746
Satisfied on the advice of the medical referee that an operation could not for medical reasons be
performed within 4 months	490
Situate out of the United Kingdom	345
So far as not varied or inconsistent	716
Special grounds	492
Special reasons	302, 824
Spink's, the Chemists	835
Substance recommended as a medicine	802
Substantial part of whole rent	686
Taxation as between solicitor and client	203
Trade dispute	196
Trade or business	798
Until such time as the company is in the position to pay	749

CORRIGENDA

[1946] 2 All E.R.

P. 720. MINISTER OF PENSIONS v. CHENNELL. Counsel: for "H. L. Parker" read "Stephen Chapman."
P. 440. POPE v. ST. HELEN'S THEATRE, LTD. Case referred to No. 4: for "1944 1 All E.R. 438" read
"1944 1 All E.R. 696."

[1947] 1 All E.R.

P. 101. OUZMAN v. KENNEDY. Delete line E.1.

P. 102. OUZMAN v. KENNEDY. Solicitors: for "R. Raymond Pollard & Co." read "Pollard, Cooper & Thoroughgood."

P. 111. R. v. BODMIN JUSTICES. Line B.4: for "defende to co so" read "defence to do so."

P. 125. HOLLORN v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS. Delete lines E.5 and 6.

P. 177. I.T.P. (LONDON), LTD. v. WINSTANLEY. Line D.5: for "subsequently" read "consequently."

P. 215. APLEY ESTATES v. DE BERNALLES. Line H.8: for "plaintiffs have released" read "plaintiffs have not released."

P. 228. NEWCASTLE CORPN. v. WOLSTANTON, LTD. Line F.4: for "reasons" read "reasoning."

P. 317. RE DICKER, DEC'D. Counsel: for "McMullan" read "McMullen."

P. 361. KIMBER v. WILLIAM WILLETT, LTD. Line G.2: the word "of" should be transferred to the end of the line instead of the beginning.

P. 435. ROMAN v. ROMAN. Solicitors: for "Herbert Oppenheimer, Nathan & Vandyk" read "L. A. Hart."

P. 578. CHRISTIE v. LEACHINSKY. Line B.3: for text as printed read "from the private citizen, save in some exceptional cases. No such doubt can be justified today."

P. 605. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY. Line A.3: for "total British income" read "total income."

P. 705. SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES v. BOLLAND. Case referred to: for "p. 000, ante" read "p. 699, ante."

THE
ALL ENGLAND
LAW REPORTS
ANNOTATED

Distinguished. LANCASTER v. L.P.
T.B. [1948] 2 All E.R. 796.

GRAHAM (or MILLER) v. GLASGOW CORPORATION.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Thankerton, Lord Macmillan, Lord Simonds and Lord du Pareq), November 15, December 16, 1946.]

Master and Servant—Common employment—"Common work"—Electric trams in collision on highway—Injury to conductress.

The defence of common employment depends on the theory that the contract of employment between workman and employer contains an implied term that the workman will not hold his employer liable for an injury due to the negligence of a fellow-servant engaged in common employment with him. To make good the defence it is not enough that the plaintiff was a fellow-servant of the person by whose fault he was injured, but it is also necessary that the two should have been engaged at the time of the injury in a "common work," a phrase which is not limited to the sharing of the same task, but covers the case where the work of one is so related to the work of the other that the risk of injury to the one, due to the carelessness of the other, is not merely fortuitous, but is a special risk involved in the relationship itself, so that that risk must be deemed to have been in contemplation of the injured servant when he entered into his contract of service.

The decision in Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd. (3) does not support the broad proposition that the defence of common employment is never available when two vehicles driven by fellow-servants of the same employer collide on the highway. If the risk of collision between them is merely the ordinary risk arising from contiguity in traffic, i.e. the risk of being run into by another vehicle, whoever is its driver, then the injured party has no special interest in the skill and caution of a driver who is his fellow-servant. The risk he runs is a mere risk of the road in the sense that he might equally well be run into by anyone else driving in his vicinity, but, if the relation between the work of the two fellow-servants is such that one of them depends for his safety from harm in a special degree on the care and skill of the other, then they are engaged in a "common work" and the term in the contract of employment exonerating the common employer from liability has to be implied. Each case must be judged on its own facts.

The appellant was engaged in her employment as conductress of one of the respondents' electric tramcars which was about to travel up a steep incline at a short distance from another of the respondents' tramcars, both cars being on the same line of rails and forming part of the same shuttle-service, each with its appropriate timetable. The electric system of the leading car became overloaded while mounting the hill, a contact breaker came into operation, and as a result the car was left on the slope without electric motive power. The duty of the driver in such circumstances was promptly to apply his brakes and thus hold the car stationary. He negligently failed to do so and the car ran backwards down the hill, and in the collision which resulted the appellant sustained personal injuries :

HELD : the doctrine of common employment applied since (i) the circumstance that tramcars cannot avoid an impending collision by lateral movement and that a common path is prescribed for them by the rails on which they travel necessarily creates a greater risk than the ordinary risk arising from contiguity in traffic, (ii) the crews of the two tram cars were carrying out a "common work," and (iii) the appellant's contract of employment was rightly regarded by the court below as including the implied term exonerating the respondents from liability for the negligence of her fellow-servant.

Decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, 1946 S.C. 109, affirmed.

[AS TO THE DOCTRINE OF COMMON EMPLOYMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 191—194, paras. 322—328; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 207—220, Nos. 1697—1824.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Priestley v. Fowler (1837), 3 M. & W. 1; Murp. & H. 305; 7 L.J.Ex. 42; 34 Digest 202, 1647.
- (2) Bartonhill Coal Co. v. Reid (1858), 3 Macq. 266; 31 L.T.O.S. 255; 22 J.P. 560; Bartonhill Coal Co. v. McGuire (1858), 3 Macq. 300; 31 L.T.O.S. 258; 34 Digest 126, 972.
- (3) Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; Digest Supp.
- (4) The Petrel, [1893] P. 320, 62 L.J.P. 92; 70 L.T. 417; 34 Digest 213, 1757.
- (5) Metcalfe v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1939] 2 All E.R. 542; 108 L.J.K.B. 733; 160 L.T. 599; 103 J.P. 246; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from a decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session reported 1946 S.C. 109. The facts appear in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON.

James Walker, K.C., and T. J. Doull Connolly (both of the Scottish Bar) for the appellant.

R. P. Morison, K.C., R. H. Sherwood Calver, K.C., and J. J. Cunningham (all of the Scottish Bar) for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 16. VISCOUNT SIMON : My Lords, on Jan. 22, 1944, the appellant sustained personal injuries when engaged in her employment by the respondent corporation as a conductress of an electric tramcar, No. 1011. The tramcar was about to travel up a steep incline and at a short distance in front of it, on the slope of the hill, was another tramcar of the corporation, No. 1089, moving in the same direction. The two cars were on the same line of rails and were part of a sequence providing the same shuttle-service, each with its appropriate timetable. The electric system of car No. 1089 became overloaded while mounting the hill; a contact-breaker, with which each car is fitted as a safety device, came into operation; and, as a result, the car was left on the slope without electric motive power. The duty of the driver in such circumstances was promptly to apply his brakes and thus hold the car stationary. He negligently failed to do so, and car No. 1089 ran backwards down the hill until it collided with car No. 1011. In the collision the appellant was injured. The respondents admit that the negligence of the driver of car No. 1089 caused the injury. Apart from the possible application of the doctrine of "common employment," the liability of the respondents in accordance with the axiom respondet superior, is, therefore, undisputed. The sole question in the case is whether, in view of the fact that the injured conductress and the negligent driver were both employed by the respondents and were respectively at work as described, the doctrine operates to relieve the corporation from liability.

I am of opinion that it does, and I should be prepared to adopt as it stands the judgment of the LORD JUSTICE CLERK (LORD COOPER) delivered on behalf of the judges of the Second Division of the Court of Session, but, in view of the fact that we have before us a careful opinion of the LORD ORDINARY (LORD PATRICK) sustaining the opposite view, and of the excellent arguments from each side addressed to this House, I will state the grounds of my conclusion in my own words.

The first judicial indication of the defence of "common employment" is to be found in the judgment of ABINGER, C.B., in 1837 in Priestley v. Fowler (1). The defence depends on the theory that the contract of employment between workman and employer contains an implied term that the workman will not hold his employer liable for an injury due to the negligence of a fellow-servant engaged in common employment with him. In 1858 the House of Lords, through the mouth of LORD CRANWORTH, laid it down that the same doctrine applied in the law of Scotland : Bartonhill Coal Co. cases (2). The Employers' Liability Act, 1880, provided a statutory exception to the common law rule, and the Workmen's Compensation Acts, under which the employer's liability does not depend on negligence at all, give no room for the defence in cases dealt with under those Acts, but, apart from statute, the common law rule, within proper limits, still applies.

At one time it might almost have seemed that the defence of common employment could be compendiously expressed by saying that at common law a servant cannot claim damages from his master for the negligence of a fellow-servant.

In view, however, of the increasing ramifications of business and of the many cases in which one servant could not be supposed to have had in contemplation the negligence of another servant engaged on quite a different piece of work and acting in quite a different sphere, later judicial pronouncements have made it clear that the defence provided by the doctrine is not available without regard to the circumstances, and have made room for the conception that two servants are not necessarily in "common employment" because they have a common employer.

Regard must be had to the work they are respectively doing and to the relation between them when they are working, but the defence still depends on the conception, however artificial, of an implied contract. The issue is whether, having regard to the particular facts, the implied contract must be considered to cover the case. Fine distinctions may be involved, but, where necessary, they must be made, and it is dangerous to argue that a decision on one set of facts would provide a sufficient guide if the facts were somewhat varied.

The qualification to be introduced in mitigation of the bald proposition that a servant cannot hold his employer liable at common law for the negligence of a fellow-servant was closely examined and carefully defined by this House in Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services Ltd. (3). It is a striking proof of the fineness of the distinction to be drawn that both the Lord Ordinary and the Court of Session founded their conclusions in the present case on what was said in Radcliffe's case (3), but with contrary results, LORD PATRICK holding that the defence of common employment, therefore, failed to exonerate the respondents, and LORD COOPER that it, therefore, succeeded. In Radcliffe's case (3) the facts were that two motor-coach drivers in the service of the same employer, after helping to take a party of people to New Brighton, were free to bring the empty vehicles back to the garage at Bootle by any route each driver chose. The coach driven by Radcliffe stopped in a street in Liverpool. Radcliffe got out and was standing on its offside when the other coach, proceeding independently, but, as it happened, along the same street, owing to the negligence of its driver passed too close and crushed Radcliffe. The two drivers were held not to be, at the time of the accident, in common employment. "The one [driver] was no more interested in the skill of the other than in that of the drivers of myriads of other vehicles in whose vicinity he might happen to drive": per LORD ATKIN ([1939] 1 All E.R. 637, at p. 640). "The risk was the general risk of the highway, not the specific risk of the fellow-servant's negligence": per LORD WRIGHT (ibid., at p. 661). SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., in The Petrel (4) had already drawn the same kind of distinction in the case of a collision at sea of two ships belonging to the same owner. He said ([1893] P. 320, at p. 326):

The consideration that the risk of injury to the one servant is the natural and necessary consequence of misconduct in the other, implies that the skill and care of the one is of special importance to the other by reason of the relation between their services. Tried by this principle, can it be said that the safety of the captain of one ship of a company is in the ordinary and natural course of things dependent on the skill and care of the captain of another ship of the same company, or that injury by the negligence of one is an ordinary risk of the service of the other? In some cases it might perhaps: for example, it might if all the ships of the company were in the habit of meeting in the same dock, and the safety of each thus became, in the ordinary course of things dependent on the skill with which the other was navigated. But in regard to navigation on the high seas, or in the estuary of the Thames, would a captain of one ship of the General Steam Navigation Company have more reason to be interested in the skill of a captain of another ship of the company than in that of the masters of the myriad other craft in whose vicinity he might happen to navigate? By no reasonable supposition can it be imagined that he would. I think, therefore, that these two captains were not in common employment.

The criterion is often expressed by saying that, to make good the defence of common employment, it is not enough that the plaintiff was a fellow-servant of the person by whose fault he was injured, but it is also necessary that the two should have been engaged at the time of the injury in a "common work." But this last expression also needs definition, or at any rate, explanation. "Common work" is not limited to the sharing of the same task, like the task of two sawyers in a saw-pit, or of engine-driver and stoker on the footplate of a locomotive. The phrase covers the case where the work of one is so related to the work of the other that the risk of injury to the one, due to the carelessness of the other, is not merely fortuitous, but is a special risk involved in the relationship itself, so that that risk must be deemed to have been in contemplation of the injured servant when he entered into his contract of service.

Radcliffe's case (3), therefore, does not support the broad proposition that the defence of common employment is never available when two vehicles driven by fellow-servants of the same employer collide in the high road. If the risk of collision between them is merely the ordinary risk arising from contiguity in traffic, i.e. the risk of being run into by another vehicle, whoever is its driver, then the injured party has no special interest in the skill and caution of a driver who is his fellow-servant. The risk he runs is a mere risk of the road in the sense that he might equally well be run into by anyone else driving in his vicinity, but, if the relation between the work of the two fellow-servants is such that one of them depends for his safety from harm in a special degree on the care and skill of the other, then they are engaged in a "common work" and the term in the contract of employment exonerating the common employer from liability has to be implied.

Here we have a collision between two of the corporation's tramcars engaged in the same service and following the same route on the same pair of rails. They are intended, of course, to maintain a proper interval between them, as their timetables prescribe, but it is notorious that in the course of practical working tramcars moving in the same direction on a line of rails sometimes cluster and, unless carefully handled, may run into one another. There is no "block system" as there is on railways, by which signals warn a following train not to advance along a section of the line until it is clear of the preceding train. Moreover (and this is the most significant circumstance), if there is danger of collision between two tramcars on the same line of rails, either by the foremost running backward or by the car following advancing too fast, neither car can avoid the collision by lateral movement, for each can move only along the fixed grooves. Every case in this branch of the law depends on its own facts, and obviously a collision between tram and tram is not governed by all the same considerations as a collision between bus and bus, or even between bus and tram each following its own route and happening to collide in the roadway. An instance of the latter occurred in Metcalfe v. London Passenger Transport Board (5) where LORD GREENE, M.R., pointed out ([1939] 2 All E.R. at p. 546), that the risk did not arise out of any special relation between the injured and the negligent fellow-servants, but was a type of risk in a public thoroughfare which was equally present when the negligently driven vehicle belonged to and was driven by the servant of a different owner. I cannot agree with LORD PATRICK that "on the facts of this case the defenders have failed to prove that the pursuer was subject to any greater degree of risk of her tramcar being in collision with tramcar 1089 than she was to the risk of being in collision with one of the countless vehicles in whose vicinity it would be while traversing the streets of Glasgow." On the contrary, the circumstance that tramcars cannot avoid an impending collision by lateral movement and that a common path is prescribed for them by the rails on which they both travel necessarily creates a greater risk, and there was uncontradicted evidence of this "unavoidable feature of the operation of a tramway system." The crews of the two tramcars were carrying out a "common work."

On the facts of this case, therefore, the appellant's contract of employment was rightly regarded by the Court of Session as including the implied term exonerating the respondent from liability for the negligence of the appellant's fellow-servant. I move that the appeal be dismissed.

LORD THANKERTON : My Lords, I concur in the opinion which has just been delivered by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

A LORD MACMILLAN [read by LORD THANKERTON] : My Lords, on Jan. 22, 1944, a tramcar belonging to the respondents collided, owing to the negligence of the driver employed by them, with another of their tramcars on which the
B appellant was employed by them as a conductress, with the result that the appellant sustained injuries for which she seeks reparation from the respondents. The accident occurred in Kilbowie Road, Clydebank, which forms part of one of the respondents' tramway routes, and both tramcars were at the time engaged in providing a public service on that route. The details of the accident have already been described and I need not repeat them. The respondents plead that, the
C appellant's injuries being due to the negligence of a fellow employee, her claim is excluded by the doctrine of common employment.

Since the decision of this House in Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services Ltd. (3) some attempt has been made to suggest that the plea of common employment is inapplicable to the case of traffic accidents occurring on the highway, though due to the negligence of a fellow-servant, on the ground that such accidents are incidental to the general use of the highway by the public and are not among D the special risks of a fellow-servant's negligence which an employee is impliedly taken to have assumed on entering his employment. The case of Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services Ltd. (3) affords no warrant for any such limitation of the doctrine. Two fellow servants may be engaged in a common employment on the highway just as they may be so engaged elsewhere. The place where the negligent act occurred is no more than one of the elements to be considered in deciding whether the servants involved were at the time in common employment in the relevant sense. The test is one of relationship, not of locality. The question must always be whether the nature of the employment in which the fellow-servants were engaged was such as to bring them at the time and place of the accident into association with each other in carrying on some activity in common. Each case must be judged on its own facts.

E In the present case the Lord Ordinary, on his view of the facts, has held that the plea of common employment is inadmissible, while the Second Division of the Inner House, on their view of the facts, have sustained the plea. In my opinion, the evidence amply justifies the summary of the facts with which the Lord Justice-Clerk concludes his opinion and on which he and his colleagues base their decision. I agree both with his summary of the facts and with his conclusion in law. I, accordingly, concur with the motion that the appeal be dismissed.

F LORD SIMONDS : My Lords, I concur in the opinion delivered by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, I also concur in the opinions which have been delivered.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Hy. S. L. Polak & Co., agents for Edward J. Boyle, Glasgow, agent for Edmund M. McCabe, Leith (for the appellant) ; Martin & Co., agents for Simpson & Marwick, Edinburgh (for the respondents).

(Reported by C.St. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.)

DOUDIE v. KINNEIL, CANNELL AND COKING COAL CO., LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Thankerton, Lord Macmillan, Lord Simonds and Lord du Parcq), November 14, December 16, 1946.]

Workmen's Compensation—Compensation—Amount—Workman receiving compensation for partial incapacity—Second accident resulting in total incapacity—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 9 (1) (c).

On Feb. 15, 1939, a workman met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. When sufficiently recovered to undertake light work, he was re-employed by the same employers at a lower wage and received, in addition to his wage, 15s. a week as compensation for partial incapacity. On Apr. 17, 1944, the workman met with a second accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and was totally incapacitated for some weeks. He contended that for this period he was entitled to receive not only the sum of 30s. a week (and supplementary allowances) for total incapacity in respect of the second accident, but also the 15s. a week to which he was entitled in respect of the first accident. It was contended by the employers that under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 9 (1), proviso (c), the total amount of compensation payable could not exceed 30s. per week:—

HELD: the workman was entitled to receive the compensation payable in respect of the first accident in addition to the 30s. a week for total incapacity in respect of the second accident, for proviso (c) to s. 9 (1) of the Act merely limited the compensation for injury resulting from any one accident and did not provide that a workman should never at any time receive more than 30s. under the Act, however often he might have sustained injuries by accidents.

Thompson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co. (2) followed. M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co. (1) overruled.

Per LORD DU PARCQ: I agree with the proviso put on s. 9 (1), proviso (b) by the Court of Appeal in Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries Ltd. (6).

[AS TO COMPENSATION IN CASES OF MORE THAN ONE ACCIDENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 912, para. 1255, note (e); and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp., Master and Servant, Nos. 3362a, b. See also WILLIS'S WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION, 37th Edn., pp. 288—290.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co., Ltd., [1920] S.C. 75; 57 S.L.R. 80; [1919] 2 S.L.T. 263; 13 B.W.C.C. 388.
- (2) Thompson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1935] 2 K.B. 90; 104 L.J.K.B. 515; 152 L.T. 571; 28 B.W.C.C. 95; Digest Supp.
- (3) McCann v. Scottish Co-operative Laundry Assocn., Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 475; 105 L.J.P.C. 58; 154 L.T. 503; 29 B.W.C.C. 1; Digest Supp.
- (4) Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co., [1913] 2 K.B. 158; 82 L.J.K.B. 414; 108 L.T. 283; 6 B.W.C.C. 225; 34 Digest 348, 2803.
- (5) Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 756; [1937] 2 K.B. 426; 106 L.J.K.B. 667; 156 L.T. 490; 30 B.W.C.C. 171; Digest Supp.
- (6) Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd., [1940] 2 All E.R. 201; [1940] 1 K.B. 702; 109 L.J.K.B. 493; 164 L.T. 17; 33 B.W.C.C. 122; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the workman from a judgment of the Second Division of the Court of Session, affirming a decision of the arbitrator. The workman, who was in receipt of 15s. a week as compensation for partial incapacity, met with a second accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and was totally incapacitated for some weeks. He claimed compensation at the rate of 30s. a week for that period in addition to the compensation which he was receiving for partial incapacity, but the arbitrator (following the decision in M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co., Ltd. (1)) found that he was not entitled to both weekly payments, but only to the payment of 30s. a week in respect of the second accident.

James Walker, K.C., and T. J. D. Connolly (both of the Scottish Bar) for the workman.

R. P. Morison, K.C., and David Watson (both of the Scottish Bar) for the employers.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 16. VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, this is an appeal from the Second Division of the Court of Session raising a question of construction under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. The Court of Session followed a previous decision of that court in M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co. (1), and on this ground decided against the contention of the workman, who is the present appellant. A decision of the Court of Appeal in England (LORD HANWORTH, M.R., SLESSER and ROMER, L.JJ) in Thompson v. L. & N.E.R. (2) is to the contrary effect, and there is no doubt that the respective conclusions in M'Kinstrey's case (1) and Thompson's case (2) conflict with one another. The question before the House, therefore, is which of these decisions correctly interprets the provisions of the Act on the point involved.

The situation to be dealt with occurs where a workman meets with two accidents in succession, each of which arises out of and in the course of his employment and inflicts personal injury on him. The injury caused by the first accident gives rise to a weekly payment during partial incapacity, and while these circumstances continue to exist a second accident befalls him, causing injury involving total incapacity, in respect of which the workman has a claim for compensation. In M'Kinstrey's case (1) LORD DUNDAS, delivering the opinion of the Scottish Court, adopted the view ([1920] S.C. 75, at p. 79) that incapacity:

... can never be more than total incapacity, however many injuries by accident the man may have suffered from.

He hence concluded that the maximum weekly payment which a workman could receive under the Act, however many accidents he might have met with, was the maximum fixed by the statute where there had been only one accident producing total incapacity. In Thompson's case (1), on the other hand, it was held that a workman who is in receipt of compensation under the Act for partial incapacity resulting from the first accident should continue to receive this compensation in addition to further weekly compensation in respect of the total incapacity resulting from a second accident. The result would, therefore, be, according to the Court of Appeal in England, that a workman who met with more accidents than one, and had a claim for compensation in respect of each, might be in receipt of a larger sum than the maximum prescribed if only one accident had occurred.

The admitted facts in the present case are simple and clear and neatly illustrate the point to be decided. The arbitrator in his Stated Case sets them out thus:

(i) The claimant is married and his wife is alive and there is one child of his marriage, a daughter, who is alive and is under 15 years of age. (ii) On Feb. 15, 1939, the claimant, while in the employment of the respondents, had been injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his work. (iii) He was thereby incapacitated for work and the respondents paid him compensation as for total incapacity. (iv) On or about Feb. 26, 1943, the claimant was able to resume light work. (v) The respondents then agreed to pay and did pay the claimant compensation in respect of partial incapacity at the rate of 15s. per week with supplementary allowances. (vi) On Apr. 17, 1944, the claimant sustained injury to the thumb of his left hand by accident arising out of and in the course of his work with the respondents and was thereby incapacitated for work until June 7, 1944. (vii) The claimant has claimed in respect of the accident on Apr. 17, 1944, compensation at the rate of 30s. per week with supplementary allowances from Apr. 18, 1944, to June 6, 1944, inclusive. (viii) The respondents have tendered to the claimant the sum of 15s. per week in addition to the sum of 15s. already paid in respect of the accident which occurred on Feb. 15, 1939, together with supplementary allowances.

On these facts the arbitrator found in law that the claimant is not entitled to receive from the respondents the sum of 15s. per week with supplementary allowances in respect of the first accident from Apr. 18, 1944, to June 6, 1944, inclusive, but is entitled to receive in respect of the second accident the sum of 30s. per week with supplementary allowances during this period.

The whole matter turns on the proper application of proviso (c) to s. 9 (1) of the Act. This proviso runs:

the weekly payment shall in no case exceed 30s.

Does "in no case" mean "in the case of no individual" or "in the case of no given accident"? More at length, does the proviso mean that a workman who has been injured more than once, and has been entitled to compensation in respect of more than one accident, cannot receive total compensation exceeding 30s. a week? Or does it mean that this maximum applies to limit the compensation for injury resulting from any one accident, so that multiple accidents may in some instances result in providing him with compensation in a total sum exceeding 30s. a week ?

It seems to me that, on examining the language of the Act, the preferable construction is the latter of these alternatives. When s. 9 (1) begins by saying :

The compensation under this Act where total or partial incapacity for work results from the injury shall be a weekly payment during the incapacity of an amount calculated in accordance with the rules hereinafter contained . . .

"the injury" is the specific injury then under consideration which produces a degree of incapacity. The proviso is a proviso to this section and relates to compensation for the specific injury. The fact that a workman has been previously injured and partly incapacitated is irrelevant. This view of the meaning of the phrase "the injury" is supported by considering the language of s. 1 of the Act where a particular "personal injury by accident" is plainly dealt with. The proviso does not say, or mean, that, however many accidents the workman has to endure, the compensation in respect of all of them put together can never be more than 30s. a week. This view of the matter is greatly strengthened by two further considerations. It is not disputed that, for the purpose of testing the true construction of s. 9, the case must be considered of a workman who meets with his first accident when in the employment of A, but meets with his second accident when in the employment of B. In such circumstances it appears impossible to construe the Act otherwise than as above suggested. There is nothing whatever in the Act providing for an adjustment between the two employers, yet, if the first accident produces partial incapacity with considerable but partial loss of earning power so that A becomes liable to make a weekly payment of, say, 15s., the workman, when he enters the employment of B, may receive substantially lower wages than he would have if he were a completely fit man, and yet the measure of compensation for a second accident producing total incapacity will partly turn on the wages he was receiving from B before this occurred. It would be a remarkable result if, in these circumstances, the man's total incapacity produced while serving B should have the result of suspending or wiping out altogether A's previous liability to make the weekly payment previously due from him.

Moreover, it has been decided by this House in McCann v. Scottish Co-operative Laundry Association (3) that a liability to pay compensation under the Act for partial incapacity does not cease because at a later date the workman becomes totally incapacitated for work by events unconnected with the accident for which he is being compensated, e.g., by supervening illness or old age. Once a liability to pay a weekly compensation in view of a degree of incapacity, whether total or partial, is established, the liability continues during the workman's life until the workman's capacity improves. To quote LORD MACMILLAN ([1936] 1 All E.R. 475, at p. 482) :

. . . it is now well settled, that a workman who by reason of incapacity due to an accident is entitled to compensation does not lose that right merely because through some extraneous supervening cause, such as illness or old age, a natural incapacity is added to the incapacity due to the accident. The employer cannot plead that as the workman would, by reason of his condition apart from the accident, be incapacitated in any event, he has lost his right to compensation. There is no merger of the accidental incapacity in the natural incapacity.

McCann's case (3) approved a similar decision of the Court of Appeal in Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co. (4), in which the observations of HAMILTON, L.J. ([1913] 2 K.B. 158, at pp. 169, 170) are particularly worthy of study. I agree with the view of the Court of Appeal in Thompson's case (2) that the reasoning in Harwood's case (4) equally applies where the supervening cause is a subsequent accident creating total incapacity.

The liability, therefore, in the present case to pay 15s. a week from Feb. 26, 1943, continues, while the new liability arising out of the accident of Apr. 17, 1944, is not affected by, and the compensation arising from this second accident is not reduced by reason of, the former and independent liability, save so far as the wages earned before the second accident were less by reason of the previous partial incapacity.

In this appeal we are concerned with a case in which after the first accident there remained some partial capacity for work, which the workman lost as the result of the second accident. It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss the complicated problem (illustrated by such decisions as Wheatley v. Lambton Collieries (5) and Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries (6)) which arises when a workman who is receiving compensation for an accident is certified to be incapacitated by industrial disease.

It seems to me clear that, if a man is already partially incapacitated by accident and then meets with a second accident which incapacitates him altogether, the second accident none the less is the event which produces total incapacity. Total incapacity is the condition to which the man is reduced and in which the man is unable to earn any wages. It is immaterial to inquire whether he was previously partially incapacitated or not. We are engaged simply in construing the words of the Act, and to read the relevant sections as though they required credit to be given for continuing compensation for an earlier accident involving partial incapacity, when compensation is claimed for total incapacity arising from a later accident, would be, as HAMILTON, L.J., said in Harwood's case ([1913] 2 K.B. 158, at p. 169) :

... not interpretation but . . . legislation, unless the context or the scheme of the Act (natural justice not being in question) demonstrates that the legislature so intended. In my view, therefore, the decision in Thompson's case (2) should be approved and we should over-rule the decision in M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co. (1). I move that the appeal be allowed.

LORD THANKERTON : My Lords, the facts of this appeal and the questions at issue have been clearly stated by my noble and learned friend on the Wool-sack in his opinion, which I have had the privilege of considering, and in which I concur.

It has long been settled by a series of decisions of this House that the right to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Acts is conferred by the statute—at present by s. 1 of the Act of 1925—that the amount of compensation is to be measured, at present, by ss. 8 and 9 of the Act of 1925, and that you must not resort to these latter two sections for the purpose of cutting down the right to compensation. Further, the right to compensation thus conferred by the statute is not dependent on an award by the arbitrator or any payment of compensation by the employers. I am of opinion that consideration of s. 1 of the Act of 1925 will provide the key to the solution of the present question.

In my opinion—and, indeed, I understood the respondents' counsel as conceding it—the appellant acquired on the occasion of each accident a separate right to compensation in respect of the personal injury caused by the particular accident. If so, the measurement of the compensation in respect thereof will involve a separate measurement in respect of each right to compensation, and ss. 8 and 9 are thus designed to quantify the compensation due in respect of injury caused by the particular accident, in respect of which the statutory right to compensation is acquired. It will follow that the limit of 30s. imposed by proviso (c) to s. 9 (1) of the Act will be equally confined to the compensation in respect of the injury caused by the particular accident. There is no statutory provision under which the compensation payable in respect of injury by another accident can be taken into account, and no machinery for aggregation and apportionment of compensation payable in respect of injury from more than one accident, whether the employers are the same or not. If there be any hardship on the employers, it is for Parliament, if it thinks fit, to amend the statutory provisions.

LORD MACMILLAN (read by LORD SIMONDS) : My Lords, your Lordships in this appeal have to choose between two conflicting decisions of the Court of Session in Scotland and the Court of Appeal in England on an important point in workmen's compensation law.

The appellant, on Feb. 15, 1939, while in the respondents' employment, was injured by an accident which totally incapacitated him. He was paid compensation on that footing until he sufficiently recovered to enable him to undertake light work at a lower wage and was thereafter paid, in addition to his wages, 15s. a week as compensation for partial incapacity. On Apr. 17, 1944, a second accident befell him which totally incapacitated him from work. In respect of this second accident he claimed compensation at the rate of 30s. a week to which he would have been entitled had there been no previous accident and no subsisting weekly compensation for partial incapacity. The appellant maintained his right to both the 15s. a week for partial incapacity due to the first accident and the 30s. a week for total incapacity due to the second accident. This the respondents disputed, founding on proviso (c) to s. 9 (1) of the Act of 1925, which provides that "the weekly payment shall in no case exceed 30s." They, accordingly, tendered to the appellant in respect of the second accident a weekly payment of 15s. which, with the 15s. being paid to him in respect of the first accident, made up a total weekly payment of 30s. The arbitrator, holding himself bound by the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session in M'Kinstrey v. Auchinlea Coal Co. (1), on the corresponding provisions of the Act of 1906, decided that the appellant was not entitled to both weekly payments concurrently, but was entitled only to payment of 30s. a week in respect of the second accident. On appeal, this decision was affirmed by the judges of the Second Division who likewise held themselves bound by M'Kinstrey's case (1). The appellant now asks this House to overrule the decision in M'Kinstrey's case (1) and to approve and give effect to the contrary view enunciated by the Court of Appeal in England, on precisely the same state of facts, in Thompson v. London & North Eastern Railway Co. (2).

Having considered the opinion of LORD DUNDAS, the only opinion delivered in the Scottish case, and compared its reasoning with the judgments of LORD HANWORTH, M.R., SLESSER and ROMER, L.JJ. in the English case, I have no hesitation in preferring the latter to the former. LORD DUNDAS finds the key to the whole problem (1920 S.C. 75, at p. 79) in the proposition that :

... compensation under the Act is not for a man's injury but for his incapacity, that that incapacity is one and indivisible, and that it can never be more than total incapacity, however many injuries by accident the man may have suffered from.

In common with the judges of the Court of Appeal in England, I find no warrant in the Act for this view. Section 1 of the Act confers on a workman injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment a right to compensation. Where an accident occurs and injury is sustained by a workman, the right to be compensated in respect of that accidental injury at once arises and must be assessed on its own merits. Any other accident he may have previously suffered or may thereafter suffer is irrelevant. No doubt, the compensation is to be "in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained," and s. 9 (1) with its proviso (c) is one of the provisions thereafter contained, but s. 9 is concerned only with the quantification of the amount of compensation payable in respect of the particular accident. When it provides that "the weekly payment shall in no case exceed 30s." it means that in arriving at the weekly compensation payable in respect of the injury due to the accident in question a maximum of 30s. shall not be exceeded. I see no justification for reading the proviso as if it had enacted that no workman shall ever at one and the same time receive more than 30s. a week as compensation under the Act however often he may have sustained injuries by accidents. Each case as it arises must be dealt with on its own facts and for each case compensation must be awarded as the Act prescribes, subject only to the limit that in no one case of injury shall the compensation exceed 30s. a week.

This view is fortified by taking the case where the liability for the first accident has been satisfied by a lump sum payment. There are no means of taking this into account in assessing the compensation for a second accident. Again, take the case of the second accident occurring in employment by a different employer. In that case, is the employer to pay less compensation for total disablement because the employee is drawing compensation for partial disablement from a previous employer? The Act imposes no such restriction. As SLESSER, L.J., said ([1935] 2 K.B. 90, at p. 100) in Thompson's case (2) :

The partial incapacity is not so absorbed into the total incapacity that there is but one claim; there are two separate and continuing liabilities giving rise to two separate claims for compensation.

The views expressed by my noble and learned friend LORD THANKERTON in this House in McCann v. Scottish Co-operative Laundry Association (3) lend support to the opinion which I have formed in the present case, though the circumstances were different. There supervening total incapacity due to illness was held to have no effect on an award of compensation for partial incapacity subsisting at the time of the onset of the illness. The appeal should, in my opinion, be allowed.

LORD SIMONDS : My Lords, I concur.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, the question of construction which is now before your Lordships cannot be said to be a simple one since the appellate courts of England and Scotland have differed on it. None the less, I am of opinion, with deference to those who have thought otherwise, that, if the question is approached with regard only to the words of the Act of Parliament, the answer to it is reasonably plain.

A Section 1 of the Act provides that if a workman suffers "personal injury by accident" (I omit words not germane to this inquiry) his employer becomes liable to pay him compensation. The compensation, as is seen from s. 9 (1) is to be a weekly payment. The payment is to be made "where total or partial incapacity for work results from the injury" and is to be payable "during the incapacity." It is to be calculated in accordance with the rules laid down, for cases of "total incapacity" in s. 9 (2) and for cases of "partial incapacity" in s. 9 (3). The Act assumes, not unnaturally, that the workman immediately before the accident which had injured him, had some capacity for work. It may not have been the complete capacity of a wholly fit and hitherto uninjured man, but such as it was it enabled him to earn wages. When that capacity is diminished or destroyed, so that "total or partial incapacity for work results," the employer in whose service he has suffered the incapacitating injury must compensate him. It does not seem to me to be a misuse of language to say that, when a workman loses through an accident all that capacity for work which he possessed immediately before the accident, "total incapacity for work" has resulted from the accident.

D The rules for calculating the weekly payment are based on a comparison of the workman's earnings before and after the accident, and as the extent of his capacity will normally be reflected in his wages, compensation may be said to be measured, though, no doubt, roughly measured, according to the reduction in his capacity for work, by comparison, not with an ideal standard of full capacity, but with that degree of capacity which he possessed before the accident. Thus, where a partially incapacitated man is totally incapacitated by a subsequent accident, the liability of the employer in whose service the man became totally incapacitated is to compensate him by payments based, not on the difference between full earning capacity and total incapacity, but on the depreciation of his earning power attributable to the last accident, by which partial incapacity was converted into total incapacity. When the calculation is made in accordance with s. 9 it may turn out that, but for the operation of proviso (c) to s. 9 (1), a weekly payment exceeding 30s. would be due to the workman. The proviso limits the weekly payment to that amount. If I have rightly construed the section thus far, there can be no ground for supposing it to have been the intention of the legislature that, when a workman has suffered injuries from successive accidents, the total of the weekly payments he receives in respect of them is to be limited to 30s. Certainly, no such intention is expressed, and I cannot infer it from the words of the Act. On the contrary, it seems to me to be manifest that in s. 9 the legislature is concerning itself solely with the payment to be made by the employer in whose service the workman was when a particular accident befell him. The words of the section are not, in my opinion, ambiguous, but any doubt should, I think, be dispelled by the consideration that, if Parliament had intended that a workman who, after successive accidents, was in the end totally incapacitated, could recover no more than 30s. a week in all, it could hardly have failed to make some provision for the adjustment and apportionment of the liability as between the different employers who might be concerned. There is no trace of any such provision in the Act or in the rules made under it.

G I only wish to add, with regard to the point raised on the proviso in s. 9 (1) (b) that I agree with the interpretation put on that proviso by the Court of Appeal in Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (6). For these reasons, and for the reasons given by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack, whose opinion I have had the advantage of reading in print, I would allow the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Hy. S. L. Polak & Co., agents for C. M. Scott & M'Gillivray, Glasgow, and Herbert Macpherson, Edinburgh (for the appellant); Beveridge & Co. (Parliamentary agents), agents for J. A. M'Ara, Glasgow, and W. & J. Burness, Edinburgh (for the respondents).

[Reported by C. St. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SEARLE v. WALLBANK

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Maugham, Lord Thankerton, Lord Porter, Lord du Parc and Lord Uthwatt), October 24, 25, December 16, 1946.]

Animals—Trespass—Horse on highway—Escape through gap in fence of field adjoining highway—Collision with cyclist—Duty so to maintain gates and fences that escape of animals impossible—Duty to take reasonable care to prevent escape.

Practice—Appeal to House of Lords—Leave to appeal—Appellant a poor person—Consideration of respondent's position as to costs.

In April, 1944, at about 1.30 a.m. and during "black-out" conditions, the appellant was cycling along the highway when he was injured through coming into collision with a horse (which was not of a mischievous nature) belonging to the respondent who kept it in a field adjoining the highway. At the time of the accident the horse was straying unattended on the highway on which it had got through a gap in the fence which separated the highway from the field.

HELD: the respondent was not liable in negligence because (a) there was no prima facie legal obligation on him, as the owner of a field abutting on the highway, to users of the highway so to maintain his fence as to prevent his animals from straying on to the highway, and (b) he was under no duty as between himself and users of the highway to take reasonable care to prevent any of his animals (not known to be dangerous) from straying on to the highway.

Per VISCOUNT MAUGHAM: In such a case, if the animal is wild by nature or is a domestic animal known to be dangerous, I can readily conceive that the possibility or probability of danger to passers-by might impose a duty of reasonable care.

Per VISCOUNT MAUGHAM: When the Court of Appeal gives leave to appeal to the House of Lords in what is regarded as a test case, the position of the respondent as to costs, if the appeal should fail, ought to be borne in mind. It is an unfortunate fact for the respondent in the present case that the appellant presents his appeal as a poor person.

[AS TO TRESPASS BY ANIMALS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 545, 546, para. 936; FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, pp. 233-235, 243 and 253; Vol. 36, p. 64, No. 414; Vol. 38 p. 286, No. 216; AND FOR STATUTES, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 5 (Distress), Vol. 9 (Highways), and Vol. 2 (Commons and Rights of Common).] Cases referred to:

- (1) Heath's Garage, Ltd. v. Hodges, [1916] 2 K.B. 370; 85 L.J.K.B. 1289; 115 L.T. 129; 80 J.P. 321; 2 Digest 234, 226.
- (2) Hughes v. Williams, [1943] 1 All E.R. 535; [1943] 1 K.B. 574; 112 L.J.K.B. 275; 168 L.T. 305; Digest Supp.
- (3) McAlister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.
- (4) Higgins v. Searle (1909), 100 L.T. 280; 73 J.P. 185; 2 Digest 234, 223.
- (5) Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L.R. 1 Exch. 265; 4 H. & C. 263; 35 L.J.Ex. 154; 14 L.T. 523; 30 J.P. 436; 2 Digest 228, 195.
- (6) Rylands v. Fletcher (1866), L.R. 3 H.L. 330.
- (7) Brackenhorough v. Spalding U.D.C., [1942] 1 All E.R. 34; [1942] A.C. 310; 111 L.J.K.B. 100; 166 L.T. 108; 106 J.P. 81; Digest Supp.
- (8) Cox v. Burbidge (1863), 13 C.B.N.S. 430; 1 New Rep. 236; 32 L.J.C.P. 89; 2 Digest 233, 218.
- (9) Hadwell v. Righton, [1907] 2 K.B. 345; 76 L.J.K.B. 891; 97 L.T. 133; 71 J.P. 499; 2 Digest 233, 222.
- (10) Ellis v. Banyard (1911), 106 L.T. 51; 2 Digest 234, 225.
- (11) Jones v. Lee (1911), 106 L.T. 123; 76 J.P. 137; 2 Digest 234, 224.
- (12) Fraser v. Pate (1923), S.C. 748.
- (13) Turner v. Coates, [1917] 1 K.B. 670; 86 L.J.K.B. 321; 115 L.T. 766; 2 Digest 235, 230.
- (14) Gayler & Pope, Ltd. v. Davies (B.) & Son, Ltd., [1924] 2 K.B. 75; 93 L.J.K.B. 702; 131 L.T. 507; 36 Digest 64, 414.
- (15) Deen v. Davies, [1935] 2 K.B. 282; 104 L.J.K.B. 540; 153 L.T. 90; Digest Supp.
- (16) Mason v. Keeling (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 606; 12 Mod. 332; 2 Digest 243, 274.
- (17) Smith v. Cook, [1875] 1 Q.B.D. 79; 45 L.J.Q.B. 122; 33 L.T. 722; 40 J.P. 24; 2 Digest 253, 345.
- (18) Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington (1932), 146 L.T. 391; Digest Supp.

- (19) Mitchil v. Alestree (1676), 1 Vent. 295; sub nom. Michell (Michael) v. Allestry 3 Keb. 650; 2 Lev. 172.
 (20) Aldham v. United Dairies (London), Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 522; [1940] 1 K.B. 507; 109 L.J.K.B. 323; 162 L.T. 71; Digest Supp.
 (21) Bessant v. Great Western Railway Co. (1860), 8 C.B.N.S. 368; 38 Digest 286, 216.
 (22) Maitland v. Raisbeck & Hewit (R. T. & J.), Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 272; [1944] 1 K.B. 689; 113 L.J.K.B. 549; 171 L.T. 118; Digest Supp.

A APPEAL from a decision of the Court of Appeal affirming a decision of the county court judge at Atherstone County Court who gave judgment for the respondent, the owner of the horse, in an action against him by the appellant for personal injury received by him as the result of the respondent allowing the horse to stray on the highway. The facts appear in the opinions of VISCOUNT MAUGHAM, LORD PORTER and LORD DU PARCQ.

R. T. Paget and S. Silkin for the appellant.

B F. W. Beney, K.C., and A. J. Flint for the respondent.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 16. VISCOUNT MAUGHAM: My Lords, on Apr. 1, 1944, at 1.30 a.m. the appellant, a chageman packer earning £9 10s. a week, was riding a cycle down a lane known as "Boulter's Lane Hill," Baddesley, in the county of Warwick. There is no evidence as to the speed at which he was travelling or as to the width or nature of the lane, but the appellant himself said that the slope, as its name suggests, was steep. His front light was masked in accordance with the black-out regulations, and he also had a back light. He estimated the visibility at 100 yards. The hedge, he said, was thick at the side of the road running past the respondent's farm. He there met with a serious accident as to which we only know this from the county court judge's note—that he collided on the highway with a horse belonging to the respondent, and, being thrown to the ground, was badly injured. In examination in chief he said, according to the note, that he was "twisted over by horse. Saw horse standing on top. He came from [respondent's]." In cross-examination he said: "I first saw horse standing on top of me, I saw it dashing out from the side of me. No signs of vicious behaviour. Light chestnut. Saw colour by lamp. I recognised the horse straight away." He also said in cross-examination, which E he had not said in chief, that the fence was dilapidated and that there were gaps through which a horse could get. The respondent said there was no gap to his knowledge. The judge, in his judgment, according to the notes kept by the solicitor on one side and by counsel on the other, after stating that he did not believe the respondent, said concisely that the horse was on the road and that "the appellant collided with it and was thrown to the road." He found as a fact that it was the respondent's horse and added: "It got on to the road because the fence was defective." Your Lordships will, of course, accept these findings though the last finding was apparently a conjecture. The learned judge held, following the decided cases, and, in particular, Heath's Garage, Ltd. v. Hodges (1) and Hughes v. Williams (2), that there was no duty on the respondent to maintain his fences, and, consequently, that there was no negligence on his part, and he, accordingly, dismissed the action. He stated, however, that, in case his judgment was held to be wrong, he assessed the damages G at £200.

The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal, contending that the judge was wrong in law in holding that there was no duty on the part of the respondent so to fence his land as to prevent his horse from straying upon the highway. The appeal was dismissed after a hearing by MACKINNON, LAWRENCE and MORTON, L.JJ., but they thought fit to give leave to appeal to this House, apparently because of some expressions of opinion in Hughes v. Williams (2) to the effect that the state of the law laid down by the older authorities was not very satisfactory having regard to modern conditions. I must observe that, in giving leave to appeal in what is considered to be a test case, the position of the respondent as to costs, if the appeal should fail, ought to be born in mind. It is an unfortunate fact for the respondent in this case that the appellant presents his appeal as a poor person.

H My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my brethren LORD PORTER and LORD DU PARCQ in which the previous authorities are carefully examined and the facts of this case are fully dealt with, and to avoid repetition I propose to deal with each of the questions of law involved as if it were coming as res integra before your Lordships. As I apprehend the matter, there are two possible questions that arise. First, was the respondent, as the owner of a field or fields abutting on the highway, under a prima facie legal obligation to users of the highway so to keep and maintain his hedges and gates (if any) along the highway as to prevent his animals from straying on to it? Secondly, assuming there is no such general duty, was he under a duty as between himself and users of the highway to take reasonable care to prevent any of his animals (not known to be dangerous) from straying on to the highway? I should say here that I do not propose to deal with the question which would arise if the animal is wild by nature or is a domestic animal known to be dangerous, though I may observe that in such cases I can readily conceive that the possibility or probability of danger to passers-by might impose a duty of reasonable care.

My Lords, light will be thrown on both the two above questions by a consideration of the history of the growth of our highways to see whether there was at any time such a state of things that a legal obligation on the owner or occupier of roadside lands to repair and maintain the adjacent hedge may reasonably be inferred, or any such duty towards users of the roadway can be established as to render such owner or occupier liable in an action for negligence should a horse or other animal belonging to him stray on to the road and cause damage to a passer-by. I do not think that the history of English roads has ever been exhaustively written, but a great deal is known about them, and in comparatively recent times is to be found in a great number of private and public Acts of Parliament, particularly those in relation to enclosure. It was only by a very slow and gradual process extending over centuries that the forests and chases mainly belonging to the King which covered great tracts of land were disafforested, that the commons and wastes of different kinds were enclosed, and that the fens and marshes were drained. Even as late as the year 1700 about one-half of the arable land of England was cultivated on the traditional open field system where there were intermixed strip holdings with the benefit of common rights in pasture and waste: see HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF ENGLAND BEFORE 1800, edited by H. C. Darby, Cambridge, at p. 469.

While England was largely covered by royal forests (not by any means all woodland), heaths, downs, fens, marsh, and above all by commons, waste and common fields, there can have been few roads except tracks for the use of commoners and local inhabitants of the vills or townships. Until enclosure was effected roads or ways could not be made since either the landowner or the lord of the manor or persons with common rights would have objected. Before dealing with the vast enclosures which altered the face of England it is important to observe that such roads or tracks as there existed between market towns were almost completely unenclosed by hedges or fences. The fact is established by the interesting Act 13 Edw. I (A.D. 1285 Statute of Wynton) c. 5. It has come down to us in these terms:

Highways leading from one Market Town to another shall be enlarged so that there be neither Dyke, Tree, nor Bush Whereby a Man may lurk to do Hurt, within 200 feet of the one side and 200 feet of the other side of the Way.

This Act was not repealed till the Act 7 Geo. III, c. 42 (s. 57) came into force. The Act of Edward I probably became obsolescent as the countryside became less infested with rogues and vagabonds, who largely, if not mostly, consisted of men who were discharged soldiers and sailors without means of support. That change must have been after the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who would do nothing for such persons, but the Act remained on the Statute Book for over five centuries, which seems to show that there was no real demand for hedges along the roads: see also the General Highway Act (13 Geo. III, c. 78).

Coming now to enclosures, it will be remembered that the break-up of manors was a process which continued from roughly 1300 to 1485. The lords aimed at increasing their enclosures and they were empowered to do so by the Statute of Merton (20 Hen. II, c. 4), and the amending Statute of Westminster (13 Ed. I, c. 46), provided they left enough pasture for persons with grazing rights. They also enclosed the desmesne lands. Different forms of enclosure subsequently took place which resulted in the break-up of the old village and manorial systems of cultivation, but many open fields and commons continued to exist in and after 1793 when an Act was passed to deal with the matter. Enclosures were constantly sanctioned by private Acts and it is calculated that they numbered no less than four thousand in the 18th and 19th centuries : Williams on RIGHTS OF COMMON, 1880, at p. 249. A general Inclosure Act was passed in 1801 consolidating provisions usually inserted in private Acts of Inclosure. The total amount enclosed since enclosure began was very great. Forests were also inclosed to a great extent, particularly after the Act 16 Car. I, c. 16, relating to forests, came into force. When enclosure took place and the wastes and other lands were divided up between lords and commoners, it became very desirable and often essential to do a good deal of roadmaking and fencing, and the general Inclosure Acts of 1801 and the amending Act of 1845 contain provisions on the subject. Both the Acts gave power (to the commissioners by the first Act and the valuer by the second) to set out and make public roads and ways and to alter them, and after providing that carriage roads so set out should be well and sufficiently fenced on both sides by such of the persons interested as the commissioners or the valuer should direct, enacted that the roads were to be repaired by the inhabitants after certificate by two justices of the peace that the roads had been sufficiently formed and completed ; but there was no provision as to upkeep of the fences : see 41 Geo. III, c. 109, s. 9 ; 8 and 9 Vict., c. 118, ss. 65, 66 and 67. It is a fair conclusion that the absence of any provisions in a multitude of Acts for the repair and maintenance of hedges or fences beside the roads by the owners of the adjoining lands is ground for thinking that the legislature had no intention of imposing any such liability. I should add that the early Highway Act mentioned above and the Highway Act, 1835, made provision for the cleansing of the ditches beside the highways and for the cutting back of hedges extending over the roads, but made no mention of the upkeep or repair of the hedges. Railway companies, however, for obvious reasons were an exception : see Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68.

In 1663 the first turnpike trust was established (15 Car. II, c. 1). By 1760 turnpike roads covered the land. Between that year and 1800 well over a thousand Turnpike Acts were passed. In 1864 the power of refusing the renewal of Turnpike Acts was transferred to a Select Committee of the House of Commons and roads were then dis-turnpiked at the average of 1,500 miles a year. The whole burden of repair of the roads then fell on the locality. A liability was imposed on the owners of the hedges to prevent them from interfering with the roads, but there was no obligation to maintain them.

I have summarised these facts—to which many others could easily be added—to show that the great majority of our roads were necessarily laid out piecemeal during long periods on hitherto unenclosed lands. Even at the present time very long stretches of highway are alternately enclosed by fences or hedges on one side or both sides or are quite unenclosed. An interesting map showing the position not very long ago will be found in THE WOODLANDS AND MARSHLANDS OF ENGLAND, by H. A. Wilcox. The process depended on the circumstances to which I have already referred and their gradual effect. There was no duty imposed as to repair of hedges or fences. It is obvious that the roadside owner who puts up no fence would not be under any duty to passers-by on the roads as regards horses and cattle. That is admittedly the case at this day in relation to roads over unenclosed land. On what principle can such a duty be imposed on one who chooses to erect a fence with a view to keeping out trespassers, or in an endeavour to prevent his cattle and horses from straying ? It should be borne in mind that the roads of England until the days of Telford and Macadam were often in a shocking state. A vigorous account of them is given in the celebrated third chapter (State of England in 1685) of Lord Macaulay's HISTORY OF ENGLAND. In the seventeenth century, apart from a few main roads, they were often mere tracks used by pack animals. There are still plenty of green lanes and not a few bridle paths in the country which technically are highways. Would the suggested duty apply to the owners of lands on the sides of green lanes or bridle paths ? There are also roads in some places so precipitous and so badly made that a motorist uses them at his peril and cyclists are almost compelled to walk their cycles. Would the owner of adjacent lands be under any liability to adventurous drivers and riders of that kind ?

It must, of course, be remembered that a man has long been prima facie liable if his cattle or horses, by his negligence, stray on the land of another and there tread down his corn or damage his herbage: BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, Vol. III, p. 211. The law in a remote past gave the owner or occupier of the land on which the trespass took place a special remedy by what used to be called distress damage feasant, namely, a right to detain the animal in a place of detention called a pound to which the owner could have access in order to give the animal food and water. The practice of impounding such animals grew up, and public pounds existed in most villages; Viner's ABRIDGEMENT TIT. DISTRESS A, pp. 121 and 178; BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, vol. III, p. 211. As a public institution the pound was commonly referred to in our literature of a hundred years and more ago and added to our language. I hope that a good many people recollect that in, perhaps, the most celebrated of English novels Mr. Pickwick was removed by Captain Boldwig to the village pound under the imputation of being a drunken plebeian. The right of impounding was the subject of a series of Acts of Parliament, of which the Statute of Marlbridge (52 Hen. III, c. 4) was not the first, and was the cause of a number of decisions which will be found in Viner's ABRIDGEMENT under the title "Distress." The Highway Act, 1835, and the amending Act of 1864, dealt with the matter so far as it affected surveyors of highways. These various Acts, however, and the provisions in them obviously give no assistance to the appellant since he has no right founded on trespass, but has a mere right of passage over the road. The roads were laid out largely for the benefit of owners of adjacent land including farmers. No one supposes that cattle and horses can be driven to market except on a road. Road users are expected to exercise at least reasonable care in passing animals in such cases. Further, there are roadside strips beside enclosed roads in many parts of the country which form part of the highways, and horses may often be seen grazing on such strips by leave of the owners of the soil. They do not seem to interfere with any reasonable use of the roads. Obviously road users cannot expect to have roads kept clear of animals.

For these reasons I conclude that the first question I have formulated above must be answered in the negative, and I did not understand that counsel for the appellant in his careful argument contended to the contrary. In the absence of any general duty to repair hedges we now come to the second question which is based on the alleged negligence of the respondent. The established rule is that negligence must depend on failure to perform a duty of reasonable care to the class of persons of whom the plaintiff is one. In this case, the duty must be to exercise reasonable care to avoid an act or omission which would be likely, in the view of a reasonable and prudent man, to injure such a person as a cyclist or a motorist using the road beside the land of the respondent: Donoghue v. Stevenson (3), and cases there cited. The very curious nature of the facts in that decision must not make us forget that mere possibility of accident is not enough to establish liability. Otherwise the many decisions as to accidents to persons caused by domestic animals (in the absence of scienter) would have been differently decided.

My Lords, it is not irrelevant to observe that the suggested duty of the occupiers of enclosed land to the users of an adjoining highway ought to be capable of a definition intelligible to ordinary men. Is it to extend to hedges along roads such as green lanes, bridle paths, or other roads which have seldom or never been made up? Does it apply to roads which are rarely or never used by fast traffic? The height of the hedges ought to be mentioned, for it is obvious that young horses are often capable of jumping without difficulty over many of the existing hedge-rows as well as over the existing gates. The practice of hunting is sufficient evidence of that fact, if evidence were needed. Then the question arises as to what animals the owner is required as a matter of duty to fence in? It is admitted that dogs, cats, pigs and fowls cannot be prevented from straying by ordinary quickset hedges, yet accidents from their presence on roads must, I should suppose, be more frequent than those arising from straying horses or cattle. Then one must ask what standard of care is required from farmers and others? Gaps in hedges, of course, do constantly arise, but many of them are due to trespassers in attempting short cuts on a mere country ramble or in search of mushrooms or blackberries. Gates are constantly left open by horsemen or by persons legitimately visiting a house or farm. We see every day in the country the request, "please shut this gate," but we often see the gate in question left open. A good owner of land has been in the habit of attending yearly to the operation of hedging and ditching. In war-time it was often impossible to provide the necessary labour. Even in peace-time it would scarcely be reasonable to require a farmer to examine from day to day whether there was a gap or a thinning of a hedge through which a horse, a sow, or a bullock could force his way, and immediately to repair it. And it is plain that the liability for negligence of the owner of animals straying on a road must be subject to the condition that the road user himself must exercise reasonable care in driving or riding along the road.

There is, I believe, no record before recent times of any accident between a vehicle of any kind and an animal straying from an adjoining enclosed field on to a road. It is only since cycles and motor-cars began to move along our roads at speeds generally unthought of a hundred years ago that there has been any chance of such collisions. That they have been more common of late on unenclosed roads over open heaths and the like is demonstrated by the notices we often see in such places warning the motorist to "beware of cattle." The absence of accidents between vehicles and stray animals was certainly not due to the absence of the latter. The fact is, as the desuetude of the village pound shows, that "estrays" or "strays" were far commoner a hundred years ago.

The above considerations seem to me to be conclusive to show that no such duty to road users as the appellant relies on could possibly have existed before the advent of fast traffic on made-up roads. Hedges and fences were generally constructed and maintained in the interests of the owners of adjacent lands, and accidents to road users arising from the animals straying on the roads were so far as one can judge practically non-existent. Since fast traffic on such roads became usual, accidents due to straying animals, no doubt, sometimes occur, but so far as we know they are exceedingly rare. Moreover, they also arise when animals are being led or driven along highways in the usual course of husbandry, and no one suggests that motorists and cyclists have a prima facie right of action against the person in charge of them. More frequently such accidents are caused by dogs or fowls which can get through or over any ordinary hedge, and counsel for the appellant admitted, and I think rightly, that no action would lie in such cases against the owners. No facts, in my opinion, have been established which would tend to show that farmers and others at some uncertain date in our lifetime became subject for the first time to an onerous and undefined duty to cyclists and motorists and others which never previously existed. The fact that the duty does not exist if the road is unenclosed by fences and yet that accidents are rare is, I think, strong to show that the respondent was not bound as a reasonable man to think that his failure to fill up a gap in his fence was likely to cause such an accident as the one which took place.

My Lords, I have dealt with the matter at some length owing to my respect for the doubts expressed by some eminent judges which seemed to call for an elaborate consideration. The arguments before your Lordships based on alleged negligence by the respondent might have been more shortly dealt with on the ground that the case as presented in the county court was not really founded and fought on that ground, and counsel for the appellant, therefore, thought it best to express my opinion without regard to a point which savours of technicality. In the result, I am of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed, and I move your Lordships accordingly.

LORD THANKERTON: My Lords, I concur in the opinion which has just been delivered by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack, I also concur in the opinions about to be delivered by my noble and learned friends Lord Porter and Lord du Parc which I have had an opportunity of considering in print.

LORD PORTER (read by LORD THANKERTON): My Lords, the relevant facts in this case can be very shortly stated. The appellant, who was plaintiff in the action, was riding his bicycle at night on a public highway bounded on each side by fences. It was dark and, being in time of war, black-out regulations were in force. In these conditions he came into collision with a horse belonging to the respondent, which had escaped from a field in which the respondent had placed it. It is not clear from the evidence whether the horse dashed across the road and collided with the appellant or whether, because of the dimness of his lights, he failed to see it and ran into it. I do not think it material to determine which version is the true one, but, if it had to be decided, the former version appears the more likely. There was evidence that the fence between the field in which the horse was placed and the road had gaps in it—at any rate, there was a gap between the gate stump and the hedge, and the county court judge who tried the case found that the fence was defective and that this was the means by which the horse got on to the road. He also said that he did not believe the respondent, but one of the matters in dispute was whether the animal was the respondent's horse and this finding appears to deal with the respondent's allegation that it was not his. In these circumstances the appellant sued the respondent, alleging him to be liable because as a reasonable man he ought to have realised that to put a horse into a field adjoining the highway with gaps, or, at any rate, a gap, in the hedge would enable it to escape and so might endanger those using the highway, and, in particular, ought to have foreseen the possibility of danger on a dark night with black-out regulations in force.

My Lords, on this evidence, even if one is to assume that the respondent was under a duty to fence his land, I should not be prepared to hold that negligence was established. The respondent stated in the witness box that he was not aware of any gaps, and there is not in fact any evidence that a gap or gaps existed before the horse escaped. There were seventeen beasts and two or three horses in the field on the night in question. The horses were kept there every night and according to the respondent's evidence neither they nor the cattle had been known to escape. I doubt whether it would be expected that they would do so at night even if there were gaps in the hedge, and still more do I doubt whether it should have been foreseen that a horse's mere presence on the highway would lead to an accident. If, as may be the case, the horse came down from the bank on top of the cyclist the accident was an unusual one. If, on the other hand, the cyclist ran into the horse, I think that the accident would be equally unexpected. It would be supposed that those passing along the highway would be able to see the horse, even in black-out conditions, in time to avoid a collision.

In Higgins v. Searle (4), BUCKLEY, L.J. said (100 L.T. 280, at p. 281) :

A person on the highway is exposed to the ordinary risks taken by those using the highway and, if an accident happens owing to those risks, to my mind no legal consequence follows.

Similar observations had already been made by BLACKBURN, J. in Fletcher v. Rylands (5) (L.R. 1 Ex. 265, at p. 286) approved in Rylands v. Fletcher (6), and by COZENS-HARDY, M.R. in Higgins v. Searle (4).

For these reasons I should think the appellant disentitled to recover, but the case was brought to your Lordships' House presumably to test the obligation of a landowner or tenant occupying land abutting on the highway to keep his beasts off the highway, or, at any rate, to exercise reasonable care to do so, and it is, perhaps, desirable to express some view on this wider question. In Brackenborough v. Spalding U.D.C. (7) LORD WRIGHT suggests that the rule that the owner or occupier of land adjoining the highway is under no duty to prevent animals escaping on to the highway is a modern one and that its limits are still uncertain, and he points out that it was not relied upon by the judges forming the court which decided Cox v. Burbridge (8). The appellant relied on this statement and the argument, as I understand it, was that, if this rule had been recognised when that case was decided, the basis for discussion in that case would never have existed inasmuch as if there was no duty to fence, then, whatever the horse might do, its owner could not be liable unless it was known to be vicious. It is, indeed, true that no mention of the doctrine is made in that case, but I myself should read the judgments of WILLIAMS and WILLES, JJ. as confining the duty of owners of horses and cattle to keeping them from trespassing on the land of others to its hurt and as giving no ground for action against the owners of beasts which do injury to persons on the high road unless they are known to be vicious. ERLE, C.J. and KEATING, J. decide merely that in order to establish liability on the part of the owner of an animal of a tame species it is necessary to show knowledge of its vicious propensities. I shall not regard them as tending to show either that there is or is not a general duty to fence.

A If one comes to the later cases the whole tendency of the decisions is against imposing any liability to fence in ordinary circumstances. Hadwell v. Righton (9), Higgins v. Searle (4), Ellis v. Banyard (10) and Jones v. Lee (11) all show this tendency, though in none of them was the exact point decided as negligence was negatived, and in the last-named case VAUGHAN-WILLIAMS and KENNEDY, L.JJ. were careful to guard themselves against deciding that cattle, if allowed to escape in large numbers and obstruct the highway, could not constitute a public nuisance. BANKES, L.J., however, in Jones v. Lee (11) and BUCKLEY, L.J. in Ellis v. Banyard (10) state in terms that there is no liability to fence. The decision in Higgins v. Searle (4) seems to me to be to the like effect and the same opinion is expressed in the Scottish case of Fraser v. Pate (12), though B LORD ANDERSON leaves for future discussion the case of animals straying on the highway at night.

The point, however, was directly decided in Heath's Garage v. Hodges (1) and again in Hughes v. Williams (2), and the appellant cannot succeed if those cases stand. A different view has, it is true, been held where animals have been brought on to the road and have not been kept under such reasonable control as is possible while they are there. The recent cases of Turner v. Coates (13), Gaylor v. Davies (14) and Deen v. Davies (15) are, I think, to be C included under this principle. As ROMER, L.J. pointed out in the last-mentioned case, there is no duty to prevent animals straying on the highway, but, if they are brought on the highway, reasonable care must be exercised to control them.

D Proof of negligence, however, is not always necessary to establish liability for damage caused by straying animals. The law seems to have developed on two separate lines. Trespass on the land of another was always actionable at the suit of that other if damage was done to his land, and that whether there was negligence or not. Unless he was under a duty to fence a plaintiff could, therefore, sue. On the other hand, there was no duty to prevent beasts mansuetæ naturæ from straying on to the highway unless they were known to be vicious. The distinction is natural enough—the landowner's or occupier's E property was, it was thought, entitled to be free of invasion, the wrong was the mere entering on his land and causing damage. On the other hand, much, if not most, of the country was unfenced, as, indeed, a not unsubstantial portion still is, and passers along the highway had to take it as they found it and run such risks of traffic as are inevitably imposed on those who use it. They too, must take reasonable care to avoid what they find on the road, and the obligation of the owners of beasts or of users of the highway are not, in my view, altered by an increase in the fencing of the country or by the increase F in the speed of traffic or the imposition of precautions necessary in war-time. The incidence of these changes does not, in my opinion, increase the duties of farmers or the burden on agriculture by increasing the duty to fence.

I would dismiss this appeal primarily because no negligence on the part of the respondent has been proved, but also, on the ground that on the facts established, it has not been shown that he was in breach of any duty which G he owed to the appellant.

LORD DU PARCQ: My Lords, the appellant, while riding a bicycle down a hill on a country road at about 1.30 in the morning of Apr. 1, 1944, came into collision with a horse which was straying unattended on the highway. He was injured, and sued the respondent in the county court to recover damages "for negligence and/or nuisance and/or breach of statutory duty." The action H failed, but the learned judge, having regard to the possibility that he might be held to have erred in law, stated his findings of fact and assessed damages. The case went to the Court of Appeal, where the appellant's counsel confessed that the appeal was "a forlorn hope" in view of the authorities binding on that court. It was dismissed, but leave was given to appeal to this House in order that those authorities, which had been criticised with some severity by the Master of the Rolls and two Lords Justices in Hughes v. Williams (2), might be considered further by your Lordships.

The county court judge found that the horse which caused the appellant's injuries was owned by the respondent, and this finding, read together with the evidence, makes it clear that it was one of two horses which were kept, with some cows or other cattle, in a field adjoining the highway. The judge further found that the horse "got on the road because the fence was defective." These were his only findings. The evidence would not, I think, have supported any further findings in the appellant's favour. There was no evidence that the peccant horse, which seems to have been at least 30 years old, and to have been accustomed to spend its days drawing a milk-cart, had ever before shown a disposition to wander or any vicious or mischievous propensity. There was no evidence that the defects in the fence were of long standing, or that the respondent either knew of them or might with reasonable care have discovered them.

My Lords, it is a commonplace of our law that there is a striking contrast between the liability of the owner of cattle for their trespass on another's land and his liability for any injuries which they may cause to the person of another. The man whose cattle stray into his neighbour's field, and consume or damage what belongs to that neighbour, is liable to make good the loss although no negligence be proved against him. He is under no such liability for a trespass to the person by an animal which does not belong to an untamed and dangerous species unless it has, to his knowledge, some vicious or mischievous propensity. We are here dealing with ancient doctrines of the common law. At the very beginning of the 18th century, in Mason v. Keeling (16) (as reported in 12 Mod. 332) the complaint which has been echoed in our own days is to be found in the argument of counsel for the plaintiff (at p. 333):

It is hard that one should have a remedy for the least trespass done in his land, and none for a trespass done thus to the person by wounding or maiming.

It is doubtful from a comparison of the two available reports of the case whether it resulted in judgment for the defendant or a settlement. However that may be, the forensic protest of the plaintiff's counsel did not deflect the current of authority. The report of Mason v. Keeling (16) in Ld. Raym. 606 (at p. 608) attributes to HOLT, C.J. and TURTON, J. a dictum which I believe to have been then, and to have remained ever since, a correct statement of the law:

If the owner puts a horse or an ox to graze in his field, which is adjoining to the highway, and the horse or the ox breaks the hedge, and runs into the highway, and kicks or gores some passenger, an action will not lie against the owner; otherwise if he had notice that they had done such a thing before.

The present case is only distinguishable from that supposed by HOLT, C.J. in that the horse in the illustration did a vicious act, whereas the horse with which we are concerned may have been only heedless or clumsy, but I take this to be an immaterial distinction. As was said by ROMER, L.J. (as he then was) in Deen v. Davis (15) ([1935] 2 K.B. 282, at p. 293) it would be strange if the owner of a horse which strays on the highway were to be free of liability if his horse kicked a passenger, but liable if the passenger were injured "merely by the horse trotting along the highway in the natural manner." My Lords, no such paradoxical conclusion is to be drawn from the authorities. The law was accurately stated by BLACKBURN, J. in Smith v. Cook (17) (1 Q.B.D. 79, at p. 82) when he said that the owner of animals:

... not of mischievous nature ... is entitled to suppose that they will not injure anyone until he has had actual knowledge to bring him to a contrary opinion.

I would add that, if an animal's owner knows that it has shown a tendency to run into cyclists or other passengers on the highway, it cannot avail him to say that it was not vice, but a frolicsome disposition, or, perhaps, mere blundering which caused the harm.

Counsel for the appellant submitted that, apart from any question of liability for injury caused by an animal known to its owner to be dangerous, an owner might be liable on the ground of negligence if he could be shown to have failed in his duty to take reasonable care. I agree that, subject to certain reservations, this proposition may be accepted. In Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington (18) in this House, LORD ATKIN used words which I would respectfully adopt:

... Quite apart from the liability imposed upon the owner of animals or the person having control of them by reason of knowledge of their propensities, there is the ordinary duty of a person to take care either that his animals or his chattel is not put to such a use as is likely to injure his neighbour—the ordinary duty to take care in the cases put upon negligence.

This is not a novel principle. As early as 1676 an action on the case was brought successfully against a defendant who had set about breaking in a horse in Lincoln's Inn Fields, "a place" (as the pleader said) "much frequented by the King's subjects and unapt for such purpose": Mitchil v. Alestree (19). When, in Cox v. Burbidge (8) (13 C.B.N.S. 430, at p. 437), ERLE, C.J. stated the question before the court to be "whether the owner of a horse is liable for a sudden act of a furious and violent nature which is altogether contrary to the usual habits of a horse, without more," the last two words of the sentence were not superfluous. They allow for the possibility that there may be circumstances to account for an animal's unusual misbehaviour of which the defendant knew and against which it was his duty to guard. Such circumstances were held to exist (to name only two instances) in the recent cases of Deen v. Davies (15) and Aldham v. United Dairies (London) Ltd (20). Nevertheless, LORD ATKIN's proposition will be misunderstood if it is not read as subject to two necessary qualifications: first, that where no such special circumstances exist negligence cannot be established merely by proof that a defendant has failed to provide against the possibility that a tame animal of mild disposition will do some dangerous act contrary to its ordinary nature, and, secondly, that, even if a defendant's omission to control or secure an animal is negligent, nothing done by the animal which is contrary to its ordinary nature can be regarded, in the absence of special circumstances, as being directly caused by such negligence.

My Lords, it is manifest that on the judge's findings of fact negligence cannot be imputed to the respondent, and, indeed, there was, in my opinion, no evidence before the court on which a finding of negligence could have been supported. This being so, it is, I think, regrettable that the Court of Appeal was induced to give leave to appeal to your Lordships' House notwithstanding the objection of the respondent's counsel that no question of principle could arise on the particular facts of the case. At your Lordships' Bar the learned counsel for the appellant frankly conceded that he could not ask for judgment, but submitted that the case should go back to the county court to be investigated anew on the issue of negligence. Even if your Lordships were of opinion that the appellant had some hope of success in a new trial, it would, I think, be a great injustice to the respondent to order one. The appellant has had his opportunity of putting any available evidence before the court, and cannot ask for a second chance. I would add, however, that there is no reason to suppose that he could do better on another occasion. The only special circumstance to which his counsel could point was that, at the time of the accident, lighting restrictions were in force. But the road was a country road, not normally lighted. It is true that the cyclist's light was masked or dimmed, but this fact, which was certainly a reason for great care on the part of a cyclist, is not shown to have contributed to cause the accident. The complaint was, not that the appellant could not see the horse, but that he saw it "dashing out from the side" of him.

One other argument should, perhaps, be noticed. Counsel disclaimed any suggestion that the respondent was bound to maintain a fence, and he recognised that for centuries both the law and the general sense of the community have sanctioned the depasturing of cattle on unfenced land. He contended, however, that one who keeps his cattle on land adjoining the highway behind an apparently secure fence must see to it that it is, in fact, secure, for otherwise (he said) a deceptive feeling of safety will be induced in the passing cyclist or motorist. My Lords, I should have thought that, on principle, where there is no duty to maintain a fence at all, it cannot be a breach of duty to maintain one which is imperfect, but, however that may be, the argument takes little account of rural conditions. A stray horse, even if it has come from the nearest field and not from one a mile or more away, may have escaped, not through a gap in the fence, but through a gate left open by a trespasser. Moreover, the suggested duty could only be to take reasonable care to maintain a reasonably secure fence, and it must be a very high fence which a horse cannot jump. Indeed, we have it on the authority of BYLES, J. that, in or about the year 1858, it was proved that a bull had leaped over an iron fence six feet high. Bessant v. Great Western Railway Company (21).

The truth is that, at least on country roads and in market towns, users of the highway, including cyclists and motorists, must be prepared to meet from time to time a stray horse or cow, just as they must expect to encounter a herd of cattle in the care of a drover. An underlying principle of the law of the highway is that all those lawfully using the highway, or land adjacent to it, must show mutual respect and forbearance. The motorist must put up with the farmer's cattle: the farmer must endure the motorist. It is commonly part of a man's legal duty to his neighbour to tolerate the untoward results of his neighbour's lawful acts. These observations are, I think, relevant not only to the issue of negligence, but also to the allegation of nuisance. The stray horse on the road does not seriously interfere with the exercise of a common right, and is no more a nuisance in law, merely by reason of its presence there, than the fallen cart-horse or its modern analogue, the lorry which has temporarily broken down. The same considerations which guided the Court of Appeal in Maitland v. Raisbeck (22) are, I think, applicable here.

Counsel refrained from contending before your Lordships that the provisions of the Highway Acts could affect the rights of the parties between themselves. Rightly, I think, he accepted as correct the observations of ERLE, C.J. in Cox v. Burbidge (8) (at p. 435): "As between the owner of the horse and the owner of the soil of the highway . . . we may assume that the horse was trespassing . . . So it may be assumed that, if the place in question were a public highway, the owner of the horse might have been liable to be proceeded against under the Highway Acts. But, in considering the claim of the plaintiff against the defendant for the injury sustained from the kick, the question whether the horse was a trespasser as against the owner of the soil, or whether his owner was amenable under the Highway Act, has nothing to do with the case of the plaintiff."

The appellant has suffered what may well have been undeserved misfortune, but I am satisfied that no blame for it can in law be attributed to the respondent, and I would dismiss the appeal.

VISCOUNT MAUGHAM: My Lords, I have been requested by my noble and learned friend LORD UTHWATT to say that he concurs in the judgment which has been proposed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for C. L. Hale, Nuneaton (for the appellant); Nash, Field & Co., agents for Blewitt & Co., Birmingham (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SHORT AND ANOTHER v. THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF H.M. TREASURY

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), December 16, 1946.]

Emergency Legislation—Control of undertaking—Compulsory acquisition of company—Transfer of shares to government nominee—Price to be paid for shares—Price on Stock Exchange at date of transfer—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 78 (5).

By orders made under regs. 55 and 78 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, the Minister of Aircraft Production took control of the undertaking of a company and directed that the shares thereof should be transferred to his nominee to hold on his behalf. By a further order made by the Treasury under reg. 78 (5) of the Defence Regulations the price of the shares so transferred was fixed at 29s. 3d. per share, a figure which was arrived at simply by reference to the prices of the shares ruling on the Stock Exchange on the date of the transfer of the shares. The shareholders contended that, as the transfer was of all the shares in the company, the appropriate mode of fixing the price of the shares was to ascertain the value of the whole undertaking and then to determine the proportionate value of the separate classes of shares and of individual shares within each class.

Held: when the order was made transferring the shares each shareholder was divested of the value of the shares which he held and the rights to which the shares entitled him and not of some aliquot part of the property of the company, and, therefore, the basis of valuation adopted for which the Treasury contended was correct.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, regs. 55 and 78, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, pp. 636 and 703 respectively.]

Cases referred to :

- A (1) John Fowler & Co. (Leeds), Ltd. v. Duncan & Crabtree, [1941] 2 All E.R. 577; [1941] Ch. 450; 110 L.J.Ch. 161; 165 L.T. 128; Digest Supp.
(2) Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) v. Cannon Brewery Co., Ltd., [1919] A.C. 744; 88 L.J.Ch. 464; 121 L.T. 361; 83 J.P. 261; 11 Digest 548, 512.
(3) Craddock v. Zevo Finance Co., Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 566; Digest Supp.

SPECIAL CASE stated by arbitrator.

B The claimant, Francisco Samuel Short, was at all material times before March 23, 1943, the holder of 22,958 "A" ordinary shares in Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford) Ltd., and the claimants, Lonsdale Investment Trust Ltd., were at all material times before the said date holders of 3,000 ordinary shares in the company. On March 17, 1943, the Minister of Aircraft Production, acting in pursuance of powers conferred on him by reg. 55 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, made an order, intitled the Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford), C Ltd. Control Order, which recited that it appeared to the Minister to be necessary to take control on behalf of His Majesty of the whole of the existing undertaking of the company and that the undertaking should be carried on in pursuance of the said order, and authorised and directed that one K. A. Layton-Bennett should exercise on behalf of His Majesty the functions of control specified in the order.

D By an order dated March 22, 1943, and intitled the Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford) Ltd. (Transfer of Shares) Order 1943, the Minister of Aircraft Production (with the consent of the Treasury) in the exercise of powers conferred on him by reg. 78 of the Defence Regulations, 1939, and being satisfied that it was necessary for the purpose of securing effective control of the undertaking and expedient that all the shares of the company should be held on behalf of the Minister, ordered (inter alia) that all the ordinary shares and all the "A" E ordinary shares in the company should be transferred, and the same were, accordingly, transferred, to a nominee of the Minister as specified in the order, with effect from March 23, 1943. Of the authorised capital of the company (in addition to 230,475 redeemable cumulative preference shares of £1 each) 250,000 "A" ordinary shares of 5s. each had been issued as fully paid or were outstanding in March-August, 1943.

F By an order made on May 31, 1943, and intitled the Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford) Ltd. (Price of Shares) Order 1943, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, in the exercise or pretended exercise of powers arising under reg. 78 (5) of the Defence Regulations, 1939, ordered that the price to be paid by the Minister in respect both of the "A" ordinary shares and the ordinary shares so transferred should be 29s. 3d. per share.

G The claimants were dissatisfied with that valuation and they claimed under reg. 78 (7) of the Defence Regulations, 1939, that the value of the shares should be determined by arbitration. The dispute was, accordingly, referred to arbitration, and the hearing took place on October 15, 16, 17 and 18, 1946. In the course of the evidence it appeared that the figure of 29s. 3d. per share was fixed simply by reference to the prices of the shares ruling on the Stock Exchange on the date of transfer of the shares, namely, March 23, 1943. On behalf of the Treasury it was contended that the proper basis of valuation under reg. 78 (5) of the Defence Regulations was to assume that the Minister had acquired all the shares in H individual blocks from individual shareholders on the date of transfer, and on this assumption to fix the value of all the shares on the basis of the prices ruling on the Stock Exchange on that date. On behalf of the claimants it was contended that, the transfer effected by the order of March 22, 1943, being a transfer of all the shares in Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford) Ltd., it was improper to fix the value on the hypothesis of the purchase of individual blocks of shares from individual shareholders, and that the appropriate mode of fixing the price of the shares was to ascertain the value of the whole undertaking and then to determine the proportionate value of the separate classes of shares and of individual shares within each class. Following this mode of valuation, the arbitrator came to the conclusion that a fair price for both classes of shares would be 41s. 9d. per share.

The question for the opinion of the court concerned which mode of valuation was proper to be followed in fixing the price of the shares.

The Rt. Hon. Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, K.C., and Cecil W. Turner for the claimants.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., and H. L. Parker for the Treasury.

Cur. adv. vult.

December 19. MORRIS, J. read the following judgment. This Special Case which is stated by an arbitrator nominated in pursuance of powers given by the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, raises questions of construction in connection with reg. 78 of those regulations.

The competent authority being satisfied that the necessities prescribed by reg. 55 made it expedient for him to exercise control over the undertaking of Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford), Ltd., made an order to that effect on March 17, 1943. The competent authority further became satisfied that for the purpose of securing effective control of the undertaking it was necessary and expedient that all the shares in the company carrying on the undertaking should be held on behalf of the competent authority. On March 22, 1943, the Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford), Ltd., (Transfer of Shares) Order, 1943, was made. It was made pursuant to reg. 78 of the Defence Regulations as then in force. By the operation of that order the shares of the claimants were expropriated. The shares previously held by the claimant, Francisco Samuel Short, being 22,958 "A" ordinary shares, and those previously held by the claimants, Lonsdale Investment Trust, Ltd., being 3,000 ordinary shares, together with the shares of all other holders, became transferred to a nominee of the competent authority. In exercise of the powers conferred on them by the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 78 (5), the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury made, on March 31, 1943, the Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford), Ltd. (Price of Shares) Order, 1943, by which prices were specified of the shares transferred. The claimants exercised their rights under reg. 78 (7), which reads as follows :

Without prejudice to the provisions of s. 3 of the Rules Publication Act, 1893, any order made by the Treasury under para. (5) of this regulation shall as soon as may be after the making thereof be published in such manner as appears to the Treasury to be most suitable for bringing the order to the notice of persons affected thereby; and if within three months after the date on which any such order is made, or within such further time as the Treasury may in special circumstances allow, any person who immediately before the date of transfer had an interest in any of the shares to which the order relates gives notice in writing to the Treasury claiming that the price specified in the order is less than the value aforesaid, the value of the shares in which that person had an interest shall be determined by the arbitration of a qualified accountant nominated by the Lord Chief Justice of England, and if the value so determined exceeds the price specified in the order, the price to be paid in respect of those shares shall be increased accordingly.

The claimants claim that the price specified in the Price of Shares Order was less than the value of the shares directed and prescribed by reg. 78 (5). It fell, therefore, for the arbitrator to determine the value of the shares in which the claimants had an interest. The claimants had blocks of shares to the number which I have mentioned. The 22,958 "A" ordinary shares held by Francisco Samuel Short formed part of a total of 250,000 issued "A" ordinary shares. Mr. Short's shares having been compulsorily acquired, he was entitled to be paid the price specified for them. The price which has to be specified was as laid down in reg. 78 (5), which is in these terms :

The price to be paid by a competent authority in respect of any shares transferred by virtue of such an order as aforesaid shall be such price as may be specified in an order made by the Treasury, being a price which, in the opinion of the Treasury, is not less than the value of those shares as between a willing buyer and a willing seller on the date of the order made by that authority under para. (4) of the said reg. 55; and the price so payable shall carry interest from the date of transfer until payment at the rate for the time being prescribed under and for the purposes of s. 10 of the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939...

If the wording of that paragraph and the wording of para. (7) is related to the arbitration in respect of the ordinary shares formerly held by Mr. Short, then, in my view, the resultant applicable wording is as follows :

The price to be paid by the competent authority in respect of Mr. Short's shares shall be such price as is determined by the arbitrator to be not less than the value of Mr. Short's shares as between a willing buyer and a willing seller on March 17, 1943.

The same applies mutatis mutandis to the 3,000 5s. ordinary shares held by the other claimants, the Lonsdale Investment Trust, Ltd., being a block of the 581,302 ordinary shares which had been issued.

A In my view, the ordinary and reasonable construction of the regulation leads to the conclusion which I have indicated. The compensation or the price to be paid to each holder is to be not less than the value of his shares, assuming that at the specified date he, as a willing seller, was selling his shares to a willing buyer. This is the view which was put forward before me on behalf of the Treasury and which was put forward at the arbitration. It is expressed in para. 11 of the Special Case as follows :

B On behalf of the Treasury it was contended that the proper basis of valuation under reg. 78 (5) of the Defence Regulations was to assume that the Minister had acquired all the shares in individual blocks from individual shareholders on the date of transfer, and on this assumption to fix the value of all the shares on the basis of the prices ruling on the Stock Exchange on that date.

C The alternative view which was put forward on behalf of the claimants, both before me and at the arbitration, is expressed in para. 12 of the Special Case as follows :

D On behalf of the claimants it was contended that, the transfer effected by the above-mentioned order of March 22, 1943, being a transfer of all the shares in Short Brothers (Rochester & Bedford) Ltd., it was improper to fix the value on the hypothesis of the purchase of individual blocks of shares from individual shareholders, and that the appropriate mode of fixing the price of the shares would be, first, to ascertain the value of the whole undertaking and then to determine the proportionate value of the separate classes of shares, and of individual shares within each class. Following this mode of valuation, I [the arbitrator] came to the conclusion, after considering the evidence, that a fair price for the "A" ordinary shares and for the ordinary shares in Short Brothers (Rochester & Bedford) Ltd. at the date of transfer would be 41s. 9d. per share.

E The question raised by the Special Case is whether the contention of the claimants or that of the Treasury should prevail. On behalf of the claimants it was emphasised that the competent authority must first be satisfied that it is necessary for him to exercise control, and that, in addition, before acquiring the shares of an undertaking, he must be satisfied that this further step is necessary to secure effective control and that it is expedient that all the shares shall be held on his behalf. If fully so satisfied, the competent authority may require all the shares to be held on his behalf. No power is given to acquire some only of the shares. Control can only be secured by ordering transfer of all the shares. It was submitted on behalf of the claimants that, if the stage is reached when all the shares are to be transferred, then, as the competent authority is buying a totality, so he ought to pay for a totality, and that strong and clear language must be found before total payments of less than the total value of the undertaking could be justified. The competent authority, it was said, is in effect buying the whole undertaking, and that in the matter of payment the Treasury cannot retire from its position and specify a price or prices resulting in less than the value of the undertaking, and that no words so authorise them. As an additional and separate contention, it was urged that the regulation, which it was said is of a nature demanding and compelling strict construction, admittedly requires a valuation of the shares to be made, and that a true and fair valuation could only be achieved by ascertaining the value of the undertaking and then relating that ascertained value distributably to the shares held in the company. It was also submitted that the opening words of reg. 78 (5) which are as follows :

The price to be paid by a competent authority in respect of any shares transferred by virtue of such an order...

must have the meaning, since all the shares are transferred, that the price to be paid is the price of all the shares valued as a whole, which must in turn mean the value of the undertaking.

In considering these submissions I am in no way concerned with what might have been done, but solely with what has been laid down by the words of the regulation. The arguments of the claimants, to which I have referred, do not seem to me to pay heed to the realities of the factual situation or to be in tune with the provisions of the regulation. When the order was made expropriating the shares, the result, both intended and achieved, was that each holder of shares was compulsorily divested of those shares which he held. The competent authority compulsorily acquired a number of individual blocks of shares. Each holder or owner lost, therefore, those rights to which his shares entitled him. What each owner lost was the value, not of some aliquot part of the property of the company, but the value of the particular holding of shares which he held. A

If it had been intended that a price or value should be arrived at for the whole of an undertaking, and that that price or value should then in some manner be apportioned between the shareholders, the regulation would, in my view, have been differently expressed. The words "any shares transferred by virtue of such an order as aforesaid" appear both in para. (5) and in para. (6) of reg. 78. I think that it is clear that in para. (6) the words are denoting, not the totality of the shares, but individual holdings, and this tends to indicate that para. (5) should be similarly construed. In para. (7) there is the different phrase, "any of the shares," and that paragraph also, in my view, has reference to individual holdings, but, whatever an owner has lost, the price which he is to receive is that which is laid down, and, in my view, reg. 78 (5) means that each holder is to be paid for his shares a price which represents their value to him, assuming that on the specified date he were willingly selling those shares to someone who was willingly buying them. On such an assumption, the motive or purpose of the purchaser in buying is, in my view, irrelevant, as is also the circumstance that one who buys several individual holdings and thereby acquires all the holdings, may thereafter possess total holdings which, when all concentrated in one ownership, possess a value greater than the aggregate of the values or prices which he has paid. B C D

In the course of the very careful and helpful arguments which were addressed to me I was usefully referred, largely for purposes of illustrative comparison, to other statutory provisions, as well as to certain authorities and statements of principle. Desirable as, indeed, it is to pay heed to all these references, in my view, the task now before me is one of construing reg. 78. I, therefore, do not find it necessary to say more than that I was referred to the Finance Act, 1894, s. 7 (5); the Finance Act, 1930, s. 37 (1); the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, s. 2; the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 6; the Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939, reg. 1; Cripps on Compensation, 8th ed., p. 182; John Fowler & Co. (Leeds), Ltd. v. Duncan and Crabtree (1); Central Control Board v. Cannon Brewery Co., Ltd. (2); and Craddock v. Zevo Finance Co., Ltd. (3). E F

For the reasons which I have indicated, I am of the opinion that the contentions of the Treasury are correct.

Order accordingly, with costs.

Solicitors: William Charles Crocker (for the claimants); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondents).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] G

Re BOTIBOL (deceased) BOTIBOL v. BOTIBOL.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Evershed, J.), December 3, 1946.]

Receiver—Action against—Breach of contract—Necessity for leave of court. H

So long as a receiver in an action is acting as such, a person who desires to bring proceedings against him in respect of something he has done as such may reasonably say that he requires the authority of the court. Certainly so in a case where the receiver has no constituent behind him, as, e.g., in the case of a receiver appointed to manage the affairs of a deceased person pending the appointment of a personal representative.

It may be difficult to say that a receiver acting strictly as such can ever be sued in contract, but he may adopt as his own a contract and render himself liable as on a novation of it. If he can assert a right, certainly where there is no constituent behind him, to accept a repudiation so as to terminate the contract, he must have put himself in the position by adoption of being a party to the contract or representing a party. Even if a receiver could not be sued ex contractu, it would not follow that he could not be sued in tort if he had taken steps which effectively prohibited the completion of the contract.

A [AS TO LEAVE OF COURT TO THIRD PARTY TO EXERCISE RIGHTS WHEN RECEIVED IN POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 28, p. 56, para. 99; and for CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 51, 52, Nos. 619—634.]

B PROCEDURE SUMMONS issued in an action that a stranger to the action should be at liberty to institute proceedings for breach of contract against the receiver appointed in the action to look after and manage the affairs of a deceased person pending the appointment of an administrator, the contract having been entered into by the stranger and the deceased.

V. M. Pennington for the applicant.

F. Bower Alcock for the receiver.

C EVERSHED, J.: This is a summons dated Aug. 14, 1946, issued by Henry Lynn & Co., Ltd. (hereinafter called "the company"), in an action of Botibol v. Botibol that they, Henry Lynn & Co., should be at liberty to institute proceedings against Mr. C. H. Barclay, the receiver appointed in the action, for breach of a contract, dated Mar. 4, 1941, and entered into by them, Henry Lynn & Co., with a man who was deceased at all the material dates.

D The contract was a contract under which the deceased was under an obligation to deliver quantities of rubber to the company who had to pay a certain price therefor. It is conceded that, in June, 1946, when the deceased died, that contract was partially completed. It also appears that the company claimed that they had a right to damages for breach of contract in respect of certain deliveries which had been made. No personal representative appeared on the death of the deceased. Accordingly, on July 1, 1946, the present writ was issued and the court was moved for the appointment of Mr. Barclay as receiver to manage the affairs of the deceased pending the appointment of a personal representative. On July 2, 1946, an order was made by which Mr. Barclay was appointed receiver and manager, the appointment being expressed to be "until 14 days or the second motion day after a personal representative of the deceased has been appointed." On Sept. 12, 1946, the plaintiff in the action was appointed personal representative. Therefore, according to the terms of the original order, the appointment of Mr. Barclay would cease either 14 days or on the second motion day after that date, which was in the Long Vacation. On Oct. 18 a further order in the action was made reciting the original order, and ordering that Mr. Barclay, the receiver, should lodge his final account and pay any balance due from him to the plaintiff as personal representative, and releasing him and his sureties and staying all proceedings in the action. It follows from that narrative, first, that, until Sept. 12, 1946, there was no personal representative of the deceased; secondly, that, at the latest, from Oct. 18, 1946, Mr. Barclay ceased to act and be receiver or manager of the deceased's estate, and ceased, therefore, to be for any purpose which is material an officer of the court.

G The circumstances which have given rise to the present application took place between the date of the death of the deceased and October 18. There is a considerable mass of evidence from which it appears, on the one hand, that the company claimed that the receiver, while acting as such, so acted as to put an end to the contract either by repudiation or by other interference with the contract. On the other hand, it is alleged that the contract was repudiated by the company and that the receiver, in his capacity as such, accepted the repudiation, so that the contract came to an end in that way.

H It is stated by counsel for the company that the ground for this summons is that, so long as Mr. Barclay was an officer of the court, it would not have been proper for a third party to bring an action in these courts against him, and that to have done so without the authority of this court might have involved the company in contempt of court. It is conceded, however, that from the time when Mr. Barclay ceased to be receiver and manager, no such justification existed at all. If a cause of action lies against him in respect of his past transactions, then suit can be brought in respect of that and no possibility of contempt of court can be involved, because there could, in no sense, then be any interference with an officer of the court in the performance of his duty. Therefore, it follows, in my judgment, plainly, that as from Oct. 18, 1946, this summons became unnecessary.

There remains the question of the propriety of the proceedings before that date, because there is here a substantial question of costs. I must, therefore, examine to some extent the question of justification for this summons from the date of its issue on Aug. 14, until it became unnecessary on Oct. 18. Counsel for the receiver says that this application could never in any circumstances have succeeded. He argues that on the face of it it is an application for leave to bring an action for breach of contract and that as regards that the company find themselves on the horns of a dilemma because, unless it can be shown that the receiver, as an individual, adopted the contract, there can be no question of a right of action against him. If, on the other hand, the receiver did so adopt the contract, thus making it his own, then, according to counsel no leave of the court is required to sue him for breach.

I think that there may be separate approaches to the question with which I am concerned. First, I have to ask myself whether the summons was necessary on any view. When I say "on any view," I mean in circumstances such as we have here, without reference to the particular facts of this case, is a summons necessary? I have also to consider, assuming such an application is one that ought to be made by the company in these circumstances, is the proposed action one which could possibly succeed? If either or both of those questions is to be answered in the negative, then the whole summons was misconceived from the start. I am not satisfied that with the necessary assurance I can answer either of those questions by an unqualified "no." I think that, so long as a receiver is acting as such, an applicant may reasonably say, if he desires to bring proceedings against the receiver in respect of something he has done as such, that he requires the authority of the court. Certainly so in a case where, as here, the receiver had behind him no constituent, i.e., at the material dates there was nobody representing the deceased, there being no grant of representation.

As regards the question whether an action could possibly succeed, it may be difficult to say that a receiver acting strictly as such can ever be sued in contract. On the other hand, a receiver may, as I think counsel for the respondent concedes, adopt as his own a contract and render himself liable as on a novation of it. There is also the submission of counsel for the company that if a receiver can assert a right, certainly where, as I say, there is no constituent behind him, to accept a repudiation so as to terminate the contract, he must have put himself in the position by adoption of being a party to the contract or representing a party. There is a further ground that, even if the receiver could not be sued ex contractu, it would not follow that he could not be sued in tort if he had taken steps which effectively prohibited the completion of the contract. I am not satisfied that because of the form of the summons it would necessarily have been impossible on a full hearing of this matter on the merits for the company to have obtained authority to bring an action in respect of the contract, albeit founded alternatively in contract and in tort. I do not feel called on to express a more decided opinion on many of these matters, which plainly would have been open to discussion of considerable interest and illumination about 200 years ago, because, after all, I am only concerned with costs.

Bearing all these things in mind, I shall exercise my discretion as to costs by saying that there shall be no costs on either side up to Oct. 18, but that the company must pay the respondent's costs from Oct. 18 up to and including to-day. I add that this order is without prejudice to the right the receiver may have to claim indemnity in respect of any costs which he may have to provide or pay in respect of this summons. The result will be there will be no order on the summons except that, notwithstanding the stay in the action, the company should pay the taxed costs of the respondent of the summons from Oct. 18.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Oscar Mason & Co. (for the applicants); Sydney Pearlman (for the respondent).

[Reported by B. ASHRENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DREDGE v. DREDGE (otherwise HARRISON).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), March 15, November 28, 1946.]

Divorce—Nullity—Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Result of decree to bastardise child—Wife pregnant by husband at date of marriage—Child born subsequently—Delay—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a).

The wife respondent was pregnant by the husband when the parties went through a ceremony of marriage on Mar. 6, 1929, and a child was born on Sept. 30, 1929. The husband, a serving marine, made every effort to consummate the marriage and continued to do so up to 1937, when the parties ceased cohabitation, but the wife wilfully refused to permit intercourse. The petitioner was on foreign service until the end of 1939 and in 1940, unaware of the facilities available for poor persons, he approached a solicitor with a view to taking proceedings, but found they were beyond his means. In 1942 he laid his case before the Services Poor Persons Department and in due course a petition for nullity was presented:

HELD: (i) in cases of the type visualised by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 7 (1) (a), the fact that a child would be bastardised by a decree of nullity was not a matter to affect the decision of the court;

(ii) in the circumstances the petitioner should not be penalised for the long delay, and he was, therefore, entitled to a decree.

[FOR THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1937, s. 7, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 339].

Cases referred to:—

- (1) Farnham v. Farnham (otherwise Daniels), [1936] 3 All E.R. 776; [1937] P. 49; 106 L.J.P. 6; 155 L.T. 621; Digest Supp.
- (2) Jackson v. Jackson & Barwell, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1588; [1936] P. 214; 105 L.J.P. 93; 155 L.T. 324; Digest Supp.

PETITION by the husband for a decree of nullity on the ground of his wife's wilful refusal to consummate the marriage, the wife being, at the date of the ceremony, pregnant by the husband, and the child subsequently born being 17 years of age at the date of the hearing. The facts appear in the judgment.

A. Marlowe, K.C., and Briant Irvine for the petitioner.

S. Lawrence for the King's Proctor.

WILLMER, J.: This case was before me on Mar. 15, 1946, when I had occasion to adjourn the matter because I desired to have the assistance of argument by the King's Proctor. It is a petition by a husband for nullity on the ground of the alleged wilful refusal of the wife to consummate the marriage. The ceremony of marriage was held on Mar. 16, 1929, and at that time the wife was already pregnant by the husband. A child was born on Sept. 30, 1929, i.e., after the ceremony of marriage, and is, therefore, up to the present moment a legitimate child. The evidence given by the husband was, broadly speaking, that he made every effort to consummate the marriage and that he was refused at first because as he thought, his wife, being pregnant, did not want intercourse during the pregnancy, but after the birth of the child, he says, she continued to refuse his advances. He was a serving marine and, therefore, the periods of cohabitation were subject to the exigencies of his service, but he says that he continued to make attempts to consummate the marriage up to 1937. It will be appreciated that at that date the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, had not come into force, so that wilful refusal was at that date no ground for seeking relief in this court. From 1937 onwards the parties have never lived together. The husband was on foreign service until the end of 1939, and by that time it appears he had decided that his marriage was finished. In 1940 he approached a solicitor and found that proceedings were too expensive, and it was not until 1942 that he laid his case before the Services Poor Person's Department. In due course the petition was launched from which the present proceedings have resulted.

We have thus the strange position that in 1946 I am being asked to declare that a marriage now over 17 years old was never a marriage at all, and the case is made stranger still by the fact that there is a child, now 17 years old, who, at any rate up to date, must be regarded as a legitimate child of the marriage. It appeared to me that this was rather a startling state of affairs, because, without hearing anybody on his behalf, I was being asked to pronounce a decree which, so far as I could see, would have the inevitable consequence of bastardising this child who has grown up legitimate for 17 years and that was a point which required consideration. A further point requiring consideration in a case such as this, where a child has grown up for so many years as legitimate, was the question of delay in bringing proceedings. I had in mind that it might be one thing to make a decree which would have the effect of bastardising a baby, but another thing to make a decree which would have the effect of bastardising one who is now virtually a young man and who has grown up in the belief that he was legitimate. In those circumstances the matter was adjourned at the hearing in March of this year, and I have had the benefit of further argument both on behalf of the husband, and also on behalf of the King's Proctor.

It appears to me, having heard the arguments, that the questions I have to decide are, first, whether, assuming I am satisfied the marriage has not been consummated, the existence of the child conceived before the ceremony of marriage but born after the ceremony makes any difference in law; secondly, whether this is a case in which, having regard to the long delay which has occurred before the proceedings have been brought here, I ought to exercise my discretion by refusing a decree; thirdly, whether I am satisfied that the marriage never was in fact consummated; and, fourthly, if so, whether or not the non-consummation was due to the wilful refusal of the wife within the meaning of the Act.

Under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1938, it was provided by s. 7 (1):

In addition to any other grounds on which a marriage is by law void or voidable, a marriage shall be voidable on the ground—(a) that the marriage had not been consummated owing to the wilful refusal of the respondent to consummate the marriage.

There follow three other cases in which marriages are made voidable, namely, (b) mental deficiency of the respondent, (c) the fact that the respondent is suffering from venereal disease, and (d) the fact that the respondent is pregnant by some other person than the petitioner. In two of these cases, namely, where a marriage is voidable by reason of the mental deficiency of the respondent and where a marriage is voidable by reason of venereal disease, special provision is made in sub-s. 2 of s. 7 for preserving the legitimacy of any children of the marriage, but no such provision is made where a marriage is voidable under paras. (a) or (d) of sub-s. (1). I suppose in the case of para. (d) the draftsman thought that, as ex hypothesi the child the subject of the pregnancy belonged to somebody else it did not matter very much that no provision for legitimating the child was made, but in the case of para. (a) I can only assume the draftsman took the view that what has happened in this case could not conceivably happen, namely, that there could be a child begotten by the petitioner where there had been no consummation of the marriage due to the wilful refusal of the respondent. Apparently, the possibility that a child might be conceived before the marriage and born afterwards had not occurred to the draftsman in the framing of this section of the Act.

That, however, is the situation which has arisen in this case, and I am bound to say that, curious and unhappy as the consequences are, I do not think that the fact that a child born after the ceremony of marriage would be bastardised is any ground for withholding a decree if I am otherwise satisfied. I need not refer in detail to the authorities to which counsel have referred. It is sufficient to say that it is well settled that, except in the cases where special provision to the contrary is made by the Act, a decree of nullity will undoubtedly have the effect of bastardising any child hitherto regarded as a child of the marriage. I was referred by counsel for the husband to Farnham v. Farnham (1) and Jackson v. Jackson (2). Those cases appear to make it clear that at any rate in cases of the type visualised in para. (d), i.e., cases where the respondent wife is pregnant by some person other than the petitioner, the fact that the child will be bastardised by the decree of nullity is not a matter to affect the decision of the court in any way. It has been argued by counsel for the husband—and I see no answer to the argument—that no distinction in principle is to be drawn between cases where the wife is pregnant by some person other than the petitioner and cases in which she is pregnant by the petitioner.

That deals with the first point which seems to me to arise for decision. The second point is whether the question of the delay is one of any special significance, particularly having regard to the unfortunate fact that this child of 17 has grown up in the belief that he is legitimate. The question of delay is material when one comes to examine the sincerity or otherwise of the evidence given by the husband. It is rightly said that the longer a petitioner puts off the bringing of the proceedings the more inquisitive the court naturally is, and the more the court will require to be satisfied that he is presenting a true case, but I do not think it goes any further than that. It seems to me that in this case it would be wrong for me to penalise the husband because of the great delay in bringing this case. He has stated, and I see no reason to doubt it, that he did take up the question immediately after his return from foreign service at the end of 1939. It is to be remembered that until 1938 the remedy which he now seeks was not open to him, and it was his misfortune that in 1940, when he did take the matter up, there was a state of war, and it was also his misfortune that at that time he could not afford to take proceedings and was unaware of the facilities available for poor persons, but he did get in touch with the Services Divorce Department in 1942. Having regard to the fact that there was a war, in which he himself was taking a part, I cannot impute any great delay to him in not presenting his case to the authorities before 1942. Moreover, it is his misfortune and not his fault that, from the date when he did make contact with the Services Divorce Department, it took over three years before the petition was presented and another year still before determination by the court. Having regard to these considerations, and despite the question whether the child may or may not be prejudiced, I am not disposed to regard the question of the delay in the circumstances as one of any significance, except in so far as the point argued on behalf of the King's Proctor is concerned. That goes to the question what I think of the sincerity or otherwise of the evidence given by the husband.

I had the opportunity of having the wife called at my instance should I so desire it. I did not think it was necessary, even if I thought it were desirable, for several reasons. In the first place, this has been at all times an undefended suit, that is to say the wife, with full knowledge of the allegations made against her, has not seen fit to come to this court to deny them. Secondly, there is the fact that the King's Proctor, having made inquiries, does not seek to intervene. I can only assume that he, at any rate, has not discovered anything which would defeat the right of the husband, and it did not seem to me that by calling the wife I was likely to discover anything where the King's Proctor had failed. Thirdly, I preserve a lively recollection of the impression which the husband made on me at the first hearing, which was wholly favourable. I thought he was giving his evidence with complete candour and truthfulness, and I am prepared to accept it. In those circumstances all I need do is to express myself as satisfied with the evidence on points three and four which I have to decide, namely that the marriage has not been consummated, and that the non-consummation was due to the wilful refusal of the wife. The husband is, therefore, prima facie entitled to the relief which he seeks, and, having regard to what I have previously said, I do not see that there is any legal ground on which I can withhold relief. It is a most unfortunate position for the child to be placed in, but, so far as I can see, I am powerless to do anything to protect him. It is a situation which would not have arisen if the Act had been drafted in different terms, but I have to administer it as it is and not as it, perhaps, ought to have been drafted. In those circumstances I pronounce a decree nisi.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors: N. A. M. Sitters (for the husband); Treasury Solicitor (for the King's Proctor).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HOLBORN v. HOLBORN.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Hodson, J.), November 19, 20, 1946.]

Husband and Wife—Summary jurisdiction—Maintenance order—Separation order—Wilful neglect to maintain—Persistence by husband in revolting or inordinate demands—Justification of wife in withdrawing from cohabitation.

Where a spouse persists in making sexual demands which are known to be regarded by the other spouse as inordinate or revolting, such persistent lack of consideration may amount to a course of conduct so grave and weighty as to justify the other spouse in withdrawing from cohabitation—a fortiori where such a course of conduct is calculated to affect the health of the other spouse.

Jackson v. Jackson (1) considered.

If it is found that a wife was justified in withdrawing from cohabitation and that the husband failed to maintain her after she left him, justices are justified in holding that he has been guilty of wilful neglect to maintain her and in making a maintenance order against him, but where there is nothing of a permanent or irrevocable character in the conduct which is complained about, the wife is not entitled to a permanent separation.

[AS TO WILFUL NEGLECT TO MAINTAIN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 838, 839, para. 1340; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 557, Nos. 6124—6128, and Supplement.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Jackson v. Jackson (1932), 146 L.T. 406; 96 J.P. 97; Digest Supp.

(2) Thomas v. Thomas, [1924] P. 194; 93 L.J.P. 61 130 L.T. 716; 27 Digest 315, 2925.

APPEAL by the husband from a maintenance order made by Portsmouth justices on May 28, 1946, on a summons by the wife on the ground of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance. The justices found that the wife was justified in withdrawing from cohabitation by reason of the husband's persistence in revolting and inordinate sexual demands which had resulted in affecting her health.

J. F. Marnan for the husband.

J. E. N. Russell for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This is an appeal from the justices for the city of Portsmouth by a husband who complains that the justices were wrong in holding that he had been guilty of wilful neglect to maintain his wife.

The parties were married as lately as January, 1944, and, owing to the exigencies of the war, they have spent very little of their married life together. The wife's home was in Nova Scotia, the husband was serving there, and they were married. Unfortunately, during the all too brief first period of their married life certain troubles arose, and I am satisfied that there was abundant material on which the justices could accept the wife's story of what, in the main, was the nature of those troubles. She complains that the husband was over-sexed, and she says that not merely was he insistent in his demands for sexual intercourse in season and out of season, but that, when she expressed reluctance to have sexual intercourse in the ordinary way, he made certain revolting suggestions to her.

That was the case she put forward to account for the fact that she had withdrawn from cohabitation early in their married life, while they were still in Nova Scotia. Before I go any further, I wish to say this. I have said it before, but it is strictly germane to the present case. No one can sit here as long as I have sat without realising that there is the greatest diversity of standards between one set of spouses and another as to what is or is not a normal standard of sexual intercourse. What will be regarded as grossly excessive demands by one wife (or by the husband, as the case may be) will be regarded as quite normal and reasonable by another wife or husband. I go further. There are things strictly outside what may be called normal sexual intercourse which will be regarded by one wife (or one husband, as the case may be) as so revolting as to be unmentionable, whereas other couples will regard them as nothing more than natural, normal love-making. Anyone who is familiar with the class of evidence and the class of controversies which arise in this court will know exactly what I mean.

To my mind, the point in any given case is whether, having regard to the

A known reactions of the other spouse to this, that, or the other type of love-making in the physical sense, it behoves the husband or wife to conduct himself or herself with consideration. Demands which are known to be regarded by the other spouse as inordinate or revolting may, if persisted in, show such a lack of consideration as, coupled with other conduct, to come within the well-known words, sanctioned by immemorial usage, as being so "grave and weighty a matter" as to justify one spouse or the other in withdrawing from cohabitation, and for this reason, that there must come a point of time at which persistent lack of consideration in matters of this sort may amount to a course of conduct calculated to cause injury to the mental health of the other spouse, or, at any rate, to lead to a reasonable apprehension of such injury. It comes back, in other words, to the point whether the husband or the wife, as the case may be, has conducted himself or herself with a grave lack of consideration for the feelings of the other spouse.

B That is the wife's case here. She says that that is what, in the main, induced her to break off cohabitation in the early days of the marriage. In fact, the parties resumed cohabitation in this country at the beginning of 1946. I do not think it is necessary to go into the vicissitudes which occurred in the meanwhile. So far as I can see, the wife resumed cohabitation with every determination to make the marriage a success. There were, however, two things which upset her. One was ceaseless quarrelling about money. The husband's case before the justices was that that, and nothing but that, was the reason why she "flounced" out of the house on May 5. If that had been all, this case would have assumed, no doubt, a very different aspect, but that is not the case which the wife put forward. The case on which she mainly rested was this same sexual trouble. She says that the husband was "after her day and night," at all times and all seasons demanding sexual intercourse, sometimes even as much as five times in one night, and, having been refused, possibly because their tempers were frayed in this argument about money, he then made once more the revolting suggestion which had been made in Canada and had then proved to be the main cause of the earlier disruption of their married life. The wife says that it was for that reason she left home.

C To justify the wife in withdrawing from cohabitation, as she did on May 5, by reason of misconduct on the part of the husband, there must be, in the words of the time honoured phrase which I have already used, some "grave and weighty matter." I am prepared—though the words were used in a very different context from the facts of the present case—to accept, as one of the paraphrases of that time-honoured phrase, some words used by LORD MERRIVALE, P., in Jackson v. Jackson (1) on which counsel for the husband insisted. LORD MERRIVALE, P., said (146 L.T. 406, at p. 407):

D Is it right to say that the conditions imposed on the wife were unbearable for her or any other wife, conditions which it was not competent for a reasonable husband to set up? Were they such conditions that a reasonable wife, being so treated by an unreasonable husband, could not be expected to proceed with the conjugal life?

E He was speaking there of difficulties arising through the presence of the husband's mother in the matrimonial home—very different facts from those of the present case—but they have this in common with the present situation, that there was nothing of a permanent or irrevocable character about the conduct which was being complained about. I must not be taken to say that those words are to be substituted for all other tests, but I am prepared to adopt them and adapt them to the circumstances of this case. If the wife's evidence is to be accepted, as it was by the justices, I think the conditions were such as to be unbearable by her, and that it was not competent for a reasonable husband to set them up. The conditions to which I have alluded had already once broken up the marriage and the husband knew perfectly well what effect they were likely to have and what effect such lack of consideration for her feelings was likely to have on this particular wife.

F But the matter does not end there. The wife arrived in England in January. The parties found a flat in April, and it was from then onwards that these matters of which she complains began to affect her. It is common ground that she saw a doctor for something which was affecting her nervous system. In my opinion, it was unreasonably inconsiderate for the husband to insist on, or to repeat, demands of a character which were not merely likely to have, but were in fact having, that effect on the wife's health.

In my opinion, the justices were entitled to find on the evidence that the wife was justified in withdrawing from cohabitation. That, and nothing but that, is what we are deciding in this case. It follows that they were justified in holding that the husband had been guilty of wilful neglect to maintain his wife, just as, if the summons had been for desertion, they would have been justified in holding that she was the deserted wife and, as such, was entitled to an order for the same amount of money by way of support.

I wish, however, to make it perfectly clear what we are not deciding in this case. We are not deciding that there is anything here which would justify the wife in taking up the position that she is entitled to a permanent separation from her husband, supported by the maintenance awarded under this order. The husband, I hope, has now had his lesson. If these two experiences of the wife withdrawing from cohabitation have not taught him the necessity for forbearance and consideration in the matters I have mentioned, then nothing will teach him, but, if he has learned what his wife is entitled to in the way of such consideration and is minded to make it clear to her that he has learned his lesson, there is nothing which will justify the wife in refusing to resume cohabitation. That is quite a different question from the question whether on May 5 she was entitled to withdraw from cohabitation. If the husband is prepared to treat her, and to convince her that he is prepared to treat her, with the consideration to which she is entitled in any matters in which he may have been at fault, including questions of money, she must return to cohabitation, and, if she refuses, the rights of the husband have been clearly defined in a series of cases, perhaps the best known of which is Thomas v. Thomas (2) in the Court of Appeal. So far as this appeal is concerned, I have no doubt that the justices' decision was justified and that the appeal must be dismissed.

HODSON, J. : The order appealed against is based on the wilful neglect of the husband to maintain the wife. She left him on May 5, 1946, and the question which was argued on this appeal was whether she had just cause for refusing to live with him at the time of the hearing on May 28, 1946. The gist of the case was that in the early days of the marriage her husband had made a suggestion to her which had revolted her and caused her to leave him, and, having got her back, he again made the same suggestion which caused her to leave him for the second time.

There seem to me to be two questions in this case. The first is whether that conduct of the husband actually revolted the wife so as to cause her to leave him. The justices have found that it did, and there was material upon which they could so find. The second question is whether she was reasonable or unreasonable in being so revolted, and I, too, am very ready to apply the test, which was mentioned by LORD MERRIVALE, P., in Jackson v. Jackson (1) and which we were invited by counsel for the husband to apply. In my view, it is plain that the wife was acting reasonably in refusing to live with her husband after that suggestion had been made. I wish to add nothing to what has been said by my Lord on this topic. He has made it clear that there is nothing permanent in that situation. The finding was merely that, things being as they were on May 5 and 28, the wife was justified in withdrawing from cohabitation.

A second argument has been addressed to us on the question whether there is any evidence of actual failure by the husband to pay his wife sums for her maintenance, it being said that he was unable to do so because she disappeared and kept out of the way. It is futile to contend that, even if the wife was justified in leaving, there was no failure to maintain, because the argument would seem to involve the proposition that, although the husband acted so badly that she was justified in concealing herself from him, yet he is entitled to take advantage of that fact and to say that, as she concealed herself, he need not pay. If his conduct caused the concealment, that seems to me to be fatal to that line of argument. There is no substance in that point and I agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Henry I. Sydney & Co. (for the husband), Maude & Tunnickliffe, agents for MacDonald & Jacobs, Southsea (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FOLLETT v. LUKE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
December 17, 1946.]

Food and Drugs—Watered whisky—Defence—Warranty—Excise certificate—Spirits Act, 1880 (c. 24), ss. 105 (5), 108 (2), sched. IV—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 84 (1) (a).

A The appellant was charged under the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 3, with selling whisky containing 14 per cent. excess water. The whisky was sold from a bottle which had not been opened previously and had been kept in locked premises between the time of its delivery by the dealers to the appellant and that of its sale. As required by the Spirits Act, 1880, the whisky, when delivered by the dealers, was accompanied by a certificate which purported to state its strength, namely, that it was "30 degrees under proof."

B HELD : the certificate was a written warranty on which, under s. 84 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, the appellant could rely as a defence to the charge.

[AS TO WARRANTIES AS TO NATURE ETC. OF GOODS SOLD, see HALSBURY, 2nd Edn., Vol. 15, pp. 162—166, paras. 265—274; and FOR CASES, see Digest, Vol. 25, pp. 92—98, Nos. 172—217.]

C CASE STATED by a metropolitan police magistrate.

The appellant, Follett, was charged on an information under the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 3, that on Apr. 2, 1946, he sold whisky not of the quality demanded and containing 14 per cent. excess water. The whisky sold was taken from a sealed bottle which had been delivered to the appellant by the dealers on the previous day and kept by him in locked premises over night. With it the dealers, as required by the Spirits Act, 1880, sent a certificate stating that the whisky was "30 degrees under proof." The question to be decided was whether this excise certificate amounted to a warranty on which the appellant was entitled to rely under s. 84 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938.

G. O. Slade, K.C. and James Burge for the appellant.
Vernon Gattie for the respondent.

E LORD GODDARD, C.J. : According to the facts stated in the Case, on Apr. 2, the respondent, an inspector of the local authority under the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, purchased at the appellant's premises whisky which was found to contain 14 per cent. of excess water. The magistrate has found all the facts in the appellant's favour, namely, that the whisky was sold from a bottle which had not been previously opened, and that it had been properly taken care of in locked premises between the time of delivery by the dealers—using the word "dealers" in the technical sense in which it is used in relation to spirits—and the time of the sale. When, however, the whisky was analysed, it was found that it had 14 per cent. of added water and was not of the strength of 30 degrees under proof, which, I suppose, can only be attributed to the dealers, in view of the facts that have been found.

F The only question raised in the Case is whether or not the appellant as seller was protected by a written warranty. The document which was produced and relied on as the written warranty is known as an "excise certificate for the removal of duty paid spirits," and it is given pursuant to the Spirits Act, 1880 (c. 24). By that Act, s. 105 (5) :

G No spirits may be sent out or delivered from the stock of a dealer unless accompanied by a certificate, except spirits not exceeding in quantity one gallon at a time sold by him under an additional licence or a licence to retail to a person not being a dealer or retailer.

H By s. 108 :

(1) Every rectifier, dealer, and retailer must, by written request, obtain from the proper officer a certificate book containing forms of certificates and counterfoils, for which he must give a receipt. (2) Before sending out or delivering any spirits required to be accompanied by a certificate, he must enter in one of these certificates, and in its counterfoil, the particulars specified in that behalf in the fourth schedule, and must sign the certificate. (3) He must deliver the certificate with the spirits to the person to whom the spirits are entered in the certificate.

There are other provisions about keeping the certificate open for inspection. Schedule IV to the Act specifies what the certificate is to contain. Among other things, it is to contain: "Quantity, denomination, and strength of spirits nt out or delivered." By the Finance Act, 1935, s. 14 :

If any spirits delivered in bottle from a warehouse for home consumption are sold by a dealer in or retailer of spirits at a strength lower than that by reference to which the customs duty or the excise duty chargeable thereon was computed, he shall, for each offence, be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £50.

So, a dealer commits an offence if, having given a certificate showing the strength of the spirits delivered or to be delivered, he delivers spirits at a different strength from that on which the duty has been paid. When a proprietor of a hotel or public house orders spirits from his dealer, he knows that he will receive with it an excise certificate, and that one of the things that the excise certificate must state is the strength of the spirits.

That seems to me to be about as clear and conclusive a written warranty as anybody can possibly require or possibly give. I think that if the argument throughout this case had been confined to whether or not this certificate was a warranty, the learned magistrate might have reached a different decision, but the point seems to have been taken in the court below that the certificate was an invoice, because under the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 84 (5), it is provided that :

For the purposes of this and the next succeeding section, a name or description entered in an invoice shall be deemed to be a written warranty that the food or drug to which the entry refers is of such a nature, substance and quality that a person can sell, or otherwise deal with it, under that name or description without contravening any of the provisions of this Act.

This document is clearly not an invoice. It was not intended to be an invoice. But a purchaser can rely not only on an invoice. He can rely on any warranty, provided it is a written warranty. Then it is said there are cases which show that the written warranty must form part of the contract, in other words, that a person must stipulate for a written warranty.

Where two persons are dealing with an article which can only legally be supplied provided it is accompanied by a document containing a statement which in law must amount to a warranty, it is part of the contract that this warranty shall be given and received, because the law requires it shall be given and received. In the present case it appears to me as clear as it can be that the sellers knew they had got to give, and did send, this written statement with the goods, and the written statement is that the goods are : " 8 gallons of whisky, 30 degrees under proof." That is a warranty that the goods are 30 degrees under proof. The fact that it was given for the purpose of the Spirits Act does not make it any the less a warranty, and it would seem to be very hard in a case of this sort if the purchaser were not entitled to rely on that document, because it is not only given in pursuance of an Act of Parliament, but also, if any alteration in the strength of the whisky had taken place after the document was given to the Customs and Excise authorities, the person giving it would have incurred a serious penalty. In my opinion, the appeal succeeds, with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : J. E. Lickfold & Sons (for the appellants) ; Allen & Son (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

READ v. DONOVAN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), December 12, 1946.]

Firearms—"Lethal weapon"—Signal pistol not designed as weapon but capable of inflicting injury—Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), ss. 1 (2) (a), 32 (1).

The expression "lethal weapon" in the Firearms Act, 1937, does not mean an implement which is designed to kill or inflict injury as distinct from an implement which, being misused, is capable of killing or inflicting injury. The intention of the manufacturer or designer is immaterial. The question is whether the weapon, being a barrelled weapon and one from which any shot, bullet or other missile can be discharged, is capable of inflicting harm.

Therefore, where a person, without holding a firearm certificate, acquired a double barrelled signal pistol, firing a cartridge with explosive ballistite and containing a phosphorous and magnesium flare, with a small propelling charge, not designed as a weapon, but capable of being used as such with fatal results, HELD : he was guilty of an offence under s. 1 (2) (a) of the Act.

[FOR THE FIREARMS ACT, 1937, ss. 1 (2) (a), 32, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, pp. 909, 929.]

CASE STATED by a metropolitan magistrate. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Vernon Gattie for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The respondent was summoned for having acquired a firearm to which pt. I of the Firearms Act, 1937, applied without holding a firearm certificate in force at the time, contrary to s. 1 (2) (a) of the Act. The question is whether the article he had in his possession is a firearm.

The matter seems to be beyond question. It is stated in the Case :

The implement in question was a double-barrelled signal pistol of German make, firing a cartridge with explosive ballistite and containing a phosphorous and magnesium flare. There is a small propelling charge. It is capable of killing at short range, and might be fatal up to twenty feet. It might inflict a more serious wound than a heavy revolver, as the flare might penetrate and continue burning in a wound. This type of instrument is not designed as a weapon, but it has been used as such. During the past war it was, in fact, used against enemy troops with fatal results.

The magistrate, however, was of opinion that the expression "lethal weapon" in the Firearms Act, 1937, meant an implement which is designed to kill or inflict injury as distinct from an implement which being misused, is capable of killing or inflicting injury, and, accordingly, he dismissed the summons.

It appears that this is a pistol designed, so far as design has anything to do with the matter, as a signalling apparatus, and it is significant that signalling apparatus is itself dealt with in s. 4 (6) of the Act. Section 4 deals with exemptions from the necessity of having a certificate, and one of the exemptions is a signalling apparatus on board an aircraft or on an aerodrome as part of the equipment of the aircraft or aerodrome. Therefore, the framers of the Act obviously intended that a signalling apparatus should be within the Act, but it is exempted from the necessity of obtaining a certificate under the Act if it is used merely in an aircraft or on an aerodrome. The definition of "firearm" in the Act is "any lethal barrelled weapon of any description from which any shot, bullet, or other missile can be discharged." A lethal weapon means a weapon capable of causing injury, and if it is barrelled, and if "a shot, bullet, or other missile can be discharged" from it, it is a firearm. In this case those requirements are clearly fulfilled. The intention of the manufacturer or designer of the weapon is immaterial. This case must go back to the magistrate with an intimation that the offence is proved.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Case remitted.

Solicitors : Solicitor for the Metropolitan Police (for the appellant).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

X.Y. v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), December 11, 1946.]

Royal Forces—Pensions—Attributability—Suicide by serving soldier after receiving letter from fiancée breaking off engagement—Evidence—Statements of witnesses at, and findings of, military court of inquiry.

In 1940 the deceased man joined the Army. In 1942 he went home on embarkation leave. During this leave his fiancée tried to persuade him to marry her before he went overseas, but he refused to do so. After his return to his unit after his leave his fiancée wrote and broke off the engagement and four days later he shot himself with his service revolver.

HELD: (i) the pensions appeal tribunal were entitled to accept as evidence the statement of witnesses at, and the findings of, the military court of inquiry into the man's death.

(ii) the cause of the man's death was the letter written by his fiancée which constituted an intervening cause so powerful that the other circumstances were not causes at all, but only part of the circumstances in or on which the cause operated, and that the tribunal was right in holding that death was not due to war service.

Minister of Pensions v. Chennell (1) applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. It is interesting to observe that in W. v. Minister of Pensions (2), a case where the appellant's anxiety state was held to be due to his wife's conduct with other men while he was away from home on war service and not to that service, DENNING, J., put the hypothetical case "where a young man, serving abroad, receives a letter from his fiancée breaking off the engagement on account of his absence and he is so distressed that he commits suicide. There again his death is not attributable to war service. It is attributable to an intervening cause." That hypothetical case has now become an actuality, and DENNING, J., while not specifically referring to W. v. Minister of Pensions (2), gives effect to the views which he there expressed. The strict rules of evidence which bind courts of law are not necessarily observed by a pensions appeal tribunal, and so the proceedings of the military court of inquiry are held to have been properly taken into consideration.

FOR THE PENSIONS APPEAL TRIBUNAL ACT, 1943, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, p. 480.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Minister of Pensions v. Chennell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 719.
- (2) W. v. Minister of Pensions, [1946] 2 All E.R. 501.

APPEAL from the decision of a pensions appeal tribunal.

The claim for a pension was made on behalf of the family of a deceased man, and it was refused by the tribunal. The unsuccessful applicant now appealed to the High Court. The facts appear fully in the judgment.

The appellant was not represented.

Stephen Chapman for the Minister.

DENNING, J.: I allowed this case to be put in the list without the name of the appellant because the relatives of the deceased man were so distressed about the matter that it would embarrass them if the name were made public. For similar reasons I allowed the case to be argued by submissions in writing.

In 1940 the deceased man joined the Army, and in 1942 he went home on embarkation leave. During this leave his fiancée tried to persuade him to marry her before he went overseas, but she was unsuccessful, and after his return to his unit, she wrote and broke off her engagement with him. Four days later he shot himself with his service revolver. A court of inquiry found that he met his death by his own hand while the balance of his mind was disturbed. There was no reason to suppose that he died accidentally. Before shooting himself he had written three letters, one to his commanding officer, another to his father saying goodbye, and a third one to his fiancée.

The tribunal found that the death of the deceased was not due to his war service. The questions which they put forward for my determination are, (1) whether they were correct in accepting as evidence the statements of the witnesses at, and the finding of, the military court of inquiry, and, (2), whether or not the death was attributable to war service. The contention on behalf of the appellant is that:

the facts disclose that death took place within the confines of a military camp as the direct result of a bullet discharged from a service revolver with ammunition also supplied by the military authorities, and that this took place at a time when the deceased was under the orders and subject to the discipline of the military authority.

On behalf of the Ministry it was contended :

The fact that he was issued with a service revolver and ammunition was no more than an occasion for his turning them against himself. It was not the cause of his so doing. Similarly, the fact that he was subject to service supervision and control was no more than the temporary background of his life. It was not the cause of his deciding to commit suicide. This cause is to be found solely in the trouble with his fiancée, a factor which was entirely extrinsic and unrelated to his service life.

On the first question, in my opinion, the tribunal were entitled to accept as evidence the proceedings of the military court of inquiry. Although they would not be admissible in an ordinary court of law, they have probative force and could be admitted by the tribunal.

On the second question, recently in Minister of Pensions v. Chennell (1), I dealt with the question of causation. This case, on its facts, seems to me to fall within the fourth category which I mentioned there, namely, where an intervening or extraneous event is so powerful a cause that the other circumstances are not causes at all but only part of the circumstances in or on which the cause operated. That is, in my judgment, the position here. The cause of this man's death was the letter written by his fiancée operating in the conditions of his own mental make-up. The circumstances of the revolver being a military revolver and his being on service at the time were only part of the circumstances in which that cause operated. Therefore, in my judgment, on the principle which I stated in Minister of Pensions v. Chennell (1), the tribunal were right in holding that this man's death was not due to war service. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor : Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

THORNE v. SMITH.

[COURT OF APPEAL, (Scott, Bucknill and Somervell, L.JJ.), November 17, December 10, 1946.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Possession—Order obtained by misrepresentation—Compensation for damage or loss sustained by tenant—Misrepresentation by landlord that premises required for own occupation—Consent by tenant to order for possession—Immediate sale of premises with vacant possession—Compensation for damage or loss sustained as result of order—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (6).

A landlord's claim for possession of a house within the Rent Restriction Acts specified no grounds, but over a long period the landlord had repeatedly stated by letter to the tenant that he wanted possession for himself and had convinced the tenant of the truth of his statement. In the circumstances the tenant, on the advice of his counsel, consented to judgment for possession. The tenant vacated the house, and the landlord on the same day inspected the house, but instead of taking steps to enter into occupation he gave instructions to house agents to sell the house, and in due course it was sold with vacant possession. In an action by the tenant under the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 5 (6), for a declaration that the order giving the landlord possession of the house was obtained by misrepresentation and/or the concealment of material facts and that he was entitled to recover compensation for damage or loss sustained by him as the result of the order, the county court judge, though satisfied that on the merits the tenant had fully established a right to substantial damages, gave judgment for the landlord on the ground that a claim which was based on an order obtained by consent where there had been no hearing by the court was not competent under s. 5 (6), his view being that the sub-section presupposed that there had been an investigation of the claim by the court and an order made after it, and that the concealment referred to in the sub-section was misrepresentation to and concealment from the tribunal investigating the claim :—

HELD : the landlord had obtained the order for possession by misrepresentation within s. 5 (6), and the tenant was entitled to damages.

Per SOMERVELL, L.J. : The expression "consent order" may suggest some compromise or arrangement which might be inconsistent with the provisions of the Acts. When the defendant is agreeing to submit to judgment because he is satisfied that the plaintiff can establish his right to an order under the Acts, it might be advisable to avoid the use of the word "consent," which may have a wider meaning and cover cases where the "consent" was the result of an arrangement which could not properly be made the basis of an order.

[FOR THE INCREASE OF RENT AND MORTGAGE INTEREST (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 5 (6), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 10, p. 340.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Ainsworth v. Wilding, [1896] 1 Ch. 673, 677 ; 65 L.J. Ch. 432 ; 74 L.T. 193 ; Digest Practice 473, 1539.
- (2) Wilding v. Sanderson, [1897] 2 Ch. 534 ; 66 L.J.Ch. 684 ; 77 L.T. 57 ; Digest Practice 622, 2589.
- (3) Derry v. Peek (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337 ; 58 L.J.Ch. 864 ; 61 L.T. 265 ; 54 J.P. 148 ; revsg. S.C. sub. nom. Peek v. Derry (1887), 37 Ch.D. 541 ; 35 Digest, 27, 185.
- (4) Barton v. Fincham, [1921] 2 K.B. 291 ; 90 L.J.K.B. 451 ; 124 L.T. 495 ; 85 J.P. 145 ; 31 Digest 579, 7280.
- (5) Salter v. Lask, [1924] 1 K.B. 754 ; 93 L.J.K.B. 685 ; 130 L.T. 323 ; 31 Digest 577, 7263.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of JUDGE DONALD HURST at Reading County Court refusing damages against the landlord for obtaining an order for possession of a dwelling-house within the Rent Restriction Acts by misrepresentation. The facts appear in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J.

R. G. Micklethwaite for the tenant.

Cecil R. Havers, K.C., and E. Anthony Jessel for the landlord.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 10. The following judgments were read.

SCOTT, L.J. : This appeal by a tenant depends solely on the correct interpretation of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 5 (6), which is as follows :

Where a landlord has obtained an order or judgment for possession or ejectment under this section on the ground that he requires a dwelling-house for his own occupation, and it is subsequently made to appear to the court that the order or judgment was obtained by misrepresentation or the concealment of material facts, the court may order the landlord to pay to the former tenant such sum as appears sufficient as compensation for damage or loss sustained by that tenant as the result of the order or judgment.

The present defendant, the landlord, had, as plaintiff, obtained in the county court as against the tenant (then defendant and now plaintiff) an order for possession of the house in which the tenant was living. To avoid confusion, I will refer to them in their then capacities of landlord and tenant. The landlord's claim had specified no grounds, but the tenant's defence had raised two issues : (1) on the plea that the premises were "not reasonably required by the landlord for his own occupation" ; and (2) on the plea of "greater hardship." Both grounds of defence assumed that the claim would be based on para. (h) of sched. I to the Act of 1933, which inter alia confers jurisdiction on the county court to make an order for possession without proof of "suitable alternative accommodation." Section 3 of, and sched. I to, the Act together provide that the landlord can obtain possession if he shows that he wants the house for his own occupation. Over a long period of time the landlord had repeatedly stated by letter to the tenant that he did want possession for himself, and, in fact, he had convinced the tenant of the truth of his statement. At the hearing the landlord was represented by counsel, the tenant by his solicitor. The tenant, being thus convinced by his landlord's representations, came to the conclusion (and he was acting under legal advice) that it was useless to fight the case, and he consented to judgment for possession on Mar. 2, 1946. We have seen the indorsement on the brief of counsel for the landlord, duly signed on behalf of both parties by himself and the tenant's solicitor. The court was thereupon duly informed of the fact and made the order accordingly. As late as one week before the date for possession the landlord in a letter to the tenant repeated his many previous statements that he wanted the house for his own occupation. On Mar. 2, 1946, the tenant moved out. The landlord and his wife made an inspection of the house, but, instead of taking steps to carry out his announced intention, the landlord went straight off to a house agent, put the house in his hands for sale, and through him a few weeks later sold it with vacant possession.

A On hearing the tenant's claim under s. 5 (6) of the Act of 1920, the judge found every fact in his favour, refused to believe the landlord's evidence, and would have given judgment in favour of the tenant for £180 15s. 4d. damages, but for a view he took of the interpretation of the sub-section. He thought that it predicated an order in invitum of the tenant made after a contentious hearing in court on the merits, during which, in the opinion of the court which later heard the tenant's claim, the landlord was guilty of misrepresentation or concealment in and to the court, and that a consent order for possession was outside the jurisdiction conferred by sub-s. (6). He, therefore, reluctantly gave judgment for the landlord.

In my opinion, he was wrong. As I read the sub-section, the tenant was entitled to the benefit of it. As an aid to construction it is well to consider what the rights of the tenant would have been apart from the sub-section. In essence, the provisions of the Act of 1933 contained in s. 3 (1)(a) and sched. I allowing recovery of possession by a landlord without proof of "suitable alternative accommodation," if he wants the house for his own occupation, had been present in the Act of 1920, and so far as they throw light on s. 5 (6) of that Act they must be borne in mind. If the misrepresentation was fraudulent, the tenant who had submitted to a consent judgment because of the landlord's representation that he wanted the house for his own occupation could have brought a common law action for damages for deceit and the consent judgment would have been no defence. C
D In addition, he would have been entitled to have that judgment set aside by bringing an action for the purpose, and the two causes of action could have been included in the one writ. In the second place, even without an allegation and proof of fraud, if the judgment had been obtained by innocent misrepresentation, the tenant could in equity have had the consent judgment set aside, as in the case of any contract obtained by misrepresentation, and, since the Judicature Acts, E also in a common law action: see Ainsworth v. Wilding (1) ([1896] 1 Ch. 673, at pp 679, 680), and Wilding v. Sanderson (2) ([1897] 2 Ch. 534, at p. 550), where LINDLEY, L.J., said:

It was conceded, and in my opinion it is clear, that the order of Nov. 23, 1894, being a consent order based on and intended to carry out an agreement come to between the parties, should be treated as an agreement, which could be properly set aside on any ground on which an agreement in the terms of the order could be set aside. Mistake is one of such grounds. F

Without proof of fraud, no action for damages would lie: Derry v. Peek (3); but rescission of the contract could always be obtained from a court of equity. "Concealment of material facts" is a phrase borrowed from the law of contract in the case of agreements of "utmost good faith" like insurance. There G the common law imposes on the person seeking insurance the duty of disclosing to the underwriters all facts within his knowledge which are material to the underwriter's estimate of the risk. If he fails to do so, the underwriter, on proof of the fact of non-disclosure, escapes from the obligations of the policy, and the court will, if asked, grant rescission.

That being the state of the law—both common law and equity—apart from the sub-section, it is obvious that Parliament was conferring two new substantive H rights to money compensation: (1) for mere misrepresentation, that is, without proof by the claimant of any fraud, and (2) for non-disclosure of material facts, with the correlative result that the landlord who obtained a judgment for possession by either means would be committing a statutory breach of duty. The second new right of action created by Parliament, in legislation interfering with freedom of contract for the purpose of protecting tenants, has particular significance, for it treats the landlord's claim to recover possession as analogous to the claim by the assured against his insurer, and, therefore, as one calling for "the utmost good faith" on the part of the landlord.

It was argued for the landlord below and before us—and decided below—that the order for possession was not “obtained” by the misrepresentation, although it was the misrepresentation by the landlord which made the tenant consent to judgment. I cannot accede to any such contention. The word “obtain” raises the issue of cause and effect, and the mere introduction of the tenant’s consensual submission to what he foresaw would be the inevitable result in the judge’s mind of the fact (as he thought) that the landlord bona fide wanted the house for his own occupation, does not sever the causal nexus between the landlord’s misrepresentation and the court’s order. The order made was, in my opinion, plainly caused by the misrepresentation, and it was, therefore, so obtained within the meaning of the section, for there was no “new cause intervening.” A refinement of the main argument was suggested in the further submission that the misrepresentation could not be said to have been made to the court by any oral or documentary evidence. That refinement is, in my view, meaningless, and is not the sort of argument which Parliament intended to be applied in county courts for the solution of disputes between landlords and tenants. The landlord “obtained the order by misrepresentation,” within the meaning of the sub-section.

The appeal must be allowed with costs here and below, and judgment entered for the tenant for £180 15s. 4d. I think that the conduct of the landlord makes it right that he should pay the costs below, taxed on Scale “C.”

BUCKNILL, L.J.: In this case the defendant is the owner of a house, 23, Shepherds Lane, Reading, which is within the Rent Restriction Acts, and the plaintiff was at all material times the tenant. It will be convenient to call them landlord and tenant. On Sept. 22, 1945, the landlord filed a claim in the Reading County Court asking for recovery of the house. The particulars of the claim were as follows:

The plaintiff’s claim is for recovery of all those premises known as No. 23, Shepherds Lane, Caversham Heights, Reading, which said premises the defendant [the present plaintiff] holds of him on a weekly tenancy at £1 1s. 0d. per week and which said tenancy has been determined by service of a notice to quit on the said defendant which expired on July 16, 1945.

The solicitors for the tenant in due course lodged with the registrar the following notice:

I dispute the plaintiff’s claim because the premises are not reasonably required by the plaintiff for his own occupation and further that, if the premises are so reasonably required, greater hardship would fall on the defendant if an order were made than on the plaintiff if an order were refused.

At the hearing on Oct. 17, 1945, the tenant’s counsel agreed with the landlord’s counsel and so endorsed on his brief that possession was to be given on Mar. 2, 1946, and there was to be no order for costs. The county court judge being informed that this order had been agreed between the parties, made the following order, which was duly filed: “It is adjudged that the plaintiff do recover against the defendant,” etc. On Mar. 2, 1946, the tenant vacated the house, and the landlord on the same day looked at the house and then went to house agents and gave them instructions to sell it. The house was duly sold with vacant possession on Apr. 9. On May 17 the tenant applied to the Reading County Court for a declaration that the order of Oct. 17 giving the landlord possession of the house was obtained by misrepresentation and/or the concealment of material facts and that he was entitled to recover compensation for damage or loss sustained by him as the result of such order.

That application was made under the Increase of Rent Act, 1920, s. 5 (6). At the hearing of the application before the county court judge the tenant proved that he had received letters from the landlord and his solicitors in 1945 and early in 1946 in which he or they said that the landlord intended to take up residence at 23, Shepherds Lane and that he desired it for his own personal occupation. The last letter was only a week before the date fixed for the tenant to give up possession. On the hearing of the claim for compensation the tenant said in his evidence that he would not have agreed to the consent order unless the landlord had represented that he wanted the house for his own occupation. On the other hand, the landlord gave evidence to the effect that he intended to live in the house up to Mar. 2. He then changed his mind about living there and went at once to the agents and instructed them to sell it.

The judge, in his judgment, said that he entirely rejected the evidence of the landlord and that he was satisfied that on the merits the tenant had fully established a right to substantial damages. He, however, was not satisfied that in law he could grant the application, because the order for possession was made by consent. The judge held that, on the wording of s. 5 (6) of the Act of 1920, any claim based on an order obtained by consent where there had been no hearing by the court was misconceived. In the judge's view the section presupposed that there had been an investigation of the claim by the court and an order made after such investigation, and that the concealment referred to in the section was misrepresentation to and concealment from the tribunal investigating the claim. The judge also said that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, for a court to inquire into the considerations operating on the minds of parties when not before the court. It seems to me that this view of the judge as to the interpretation to put on s. 5 (6) is not warranted by the words of the section. The landlord had clearly obtained an order for possession, or what purported to be an order, under the Act. It is true that in his claim he did not set out as the basis of his claim that he required the house for his own residence, but he obtained the order by consent of the tenant because he told the tenant that he intended to reside there.

Counsel for the landlord took the point that the landlord had not, in fact, obtained an order for possession such as is referred to in the section, because the judge had not inquired into the matter, and that, therefore, the order for possession was itself invalid. Counsel relied on Barton v. Fincham (4) in the Court of Appeal. In that case the tenant of a house within the Rent Restriction Acts agreed with the landlord to give up possession at Michaelmas, 1920, in consideration of the payment of £20 by the landlord to him. When Michaelmas arrived the tenant refused to give up possession of the house or the £20. The landlord then brought an action under the Rent Acts to recover possession of the house, but failed to prove any of the statutory conditions set out in the Rent Acts which would justify the Court of Appeal in making the order. The county court judge made an order for possession. The two judges of the Divisional Court differed whether the county court judge could make such an order, but the Court of Appeal decided that the county court judge could not. The case, therefore, differs very materially in its facts from the case before the court in that in the present case the tenant submitted to the order being made, whereas in Fincham's case (4) he ultimately refused to do so. There are passages in the judgments in Fincham's case (4) which to some extent support counsel's argument, and there are also passages relied on by the other side. Thus BANKES, L.J., said ([1921] 2 K.B. 291, at p. 296) :

In my opinion s. 5 is an instance of a case where the legislature has in clear and unmistakable language restricted the jurisdiction of the court, and where no agreement between parties can give the court a jurisdiction which the legislature has said it is not to exercise.

ATKIN, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 299) :

The section appears to me to limit definitely the jurisdiction of the courts in making ejectment orders in the case of premises to which the Act applies. Parties cannot by agreement give the courts jurisdiction which the legislature has enacted they are not to have. If the parties before the court admit that one of the events has happened which give the court jurisdiction, and there is no reason to doubt the bona fides of the admission, the court is under no obligation to make further inquiry as to the question of fact ; but apart from such an admission the court cannot give effect to an agreement, whether by way of compromise or otherwise, inconsistent with the provisions of the Act.

Is, then, an agreement by consent such as was made in this case such an agreement as ATKIN, L.J., had in his mind ? It seems to me doubtful whether the court could make an order for possession under the Act if, for instance, the tenant stated in court that he consented to quit and to an order for possession solely because the landlord had promised to pay him £20. The question is difficult because of the remarks by SCRUTTON, L.J., in Fincham's case (4). There the Lord Justice said (ibid., at p. 298) :

It was urged that the effect of our decision would be to prevent agreements in court. If the tenant is willing to go out, I do not see why any order is wanted ; let him go ; but as at present advised I do not see any reason why the judge on being satisfied that a tenant is then ready to go out (not that he was once willing but has changed his mind) should not make an order for possession.

But in the present case it is, I think, reasonably clear that the tenant, in effect, agreed to the order because at the time when the landlord asked the court to make the order the landlord by his own statements had satisfied the tenant that he intended to occupy the house himself and he, the tenant, could not hope successfully to resist the claim. If the tenant had stated this expressly in court the judge would surely have had jurisdiction to make the order on that ground. I think in the events which happened here, the tenant being legally represented, the judge was entitled to proceed on the view that this was the true position. Before making an order for possession the judge is under a duty to satisfy himself as to the truth if there be a dispute between landlord and tenant, but if the tenant in effect agrees that the landlord has a good claim to an order under the Acts, I think the judge has jurisdiction to make the order for possession under the Acts, without further inquiry.

For these reasons the appeal, in my view, should be allowed.

SOMERVELL, L.J. (read by BUCKNILL, L.J.): I agree, and only wish to add some observations on two points. Counsel for the landlord drew our attention to r. 18 of the rules made under the Act of 1920, which reads as follows:

Where proceedings are taken in the county court for the recovery of rent of any premises to which the Act applies, or of interest on a mortgage to which the Act applies, or for the recovery of possession of any premises to which the Act applies, or for the ejectment of a tenant from any such premises, the court shall, before making an order for the recovery of such rent or interest, or for the recovery of possession or ejectment, satisfy itself that such order may properly be made, regard being had to the provisions of the Act.

That rule was considered and applied in Salter v. Lask (5). Nothing in the decision that we are giving in any way, as it seems to me, diminishes the scope of that rule. We are deciding that on what happened in this case, the tenant being, as he was, legally represented, the county court judge was rightly "satisfied" that the order could properly be made.

The other point arises from the use of the word "consent" as applied to the order made herein. The expression "a consent order" may suggest some compromise or arrangement which might be inconsistent with the provisions of the Acts. When the defendant is agreeing to submit to judgment because he is satisfied that the plaintiff can establish his right to an order under the Acts, it might be advisable to avoid the use of the word "consent," which may have a wider meaning and cover cases where the "consent" was the result of an arrangement which could not properly be made the basis of an order.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Mills & Morley, agents for Ratcliffe & Duce, Reading (for the tenant); Hancock & Scott, agents for Bunker & Son, Hove (for the landlord).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

FUSSELL v. SOMERSET QUARTER SESSIONS LICENSING COMMITTEE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), December 10, 1946.]

Licensing—General annual licensing meeting—Application for new licence—Bench equally divided—Adjournment of meeting—Application granted at adjourned meeting—Confirming authority—Jurisdiction to confirm licence.

On Mar. 1, 1946, the appellant applied to the adjourned general annual licensing meeting of the licensing justices for the petty sessional division of Keynsham for a new licence. The bench consisted of six justices, and after they had conferred the chairman said: "The bench being equally divided on this application, no order is made, and the case will be reheard 'by a reconstituted bench.'" The adjourned general licensing meeting is further adjourned until Mar. 22, 1946." On Mar. 22 the justices held a further adjourned meeting, when eleven justices sat and granted the application. When the matter came before the confirming authority, objection was taken on behalf of certain local residents that the matter was not properly before the authority, it being contended that what happened on Mar. 1, when the bench was equally divided, amounted to a decision, and that, therefore, the licence had been refused. The confirming authority upheld the objection, deciding that the application for confirmation of the licence was not properly before them, and refused to adjudicate on the matter. The appellant appealed.

HELD : that, although the justices might have refused the application on the ground that the bench was equally divided, they did not do so, but did what they were equally entitled to, namely, adjourn the application. The application having been granted at the adjourned hearing, the matter was properly before the confirming authority, and the case must be remitted to them with a direction to adjudicate on it.

AS TO PROCEDURE OF LICENSING JUSTICES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 19, p. 40, para. 110, and Vol. 21, p. 615, para. 1071; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, p. 45, Nos. 345-347.]

CASE STATED by the Licensing Committee of the justices for the county of Somerset.

On Mar. 1, 1946, the appellant, Percy John Fussell, applied to the adjourned general annual licensing meeting of the licensing justices for the petty sessional division of Keynsham for a new licence. The bench then consisted of six justices, and, after they had conferred together, the chairman announced: "The bench being equally divided on this application, no order is made, and the case will be reheard. The adjourned general annual licensing meeting is further adjourned until Mar. 22, 1946, when the bench will be reconstituted."

On Mar. 22, the justices held a further adjourned meeting. Eleven licensing justices then sat, and they granted the application. When the matter came before the confirming authority, objection was taken that the case was not properly before that authority, it being said that what had happened on March 1, when the bench was equally divided, amounted to a decision, and that therefore, the licence had been refused. The confirming authority accepted that submission, and the appellant appealed.

P. Colin Duncan, for the appellant.

Vernon Gattie, for the licensing committee.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The question which we have to decide depends on what was the true effect of that which happened on March 1—whether the justices gave a decision or whether they merely adjourned the case, because, in my opinion (and I think in the opinion of the court), there must be an inherent right in every court to adjourn a hearing when a matter comes before it, for whatever reason. One reason for which justices can adjourn a hearing is that they are an even number and they want the case tried before an uneven number of justices, so that a majority decision may be given. There is no question that, if, at the hearing of an application for a licence, the justices are equally divided, and for that reason say that they refuse the application because a majority of the justices are not in favour of granting the licence, that amounts to an adjudication refusing the licence, but in the present case I think it is clear that what the justices meant was: "We are not going to give a decision on this case. We are going to adjourn it, so that it may be heard by a larger bench, and then a decision can be given." I think that that is the fair meaning to put on what the justices did, and, in my opinion, they had an inherent right, and also a statutory right, to adjourn the hearing. It is conceded that the justices are not to be regarded as functus officio because they did not give a decision for granting or refusing the licence. They simply adjourned the hearing before them to be heard before a larger bench on another day. The larger bench heard the application and they granted it. In my opinion, therefore, the matter came properly before the confirming authority and the case must go back to the confirming authority with a direction that the case was properly before them and they must, therefore, proceed to adjudicate on it.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion and for the same reasons.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Godden, Holme & Co., agents for Daniel & Cruttwell, Frome (for the appellant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for H. King, Clerk to Somerset County Council (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. STJ. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PARKER v. BOGGAN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Macnaghten, J.), December 9, 1946.]

Landlord and Tenant—Underlease—Consent of landlord—Refusal—Reasonableness—Proposed underlessee entitled to diplomatic privilege.

The fact that a proposed underlessee is entitled to diplomatic privilege and immune from proceedings in a court of law is not a reasonable ground for a landlord refusing consent to the underlease.

A tenant, having failed to obtain the landlord's consent, granted an underlease of a flat to the counsellor of the Turkish Embassy in London :—

HELD : it was unreasonable to withhold consent, and the landlord was, therefore, not entitled to possession on the ground that there had been a forfeiture created by breach of a covenant not to underlet without consent.

[AS TO UNREASONABLE WITHHOLDING OF CONSENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 349—352, paras. 421, 422 ; and FOR CASES see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 382—384, Nos. 5279—5281.]

ACTION by a landlord to recover possession of a flat on the ground that there had been a forfeiture created by breach of a covenant not to underlet without the consent of the landlord. The facts appear in the judgment.

Cecil R. Havers, K.C., and J. M. Ahern for the landlord.
J. Pennyquick for the tenant.

MACNAGHTEN, J. : This is an action brought by the landlord against the tenant to recover possession of a flat known as No. 50, Northgate, Regents Park, London, and for damages by way of mesne profits since the date of the issue of the writ, which was June 27, 1946. By a lease dated Aug. 30, 1945, made between the landlord of the one part and the tenant of the other part, the landlord let to the tenant the premises in question, together with the furniture and fixtures therein, for the term of one year from July 23, 1945, and thereafter from quarter to quarter until the tenancy should be determined by either party giving to the other one a quarter's previous notice in writing to expire on any of the usual quarter days, at the rent of £550 per annum, payable in advance on the days and by the instalments set out, namely, on Mar. 25, June 24, Sept. 29, and Dec. 25. By a notice to determine the tenancy, dated Sept. 24, 1946, the tenant's solicitors on his behalf gave notice in writing to the landlord that he would quit and deliver up possession on Dec. 25 next, but the landlord claims by his statement of claim to recover possession as from the date of the issue of the writ for the following reason. The tenant agreed that he would not assign, underlet, charge, or part with the possession of the demised premises or any part thereof or of the furniture and effects without the previous consent in writing of the landlord and of the landlord's superior landlord. By an agreement dated Apr. 15, 1946, between the tenant of the one part and Ibrahim Sadi Kavur, of 69, Portland Place, on the other part, the tenant let to Mr. Kavur the demised premises, No. 50 Northgate, Regents Park, together with the furniture and effects, from Mar. 25, 1946, for the period of nine calendar months less the last day, that is to say, to Dec. 24, 1946, at a rent of 10 guineas a week, £450 being paid by way of premium. That underlease was granted without the consent in writing of the landlord thereto, and so this action is brought to recover possession from the date of the issue of the writ on the ground that there has been a forfeiture created by the breach of the covenant not to under-let without the landlord's consent.

The only answer to the claim is that the tenant, by his solicitors, had applied for a licence to underlet to Mr. Kavur and that request had been refused. To the prima facie case that the landlord makes, the tenant replies that it was unreasonable on the part of the landlord to refuse his consent. Although in the correspondence which took place before the underlease was granted in favour of Mr. Kavur various other objections to Mr. Kavur as an under-tenant were raised, before me the only objection raised is, not that Mr. Kavur is a Turkish subject, but that he is the counsellor to the Turkish Embassy to His Majesty and as such is entitled by the comity of nations to diplomatic privilege—for instance, he could not be sued in our courts—and that by reason of that fact it was not unreasonable of the landlord to refuse consent to the grant of an underlease to him. Counsel for the landlord has argued that it is an objection that the proposed sub-tenant has diplomatic privilege. Some people might regard it as an advantage. Of course, whenever one lets a flat or house, one wants to be satisfied that the tenant or sub-tenant is a responsible person who is able to discharge the obligations he has undertaken. Apart from the banker's reference, the fact that Mr. Kavur was the counsellor to the Turkish Embassy might have satisfied some people that it was certain that any obligations into which he had entered would be duly discharged, not merely on the ground of the responsibility of a gentleman in his position, but by reason of the fact that he held that position, for it might be thought that the Turkish Republic could not afford to allow a man who was accepted by His Majesty as the counsellor to the Embassy to disregard his contractual obligations with regard to the payment of rent or, indeed, with regard to any of the other covenants which the lease imposed. There might be some valid objection if there were some dispute whether Mr. Kavur was entitled to diplomatic privilege, but where there is no question but that the Turkish Embassy is acceptable to His Majesty and that Mr. Kavur, as the counsellor, is a person of position and authority in the Embassy, most people would feel that it was reasonably certain that all the obligations into which he entered would be fully discharged, and that, if he did not discharge them, the Turkish Empire, for its own credit and reputation, would certainly see that they were discharged to the full. No sovereign foreign country could afford that any question should arise regarding the discharge of their obligations by their ministers and servants in this country. I cannot recall any case here where any question has arisen. So meticulous in such matters are members of embassies in this country that I think I am right in saying that all of them undertake the obligation of taking out third-party insurance with regard to their motor cars although, if they could be said to be negligent, they could not be sued. If there is an accident, I do not think that any foreign embassy seeks to raise the question of immunity. They allow the question of liability to be determined.

I conclude, therefore, that it was not reasonable for the landlord to object to the underlease to Mr. Kavur on the only ground that is put forward, namely, that he occupied the responsible position of counsellor to the Turkish Embassy, and was, therefore, a person who was entitled to the customary diplomatic privilege and was immune from proceedings against him in the courts of this country. The tenant has made good his defence, namely, that it was unreasonable to withhold consent to the underlease to Mr. Kavur and the action stands dismissed with costs.

Judgment for the defendant with costs.

Solicitors : Scott & Son (for the plaintiff) ; Nordon & Co. (for the defendant).
[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRICE AND OTHERS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (MORRIS, J.), December 6, 9, 1946.]

Public Health—Housing—Compulsory purchase order—Confirmation by Minister—Regard had by Minister to letters from local authority received by him while acting administratively—Right of Minister to use knowledge gained by him extra-judicially—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 29 (1), sched. I (4).

In confirming a compulsory purchase order made by a local authority, the Minister of Health had regard not only to the evidence given at the public inquiry, but also to two letters from the local authority received by him three years earlier. These letters merely stated that the object of the local authority was "the rapid erection of as large a number of dwellings as possible" and that the authority's attention had been drawn to certain areas [including the area in question] which had suffered extensively from damage by enemy action and "the acquisition of which would enable housing development to be commenced immediately conditions permit." Since these letters were not in evidence at the public inquiry, it was contended by the objectors to the order that the confirmation order was bad :

HELD : (i) it was not necessary for copies of the letters to have been laid before the objectors and they had not been prejudiced by not having had an opportunity of dealing with them.

(ii) the letters having been received by the Minister before the public inquiry and while he was still acting in an administrative capacity, and there being nothing in them which required them to be given in evidence at the public inquiry, there was no ground for quashing the confirmation order.

Errington v. Minister of Health (1) and Stafford v. Minister of Health (3) distinguished.

Offer v. Minister of Health (2) and Miller v. Minister of Health (4) applied. A

[AS TO COMPULSORY PURCHASE ORDERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 571-573, paras. 1207-1211; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp., Public Health, Nos. 502 m et seq.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Errington v. Minister of Health, [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; Digest Supp.

(2) Offer v. Minister of Health, [1936] 1 K.B. 40; 105 L.J.K.B. 6; 153 L.T. 270; Digest Supp. B

(3) Stafford v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 621; 110 J.P. 210; sub nom. Mowsley No. 1 Compulsory Order, 175 L.T. 101.

(4) Miller v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 626; 110 J.P. 353.

APPEAL by objectors under the Housing Acts, 1925-1936, against an order of the Minister of Health confirming a compulsory purchase order made by the London County Council. The objectors' main ground of objection was that matters which might have been, but were not, given in evidence at the public inquiry were taken into account by the Minister without the objectors having an opportunity to cross-examine on them. The facts appear in the judgment. C

H. Heathcote-Williams for the objectors.

H. L. Parker for the Minister of Health.

MORRIS, J. : On June 12, 1945, the London County Council made an order which is cited as the County of London (Ocean Street, Stepney) Housing Order, 1945. The applicants in the motion now before the court lodged objections on August 30, 1945, against the order. A number of objections were set out, including that the houses in the schedule to the objections were not unfit for habitation or dangerous, and that the acquisition of the property specified in the schedule to the objections was not reasonably necessary for the purpose of satisfactorily developing the area. Further points were taken indicating that the objectors, being the owners of two island sites within the area proposed to be taken by the London County Council, were themselves contemplating and desirous of developing those sites in conformity with good planning principles. The Minister ordered a public inquiry which was held on Feb. 12, 1946, and on April 11, 1946, he confirmed the order of the county council. D

This application is now made on the grounds stated in the notice of motion dated June 5, 1946, to be as follows. It is said that there was no evidence from which it could appear to the Minister that the land is likely to be required for the purposes of the Housing Act, 1936, pt. V, within ten years from Apr. 11, 1946. The point there stated has reference to the proviso to s. 74 (2) of the Housing Act, 1936, which is in these terms : E

Provided that a local authority shall not be authorised to purchase any land compulsorily for those purposes unless it appears to the Minister that it is likely to be required for those purposes within 10 years from the date on which he confirms the compulsory purchase order. F

Counsel for the objectors urges two matters. He says, in the first place that the order made by the Minister is bad in the light of the order itself and the material on which it was based, because (he submits) there was no evidence before the Minister which would justify him in being satisfied in regard to the consideration set out in the proviso to s. 74 (2) of the Act of 1936. In the second place, he says that the order of the Minister is bad, because matters which might have been, but which were not, given in evidence at the public inquiry were taken into account by the Minister without the objectors having an opportunity to cross-examine on them. Counsel for the applicants, therefore, submits that the confirmation order was not within the powers of the Act and was made by the Minister in violation of the principle of natural justice. G

I propose to deal with those two matters separately. The Minister, when he H

A approached his task, had to consider whether it appeared likely that the land sought to be acquired would be required for the provision of housing accommodation for the working classes in one or more of the manners indicated by s. 72 of the Act. It is to be observed that the language of the proviso to s. 74 (2) includes the words "likely to be required for those purposes," and does not stipulate that the project must be completed within the 10 years specified. From the transcript of the evidence given at the public inquiry, I think that there was, as the result of the inquiry, ample material on which the Minister could form the opinion that it appeared to him to be likely that the land to be taken would be required for the purposes proposed within ten years from the date of any confirmation. I am satisfied that the first ground of this application fails.

B Counsel for the objectors stated frankly that he advanced the second ground of his application with rather greater determination than the first. In this connection I have been referred to the statements to be found in the authorities as to the duty of a Minister when he acts in a quasi-judicial position. The two letters that form the material for this part of the argument of counsel for the objectors were written in 1943. The earlier of the two contains the sentence:

The main object the council has in view is the rapid erection of as large a number of dwellings as possible . . .

C The second letter, of Dec. 2, 1943, begins:

With reference to the council's letter of Apr. 5 last regarding its proposals for the acquisition of housing sites in the suggested reconstruction area in Stepney and Poplar, the attention of the council has been drawn to three sites within the area which have suffered extensive damage as the result of enemy action and the acquisition of which would enable housing development to be commenced immediately conditions permit.

D If those letters have any relevance, they would appear to have it as indicating that in April and December, 1943, it was the intention and the expectation of the London County Council to make as speedy progress as possible in the erection of dwelling-houses. When dealing with the first part of his case, counsel for the objectors submitted that those letters really possessed little or no evidential value, for they merely showed what appeared to have been the intention of the London County Council in 1943, and that did throw not much light on the question as to what were their intentions in 1945 or 1946. It may be, therefore, that these letters really throw very little light indeed on the question that the Minister had to decide. If these letters had been available at the time of the inquiry, I doubt whether any use would have been made of them. It does not seem to me that they would have assisted those who were taking part in the inquiry. It is to be remembered also that, at the date of the inquiry, no point had been taken by the objectors now bringing this motion to the court that the land was unlikely to be required within ten years. Those letters, it seems to me, do no more than to amount to confirmation that it was the intention of the London County Council to construct houses, and I imagine that their value in that way would be very small indeed, but, although I am satisfied that no prejudice of any kind resulted to the objectors because they did not have these letters before them, I wish to examine the matter a little more fully.

F I was referred, I think, to all the relevant authorities, and, in particular, strong reliance was placed by the objectors on Errington v. Minister of Health (1). Everything said in that case is, of course, authoritative, and is applicable in reference to matters similar to that which I am now considering. The facts in Errington's case (1) were, however, very different from those of the present case. GREER, L.J., said ([1935] 1 K.B. 249, at pp. 264, 265):

I Now it seems to me that if, as I think, the Ministry were acting in a quasi-judicial capacity they were doing what a semi-judicial body cannot do, namely, hearing evidence from one side in the absence of the other side, and viewing the property and forming their own views about the property without giving the owners of the property the opportunity of arguing that the views which the Ministry were inclined to take were such as could be readily dealt with by means of repairs and alterations to the buildings . . . They must deal with the question referred to them without bias, and they must give to each of the parties the opportunity of adequately presenting the case made. The decision must be come to in the spirit and with the sense of responsibility of a tribunal whose duty it is to mete out justice.

Later GREER, L.J., said (ibid, at p. 268):

. . . if, instead of directing his mind solely to those matters, he [the Minister] takes into consideration evidence which might have been, but was not, given at the public inquiry, but was given ex parte afterwards without the owners having any opportunity whatever to deal with that evidence, then it seems to me that the confirming order was not within the powers of the Act.

In Errington v. Minister of Health (1) the matter was continued in private after the public inquiry. The facts were very different from those in the present case. MAUGHAM, L.J., in his judgment said (ibid., at p. 279) :

I think it is not a compliance with sched. I, para. 4, to come to a conclusion in favour of confirming the order, basing the conclusion not merely on the public local inquiry and the report of the person who held the inquiry but also on an ex parte private inquiry, such as I think the officials of the Minister have held here. I think that is not a compliance with what is requisite under sched. I, para. 4.

MAUGHAM, L.J., went on to say (ibid., at pp. 279, 280) :

On the other hand, it seems to me a matter of the highest possible importance that where a quasi-judicial function is being exercised, under such circumstances as it had to be exercised here, with the result of depriving people of their property, especially if it is done without compensation, the persons concerned should be satisfied that nothing unfair has been done in the matter, and that ex parte statements have not been heard before the decision has been given without any chance for the persons concerned to refute those statements. That seems to me a matter of the greatest possible public importance, and if I am right in the view that I have expressed as to the functions of the Minister being of a quasi-judicial character, I think it follows that in the special circumstances of this case, as I understand them to be, the court has no option but to quash the order . . .

The events under consideration there occurred after the holding of the public inquiry, and, indeed, what is more important, after the time when the Minister began to act in a quasi-judicial capacity. I think that counsel for the Minister must be right when he suggests that the Minister of Health must at some stages be acting purely administratively, that there will come a time when he will be acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, and that thereafter he may again enter on a period when he is acting administratively. Counsel for the Minister called the attention of the court to the duty imposed on local authorities by the Housing Act, 1936, s. 71.

Regard must be had not only to Errington's case (1), but also to Offer v. Minister of Health (2). That is also a decision of the Court of Appeal. I think it is sufficient if I refer to one or two sentences from the judgments in that case. GREER, L.J., said ([1936] 1 K.B. 40, at p. 47) :

In these circumstances, I have not the slightest doubt that in dealing with the subject-matter, when he comes finally to deal with it, the Minister is acting in a semi-judicial capacity, and once the objections have been heard, and the report has been made, the Minister is not entitled, as we held in Errington v. Minister of Health (1), to hear one side in the absence of the other ; that is to say, that he is not entitled to hear the local authority in the absence of the property-owning objector, or to hear the property-owning objector in the absence of the local authority ; he must in giving his final decision act judicially.

Referring to the duty of making an investigation and calling for a report, GREER, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 48) :

To my mind Parliament intended that these semi-official duties should be conferred upon a Minister who naturally will have some knowledge of the matter before he begins his semi-judicial inquiry, and will possibly have had communications with the local authority before what I have called the "lis" is joined between the objecting property owners and the local authority, and who will therefore have some knowledge and have given some opinion about the matter.

It seems to me that GREER, L.J., is there having regard to the type of letters that are before me in this case. Later GREER, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 49) :

I see no reason whatever to suppose that the order was made under any such circumstances, or that anything improper was done from beginning to end. I agree, although perhaps not for entirely the same reasons, with the decision of the learned judge. I see nothing in the decision in this case at all inconsistent or contrary to the decision in Errington v. Minister of Health (1). That case is quite a different case from the present one, dependent upon different facts and dependent upon the action of the Minister, after a public inquiry had been held, in continuing in private part of that inquiry after the public inquiry into the objections had been held and before the time when the Minister confirmed the order.

I think it is clear that many documents must come into the possession of the Minister while he is acting administratively, and before a time when he enters on semi-judicial duties, or, to use the language of GREER, L.J.:

... before ... the "lis" is joined between the objecting property owners and the local authority.

The Minister, in the nature of things, it seems to me, must enter on his quasi-judicial duties with much knowledge acquired administratively. I think the case with which I am dealing is different on its facts from Stafford v. Minister of Health (3). It more nearly resembles Miller v. Minister of Health (4). In his judgment in that case, HENN COLLINS J., said ([1946] K.B., 626, at pp. 628, 629):

That does not mean, as the authorities have shown, that he is not to use any knowledge which has come to him, so to speak, extra-judicially, but all the material which has been formulated for his judicial consideration must be available ... to ... both sides.

It is sufficient if I deal with the present case on its own facts. For the reasons I have indicated, I am satisfied that there has been no sort of prejudice to the objectors owing to the fact that they did not have these two letters before them. Apart from that, I am of the opinion that it was not necessary to have laid before the objectors copies of those two letters. On the facts of this case, I am persuaded that there has not been anything which is outside the powers of the Minister under the Act, and that there has not been anything which violates the principle of natural justice. In my opinion, this application fails.

Application dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Preston, Lane-Clayton & O'Kelly, agents for Pye-Smith and Pepler, Bath (for the applicants); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the Minister of Health).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re CATALINAS WAREHOUSES AND MOLE CO., LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), December 9, 1946.]

Companies—Winding-up—Distribution of surplus assets—Profits—Rights of shareholders—Right to dividend in respect of period before winding-up—Necessity for declaration of dividends—Construction of articles.

The capital of a company was divided into preference shares and ordinary shares and the articles of association provided that preference shareholders were to be entitled to a preferential dividend out of the profits of each year of 4 per cent. on the amount paid up on their shares. Out of the surplus profits the ordinary shareholders were to be paid a dividend of 4 per cent. on the amount paid up on their shares and "the balance of the profits. . . available for dividends" was to be applied in paying a dividend to both classes of shareholders treated as one class. The directors were to have power, with the sanction of the company in general meeting and subject to any preferential rights then existing, to declare dividends, and, before recommending any dividend, they could set aside any sum they thought proper as a reserve fund. Preferential dividends were paid for the year ending Dec. 31, 1944, but no ordinary dividends had been paid after the year ending Dec. 31, 1929. During 1945 the company made profits which would have been sufficient to pay the preferential dividends for that year and a dividend on the ordinary shares, but no dividend for that year had been declared or recommended. On Feb. 28, 1946, the company went into voluntary liquidation. A large sum of money was realised by the liquidators and the question arose whether the profits for 1945 ought to be applied in the winding-up in payment of dividends in accordance with the articles of association. It was contended by the preference shareholders that the articles gave them a right to dividend which was not affected by the fact that there had been no declaration of dividend:—

Held: on the true construction of the company's articles, the right to payment of a dividend arose only after a dividend had been declared, and, therefore, as no dividend for 1945 had been declared or recommended and the company had gone into liquidation, the shareholders had no right to dividend out of the profits for that year.

Re W. Foster & Son, Ltd. (2) approved and followed.

[AS TO THE DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS ASSETS OF A COMPANY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 5, pp. 702, 703, para. 1172; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, pp. 1002—1008, Nos. 6961—6991.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Bridgewater Navigation Co., [1891] 2 Ch. 317; 60 L.J.Ch. 415; 64 L.T. 576; 10 Digest 1005, 6977.
- (2) Re W. Foster & Son, Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 314; 111 L.J.Ch. 221; 167 L.T. 121; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Crichton's Oil Co., [1902] 2 Ch. 86; 71 L.J.Ch. 531; 86 L.T. 787; 10 Digest 1006, 6980.
- (4) Bond v. Barrow Haematite Steel Co., [1902] 1 Ch. 353; 71 L.J. Ch. 246; 86 L.T. 10; 9 Digest 587, 3934.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS by the joint liquidators of a company which was wound up on Feb. 28, 1946, to determine questions arising as to the distribution of surplus assets on the voluntary liquidation of the company. Although the profits of the company would have been sufficient to pay a dividend on the preference shares for 1945 and leave over some surplus for dividend on the ordinary shares, no dividends had been declared or recommended. The preference shareholders contended that the articles of association, on their true construction, gave them a title to the profits of each year, without the necessity for a declaration of dividend. The facts and the relevant articles appear in the judgment.

Montagu L. Gedge for the liquidators.

Charles R. Russell for a preference shareholder.

J. G. Strangman for an ordinary shareholder.

WYNN-PARRY, J. : This summons raises certain questions in the liquidation of Catalinas Warehouses and Mole Co., Ltd., which went into voluntary liquidation on Feb. 28, 1946. The applicants are the joint liquidators and to raise the first question there are joined a holder of preference shares and a holder of ordinary shares.

The memorandum of association, by cl. 5, states the capital of the company, but does not attach any rights to any class of shares, and, therefore, it is necessary to turn to the articles of association. By them the capital is divided into preference shares and ordinary shares, and by art. 24 it is provided :

The holders of the preference shares shall be entitled to receive out of the profits of each year a preferential dividend for such year at the rate of 4 per cent. on the amount for the time being paid up on the preference shares held by them respectively; and if the company shall be wound up, the surplus assets shall be applied in the first place in repaying to the holders of preference shares the amount paid up or credited as paid up thereon.

Article 25 provides :

The surplus profits in each year shall be applied in or towards payment of a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. for such year on the amount paid up or credited as paid up on the ordinary shares, and the balance (if any) of the profits of the company for such year available for dividend shall be applied in payment of a dividend rateably upon the amount paid up or credited as paid up on the said preference and ordinary shares alike, treated as one class.

By arts. 80—83 :

80. The directors may, with the sanction of the company in general meeting, and subject to any preferential rights for the time being existing, declare a dividend to be paid to the members in proportion to the amounts credited as paid upon their shares. 81. The directors may, before recommending any dividend, set aside out of the profits of the company such sum as they think proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies, or for equalising dividends or for repairing or maintaining the property of the company, or any part thereof, or for any other purposes of the company; and may from time to time apply the whole or any part of such fund for any purposes of the company. 82. No dividend shall be payable except out of the profits of the company which may include subsidies or guaranteed interest received by the company. 83. When, in the opinion of the directors, the profits of the company permit, interim dividends may be declared and paid by the board, on account of the dividend for the then current year.

There is in the hands of the liquidators a large sum in excess of a million pounds which has been realised in the liquidation and they expect a further substantial sum, £500,000, to come into their hands. It is because of the presence of these funds that the question which I have to deal with becomes material. The preferential dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. was paid on the preference shares for the year ending Dec. 31, 1944, having been declared on Aug. 23, 1945. No dividend has been paid on the ordinary shares since May 28, 1930, in respect of the year ending Dec. 31, 1929. In the year ending Dec. 31, 1945, the company made profits which would have been available for distribution by way of dividend, but the actual amount has not yet been ascertained. I am told that, from figures which have been received by the liquidators, it appears that such profits would have been sufficient to pay a dividend on the preference shares for the year and leave over some surplus available for dividend on the ordinary shares, but no dividend has been recommended by the board in respect of that year. During the two months ended Feb. 28, 1946, which was the date of liquidation, the company made further profits which would have been available for distribution by way of dividend and would have provided the preferential dividend for that period and left a surplus available for dividends on the ordinary shares. No interim dividend was, however, declared, and no dividend has been recommended by the board in respect of that period.

Certain of the preference and ordinary shareholders have claimed that the profits of the company for the year ending Dec. 31, 1945, and for the two months ending Feb. 28, 1946, ought to be applied in the winding-up in payment of dividends in accordance with arts. 24 and 25 of the articles of association. That at once raises a question of what is the true construction of these articles. In my view, the correct course in a case such as this is for the court to construe the articles as in the case of any other document on which a question of construction is raised, and then to consider the articles so construed in the light of any relevant authority. It is, of course, an elementary canon of construction that the articles must be read as a whole.

It was contended on behalf of the preference shareholders that, on its true construction, art. 24 contains language which amounts to constituting a title in the owners of the preference shares to the profits of each year, and that the result is that, before these profits can belong to them, it is not essential that there should be any declaration of dividend, at any rate so far as regards the claim made after the liquidation of the company and in respect of the period between the last declaration of dividend and the winding-up. For that proposition reliance was placed on Re Bridgwater Navigation Co. (1), where the language was somewhat stronger, the article in question stating that the profits should belong to the shareholders. In my view, this article is not as strong in its language as the article in the Bridgwater case (1). The true scheme of this set of articles is that the decision whether in any year a dividend shall be declared and paid rests primarily with the company in general meeting. If, and only if, the necessary resolution is passed under art. 80, does the right to payment of a dividend arise, but in exercising its rights under art. 80 the company must give effect to the provisions of arts. 24 and 25 as regards the apportionment of money decided to be distributed to the respective classes of shareholders. Therefore, in my view, the right of the holders of the preference shares under art. 24 is not an absolute right, but, on the true construction of the articles taken as a whole, depends on the necessary declaration of dividend. That this construction is the correct one is, I think, emphasised by reference to art. 25, where it is provided that "the balance (if any) of the profits of the company for such year available for dividend shall be applied" as therein directed. As was pointed out by counsel for the ordinary shareholders, the fund which is being dealt with in these two articles is the same, the profits of each year. Although the phrase "available for dividend" only appears in art. 25, it must still mean the same fund and, really, the fund which is being dealt with is the profits which are available for dividend.

Construing the articles in this way, I come to the conclusion that the case is completely covered by the previous decision of BENNETT, J., in Re W. Foster & Son, Ltd. (2). In that case the articles, to which I need not refer in detail, are admittedly in all substantial respects indistinguishable in their provisions from the articles which I have to consider. In his judgment, BENNETT, J., said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 314, at pp. 315, 316, :

The real question, in my opinion, is whether, as a matter of principle, the court can, in dealing with surplus assets after the company has gone into liquidation, regard any part of the surplus assets as being profits and so available for distribution amongst the shareholders in accordance with their rights under the company's articles of association, or whether, once the company has gone into liquidation, everything that the company has, after it has satisfied its debts, is to be regarded as surplus assets and to be distributed amongst the members without regard to the particular provisions in the articles dealing with the payment of dividends which, prima facie, apply only while the company is a going concern. Counsel for the ordinary shareholders, relying upon a decision of the Court of Appeal in Re Crichton's Oil Co. (3) has argued that once the company has passed a resolution for liquidation, the provisions in the articles with regard to the declaration of dividends come to an end, and that after the debts have been paid, all that the company has is to be regarded as surplus assets and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the articles of association dealing with surplus assets. When one examines the grounds of the decision in Re Crichton's Oil Co. (3), that is the principle upon which that decision is based. Prima facie, when a winding up has commenced, a dividend is no longer payable. Prima facie, a dividend is a payment made to the shareholders whilst the company is a going concern, and when, as is the case with this company, there is a provision in the articles of association which enables the directors to declare a dividend, and which gives the shareholders no right to a dividend unless the directors declare it, the shareholders have no right as against the company to be paid a dividend. That was the view expressed by FARWELL, J., in Bond v. Barrow Haematite Steel Co. (4). ([1902] 1 Ch. 353, at p. 362), where he says that the necessity for the declaration of a dividend is a condition precedent to an action to recover. When the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Crichton Oil Co. case (3) is carefully considered, prima facie where a dividend is being declared either by the directors with the sanction of the company, or by the company itself in general meeting, a shareholder's right to a dividend comes to an end as soon as the company ceases to be a going concern, and as soon as the liquidation of the company begins.

It was urged by counsel for the preference shareholders that BENNETT, J., had misinterpreted the reasoning of the court in Re Crichton's Oil Co. (3). I am unable to agree with that submission. In my view, with all respect, BENNETT, J., correctly interpreted the decision in Re Crichton's Oil Co. (3), and, in my judgment, it follows that this question, which is primarily one of construction, is completely covered by that decision. I, therefore, propose to declare accordingly, so a declaration will be made that the preference shares and the ordinary shares have no right to dividend in respect of any period before the commencement of the winding up.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Bischoff & Co. (for all parties).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HILL AND ANOTHER v. HILL

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), December 5, 1946.]

Landlord and Tenant—"Contract for sale or other disposition of land or interest in land"—Option to purchase—Option to take new lease—Memorandum of contract—Inclusion in new lease of option to purchase—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40.

By a lease dated Dec. 18, 1936, a landlord demised to a tenant premises for five years from Dec. 25, 1936, at a rent of £1 a week. By cl. 6 of the lease it was provided that if, on the death of the landlord at any time during the term, the tenant wished to purchase the premises and gave notice of his desire to the personal representatives of the landlord within three months after the latter's death, the personal representatives would convey the premises to the tenant on payment by him of £900. By cl. 7: "If the tenant shall be desirous of taking a new lease of the demised premises after the expiration of the term hereby granted . . . then the landlord will . . . grant to the tenant a new lease of the premises hereby demised for a further term of five years . . . at the same rent and with and subject to the same covenants and conditions as in this present lease reserved and contained (this present covenant for renewal excepted) " In July, 1941, the tenant gave to the landlord a notice in the following terms: "Ref. the lease of shop premises . . . dated Dec. 25 (sic)., 1936. This is the six months' notice required to renew the said lease for a further five years from Dec. 25, 1941, to Dec. 25, 1946, as [per] the instructions on the present lease now held." The landlord accepted that notice and thereby agreed to grant, while the tenant agreed to take, a new lease. No new lease was executed in pursuance of that agreement. In the rent book for 1942 the tenant wrote the heading: "Renewed lease Dec. 25, 1941," and throughout the year the landlord initialled the book against the weekly payments of rent by the tenant. In January, 1943, the landlord died. On Feb. 9 the tenant gave notice purporting to exercise the option to purchase contained in cl. 6 of the lease.

HELD: (i) assuming the agreement came to between the landlord and the tenant in July, 1941, to be a "contract for the sale or other disposition of land or any interest in land" within s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, (observations of ASTBURY, J., in Morrell v. Studd and Millington ([1913] 2 Ch. 648, at p. 659) questioned), the initials inserted in the rent book during 1942, which referred to and authenticated the words: "Renewed lease Dec. 25, 1941", constituted a memorandum or note of the contract, signed by the party to be charged.

(ii) the option to purchase the premises contained in cl. 6 of the original lease formed one of the terms of the new lease granted to the tenant in July, 1941.

Sherwood v. Tucker (3) distinguished. Batchelor v. Murphy (4) applied.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Morrell v. Studd and Millington, [1913] 2 Ch. 648; 83 L.J.Ch. 114; 109 L.T. 628; 12 Digest 72, 418.
- (2) Goss v. Nugent (Lord) (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 58; 2 Nev. & M.K.B. 28; 2 L.J.K.B. 127; 110 E.R. 713; 12 Digest 354, 2941.
- (3) Long v. Millar (1879), 4 C.P.D. 450; 48 L.J.Q.B. 596; 41 L.T. 306; 43 J.P. 797; 12 Digest 141, 956.
- (4) Stokes v. Whicher, [1920] 1 Ch. 411; 89 L.J.Ch. 198; 123 L.T. 23; 12 Digest 143, 967.
- (5) Sherwood v. Tucker, [1924] 2 Ch. 440; 94 L.J. Ch. 66; 132 L.T. 86; 30 Digest 473, 1361.
- (6) Batchelor v. Murphy, [1925] Ch. 220; affd., [1926] A.C. 63; 95 L.J.Ch. 89; 134 L.T. 161; 30 Digest 498, 1567.

APPEAL by defendant and cross-appeal by plaintiffs from a decision of VAISEY, J. The facts appear in the judgment of MORTON, L.J.

Christie, K.C., and H. A. Rose for defendant.

Montgomery White, K.C., and E. M. Winterbotham for plaintiffs.

MORTON, L.J.: The plaintiffs in this case are the legal personal representatives of James Frederick Hill, who died on Jan. 3, 1943, and was the father of the defendant. The first question which arises on this appeal and cross-appeal is: Did the father and the son enter into an effective and enforceable agreement that the son should have a new lease of a house called No. 9, Nimmings Road, which he held as tenant of his father, on the expiry, on Dec. 25, 1941, of a lease granted by the father to the son on Dec. 18, 1936? That first question can be divided into three sub-headings: (a) What was the contract between the father and the son?; (b) was it a contract which fell within s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925?; and, (c) if so, is there a memorandum in writing of that contract signed by the party to be charged within the meaning of that section. The second question, which is quite separate, is: Assuming that the son succeeds on the issues which I have mentioned, did an option to purchase the house which was contained in the original lease form one of the terms of the new lease to be granted to the son? VAISEY, J., decided, in favour of the defendant, that there was an agreement to grant such a new lease as I have described. He also decided that that agreement was not of such a character as to come within s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, so that no memorandum in writing was required. He, therefore, decided the first main question in favour of the son, and held that the son was entitled to have a new lease which would begin as from Dec. 25, 1941. The learned judge, however, decided the second point against the son, and took the view that the option to purchase contained in the original lease would not be reproduced in the new lease. The result was that his decision in favour of the son on the first question was of little use to the son, because the really vital thing from the son's point of view was that he should have an option to purchase the house. In these circumstances, the son appeals, and there is a cross-appeal by the plaintiffs (the executors) who seek to say that any agreement that was made between the father and the son did require a memorandum in writing under s. 40 of the 1925 Act and that there is no such memorandum in existence. A

In 1936 the father and the son were living on the outskirts of Birmingham. The son lived at No. 9, Nimmings Road, and was carrying on a business there as well. The father was living next-door to him. On Dec. 18, 1936, the original lease was executed. It was made between the father, "hereinafter called 'the landlord' which expression shall where the context so admits include the persons deriving title under him", of the one part, and the son, "hereinafter called 'the tenant' which expression shall where the context so admits include the persons deriving title under him", of the other part. There was a demise by the father to the son of "all that shop and dwelling-house, known as No. 9, Nimmings Road and now in the occupation of the tenant." The habendum was : B

To hold the same unto the tenant from Dec. 25, 1936, for the term of five years paying therefor yearly during the said term the rent of £52 by equal weekly payments of £1 payable every Monday the first of such payments (being a proportionate part of such rent) to be made on Jan. 4, 1937. C

The material clauses are cl. 6 and 7. Clause 6 reads :

(a) If on the death of the landlord at any time during the term hereby granted the tenant shall be desirous of purchasing the fee simple of the demised premises and of such his desire shall within three calendar months after the death of the landlord deliver to the personal representatives of the landlord or leave for them or send by registered post to them at the last known place of abode of the landlord in England or Wales notice in writing then the personal representatives of the landlord will upon the expiration of such notice and upon payment of the sum of £900 with interest thereon at the rate of £5 per centum per annum from the expiration of the notice until the actual completion of the purchase and of all rent hereby reserved up to such expiration convey the demised premises to the tenant or as he shall direct for an estate in fee simple in possession [subject to certain covenants and restrictions] . . . (b) The landlord's title to the property having been already investigated by the tenant up to the date of this lease shall be deemed to be accepted by him up to such date and he shall only be entitled to investigate the subsequent title thereto an abstract whereof shall (if required) be delivered to him within three months after the service of the said notice. (c) The purchaser shall make all requisitions in respect of the title within seven days after the delivery of the abstract . . . (d) The sale shall be made in all other respects subject to the conditions of sale of the Birmingham Law Society in force at the date of this lease. D

By cl. 7 :

If the tenant shall be desirous of taking a new lease of the demised premises after the expiration of the term hereby granted and of such his desire shall deliver to the landlord or leave for him or send by registered post to him at his last known place of abode in England or Wales notice in writing not less than six months before the expiration of the said term then the landlord will at or before the expiration of the term hereby granted if there shall then be no subsisting breach of any of the tenant's obligations under this present lease at the cost of the tenant grant to the tenant a new lease of the premises hereby demised for a further term of five years to commence from and after the expiration of the term hereby granted at the same rent and with and subject to the same covenants and conditions as in this present lease reserved and contained (this present covenant for renewal excepted). E

I shall have to return to that clause later, but I observe at the moment, first, that what is contemplated is that in the event mentioned the tenant shall have a new lease and not merely a continuation of his present tenancy. Secondly, the reference to the "term" is to the term granted by the lease of Dec. 18, 1936, and when the clause refers to "this present lease," I think there is no doubt that the draftsman is referring to the document of Dec. 18, 1936, and not to the term granted thereby. Finally, and this is to my mind a very important G point, it is to be noted that there is an express exception of cl. 7 of the lease. Apart from that express exception, the new lease is to be "at the same rent and with and subject to the same covenants and conditions as in this present lease"—that is, the document of Dec. 18, 1936—"reserved and contained."

That lease having been executed, the defendant continued to live at No. 9, Nimmings Road, until the lease expired. He paid his rent regularly, and the rent was entered in rent books which have been made an exhibit in the case. I might, perhaps, refer briefly to the rent books for 1937 onwards. The 1937 rent book contains the names of the father and the son on the outside, which were, according to the evidence, written by the son. Inside in the son's writing there is: "Underlease dated Dec. 18, 1936." The name of the tenant is "F. Hill." The rent is entered as 20s. per week, and on the right-hand side of the centre page there is week by week entered the sum of 20s., and the initials, "F.H." According to the evidence, these initials are the initials of the father, and he wrote them in week by week on receiving the rent, although in fact the father's full initials were J.F.H. Substantially similar entries appear in the rent books for 1938, 1939, 1940 and 1941. In the 1938 rent book the written heading is: "Lease Dec. 18, 1936"; in 1939: "Under lease 18/12/36"; in 1940: "Lease dated Dec. 18, 1936"; and in 1941, by an obvious clerical error: "Lease dated Dec. 12, 1936."

When the lease was drawing near to its end there occurred certain events, and I think the best course is to read the judge's findings of fact as to what happened. He said:

The son went into occupation of the property and there remained, and, when June 25, 1941, came, which was six calendar months before the expiration of the original term, he had not served any notice to extend the tenancy. There is no doubt that, as this document was dated after the coming into operation of the Law of Property Act, 1925, "month" means calendar month, so that, when the lease talks about "six months", it means six calendar months and not six lunar months. June 25 having elapsed, I find as a fact on the evidence that on Sunday, July 6, the father, who lived next door to the defendant, but who was, apparently, not on particularly good terms with him, sent a message to the defendant and asked him to come in and see him. The defendant went in and saw his father and there was some conversation which, perhaps not surprisingly after five years, was not very clearly described to me, in the course of which the father said: "What about your lease. I wish you would let me know what you want, because I would like you to renew it." Thereupon the defendant said: "Oh, all right; I will see to it tomorrow." The father said: "There is no time like the present." The defendant then went back to his own house next door and he wrote out a document on a sort of tear-off memorandum book, so that a carbon copy of it was preserved. Taking this document, there is, first of all, the printed heading of the defendant's notepaper, he being a newsagent, stationer, tobaccoist and fancy goods dealer. It then says: "Mr. James Frederick Hill", that is, the father, to whom it was addressed. "July 7, 1941. Ref."—that is short for "reference," or "referring to"—"the lease of shop premises, No. 9, Nimmings Road, Blackheath, dated Dec. 25, 1936. This is the six months' notice required to renew the said lease for a further five years from Dec. 25, 1941, to the Dec. 25, 1946, as the instructions on the present lease now held. (Signed) F. Hill"—that is, the defendant—"July 7, 1941."

I pause there to say that I think the words, "as the instructions on the present lease now held," must be intended to mean, "as per the instructions," and refer, as I think, to the latter part of cl. 7 of the original lease. VAISEY, J., went on:

The defendant, whose knowledge of the law on such matters seems to have been about as shadowy as that of most people in this country, had one idea firmly fixed in his mind that, if he dated this document on Sunday, it would have no operation, so that he dated it the 7th, which was the Monday following. The son, having brought the original memorandum to his father and retaining in his house a carbon copy, first read it out and then handed it to his father, and then, after some more casual conversation, he and his brother, who was present and who was called as a witness in the trial, went back. No one else was there, except the defendant and his brother and the father.

To that account of the matter I would add two further points: (1) that the renewal notice was found in the father's pocket when he died on Jan. 3, 1943; and (2) certain matters which are dealt with in the evidence. The defendant in his examination-in-chief, after giving an account of the interview on July 6, which is substantially that accepted by the judge, adds this: "It was made out on the Sunday and he"—that is the father—"accepted it, thanked me for it, and put it away, and I left it quite cheerfully." Then the judge asked where it was made out, and he was told. Then he asked: "You took it back to your father. What did he say about it or what did he do?", and the answer was: "When I took it back to him I read it out to him, and he folded it up and put it away in his pocket." Again, the brother, Alfred, who was present, said: "He then read the notice out to my dad, and he handed it to him. My father read it, and then passed the remark: 'Well, that is quite satisfactory now. I am quite satisfied. That will be all right now.'"

In my view, the effect of that conversation, coupled with the terms of the notice, which has already been read, is that the father agreed to grant and the son agreed to take a new lease, "as per the instructions on the present lease now held." The instructions, as I understand the word, are that the new lease shall be, quoting cl. 7 of the original lease, "for a further term of five years . . . at the same rent and with and subject to the same covenants and conditions as in this present lease reserved and contained (this present covenant for renewal excepted)." I think that the father and son must both have realised that the date for giving notice under cl. 7 had passed, because the notice itself is dated July 7 and refers to a six months' notice, and also refers to the date Dec. 25, 1941. In the evidence it was stated that the father seemed worried because the renewal notice had not been given, but I do not suppose either of them cared in the least whether the time had expired or not. I think that what I have just stated was also the judge's view of the matter.

The judge also said in his judgment:

I do not know—it may be a very difficult and a very subtle point—but it seems to me as a matter of common sense that, if the arrangement between the father and the son was that the son could at any time before June 25, 1941, serve a valid notice on the father and thereupon become entitled to a further lease, it is almost ridiculous that the father and the son could not be competent to come together and to say: "Take the notice; never mind whether it is a day or two late; I ask for it; you give it and I accept it" . . . It seems to me, I must confess, idle to say that the father and the son, the testator and the defendant, were not to be competent, whether you call it waiver, whether you call it revision, whether you call it concession, or whatever you like to call it, to say: "This notice is a day or two out of date, I know; but you give it. I will accept it and we will not trouble any more about it" . . . I think that there was an agreement binding on the plaintiffs to grant the reversionary lease, in other words, that the defendant has the right to be tenant under a new lease following the terms of the old lease, from Dec. 25, 1941, to Dec. 25, 1946.

No new lease was ever executed in pursuance of that agreement, but owing to equitable principles that does not affect the son's position if the agreement was made. A very important event, however, occurred in 1942. In January, 1942, the father and son embarked on a new rent book, which was again the same form of rent book, "Chirm's Tenant's Rent Book, 1942." As before, the son wrote on the outside his own name and address as tenant, and his father's name and address as landlord, but the ink heading written in by the son this year was: "Renewed lease Dec. 25, 1941," and the father throughout that year, with the exception of one week when someone else initialled the rent payment, continued to put his initials on that document. There is evidence, too, on the question whether the words, "Renewed lease Dec. 25, 1941," were on the document at the time when the father was putting his initials week by week. The son gave evidence, and I think the judge accepted it, as follows. Referring to the beginning of 1942, he says: "I took him rent in as usual on Monday morning, and we were talking and he definitely called my attention to the fact that this was when the new lease began to operate, and would I mark it under the new lease." Then counsel for the defendant asked: "These initials, 'F.H.'—were they put in there after you had written the various things on the outside and in the body of the book?" (A.): "Yes."

The father having died at the beginning of 1943, the defendant continued in occupation paying the rent. The will was proved by the two plaintiffs on Jan. 29, 1943. On Feb. 9, 1943, the defendant gave notice exercising the option to purchase contained in cl. 6 of the lease, and it is common ground that, if the defendant was entitled to that option to purchase, it was a valid notice. On Mar. 29, 1943, the defendant registered an estate contract with His Majesty's Land Registry.

I refer very briefly to the pleadings to show the shape which the action took. By their statement of claim the plaintiffs claimed that there was no agreement binding on them as executors of the father to sell the premises in question to the defendant, and that the registration of the estate contract should be vacated. The son, in his defence, set up the agreement which I have mentioned, and counterclaimed for a declaration that the plaintiffs, as executors of the father, were bound to grant the defendant a new lease containing a like option to purchase the fee simple as that contained in cl. 6 of the lease of 1936. In their reply and defence to counterclaim, the plaintiffs took the point that there was no memorandum in writing and that they would rely on s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. I have already stated the view which the learned judge took on the questions which arose, and I shall now consider each of these questions in turn.

The first question is : What was the contract between the father and the son ? I have already stated what the contract was, in my view, and I shall not repeat it. Secondly : Was that contract one which fell within s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925 ? That section is in the following terms :

No action may be brought upon any contract for the sale or other disposition of land or any interest in land, unless the agreement upon which such action is brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, is in writing, and signed by the party to be charged or by some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorised.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that this contract was a new contract entered into after the option to take up a new lease had expired, and that it was, therefore, "a contract for the disposition of land or an interest in land." VAISEY, J., thought that the contract did not come within s. 40, and before counsel for the plaintiffs started his admirable argument I was inclined to think that the judge was right in this. I now incline strongly to the view that the agreement does come within s. 40, and that the observations of ASTBURY, J., in Morrell v. Studd and Millington (1) ([1913] 2 Ch. 648, at p. 659), may at some time require further consideration, although the actual decision in the case may well be correct on the first ground stated by ASTBURY, J., I refer in particular to the following sentence (at p. 659) :

Now s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds only requires a note or memorandum of the agreement referred to in the section, which agreement does not come into existence until the offer and acceptance are complete, and therefore an agreement to extend the time for acceptance, or an agreement that an acceptance, which by reason of its date need not be treated as an acceptance, shall be so treated so as to create a contract, is not an agreement which the statute requires to be evidenced in writing, if the note or memorandum contained in the signed offer is otherwise sufficient.

As at present advised, I have some difficulty in reconciling the words beginning, "and therefore," with the subsequent comment by the learned judge on the same page on Goss v. Nugent (Lord) (2) and other similar cases. He says :

They merely decide that when a contract falling within the Statute of Frauds is once made, no conduct or verbal waiver can be relied upon to substitute a different term from one appearing in the contract itself.

However, it is not necessary to express a concluded view on the question, and indeed it would not be right to do so, as we have not heard counsel for the defendant in reply on that point. As we were all of opinion that there is in this case a memorandum sufficient to satisfy s. 40, we were prepared to assume in favour of the plaintiffs that such a memorandum is necessary, but counsel for the defendant might have satisfied us that no memorandum was necessary, and that the observations of ASTBURY, J., which I have quoted can be supported.

The third question is : Assuming that a memorandum is necessary—and we are making that assumption—is such a memorandum produced ? It is, of course, well-established that the signature required by the section may consist only of the initials of the party to be charged. It does not signify in what part of the instrument the signature is to be found, if it is inserted in such a manner as would have the effect of authenticating the relevant parts of the instrument. In the present case, in my view, the initials inserted by the father week by week in the rent book of 1942 do refer to and authenticate the words : "Renewed lease Dec. 25, 1941," as well as acknowledging the receipt of the rent.

What is the meaning of the words : "Renewed lease December 25, 1941 ?" I think the effect is that this document, initialled by the father, recognises that his son is the tenant, paying 20s. a week, or £52 a year, under a document or documents described as "renewed lease." I say, a document or documents," because, if there is a lease which has been renewed, it would ordinarily happen that the renewal was done by some document such as a notice. As to the date, December 25, 1941, that, I think, would prima facie appear to be the date of the "renewed lease," but it might be the commencing date of the new tenancy. As there is here a reference to a document or documents, that document or those documents can be identified by parol evidence. That is established by the decision of this court in Long v. Millar (3), where BAGGALLAY, L.J., said (4 C.P.D. 450, at p. 455):

The true principle is that there must exist a writing to which the document signed by the party to be charged can refer, but that this writing may be identified by verbal evidence.

THESIGER, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 456):

When it is proposed to prove the existence of a contract by several documents, it must appear upon the face of the instrument signed by the party to be charged that reference is made to another document; and this omission cannot be supplied by verbal evidence. If, however, it appears from the instrument itself that another document is referred to, that document may be identified by verbal evidence.

A recent illustration of the application of that principle is to be found in Stokes v. Whicher (4).

To my mind, the document referred to by the words, "Renewed lease," is identified by the evidence as being the notice of July 7, 1941, plus the lease of December 18, 1936, which is referred to expressly in that document. The two documents are linked together by the reference in the notice to the lease of 1936. Looking at the three documents—the rent book, the notice and the lease of 1936—the whole of the terms of the contract plainly appear. There is, as I have said, the signature by the father in the form of initials, and the date, "December 25, 1941," is explained, when one looks at the documents referred to, as being the date of the commencement of the tenancy which is recognised by the father in the rent book. The description, "Renewed lease December 25, 1941," is a loose one, but it fits nothing else than those two linked documents, which together constitute, in rather loose parlance, a renewed lease, being a lease with its renewal notice. Notwithstanding the very ingenious arguments addressed to us by counsel for the plaintiff on this branch of the case, I do not think that there is, as they suggest, a gap as to the terms of the contract which has to be supplied by verbal evidence.

For these reasons, in my view, the son is a tenant under the new lease which has not been executed, but which he is entitled to have executed. The result is that on this part of the case I agree with the decision of the judge, though I have arrived at the same conclusion by a somewhat different route.

I must now deal with the counterclaim, which was dismissed by VAISEY, J., and consider whether the new lease, to which the son is entitled, should contain a reproduction of cl. 6 of the 1936 lease, conferring the option to purchase. The issue may be stated thus: Does cl. 7, conferring the option to extend the lease, contemplate a mere extension or a new lease corresponding in its terms to the lease of 1936, with one exception? The judge obviously felt considerable doubt on the matter. After referring to Sherwood v. Tucker (5), and Batchelor v. Murphy (6), he pointed out that there had been a conflict of judicial opinion in those cases, and said:

I hold that the option to purchase was not one of those terms which would have been included in the new lease had it been granted in pursuance of the executory contract which I have already decided came into existence.

I have arrived at a different conclusion. Looking at cl. 7 apart from any authority, it starts with the words: "If the tenant shall be desirous of taking a new lease of the demised premises"—not "of extending the term," but, "of taking a new lease"—after "the expiration of the term hereby granted . . .," that is, the term granted by the 1936 lease. Then there is the reference to the six months' notice, and the clause proceeds: "will . . . grant to the tenant a new lease"—again the same phrase—"of the premises hereby demised." Then the term is stated, and it concludes: "at the same rent and with and subject to the same covenants and conditions as in this present lease reserved and contained (this present covenant for renewal excepted)." I attach great importance to two features of that clause—(1) the words, “a new lease,” and, (2) the exception contained at the end of it. Clauses 6 and 7 are alike in that they are not part of the ordinary terms of a tenancy. They give a collateral advantage to the tenant, and it seems to me clear that cl. 6 is intended to be included in the new lease when cl. 7, but not cl. 6, is expressly excepted.

I shall refer briefly to the two cases cited by the learned judge in his judgment. Sherwood v. Tucker (3) was, in my view, a very different case from the present. What happened there was that by a tenancy agreement in writing dated October 29, 1914, and made between the defendant landlord, of the one part, and the plaintiff tenant, of the other part, the landlord agreed to let and the tenant to take a certain house and premises for a term of three years from December 25, 1914, at £36 per annum rent. The tenant agreed to pay the rent and keep the interior in repair, fair wear and tear excepted. The landlord agreed to keep the exterior in repair. It was further agreed that “the said tenant shall have the right to purchase the said house and premises during the three years hereby provided for, for the sum of £700 sterling.” On June 17, 1917, during the pendency of this tenancy agreement the parties added and signed the following endorsement: “We the undersigned hereby agree that this lease be extended for three years expiring December 25, 1920.” There was a further extension in December, 1920, the endorsement being: “We the undersigned hereby agree that this lease be extended for three years expiring December 25, 1923.” These endorsements were settled informally by the parties. ASTBURY, J., held, on the construction of the documents, that the parties intended to extend the lease or tenancy agreement with all its provisions, collateral or otherwise, and that the option was extended accordingly. The Court of Appeal took a different view, and I think that view was based on reasons which I can quote from a short passage in the judgment of SARGANT, L.J., who said ([1924] 2 Ch. 440, at p. 449):

Turning to this document, the phrase is “this lease be extended for three years.” What does that mean? Does it mean that the term is to be extended or that the contract is to be extended with all its incidents? I think the word “extension” is not really strictly applicable, properly used, with regard to the document. You cannot extend the document. You cannot extend the actual lease. It is a word properly applicable to the extension of the term of years granted by the lease, though I incline to think that a very slight alteration of the terms here might have produced a different result. If the parties had agreed that the house should be taken for a further term of three years upon all the terms upon which it was taken under this contract the result might very likely have been different.

To my mind, the present case is just the sort of case that SARGANT, L.J., is contemplating when he uses these words. He proceeds:

But on the whole I cannot find in this document anything more than an extension, and an extension is prima facie applicable to the term granted, and does not necessarily involve the further grant of an option of purchase which is not itself one of the incidents of a tenancy strictly speaking.

Batchelor v. Murphy (6) was a case in which the relevant words were: “The said Alfred Henry Murphy and C. L. Murphy to execute a new lease for the unexpired term of eight years and six months from Oct. 6 last”—that was the unexpired term of an existing lease—“on the same terms and conditions in all respects as the lease of October 17, 1913, with the exception of the rent.” Then there was a proviso for reduction of the rent. TOMLIN, J., held, on the construction of the memorandum, that it only provided for a new lease containing the same tenancy provisions as the original lease, and that, as an option to purchase in a lease was not a term of the tenancy but a collateral bargain between the parties, the defendants had not acquired an option to purchase the freehold. The Master of the Rolls agreed with the view of TOMLIN, J., but the other two members of the court, WARRINGTON and SARGANT, L.JJ., differed from TOMLIN, J., and the appeal was allowed. In the course of his judgment, SARGANT, L.J., referred to his own observations in Sherwood v. Tucker (3), which I have already read, and he then said, after quoting that passage ([1925] Ch. 220, at p. 233):

In my judgment that is really precisely what has taken place in the case which we are now deciding. The parties agree to take a new document the contents of which can be ascertained and determined by reference to the existing document—namely, the lease of Oct. 17, 1913. In that view of the matter, it appears to me that we must come to the conclusion, or I have to come to the conclusion, that the option passes, because there can be no doubt that the portion of the existing document which created the option formed a part of the terms and conditions broadly speaking of the existing document.

The case went to the House of Lords, and the House affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal without calling on counsel for the respondent. I need only refer to one short passage in the speech of LORD ATKINSON. He said, ([1926] A.C. 63, at p. 69):

In my opinion when the parties used the words that the new lease is to contain all the terms and conditions in all respects as the lease of Oct. 17, 1913, which, of course, means contained in the lease of Oct. 17, 1913, they could use no words that are more expressive to convey the idea that the new lease is to be a replica of the old lease save and except in the two points of duration of the time and rent.

I think that those words are directly applicable to the present case, and that the new lease is to be a replica of the old lease, except that cl. 7 is not to be included in it.

Counsel for the plaintiffs drew attention to certain difficulties which might arise if cl. 6 were incorporated in the new lease. He pointed out, quite accurately, that if the words: "if on the death of the landlord at any time during the term hereby granted," were incorporated in the new lease they would refer to the term of the new lease, and that the words could have no effect at all if the father had happened to die before the new lease came into effect. That is true, but the only result is that in that event the option would be valueless. He also drew attention to the fact that under (b) the landlord's title had not been examined by the tenant up to the date of the new lease, and, therefore, the words would not accurately fit the facts, and that under (d) it was difficult to apply the reference to: "the conditions of sale of the Birmingham Law Society in force at the date of this lease," to a lease which was granted some five years later. These points are certainly points which would have to be carefully considered by the draftsman in drafting the new lease, but I personally feel no doubt that, on the true construction of cl. 7 of the 1936 lease, the parties intended cl. 6 to be inserted in the new lease which the son chose to take, and they intended that the clause in the new lease should begin with the words: "If on the death of the landlord at any time during the term hereby granted . . ." How the draftsman would have resolved the minor difficulties to which counsel called attention, I need not pause to consider, but I think an observation made by WARRINGTON, L.J., in the course of the argument in Batchelor v. Murphy (4) applies very aptly to the present case. WARRINGTON, L.J. said, ([1925] Ch. 120, at p. 224):

If a solicitor had been instructed to prepare a new lease, would he have been justified in omitting the option?

In my view he would not. For these reasons, I think that the cross-appeal must be dismissed, and the appeal succeeds.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree with the judgment which has been delivered and the reasons for the conclusions arrived at expressed in it by MORTON, L.J. On the question whether the agreement between father and son was within s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and on the question of the counterclaim, that is to say, whether the option to purchase is to be treated as included in the lease, I do not desire to add anything to what has been already said. I wish, however, to add a few observations on the question of the note or memorandum, particularly in view of the fact that the learned judge, although he did not think a memorandum was necessary on the view which he took, expressed in the course of his judgment a view adverse to the conclusion to which we have come, namely, that the rent book can be regarded as a memorandum, not, of course, complete, but as a memorandum which may be made the basis of an answer to the defence under s. 40. Taking the words "Renewed lease" as they appear in 1942 with the father's initials, in my view, those words denote either a new lease or an agreement to grant a new lease, and I think they are capable of meaning either.

My Lord has already cited the principle as laid down by BAGGALLAY, L.J., in Long v. Millar (3), and I will not repeat it. The evidence shows that the son expressed his willingness to renew the lease and embodied that in the document of July 7, 1941. I think there are two ways in which this document can be looked at, but, treating it as a notice (albeit out of time) under the lease of December 18, 1936, the rent book signed by the father seems to me to show that he accepted it as a good notice as he clearly could and thereby became under a liability to grant a new lease. As the document of July 7, 1941—and there was no dispute about this—refers to the lease of 1936, and as that document sets out the terms on which the renewed lease was to be granted, the memorandum of agreement required by the section seems to me to be complete.

Another way in which it could be looked at occurred to me in the course of the argument, particularly in the light of the argument of counsel for the plaintiffs that once the date six months before the end of the first lease had been passed the whole machinery of notice under that document was dead. Under that document the son had a right to have the lease renewed if he gave the notice as provided for in it before the period stipulated expired. He had allowed that time to pass and counsel submitted that that machinery was, as it were, dead and nothing could revive it except something in writing signed by the parties and directed to the particular point of the extension of time. On that basis, I again start from my view that the rent book is evidence of an agreement between the parties for a new lease. That agreement must have resulted from an offer and acceptance. The evidence—and one is entitled on the authorities to have regard to this evidence—shows that the offer was made by the son at the request of the father and was embodied in the document of July 7, 1941. On this view the son is not exercising a right out of time under the original lease, but the agreement evidenced by the notice is to be treated as an offer by the son accepted by the father. On this view the form of the document of July 7 is admittedly misconceived in that the son is wrong in thinking that he could put forward a notice under the original lease, but I think on this view this document can and should be treated as an offer by the son to take a renewal of the lease which was accepted verbally by the father, the rent book of 1942 and the father's initials in it being a memorandum of the agreement which resulted from that offer and acceptance.

Those are the reasons which led me to the conclusion that there was here a sufficient memorandum and, as I say, I do not desire to go into the other points.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree with the conclusions reached by my brethren and the reasons on which they base those conclusions. I confess that my mind fluctuated during the course of the hearing, but I have come to the conclusion that the father was bound to renew the lease of the premises on the terms specified in cl. 7 of the lease of December 18, 1936; that, on the true construction of cl. 7, the renewed lease must include the option to purchase conferred by cl. 6; and that, if a memorandum in writing of the agreement to grant the new lease was necessary, that memorandum is to be found in the documents indicated by MORTON, L.J.

I only desire to add that on its natural construction the word "lease" in cl. 7 refers to a document and not merely to a relation of landlord and tenant, and that, in view of the words in brackets at the end of the clause, there is no justification for omitting cl. 6 from the renewed lease, notwithstanding that it is a collateral term and would not bind assignees of the reversion. I do not think we should be justified in departing from the natural meaning of the words used merely because the insertion of the clause in the new lease might not have helped the son if, for instance, the reversion had been assigned before the option to purchase was exercised.

I arrive at this conclusion without regard to the circumstances, but if and so far as it is permissible to look at them, they seem to me to support the conclusion we have reached. This was a lease by a father to his son of premises which, to the father's knowledge, were both the residence and place of business of the son. The father desired to give his son the certainty of being able, if the father died, to retain the premises, and it seems to me highly unlikely that he would have wished the son to have this opportunity if the father died during the original term and not to have it if he died during the extended term.

Appeal allowed: cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Dennison, Horne & Co., agents for B. H. Bate & Son, Birmingham (for defendant); Stafford Clark & Co., for G. Green, Birmingham (for plaintiffs).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ARNO, HEALEY v. ARNO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), November 29, December 2, 3, 1946.]

Rentcharges and Annuities—Annuities given by will—To “be paid without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of 5s. in the £”—Reliefs and allowances—Whether annuitant accountable to trustees.

A testator directed that certain annuities should be paid by his trustees “without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of 5s. in the £” :—

HELD: (i) on a true construction of the will it was intended that the trustees should wholly indemnify each annuitant against the income tax, referable to the annuity, which he actually bore in each year in which the standard rate of income tax was 5s. in the £ or less, and if in any year the standard rate of income tax exceeded 5s. in the £ it was intended that the trustees should partly indemnify each annuitant against the income tax, referable to the annuity, which he actually bore.

(ii) as income tax at the standard rate was deducted in respect of the whole amount of the annuities when they were paid over, the proper proportion of any reliefs or allowances which the annuitants might recover from the Revenue had to be accounted for to the trustees on the principle laid down in Re Pettit (2).

Decision of ROXBURGH, J. [1946] 2 All E.R. 278, reversed.

Re Pettit (2) and Re Williams (6) applied. Re Bates’ Will Trusts (5) approved.

[AS TO TAX-FREE ANNUITIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 28, pp. 214—216, paras. 386—388; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 166—168, Nos. 572—593.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Williams, Midland Bank Executor & Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Williams, [1945] 2 All E.R. 102; [1945] Ch. 320; 115 L.J.Ch. 101; 173 L.T. 132; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Pettit, Le Fevre v. Pettit, [1922] 2 Ch. 765; 91 L.J.Ch. 732; 127 L.T. 491; 39 Digest 167, 587.
- (3) Re Tatham, National Bank Ltd. & Mathews v. Mackenzie, [1945] 1 All E.R. 29; [1945] Ch. 34; 114 L.J.Ch. 9; 172 L.T. 14; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re MacLennan, Few v. Byrne, [1939] 3 All E.R. 81; [1939] Ch. 750; 108 L.J.Ch. 364; 160 L.T. 612; Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Bates’ Will Trusts, Jenks v. Bates, [1945] 2 All E.R. 688; [1946] Ch. 83; 115 L.J.Ch. 142; 174 L.T. 305; Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Williams, Williams v. Templeton, [1936] 1 All E.R. 175; [1936] Ch. 509; 105 L.J.Ch. 362; 154 L.T. 640; Digest Supp.
- (7) Re Jones, Jones v. Jones, [1933] Ch. 842; 102 L.J.Ch. 303; 149 L.T. 417; Digest Supp.
- (8) Re Reckitt, Reckitt v. Reckitt, [1932] 2 Ch. 144; 101 L.J.Ch. 333; 147 L.T. 275; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from a decision of ROXBURGH, J. reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 278. ROXBURGH, J., held that the form of direction in the will postulated freedom from income tax up to 5s. in the £ as a constant factor for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the annual payment and made the decision in Re Pettit (2) inapplicable. Each of the annuitants, therefore, was entitled to retain the benefit of any income tax reliefs or allowances to which he might be entitled. The residuary devisees and legatees under the will now appealed.

Cyril King, K.C., and L. M. Jopling for the residuary devisees and legatees. J. Neville Gray, K.C. and Wilfrid Hunt for the annuitants.

W. G. H. Cook for the trustees.

MORTON, L.J. : Thomas Arno made his will on Mar. 31, 1937. By cl. 1 the testator appointed the Worshipful Company of Haberdashers, his wife Beatrice, Frank Gray Healey, and Frank Kirby Coppard to be the executors and trustees of his will. The Worshipful Company of Haberdashers was thereafter called "the company." By cl. 9 :

(A) I give to my trustees free of duty on my death and on the death of any person interested for life therein the following four annuities namely—one of £1,600 and three of £500 each to be increased to £1,200 each as from the expiration of three years from my death . . . (B) The £1,600 annuity shall be held on protective trusts for the benefit of my wife during her life and after her death one equal moiety thereof shall be appropriated to each of my grandsons Thomas Arno and Samuel Arno whether or not surviving me. (C) One of the £500 (rising to £1,200) annuities shall be appropriated to each of my three grandchildren Thomas Arno, Samuel Arno and Mary Bertha Arno whether or not surviving me. (D) Each annuity and part of share of an annuity in this clause directed to be appropriated to any one of my grandchildren shall be held on such of the trusts next hereinafter declared as shall at my death be capable of taking effect in reference thereto (that is to say) :—(1) On protective trusts for the benefit of such grandchild during his or her life . . . (E) All the said annuities shall be primarily charged on my said real estate at Stoke Newington, Leyton and Eastbourne . . . and shall be paid without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of five shillings in the pound.

It is on that last short phrase that the questions arising in this case depend. In cl. 10 there is a residuary gift in favour of the company.

For the sake of simplicity, I shall take as an example the annuity, now £1,200 a year, which is appropriated to the first defendant, Thomas Arno, the trusts of that annuity at the moment being to pay it to Thomas Arno although under the protective trusts there may hereafter arise a discretion in favour of other persons. The testator died on May 30, 1937, and his widow died on Feb. 10, 1944, her legal personal representative being the defendant, Norah Goodchild.

To see how far the testator's directions in regard to the annuities fit in with the Income Tax Acts, it is necessary to refer to rr. 19 and 21 of the All Schedules Rules in the Income Tax Act, 1918. Rule 19 (1) provides :

Where any yearly interest of money, annuity, or any other annual payment . . . is payable wholly out of profits or gains brought into charge to tax, no assessment shall be made upon the person entitled to such interest, annuity, or annual payment, but the whole of those profits or gains shall be assessed and charged with tax on the person liable to the interest, annuity, or annual payment, without distinguishing the same and the person liable to make such payment, whether out of the profits or gains charged with tax or out of any annual payment liable to deduction, or from which a deduction has been made, shall be entitled, on making such payment, to deduct and retain thereout a sum representing the amount of the tax thereon at the rate or rates of tax in force during the period through which the said payment was accruing due.

It is to be observed that the words used there are "shall be entitled," but plainly it would be the duty of trustees paying an annuity to make that deduction. Rule 21 (1) provides :

Upon payment of any interest of money, annuity, or other annual payment charged with tax under sched. D, or of any royalty or other sum paid in respect of the user of a patent, not payable, or not wholly payable, out of profits or gains brought into charge, the person by or through whom any such payment is made shall deduct thereout a sum representing the amount of the tax thereon at the rate of tax in force at the time of the payment.

The materiality of that rule in the present case is that there has been a deficiency of income in certain years since the death of the testator for the purpose of meeting the annuities. The system under the Acts, therefore, is that there is a deduction of tax at the standard rate on payment. The recipient of the annuity, for the purpose of surtax and reliefs, has to make a return of his total income, including therein the gross amount of the annuity payment, and his reliefs are then computed. It is clear, from this brief summary of the statutory provisions, that the words "shall be paid without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of five shillings in the pound" do not fit in to the provisions of the Income Tax Acts.

A question has arisen which I must now state, and I think the most convenient way of stating it is to refer to the summons taken out in this case. The first question raised by the summons is :

(a) Whether, on the true construction of the said will and in the events which have happened, the amount of the annuity payable by the trustees of the said will to each of the annuitants mentioned in cl. 9 of the said will (whereby the said annuities were directed to be paid "without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of five shillings in the pound") should be ascertained by calculating, first, the sum which, after deduction therefrom of income tax at the rate of five shillings in the pound thereon, will leave the net amount of the annuity bequeathed, and, secondly, by deducting from the gross amount so arrived at income tax at the standard rate in force for the year in which the annuity becomes due.

At the hearing before ROXBURGH, J., both parties were agreed that, so long as the standard rate of income tax does not fall below 5s. in the £, the method of ascertaining the sum to be paid to the annuitant in the first instance should be that set out in the question which I have just read. Accordingly, without argument, as I understand, ROXBURGH, J., made a declaration to that effect. From that part of his order there is no appeal.

The second question is expressed as follows :

Whether on the true construction of the said will and in the events which have happened (a) each or any of the said annuitants is entitled to retain for his or her own benefit any reliefs or allowances by way of repayment of income tax to which he or she may be entitled ; or (b) whether each or any of the said annuitants must account for the said reliefs or allowances or any (and, if any, which) part thereof to the trustees of the said will.

ROXBURGH, J., answered para. (a) of that question in the affirmative and from that decision the company, as residuary legatee, appeals.

It follows from what I have already said that I cannot construe this phrase on the footing that it is possible for the trustees to carry out literally the directions given to them by the will. It is the duty of the trustees on payment to deduct tax at the standard rate, and it is not easy to see exactly what the testator intended them to do. If I were construing this will apart from any authority, I should say that he intended that the trustees should wholly indemnify Thomas Arno against the income tax, referable to his annuity, which he actually bears in each year in which the standard rate of income tax is 5s. in the £ or less, and if in any year the standard rate of income tax exceeds 5s. in the £ that the trustees shall partly indemnify him against the income tax, referable to his annuity, which he actually bears. To give an illustration, if the standard rate of income tax in any year is 6s., it is intended that the trustees shall indemnify Thomas Arno against five-sixths of the income tax, referable to his annuity, which he actually bears. By "actually bears" I mean this. From tax on the annuity at the standard rate one deducts all the reliefs referable to the annuity to which Thomas Arno establishes his right. One is then able to say that the resulting sum represents the income tax, referable to the annuity, which has been borne by Thomas Arno in any particular year. That is my impression of the testator's intention, gathered from the words he has used. I will add that I reach a second conclusion, also gathered from the words he has used and apart from authority, namely, that he did not intend Thomas Arno to be freed from any liability to surtax. First, he uses the word "deduction" (which is not apt as applied to surtax), and, secondly, he imposes the maximum of 5s. in the £.

The former of these two conclusions differs from that reached by the judge. It seems to me that we have approached the problem from rather different angles. I have endeavoured to concentrate on the question which was conveniently and clearly stated by UTHWATT, J. in Re Williams (1). UTHWATT, J., said ([1945] 2 All E.R. 102 at p. 104) :

... that question [i.e. the question of construction to be determined] is in substance whether the reference to income tax is a reference to the standard rate of income tax merely as an arithmetical factor in the calculation of the gross amount of the annuity given by the will, or whether the provision as to income tax merely indemnified the annuitant against such part of the annuitant's income tax (other than surtax) which is properly referable to the annuity. If construed in the former sense, the actual income tax ultimately suffered by the owner of the annuity does not enter into the picture. Tax at the standard rate is deducted from the gross amount resulting from the calculation and the annuitant receives £X in cash and the income tax referable to the gross amount paid for his account.

The judge then goes on to point out that if the phrase is construed in the latter sense complete effect cannot be given to the bequest by payment to the annuitant.

Concentrating my mind on the question as stated by UTHWATT, J., I cannot find in this will that the reference to income tax can be said to be a reference to the standard rate of income tax merely as an arithmetical factor in the calculation of the gross amount of the annuity given by the will. I can find no words in the will which justify me in coming to that conclusion. ROXBURGH, J., has, I think, approached the problem from a different angle. To give an illustration, he has directed a good deal of attention to what he has described as the annuitant's "effective rate of tax." He says ([1946] 2 All E.R. 278, at p. 279) :

By his "effective rate" I mean this. When the income tax liability of an annuitant has been finally ascertained in respect of any financial year, after taking into account all appropriate reliefs and allowances, it is possible to predicate, by comparing the total amount of income tax suffered (by payment or deduction) with the total gross income from all sources, that the effective rate of tax borne by him has been at the rate of X shillings in the £. This rate of course (surtax apart) will be less than the standard rate, and it may be convenient to call it his "effective rate."

For my part, while entirely accepting these statements, I cannot find that calculating the effective rate of tax borne by the annuitant assists me at all in the construction of this will. Following somewhat different lines, ROXBURGH, J. and I have arrived at a different result. I may, perhaps, give an illustration of the difference between the judge's view and mine by taking a year in which the standard rate of tax is exactly 5s. in the £. In such a year, on my construction of the will, Thomas Arno would get his £1,200, and would be wholly indemnified in respect of the tax, referable to the annuity, which he actually bore, but he would not get anything more. On the judge's construction, however, he would get something more : see, as to this Re Pettit (2).

As the construction of a short phrase like this is so much a matter of first impression, especially when the testator's directions cannot be carried out quite literally, I do not propose to go through the judgment of the judge in detail. I propose, however, now to consider the current of authority, assisted by the review of the cases which were given by EVERSLED, J., in Re Tatham (3). I turn to the authorities because I think it is as well to see whether the prima facie view that one has formed as to the meaning of the will fits in with the current of authority or seems to constitute a departure from the current of authority. It rarely, if ever, happens that the wording of two wills is exactly the same, but I think it is helpful to see whether the construction which I am disposed to place on this will runs counter to the construction which has been placed on wills somewhat similar in their terms.

I shall first go to the well known case of Re Pettit (2) which I have already mentioned. In that case the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the trust premises and the annual income thereof upon trust to pay an annuity of £1,000 free of duty and income tax to his wife, the defendant Jane Pettit, for life. ROMER, J., held that the residuary estate of the testator was entitled to such proportion of the reliefs which the annuitant claimed as the annuity bore to the total income of the annuitant. After giving certain figures, the judge said ([1922] 2 Ch. 765, at p. 769) :

As has already been stated, the £1,000 was paid out of income that had already been brought into charge to tax, the tax having been deducted at source before the income was received by the trustees. But, as has often been pointed out, payment at the source is nothing more than the machinery by which the Revenue collects the tax from the person ultimately liable to pay, and the rights of the parties are, as between themselves, precisely the same as though the trustees received the gross income and had themselves to pay the tax to the Revenue. In that case, and treating the annuity of the defendant Jane Pettit as the only one payable, the trustees would in each year have had to set aside in respect of her annuity such a sum as, after payment of the tax properly payable thereon, would leave a clear sum of £1,000. Out of this sum the trustees would pay the tax to the Revenue and the £1,000 to the annuitant. The remainder of the gross income after payment of tax thereon would belong to the residuary legatees. It would, however, be impossible for the trustees to ascertain what rate of tax was ultimately payable in respect of the annuitant's income, and in any case they would, under the provisions of the Income Tax Acts, be bound, in the first instance, to treat that income as liable to the ordinary rate. In the year 1918-19, for instance, when the ordinary rate of income tax was 6s. 0d. in the £, the trustees would have had in the first instance to set aside £1,428. 11s. 5d. and to pay £428 11s. 5d. to the Revenue and the balance to the annuitant. But this sum might in the end prove to be too little or too much. If the annuitant were liable to pay super tax it would be too little and the proper proportion of her super tax referable to her annuity would, when ascertained, have to be paid to her by the trustees and would so go to reduce the income payable to the residuary legatees. It might, on the other hand, turn out that the circumstances of the annuitant were such that she was not liable in respect of her income to the full rate of income tax, that, in my opinion, being the true effect of the provisions for relief and abatement contained in the relevant taxing Acts. In that case, the sum so set aside and the £428 11s. 5d. paid in the first instance to the Revenue would be too much, and if, in consequence of this, the annuitant is repaid the excess by the Special Commissioners, I cannot understand on what ground it can be suggested that such excess should be retained by the annuitant who has not paid it, and not be handed back to the residuary legatees who have. If the annuitant were to retain the excess she would in the end have received out of the estate more than 20s. in the £ on the £1,000 given to her by the will.

The reasoning in Re Pettit (2) was expressly approved by this court in Re Maclellan (4). In that case the court had to construe a deed in which Lady Byrne covenanted to pay Mrs. Boyd :

such an annual sum as together with the amount of the annuity of £250 payable to or for the benefit of Mrs. Boyd under the will of the testator would (if such annual sum and annuity respectively were payable to Mrs. Boyd absolutely) after deduction of income tax but not sur-tax, leave in her hands the sum of £500 clear of all deductions for income tax but not surtax.

It was held that the principle of Re Pettit (2) ([1939] 3 All E.R. 81, at p. 88) applied, and SIR WILFRED GREENE, M.R., expressed approval of the reasoning of ROMER, J. in Re Pettit (2).

I propose to go straight from that case to Re Tatham (3), which I have already mentioned, where EVERSHED, J., reviewed the authorities. In that case the will provided that the trustees should pay to the annuitant free of duty "such a sum in every year as after deduction of income tax for the time being payable in respect thereof will leave a clear sum of £350 to begin from my death and to be payable by equal quarterly payments in advance." EVERSHED, J., after reviewing a number of cases, held that the annuitant was accountable to the trustees for a due proportion (in respect of the annuity) of all reliefs from and allowances of income tax to which she might be from time to time entitled. Next came the decision of UTHWATT, J., in Re Williams (1) where the words were "free from income tax at the current rate for the time being deductible at source," and the judge held that the annuitants were liable to account for a due proportion of their reliefs and allowances.

So far the question where the will directs, not a complete indemnity, but a partial indemnity, had not been considered, but that question had to be considered by ROMER, J., in the very recent case of Re Bates (5). In that case the testator gave to his wife and two other persons annuities of £1,000, £500 and £400 respectively "clear of all death duties and income tax up to but not exceeding 5s. 6d. in the £, but not surtax." ROMER J., held that the principle of Re Pettit (2) applied. After referring to Re Pettit (2), Re Tatham (3) and Re Williams (1) ROMER, J. said ([1945] 2 All E.R. 688, at p. 689):

In my judgment there is no sufficient indication in the present will that the testator had in mind the former of the two conceptions to which UTHWATT, J. refers. It is, in my opinion, reasonably clear that the testator intended to do no more than extend a partial indemnity to the annuitants, at the expense of his estate, against the income tax which is found ultimately to be payable in respect of their annuities. With the standard rate of income tax at 10s. in the £, he was unwilling that his estate should be saddled with the heavy burden that a complete indemnity would involve, and that was the reason, and in my judgment, the sole reason, for the introduction of the limiting words "but not exceeding 5s. 6d. in the £."

In my view Re Bates (5) was rightly decided, and those observations apply to the present case, except that in the present case the testator, making his will at a time when the standard rate of income tax was 4s. 9d. in the £, was unwilling that his estate should be saddled with the heavy burden that a complete indemnity would involve if and when the standard rate of income tax rose above 5s. 0d. in the £. That, I think, was the sole reason why he introduced the limiting words "up to a maximum of 5s. 0d. in the £." It is common ground before us that, if the reasoning of ROMER, J., is applicable to the words used in the present will, the result which is set out by ROMER, J. ([1945] 2 All E.R. 688, at p. 690) would also be applicable mutatis mutandis to the present will. In my view, it would be drawing too fine a distinction between the words of the present will and the words in the will before ROMER, J., if I were to arrive at a different result in the present case. Feeling, as I do, that the testator intended to free the annuitant from a proportion of the income tax borne by him, and that he did not intend to free the annuitant from any part of the surtax which might be borne by him, it seems to me that the present case is really indistinguishable from Re Bates (5). Further, in my judgment, the view which I have formed in the present case is in accordance with the current of authority from Re Pettit (2) onwards.

I shall add this, as the words here are "without deduction of income tax," and the words in Re Bates (5) were "clear of . . . income tax." In one case at least this court has not regarded these two phrases as conveying a different meaning, and that is Re Williams (6). It is true that the court was there considering these phrases from a different point of view and a different problem had arisen, but ROMER, L.J., said ([1936] Ch. 509, at p. 513) :

Under the clause in question, as I read it, the trustees are directed to set aside a sum sufficient to produce the income of £1,000 per annum and to hold the same upon trust for certain beneficiaries, the first of whom is the widow, to whom they are to pay the annual sum of £1,000 "without deduction of income tax." Can that mean anything but that she is to receive the net amount of £1,000 free of tax ?

GREENE, L.J., said (ibid, at p. 514) :

The phrase "without deduction of income tax" [referring, of course, to the particular document before him] has the same meaning as free of income tax.

That strengthens me in my view that the present case is not really distinguishable from Re Bates (5).

I should mention one other case which I think stands alone, but which has been expressly approved by this court in Re Maclellan (4). That is the decision of Eve, J., in Re Jones (7). That was a case, to my mind, of a very different character. There the trustees were directed to pay or apply for the benefit of the daughter of the testatrix, Mabel Lloyd Jones, such an annuity as, after deducting therefrom income tax at the current rate for the time being, would amount to the clear yearly sum of £350 free of duty. That seems to me to be a case which comes precisely within UTHWATT, J's., first category, a case where the reference to "income tax" is a reference to the standard rate of income tax merely as an arithmetical factor in the calculation of the gross amount of the annuity given by the will. It is, I think, on that footing that it was approved in this court in Re Maclellan (4).

For these reasons, I am unable to agree with the decision of the judge or to accede to the argument put before us by counsel for the annuitants.

I should, however, refer to one argument put forward by junior counsel for the annuitants which is directed to a different part of the will. He pointed out that, although Thomas Arno is at the moment in receipt of his annuity, in events which may happen that annuity will be applicable, at the discretion of the trustees, among a number of persons, and he suggested that that is an indication that the construction which the residuary devisees and legatees seek to put on this will is the wrong construction. I appreciate the point, but it does not shake me in the view which I have formed of the will. If the principle of Re Pettit (2) applies, it happens that many inconveniences result. The trustees have to inquire into such matters as the total income of the annuitant, and the reliefs which the annuitant receives. If the protective trusts here come into operation, the only result is that those inconveniences may be somewhat increased, because, if the trustees decide to split the annuity among, let us say, three persons, there will have to be a consideration of the reliefs received by each of these three persons. That is merely an extension of the inconvenience which is always caused where the decision in Re Pettit (2) is held to apply to a will.

For these reasons, I think that this appeal must be allowed, and that the order should be on the same lines as that made by ROMER, J., in Re Bates (5).

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered, and the reasons given in it for the conclusion which we have reached, but, as we are differing from the judge, I will add a few observations of my own.

In dealing with provisions of the kind in question in this appeal, there are two possible constructions, as appears from the cases. First, the provision may be construed as conferring an annuity of a gross sum which, after deduction of tax at the standard rate, leaves the named sum. Such a construction, as my Lord has pointed out, was put on the words in question in Re Jones (7). When the annuity falls into that category, any reliefs or allowances which the annuitant may recover from the Inland Revenue do not enter into the picture. They are retained by him and the payor is not concerned with that. The second possible construction is, if I may say so, very well set out in a sentence in the judgment of ROMER, L.J., in Re Reckitt (8) where the court came to the conclusion that the annuitant was to be indemnified against surtax as well as against income tax. There is, therefore, a reference to surtax in the sentence which I am going to read. I might, perhaps, say that, in my view—and, indeed, neither counsel contended the contrary—the words with which we have to deal cannot be regarded as referring to surtax. I think that is clear for two reasons: first, the reference to “deduction”—there is no question of surtax being “deducted”—and, secondly, perhaps, the reference to 5s. 0d. which, in my opinion, is a reference to a standard rate and, whereas there is a standard rate of income tax, there is no standard rate of surtax. Therefore, in applying the sentence which I am going to read to the circumstances of the present case, one disregards the reference of ROMER, L.J., to super tax. He says this ([1932] 2 Ch. 144, at p. 153):

It [i.e. the gift which he was construing] is, indeed, a gift to the annuitant of such a sum as will, after all questions as between the annuitant and the Crown in respect of income tax and super-tax for that year have been settled, leave the annuitant with the sum mentioned.

Where that is the true construction, as income tax at the standard rate is deducted in respect of the whole amount of the annuity when it is paid over, the proper proportion of any reliefs or allowances which the annuitant may recover from the Revenue has to be accounted for to the payor, on the principle laid down in Pettit's case (2), to which reference has already been made.

The question in the present appeal is whether the words used in this will fall within category 1 or category 2. I think myself it is worth bearing in mind that the formula for category 1 is a formula which is very familiar because for some years now it has been very common for people to enter into covenants for annual payments to charities on the lines of category 1. I think, therefore, the fact that the formula to produce the first result is so familiar may raise some presumption in favour of construing words which are dissimilar from that formula as words which are intended to bring about the result which I have set out and referred to as category 2. I am not saying, of course, that it is not possible for words to be used which, though not the usual and familiar formula, lead to the same result.

I do not propose to go through the cases, to the most important of which my Lord has already referred, but I think, reviewing them as a whole, as well as, I hope, giving all due weight to them in detail, that they rather tend to support the view that words, some of them inapt, as in this case, have usually been construed as bringing about the second result to which I have referred unless they clearly bring about the result which was arrived at in Re Jones (7).

I would like to say a word or two about an argument which I think weighed with Roxburgh, J., and which was pressed on us by counsel for the annuitants in the course of this appeal. The argument was that where you find, as here, a partial exemption from tax, you should approach it with a presumption that probably you will find that the construction is the category 1 construction. I myself do not feel that the fact that it is a partial exemption leads to that presumption or to that approach. It seems to me perfectly natural that a testator, or a covenantor, should wish to bring about the result that, so long as income tax does not exceed a certain amount, the annuitant should get a complete indemnity, no more and no less, in respect of the income tax which he actually bears attributable to the annuity which he is getting, but, if income tax exceeds that amount, he should bear his own tax. As I say, on that matter I differ from the judge. Though he gave other reasons for his conclusion, it may be that that is one of the factors, and I think it was, which led him to arrive at a different conclusion from that to which I have come.

As has been pointed out, the words in the present case are inapt, in that trustees cannot pay the sums in question without making the deductions that they are entitled to make under r. 19 or are compelled to make under r. 21. As I understand that in the present case the annuity is being paid partly out of capital and partly out of income, r. 21 is applicable here.

out of capital and partly out of income, r. 21 is applicable.

Turning to the words in the will, I attach some importance, though perhaps not very much, to the fact that the named sums are set out in previous paragraphs in the will before one comes to the dozen or so words at the end of cl. 9 (E) which have given rise to the present dispute. Those words, to my mind, plainly do not point to category 1, and I think the natural meaning to give them is the meaning which I have sought to state under category 2. In the result, that seems to me to be the natural construction and in accordance with the authorities which were cited to us, and the appeal, therefore, in my opinion, should be allowed. I have given my reasons for saying that I think they clearly do not apply to surtax, and I do not desire to add anything further on the other arguments in the case.

COHEN, L.J.: I also agree that the appeal should be allowed, and for the reasons stated by my brethren, but, as we are differing from the judge, I will state, shortly, my reasons for reaching that conclusion.

Counsel for the annuitants sought to support the decision of the judge on two grounds. First (and this is the argument to which SOMERVELL, L.J., referred), he argued that the ratio decidendi of Re Pettit (2) only applies where there is total exemption from tax. He went on to say that, where it was a partial exemption, the bias should be the other way. I do not think that that argument is well founded. I will take as the ratio decidendi that portion of the judgment of ROMER, J., to which counsel himself referred. The judge said ([1922] 2 Ch. 765, at p. 770):

... I cannot understand on what ground it can be suggested that such excess [i.e., the excess over the sum stated] should be retained by the annuitant who has not paid it, and not be handed back to the residuary legatees who have.

I see no reason in principle why this ratio decidendi should not apply also in the case of a partial exemption. If the annuitant has only borne part of the tax, why should he retain the whole of the allowances and reliefs? Secondly, counsel presented an argument on the construction of the particular will, and he relied, in particular, on the fact that sub-cl. (E) (which is the material passage of the will) directed that the annuity should be paid "without deduction of income tax up to a maximum of 5s. 0d. in the £." He admitted that neither the direction to pay nor the words "without deduction of income tax" would by themselves have justified us in holding that Re Pettit (2) does not apply, but he said that, taken as a whole, it pointed clearly to the position of the trustees making the payment and not to the position of the annuitant receiving it. He relied on a passage in the judgment in Re MacLennan (4) of SIR WILFRED GREENE, M.R., who said ([1939 3 All E.R. 81, at p. 87):

It is perfectly true that the word "deduction" taken by itself, would appear to point to the act of deduction as the only relevant matter to be taken into account, and, if that were the true view, the result would be that the only tax factor which would come into calculation would be the factor of standard rate of tax . . .

Counsel pointed out that neither of the two factors on which the Master of the Rolls relied in that case are present here, at any rate expressly, so as to justify us in departing from the normal and natural meaning of the words. As MORTON, L.J., pointed out, however, it is plainly impossible to give effect to this clause in the will in its strict sense, having regard to the provisions of the Income Tax Acts, and we really have to consider in what sense, other than the prima facie meaning of the words, we ought to construe them.

I approach the problem from the point of view stated by UTHWATT, J., in Re Williams (1), to which MORTON, L.J., referred. I will not read the quotation from the judgment again. Suffice it to say that I do not think we are justified in treating this case as falling within the first category, which is the Re Jones (7) category. The will gives an annuity of £1,200 a year. If the matter had rested there, the annuitant would have borne tax at the standard rate. The effect of sub-cl. (E), in my view—and I do not wish to repeat the reasons given by my brethren—is merely to grant relief against tax borne by the annuitant up to 5s. 0d. in the £. If that is the right view, I think, as ROMER, J., did in Re Bates (5) that the principle in Re Pettit (2) should apply, and that the order ought to take the form of the order made by him in that case.

Appeal allowed. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client out of the estate.

Solicitors: Eagleton & Sons (for the appellants and the trustees); Field, Roscoe & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. Re A DEBTOR (No. 400 of 1940). [1949] 1 All E.R. 510.

JARRETT v. BARCLAYS BANK LTD.

NASH v. JARRETT.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), November 26, 27, 1946.]

Emergency Legislation—Courts (Emergency Powers)—Exercise of remedy—Realisation of security—Mortgage by wife to secure joint banking account of herself and her husband—Bankruptcy of wife—Husband allowed by trustee to reside and carry on business on mortgaged property—Death of wife—Husband appointed executor—Sale of property by mortgagee—Sale alleged to be at undervalue—Right of husband to complain of sale—Right of husband and wife to be made respondents to mortgagee's application for leave to realise security—"Person affected"—Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (v)—Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 1113), r. 20 (1), (2).

In 1939 a wife mortgaged property of which she was the sole owner to secure a joint banking account of herself and her husband. In 1940 she became bankrupt. The official receiver was appointed her trustee in bankruptcy, and he gave her husband authority to reside and carry on his business on the mortgaged premises. In August, 1945, the mortgagee bank applied under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, for leave to realise their security by exercising their power of sale. No notice of the application was given to either the husband or the wife, nor were steps taken to make either of them a respondent to the application or to leave at the judge's chambers a statement giving the name of either of them and showing his or her interest in the mortgaged property. On Oct. 12, 1945, the wife died, and, by her will, her husband was appointed her executor. On Oct. 18, the mortgagees obtained the leave of the court to realise the security. In Dec., 1945, the property was sold at a price alleged by the husband to be a gross undervalue. The husband claimed on his own behalf and as his wife's executor rescission of the contract of sale and conveyance, an injunction restricting any disturbance to himself, and damages.

Held: (i) the husband was not entitled, in his capacity of the executor of his wife, to have the sale set aside on the ground that it was effected at an under-value, for when the wife became bankrupt her property vested in the trustee in bankruptcy who thereafter alone could deal with it and complain about the sale by the mortgagees.

(ii) whether the husband was a tenant at will of the property or a bare licensee occupying it, he could not object to a sale of the property by the mortgagees, for in neither capacity did he have any interest in the proceeds of the sale or in the price obtained.

(iii) in his capacity as a person liable on the joint banking account of himself and his wife, the husband could not object to the sale, for he was not the owner of the property and had no beneficial interest in it.

(iv) the husband, as his wife's executor, was not entitled to complain because neither he nor his wife was made a party to the mortgagees' application for leave to realise their security because, at the date of the application, his wife was a bankrupt and express provision was made by r. 20 (1) (iv) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943, for the trustee in bankruptcy to be made a respondent in those circumstances, and, further, the wife, as a bankrupt, had no interest in the property, and was not, therefore, a person within r. 20 (2) or (3) whose interest could be included in a statement by the mortgagees showing her interest in the mortgaged property.

(v) nor, assuming in the husband's favour that he was a tenant at will of the property, could he complain of the proceedings on the application, for the mortgagees applied, not to take possession of the property, but to sell it, and, whatever the nature of the husband's tenancy as against the seller, he would remain in the same position as against the purchaser, and so was not "affected" by the exercise of the remedy within r. 20 (2) or (3).

(vi) nor could the husband complain of the proceedings on the application as a person jointly liable for the overdraft, because he was not one of the persons mentioned in r. 20 (1) nor did he come within r. 20 (2) and (3), for no person came within those sub-rules unless he had a legal or equitable right in the mortgaged property, and the husband had no such interest.

Decision of WYNN-PARRY, J. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 266) affirmed.

[FOR THE COURTS (EMERGENCY POWERS) ACT, 1943 (c. 19), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, p. 461. For the Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943, see BUTTERWORTH'S EMERGENCY LEGISLATION [8].

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Leadbitter (1878), 10 Ch.D. 388 ; 48 L.J.Ch. 242 ; 39 L.T. 286 ; 4 Digest 205, 1886.
- (2) Bird v. Philpott, [1900] 1 Ch. 822 ; 69 L.J.Ch. 487 ; 82 L.T. 110 ; 4 Digest 500, 4504.
- (3) National Provincial Bank Ltd. v. Liddiard, [1941] Ch. 158 ; sub nom. Re National Provincial Bank Ltd. [1941] 1 All E.R. 97 ; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Midland Bank, Ltd.'s Application [1942] 3 All E.R. 299 ; [1942] Ch. 61.
- (5) Anchor Trust Co., Ltd. v. Bell, [1926] Ch. 805 ; 95 L.J.Ch. 564 ; 135 L.T. 311 ; 35 Digest 572, 2425.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a decision of WYNN-PARRY, J., reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 266. The plaintiff in the action was the husband mentioned in the summary of facts in the headnote. WYNN-PARRY, J., gave judgment in favour of the defendants and the plaintiff appealed. The facts appear fully in the judgment of MORTON, L.J.

Robert Fortune for the plaintiff.

Milner Holland for the defendant bank (the mortgagees).

D. L. Jenkins, K.C. and B. M. Cloutman, K.C., for Nash, the purchaser of the mortgaged premises.

MORTON, L.J. : These two actions came on for trial together before WYNN-PARRY, J. The first was an action by Mr. Jarrett, on his own behalf and as executor of Emily Margaret Jarrett (his wife), as plaintiff, against Barclays Bank Ltd. and Gerald Kimber Nash as defendants. In view of the course which the proceedings took before the judge, I must turn at once to the statement of claim :

(1) The plaintiff is the executor of his wife Emily Margaret Jarrett who died on Oct. 12, 1945, and the plaintiff brings this action on his own behalf and as such executor. (2) On Apr. 26, 1939, and at all material times before that date the said Emily Margaret Jarrett (hereinafter called 'the testatrix') was the owner of the freehold hereditaments comprising the dwelling-house, shop and garage premises known as Niton Undercliff Garage, Isle of Wight, and there carried on the business of a garage, tobacconist and confectioner. (3) By a legal charge dated Apr. 26, 1939, the testatrix charged the said hereditaments by way of legal mortgage to the defendant bank to secure any balance of account due to the defendant bank on the joint banking account of herself and the plaintiff.

I pause there to say that it is plain from that pleading that the plaintiff was not a party to the legal charge and that his wife was the sole owner of the property thereby charged.

(4) On May 15, 1940, the testatrix was adjudicated a bankrupt upon her own petition and thereafter the official receiver as trustee in the said bankruptcy sold all the furniture, stock in trade and effects of the said business and gave authority to the plaintiff to open the plaintiff's business upon the said hereditaments at once and confirmed the same by a letter from his agents Sir Francis Pittis & Son to the plaintiff dated May 20, 1940. (5) Thereafter with the full knowledge authority and consent of the said official receiver and of the defendant bank the plaintiff carried on his own business in the shop and garage premises and with his wife resided in the dwelling-house comprised in the said hereditaments.

I pause there to say that for the purpose of this judgment I am prepared to give to those two paragraphs the construction which is most favourable to the plaintiff, that is to say, I am prepared to assume that the statements made there amount to a statement that the plaintiff was a tenant at will of these hereditaments. I am by no means expressing the view that that is their true construction or that that was the actual position. It does not appear that the plaintiff ever paid rent, and he may have been merely a licensee.

(6) On Aug. 23, 1945, the defendant bank, in the matter of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, applied to the Chancery Division of this court for leave to exercise its statutory power of sale as mortgagee under the said legal charge dated Apr. 26, 1939, without the knowledge of and without notice to the plaintiff or the testatrix as the defendant bank at all times by its servants and agents well knew and well knowing that the plaintiff and the testatrix would be affected thereby and without taking proper or any steps to make the plaintiff or the testatrix a respondent to the said application or to leave at the chambers of the judge any statement giving the name of either the plaintiff or the testatrix or the interest of either in the said hereditaments or requesting or taking any directions in respect thereof as provided for by the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, s. 4 (3) and (4) and the Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943, made thereunder, and on Oct. 18, 1945, in the circumstances aforesaid obtained from Master Holland an order that the defendant bank be at liberty to proceed to exercise any remedy which might be available to it by way of the realisation of the security created by the said legal charge.

That paragraph contains certain statements of fact and it also contains, either expressly or impliedly, an expression of the plaintiff's view as to the construction of the Act and rules in question.

Paragraph 7 of the statement of claim turns to a new branch of the case :

(7) Recklessly and without taking proper or any steps to ascertain the fair value of the said hereditaments or to secure a proper price therefor by a contract dated Apr. 27, 1945, and by a conveyance dated Dec. 12, 1945, the defendant bank by its servants and agents caused to be conveyed the said hereditaments to the defendant Nash in consideration of the sum of £2,250 which was a price so low as to constitute a fraud upon the plaintiff and on the estate of the testatrix. (8) Further the defendant Nash by himself and his agents Sir Francis Pittis & Son and Messrs. Buckell & Drew at all times had full knowledge of all the foregoing matters.

Paragraph 9 alleges loss to the plaintiff and the estate of the testatrix, and the plaintiff submits that the sale and the conveyance should be set aside. Then the plaintiff on his own behalf and as such executor claims :

(i) rescission of the said contract of sale and conveyance ; (ii) an injunction restraining the defendants their servants and agents and each and all of them from taking any steps to interfere with or to disturb the plaintiff in his occupation of the said hereditaments ; (iii) alternatively, damages ; (iv) further or other relief ; (v) costs.

It is to be observed that the plaintiff, in that statement of claim, construing it most favourably for him, claims two branches of relief. First, he says that the proceedings under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, were defective, because neither he nor the testatrix was made a party, nor was any statement in regard to them left in chambers, and, secondly, he says that the sale of the property was at a gross undervalue. He makes those two complaints in three capacities—first, as I will assume, as a tenant at will of the property in question ; secondly, as his wife's executor ; and, thirdly, as a person liable on the joint banking account of his wife and himself.

The second action was an action by Mr. Nash, the purchaser, claiming as against Mr. Jarrett (who was in possession) possession of the Undercliff Garage, mesne profits and an injunction. So that it is plain that the second action by Mr. Nash must depend for its result on the result of the first action.

When the two actions came on for trial before WYNN PARRY, J., counsel for the plaintiff (Mr. Jarrett) opened the case and read certain correspondence and then referred the judge to the pleadings. Thereupon counsel for the two defendants in the first action made a submission to the judge which he expressed as follows :

Mr. Milner Holland on behalf of the bank, and Mr. Jenkins on behalf of the defendant Nash, took a preliminary point and submitted, on the basis of the allegations in the statement of claim, that the whole action was misconceived and that there was no case to answer. As that submission, if well founded, would conclude the whole case, I considered it desirable to hear argument on that preliminary point before any witnesses were called.

The judge then considered this preliminary point and formed the conclusion that it was well founded and that the action should be dismissed.

The proceedings which I have outlined were unusual, but it may well be that, in the circumstances of the particular case, they were well calculated to save expense. There had never been, so far as we are told, any application to strike out the statement of claim, but the defendants may well have thought that, although the submission which I have mentioned could be made at the trial, still the statement of claim did not so plainly and obviously fail to disclose any reasonable cause of action that it could be struck out. If they did think so, they were right. The statement of claim set out matters which were properly the subject for legal argument before the judge. In his judgment WYNN-PARRY, J., referred to some of the letters which had been read to him by counsel for the plaintiff, but, in view of the fact that the submission was made simply on the allegations in the statement of claim, I think it is right to exclude altogether from consideration the letters in question. In so doing I think I am really tending to assist the plaintiff because the judge, having read the letters, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was nothing more than a licensee, and I must say it seems to me that the letters afford very strong ground for that view.

Dealing simply with the statement of claim, I shall follow the order taken by the judge and consider, first, the contention that the sale should be set aside on the ground that it was effected at an under-value. The judge considered the claim of the plaintiff to relief under that head as executor of his wife who had been, until her bankruptcy, the owner of the property. I entirely agree with the reasons which the judge gave for holding, as he did hold, that in that capacity the plaintiff was not entitled to have the sale set aside. He said this :

Upon Mrs. Jarrett being adjudicated bankrupt the whole of her property passed to and vested in the official receiver under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 53. Thereafter it was only the trustee who could deal with the property ; it was only he who could in any way effectively complain against the mortgagee, and it was only he who could settle accounts with the mortgagee. The bankrupt could not go behind the trustee.

The judge then referred to Re Leadbitter (1) both in the High Court and in the Court of Appeal and continued :

The mere fact that a bankrupt has a future interest in a possible surplus does not mean that he has a present interest, and there is, in my view, nothing but confirmation of this proposition to be found in Bird v. Philpott (2) which was cited by Mr. Fortune in favour of his argument. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff, as the executor of his wife, an undischarged bankrupt, has no locus standi to assert that the sale was made at an under-value.

The judge then considered, and I shall now consider, the plaintiff's claim to set aside the sale on the ground that he, the plaintiff, was a tenant at will of the property. In my view, it is immaterial for this purpose whether the plaintiff was a tenant at will or a bare licensee. In neither capacity, in my view, could he object to any sale of the freehold which the mortgagee might care to carry out. He had no interest in that capacity in the proceeds of sale at all and it did not matter to him as tenant whether the property was sold at a high or a low price.

Turning to the position of the plaintiff as regards the alleged sale at an under-value in his capacity as a person liable on the joint account of himself and his wife at the bank, here, again, I entirely agree with the decision of the judge and with the reasons which he has given for that decision. In my opinion, the plaintiff in that capacity could not object. He was not the owner of the property and he had no beneficial interest at all in it. I agree with the judge's view on that point, but I need not read all his reasons for that view.

I now come to the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, and it is necessary to refer to the relevant sections omitting immaterial provisions. By s. 1 :

(2) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a person shall not be entitled, except with the leave of the appropriate court—(a) to proceed to exercise any remedy which is available to him by way of . . . (v) the realisation of any security.

By s. 1 (4) :

If, on any application for such leave as is required under this section for the exercise of any of the rights and remedies mentioned in sub-ss. (1), (2) and (3) of this section, the appropriate court is of opinion that the person liable to satisfy the judgment or order, or to pay the rent or other debt, or to perform the obligation, in question is unable immediately to do so by reason of circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to any war in which His Majesty may be engaged, the court may, subject to the provisions of this Act, refuse leave for the exercise of that right or remedy, or give leave therefor subject to such restrictions and conditions as the court thinks proper.

By s. 4 (3) :

Where an application is made by the mortgagee of any property for leave to exercise against the property any of the rights or remedies mentioned in s. 1 (2) of this Act, being a right or remedy arising by virtue of a default in the payment of any mortgage money or a breach of any mortgage obligation, the appropriate court may, for the purposes of this Act, treat any person appearing to the court to be affected by the exercise of the right or remedy as if he were the person liable to pay the mortgage money or to perform the mortgage obligation or, as the context may require, as if he were the mortgagor, and may grant relief accordingly.

By s. 4 (4) :

The last foregoing subsection shall not be taken as requiring all the persons so affected to be made parties to the application, and rules made under this Act shall make provision for the persons who are to be made parties to any such application, and may provide that, in such cases as may be prescribed by the rules, and in particular in cases where the mortgagor has died and no person has taken out representation in respect of the property, the application may be made ex parte.

Reference must, therefore, be made to the Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943, to see who are the persons who must be made parties to any such application. The material provisions are to be found in r. 20, sub-rr. (1), (2) and (3). By r. 20 (1) :

Subject to the provisions of para. (2) of this rule, the persons to be made respondents to an application by a mortgagee of property for leave to exercise against the property any right or remedy shall be as follows :—(i) where the mortgagor (whether under personal liability or not) is the owner of the equity of redemption, the mortgagor ; . . . (iv) where the equity of redemption is vested in a trustee, the trustee : Provided that if the equity of redemption is vested in a trustee as trustee in bankruptcy and the applicant has before making the application obtained from such trustee a written statement that he has no objection to the leave sought being given, the application may be made ex parte.

I pause there to say that in the present case, as the equity of redemption was vested in a trustee—the trustee in bankruptcy—the trustee was asked whether he desired to oppose the leave being given. He gave a written statement that he did not object and the application was made ex parte. In saying that as a matter of history, I am travelling outside the allegations made in the statement of claim, but I am not relying for my decision on any fact outside the statement of claim. Rule 20 (2) provides :

In any application in which a person who is not a respondent to the summons under the provisions of para. (1) of this rule would be affected by the exercise of any such right or remedy as aforesaid, the applicant shall, on applying at the chambers of the judge for an appointment to hear the application, leave at chambers with a copy of the summons a statement giving the name of such person and showing what his interest is in the mortgaged property, and the court or a judge may direct that such person, or any other person who the court or a judge may think would be affected by the granting of the application, be added as the respondent to the application.

Rule 20 (3) deals with the position where the mortgagee is uncertain as to what persons would be affected by the granting of the application. The only other provision which has any materiality, I think, is s. 9 of the Act of 1943 which defines "mortgage money" as including "any part thereof and any interest thereon" and "mortgage obligation" as "any obligation arising under or by virtue of the mortgage other than an obligation to pay the mortgage money."

Having regard to the wording of the Act and the Rules, is the plaintiff entitled to complain because neither he nor his wife was made a party to the summons nor was any statement as to them left at chambers? The application was issued while the wife was alive and the order was made shortly after her death. First, was the plaintiff as executor of his wife entitled to object? In my view, he was not, in that capacity. I agree with the reasons which the judge gave for his decision under that head. I shall read them because I do not think I can improve on them. He said:

Treating him first as suing as executor of his wife, it is, in my view, plain that he is not entitled to any relief. His wife, at the relevant time, was alive, and she was an undischarged bankrupt. Express provision is made under r. 20, para. (1) (iv) for making the official receiver as her trustee in bankruptcy a respondent. If she was also to be entitled to be heard, it must be under para. (2) or para. (3). In view of the earlier provision of r. 20 (1) (iv) it would, in my view, be startling to find that the applicant must bring in the bankrupt or his or her personal representative. To do so would, I think, be to increase many-fold the difficulties of administering the bankruptcy laws, even if not to make it impossible, and there is a very good reason for not doing so, the reason being that, as appears from the authorities to which I have already referred, at the date of the application the bankrupt had no interest in the property, and, therefore, was not a person in respect of whom it could be specified in the statement referred to in paras. (2) and (3) what her interest was in the mortgaged property.

In regard to the plaintiff's position as tenant at will or licensee—and I will assume that he was tenant at will—in my view, his claim under that head must fail. The bank did not apply for leave to take possession of the property. They applied for leave to sell it, and, whatever the nature of the plaintiff's tenancy as against the seller, he would remain in the same position as against the purchaser. He was not, therefore, "affected" by the exercise of that remedy.

I now come to the last point, which is whether the plaintiff can say that, as a person jointly liable for the overdraft, he is a person who comes within the rules. In the first place, the plaintiff plainly is not a person who comes within r. 20 (1). Turning to r. 20 (2) it appears to me (and in this respect I again agree with the judge) that no person comes within that sub-rule unless he has a legal or equitable interest in the mortgaged property. I think that that is made reasonably clear by the requirement that the applicant shall leave at chambers "a statement giving the name of such person and showing what his interest is in the mortgaged property." Would it be right to say that the plaintiff, because he was jointly liable on the banking account and the mortgage was given by his wife on her property to secure the banking account, had an interest in the mortgaged property? It is suggested that he had because he might have paid off the bank, and, if he had paid off the bank, he would have been able to stand in the bank's shoes as mortgagee. In my view, it would be stretching the words "interest in the mortgaged property" to an unwarrantable extent to apply them to such a case as that. The words are in the present—"what his interest is in the mortgaged property"—and I think it true to say that the plaintiff, in his capacity as a person jointly liable on the banking account, never had an interest in the mortgaged property, though he could have acquired an interest if he had taken a certain step and paid a large sum of money. If that is so, then he did not come within the rules.

I would add that, although I should have arrived at that conclusion simply on the wording of the Act and Rules, one is assisted by the earlier cases to which counsel for the defendant bank referred. They are National Provincial Bank Ltd. v. Liddiard (3) and Re Application by Midland Bank, Ltd. (4). In each of these cases it was pointed out that there seemed to be an omission in the 1939 Act. In the circumstances which prevailed, for instance, in the Midland Bank case (4), s. (1) (4) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1939, which corresponds to s. (1) (4) of the Act of 1943, gave no protection to the owner of property who had mortgaged that property to secure another person's debt but had not himself entered into any covenant for the payment of that debt. It seems to me to be very likely that the Act of 1943, no doubt among other objects, had the object of giving some relief to a person in that position. The mortgagor is expressly mentioned in r. 20 (1) (i), but the legislature may have had in mind the protection of other persons having a beneficial interest in the property subject to the mortgage. However that may be, I think that, on the construction of the Act and the rules, the plaintiff did not come within them in any of the three capacities which I have mentioned.

The result is that, in my view, the submission of the defendants at the trial of the action was well founded, the judge was right in dismissing that action, and this appeal fails.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree. I will not repeat either the facts or the relevant sections of the Act, but I wish to add a few observations on the one point which I think was a difficult one—the question whether the Courts (Emergency Powers) Rules, 1943, cover the plaintiff in that he was jointly liable for the debt in respect of which the mortgage was given. I agree with what has been said by MORTON, L.J., that it is r. 20 which must be looked at. Section 4 (4) of the 1943 Act contemplates that the rules to be made may restrict the operation of subs. (3) in that those who might fall within the words of subs. (3) need not necessarily, under the rules, be persons who have to be made parties. One has to consider under r. 20 (2): What is the effect of the words, “what his interest is in the mortgaged property.” At one time in the course of the argument I thought that those words might be used in what I may call a popular sense as the equivalent of “his relation to the transaction” or some general phrase of that kind. On looking at them carefully and on consideration of the cases which were suggested by counsel for the second defendant as cases which this rule might have been made to cover, I have come to the conclusion that the proper construction of these words is that which has been given to them by MORTON, L.J. Applying that construction, I do not think the plaintiff comes within them.

The cases in question are National Provincial Bank Ltd. v. Liddiard (3) and Re an Application by the Midland Bank Ltd. (4). We were invited to assume that the legislature may well have had these cases in mind, with other matters. It is to be noted that in National Provincial Bank Ltd. v. Liddiard (3) FARWELL, J. in the concluding paragraph of his judgment, expressly raised the question whether a debtor who had not given the security might be a proper party. That was, of course, under the words in the Act of 1939. In the second case, MORTON, L.J., at the conclusion of his judgment, I think, had in mind a slightly different point, though related. I think he was considering whether the mortgagor, who in that case also was under no personal liability to the creditor, might pray in aid the war circumstances of the debtor. I think it is relevant to bear in mind, therefore, that the position of a debtor in respect of whose debt (or, in this case, in respect of whose joint liability) a mortgage had been given on property which was not his but somebody else's was directly raised for consideration in the two cases which we are invited to regard as cases which the legislature, among other points, must have had in mind. I think that that supports the construction which has been put on this rule and with which I am expressing my agreement. If the legislature had intended to make a debtor in that position a necessary party, it would have been easy to say so, and I cannot think it would have been left to be covered by words which I think, on the view most favourable to the argument of counsel for the plaintiff, are not apt to cover a case of that sort. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J.: I also agree. Counsel for the plaintiff argued that, if we had taken a different view on the point of construction of the Act and rules, he would have been entitled to relief by reason of the decision in Anchor Trust Co., Ltd. v. Bell (5). In that case a mortgagee had proceeded to enforce his security without seeking to obtain the leave of the court. Counsel for the second defendant sought to distinguish that case on the ground that in the present case there was an order of the court giving leave to sell which remained in force. Having regard to our decision on the main point, I find it unnecessary to express any opinion whether this distinction is well founded.

Solicitors: Lake & Son, agents for Roach, Pittis & Co., Newport, I.O.W. (for the plaintiff); Woolley & Whitfield, agents for John Robinson & Jarvis, Ryde, I.O.W. (for the defendant bank); Warren & Warren, agents for Buckell & Drew, Newport, I.O.W. (for the purchaser Nash).

[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LLOYD'S BANK, LTD. AND ANOTHER v. ELLIOT

C [KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Macnaghten, J.), November 8, 1946].

Emergency Legislation—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Contract of sale—Validity of notice—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A).

D An agricultural holding was demised to a tenant for a term of three years from Lady Day, 1943, and by notice dated Mar. 20, 1945, the landlords gave the tenant notice to quit on Lady Day, 1946. Under contracts of sale, part of the land was sold in Sept., 1945, and part in December of that year. In an action in which the landlords sought to recover possession of the holding and mesne profits, it was contended by the tenant that the notice to quit was void under, inter alia, the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A). The landlords argued that the regulation ought not to be read literally as hardship might or would ensue, and that the regulation was not aimed at a situation in which the notice to quit was given before the contracts of sale were concluded.

E HELD: the words of reg. 62 (4A) were plain and unambiguous, and there was no reason to construe them in any but their ordinary meaning; the conditions of the regulation were fulfilled; and the notice was void.

[FOR DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 37, p. 789.]

F ACTION for recovery of possession of an agricultural holding and for mesne profits.

Dingle Foot for the landlords.

G. A. Thesiger for the tenant.

G MACNAGHTEN, J.: This is an action by Lloyds Bank, Ltd., and Gertrude Violet Wienholt, trustees under the will of the late Major E. A. Wienholt, to recover possession of an agricultural holding which the testator demised to the defendant, Ivan Charles Henry Elliot, for the term of three years from Lady Day, 1943. The landlords, by a notice to quit dated Mar. 20, 1945, gave notice to the defendant to quit on Lady Day, 1946. The question at issue is whether or not the notice to quit is valid.

H It is said on behalf of the tenant that the notice to quit is void under s. 26 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, and also under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), which runs thus:

Where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale made since Sept. 3, 1939, or has been sold in pursuance of a contract of sale made since that date, any notice to quit that holding or any part thereof given to the tenant so as to expire at any time after the end of the year 1941 shall be null and void . . .

The land in question was sold under a contract of sale, as to part in Sept., 1945, and as to part in Dec. of that year. It would seem clear, therefore, that the conditions prescribed by reg. 62 (4A) were fulfilled since she contract of sale was made since Sept. 3, 1939. The notice to quit expired on Lady Day, 1946, that is, after the end of the year 1941. There seems to be no ambiguity about the words of the regulation. They are plain, simple and intelligible.

It is argued that the regulation ought not to be construed in what appears to be the reasonable and proper way, because it might or would create hardship in certain cases. I cannot see that that is an argument of much weight, because the Defence Regulations often create hardships on certain individuals. It is, further, contended that to obviate that hardship the word "thereafter" ought to be inserted towards the end of the regulation so that it would read thus: "Where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale . . . any notice to quit that holding or any part thereof given thereafter to the tenant so as to expire," etc. That is to say, to be void the notice to quit must be subsequent to the contract of sale. I do not see any reason for inserting that word, and I think it would be improper to do so.

It was submitted that the regulation was not aimed at any situation which could be created where the notice to quit was given before the contract of sale. I am by no means satisfied that that is so. The defendant also relied on s. 26 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, but, in view of my decision already expressed, it is not necessary to pursue that matter. There will be judgment for the defendant.

Judgment for the tenant, with costs.

Solicitors: Elvy Robb & Co. (for the landlords); Blyth, Dutton & Co., agents for Menneer, Idle, Brackett, & Williams, St. Leonards-on-Sea (for the tenant).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

RODWELL AND OTHERS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.) December 10, 11, 17, 1946.]

Public Health—Housing—Compulsory acquisition of land—"Persons employed or paid by county council"—Superintendent of police—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 57), s. 97.

By s. 97 of the Housing Act, 1936: "A county council . . . shall have power to provide houses for persons employed or paid by, or by a statutory committee of, the council . . . and for that purpose may be authorised to acquire or appropriate land in like manner as a local authority may be authorised to acquire or appropriate land for the purposes of [part V] of this Act." Part V of the Act is headed: "Provision of housing accommodation for the working classes."

In February, 1946, the Lancashire County Council made an order for the compulsory acquisition of a house and its grounds to provide a residence for a police superintendent of the Lancashire county police whose annual income amounted to £800, and, after a public inquiry had been held, the Minister of Health confirmed the order. On an appeal by the applicants, the executors of the owner of the house, against the confirmation,

HELD: (i) the police superintendent did not come within the group designated by the phrase "working class," but

(ii) the persons for whom houses might be provided under s. 97 need not be persons of the "working class," and

(iii) the police in a county are paid by the county council, and, therefore, the police superintendent came within s. 97 of the Act, and the order was validly made and confirmed.

[FOR THE HOUSING ACT, 1936, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 29, p. 638.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Lewis v. Cattle, [1938] 2 All E.R. 368; [1938] 2 K.B. 454; 107 L.J.K.B. 429; 159 L.T. 166; Digest Supp.
- (2) Fisher v. Oldham Corpn., [1930] 2 K.B. 364; 99 L.J.K.B. 569; 143 L.T. 281; 94 J.P. 132; Digest Supp.
- (3) Hall v. Taylor (1858), E.B. & E. 107; 27 L.J.Q.B. 311; 31 L.T.O.S. 151; 13 Digest 417, 1370.
- (4) Ex parte Somerset County Council (1889), 58 L.J.Q.B. 513; 61 L.T. 512; 54 J.P. 182; 33 Digest 107, 719.
- (5) Ex parte Leicestershire County Council, [1891] 1 Q.B. 53; 60 L.J.M.C. 45; 64 L.T. 25; 33 Digest 108, 723; 37 Digest 179, 16.
- (6) Glamorgan Coal Co. v. Glamorganshire Standing Joint Committee and Others, [1916] 2 K.B. 206; 85 L.J.K.B. 1193; 114 L.T. 717; 80 J.P. 289; 33 Digest 721; 37 Digest 185, 191.

APPEAL by applicants against the confirmation by the Minister of Health of a compulsory purchase order for the acquisition of a house and grounds made by the Lancashire County Council. The facts appear in the judgment.

Willink, K.C. and J. J. Somerville for the applicants.

H. L. Parker for the Minister.

MORRIS, J.: On Feb. 7, 1946, the Lancashire County Council made an order for the compulsory acquisition of a freehold residence at New Longton, together with the land in which it stood. In the compulsory purchase order, the property to be acquired was described as follows: "Plot of land containing 2,982 acres at New Longton together with the dwelling house known as 'The Laund,' Saunders Lane, New Longton, and other buildings erected thereon." The order was made to provide a residence for a police superintendent. The officer in question is in charge of communications in the area, and the residence to be acquired would be highly convenient in that it is closely adjacent to police headquarters. The residence is vacant, and the applicants, in this originating notice of motion, who are the executors of the late owner-occupier, were proposing and were about to sell the property by auction. The applicants objected to the compulsory purchase order. The Minister directed the holding of an inquiry and thereafter, on July 2, 1946, he confirmed the compulsory purchase order.

The contention of the applicants is that the order which the Minister has confirmed is not within the powers conferred by part V of the Housing Act, 1936. Two main submissions are urged. In the first place, it is said that s. 97 of the Housing Act, 1936, does not give authority to a county council to acquire a house for someone in the position and with the status of a police superintendent. In the second place, it is said that s. 97 cannot be invoked, for the reason that members of a county police force are not employed or paid either by the county council or by a statutory committee of the county council. No argument was addressed to the court in support of a ground raised in the notice of motion, namely, that the consent of the Minister of Health should have been obtained before the county council made their compulsory purchase order. It was, however, additionally submitted that the Minister ought not in any event to have authorised the acquisition of more than the residence itself, and that the Minister had not recorded or recited that it appeared to him likely that the land acquired would be needed within a period of ten years. In the course of the inquiry directed by the Minister, it was indicated that houses for police purposes could, if necessary, be erected on the land in future. A tentative plan for the erection of seven pairs of houses had been prepared. In my view, there is no validity in this additional submission. The land being acquired is no more than what was regarded as the land in which the house stood, and which normally would pass with the house on a sale. In this connection it is to be observed that s. 75 of the Housing Act, 1936, provides as follows:

Nothing in this Act shall authorise the compulsory acquisition for the purposes of this part of this Act of any land which . . . at the date of the compulsory purchase order forms part of any park, garden or pleasure ground, or is otherwise required for the amenity or convenience of any house.

The land being taken does not appear to be more extensive than the land which was regarded by the late owner-occupier as being the park or garden of the house, or as being land required for the amenity of the house. In these circumstances, no question arises as to land being taken which is not immediately required, and the project of building further houses for police occupation on the land in the future need not be considered. The residence is now needed, and the property to be acquired does not consist of any greater quantity of land than can reasonably be regarded as the land in which the residence stands.

I pass, therefore, to consider the two main arguments which were presented on behalf of the applicants. In support of the first of these, attention was directed to the fact that s. 97 appears in part V of the Housing Act, and it was urged that the powers under s. 97 only apply where property is being acquired for the housing of the working classes. The evidence showed that the salary and allowances of the superintendent in question amounted to £800 per annum. The heading of part V of the Housing Act, 1936, is as follows: "Provision of housing accommodation for the working classes. General powers and duties of local authorities." The Act does not contain a definition of the phrase "working classes" other than in sched. XI, para. 11 (e), where the phrase is defined to include:

... mechanics, artisans, labourers, and others working for wages, hawkers, costermongers, persons not working for wages, but working at some trade or handicraft without employing others, except members of their own family, and persons other than domestic servants whose income in any case does not exceed an average of £3 a week, and the families of any of such persons who may be residing with them.

That definition, is, however, laid down for the purposes of sched. XI. As an effort in selectiveness, the phrase "working classes" appears to me to be neither happy nor precise. It does not seem that the superintendent comes within the grouping designated by the phrase, and on behalf of the Minister of Health it was not so suggested.

Section 97 of the Act is in the following terms:

A county council or mental hospitals board shall have power to provide houses for persons employed or paid by, or by a statutory committee of, the council or board, and for that purpose may be authorised to acquire or appropriate land in like manner as a local authority may be authorised to acquire or appropriate land for the purposes of this part of this Act.

The section, and others which follow it, appear under the sub-heading "Miscellaneous," and under the general heading of part V, the terms of which I have read. These headings may be regarded as preambles to the sections appearing under them: see MAXWELL ON INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES, 9th ed., p. 46. As such, they may form a guide to intention where words admit of doubt or ambiguity: ibid. p. 40, where the following passage occurs:

The preamble of a statute has been said to be a good means of finding out its meaning, and, as it were, a key to the understanding of it; and as it usually states, or professes to state, the general object and intention of the legislature in passing the enactment, it may legitimately be consulted to solve any ambiguity, or to fix the meaning of words which may have more than one, or to keep the effect of the Act within its real scope, whenever the enacting part is in any of these respects open to doubt.

See also HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, vol. 31, p. 464, para. 565, where the following passage occurs:

Headings . . . frequently precede clauses of enactments, or fasciculi of clauses, applicable to special objects. They govern, and may generally be read before, each of the sections which are ranged under them. They are to be regarded as parts of the statute itself, and may be read not only as explaining the sections which immediately follow, but as affording an even better key to the general construction than a mere preamble. Further, as being found and sometimes referred to in the enacting parts, they are deserving of greater consideration than marginal notes. The clear meaning and natural operation of words found in the various sections under headings must, however, according to the general rule, not be restrained or confined by them.

It has, therefore, to be considered whether there is doubt or ambiguity as to the meaning and construction of s. 97. The section begins by giving power to provide houses for certain persons, and then provides that for such purpose of providing houses there is to be authority to acquire land in like manner as a local authority may be authorised to acquire land for the purposes of part V of the Act. The latter part of the section is, in my view, dealing with the manner in which authority to acquire land is given, and is not dealing with the question as to the persons for whom houses may be provided. The earlier part of the section deals with this. The persons are those who are "employed or paid by, or by a statutory committee of, the council or board." These words are, in my view, clear, and the persons designated are defined by such words. There is no limitation so as to confine the persons to persons of the working class who are employed or paid by, or by a statutory committee of, the council or board. A reading of s. 98 of the Act shows how such a limitation could have been imposed if such had been the intention. In my judgment, therefore, the persons for whom houses may be provided, if they are otherwise within the statutory designation, need not be persons of the working class.

I pass now to a consideration of the second main submission of the applicants, which concerns the question whether members of a county police force are employed or paid, either by a county council or by a statutory committee of a county council. On behalf of the Minister of Health, it was not sought to argue that a member of a county police force is employed by a county council, or is either employed or paid by a statutory committee of a county council. It is not, therefore, necessary to consider the status of the members of such a force, though it may usefully be noted that in Lewis v. Cattle (1) it was held that a police officer, whether he be a member of the metropolitan police force or a member of the police force of a county, city or borough, holds the office of constable and as such is a "person who holds office under His Majesty" within the Official Secrets Act, 1911.

In Fisher v. Oldham Corporation (2), McCARDIE, J., had occasion to consider the position of police officers in a borough, and he held that the police appointed by the watch committee of a borough corporation, if they arrest and detain a person unlawfully, do not act as the servants or agents of the corporation so as to render that body liable to an action for false imprisonment. In connection with the part of the case with which I am about to deal, it is to be observed that in his judgment McCARDIE, J., said ([1930] 2 K.B. 364, at p. 376):

Only in a special and limited sense can a police officer be said to be in the employ of a municipal corporation. With respect to the action for "wages", as they are called in that case—and I do not forget sched. V of the Municipal Corporations Act—I think the point may well be raised some day whether any such action will lie in so far as it is framed upon an alleged contract of service in the ordinary sense. Any such action may perhaps be more properly brought on a special footing—namely, on the duty of the defendants to pay such sum as is due by virtue of statutory obligation plus a certain degree of contractual relationship.

The learned judge goes on to refer to the decisions recorded in LUMLEY'S PUBLIC HEALTH, vol. 1, 9th ed., pp. 450 and 451, and also to Hall v. Taylor (3).

It now becomes necessary to consider the position as regards the payment of members of a county police force. The County Police Act, 1839, provided that it should be lawful for the justices assembled in general or quarter sessions, with the consent of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to increase or diminish the number of constables first appointed under such Act for their county. The Act provided that a Principal Secretary of State might make rules for the government, pay, clothing and accoutrements and necessities of the constables, and that such rules should be binding on all persons whom they might concern. By its various provisions, the Act dealt with the establishment of county and district constables by the authority of justices of the peace. This Act was followed in 1840 by the County Police Act of that year, which enabled justices to make a police rate, and which otherwise dealt with the powers of justices in general or quarter sessions in regard to county police.

The Local Government Act, 1888, under which county councils were established, contains provisions of great consequence as affecting the matter now under consideration. By s. 3 of that Act it was provided:

There shall be transferred to the council of each county on and after the appointed day, the administrative business of the justices of the county in quarter sessions assembled, that is to say, all business done by the quarter sessions or any committee appointed by the quarter sessions, in respect of the several matters following, namely, (i) The making, assessing, and levying of county, police, hundred, and all rates, and the application and expenditure thereof, and the making of orders for the payment of sums payable out of any such rate, or out of the county stock or county fund, and the preparation and revision of the basis or standard for the county rate . . . (iv) Shire halls, county halls, assize courts, judges' lodgings, lock-up houses, court houses, justices' rooms, police stations, and county buildings, works, and property, subject as to the use of buildings by the quarter sessions and the justices to the provisions of this Act respecting the joint committee of quarter sessions and the county council.

Section 8 dealt with the reservation of business to quarter sessions, and by s. 9 (1) it was provided :

The powers, duties and liabilities of quarter sessions and of justices out of session with respect to the county police shall, on and after the appointed day, vest in and attach to the quarter sessions and the county council jointly, and be exercised and discharged through the standing joint committee of the quarter sessions and county council appointed as hereinafter mentioned.

Section 30 provided for the setting up of the standing joint committee. Section 30 (1) is in these terms :

For the purpose of the police, and the clerk of the peace, and of clerks of the justices, and joint officers, and of matters required to be determined jointly by the quarter sessions and the council of a county, there shall be a standing joint committee of the quarter sessions and the county council, consisting of such equal number of justices appointed by the quarter sessions and of members of the county council appointed by that council as may from time to time be arranged between the quarter sessions and the council, and in default of arrangement such number taken equally from the quarter sessions and the council as may be directed.

By sub-s. (3) it is provided that :

Any matter arising under this Act with respect to the police, or to the clerk of the peace, or to clerks of the justices, or to officers who serve both the quarter sessions or justices and the county council, or to the provision of accommodation for the quarter sessions or justices out of session or to the use by them or the police or the said clerks of any buildings, rooms, or premises . . . and any other matter requiring to be determined jointly by the quarter sessions and county council, shall be referred to and determined by the joint committee under this section ; and all such expenditure as the said joint committee determine to be required for the purposes of the matters above in this section mentioned, shall be paid out of the county fund, and the council of the county shall provide for such payment accordingly.

Attention must necessarily be closely directed to the concluding words of sub-s. (3) which I have just read—the words providing that expenditure as determined to be required by the standing joint committee shall be paid out of the county fund and that the county council shall provide for such payment. It is clear that a standing joint committee, though a statutory committee, is not a statutory committee of a county council. As its name clearly denotes and as its constitution shows, it is a joint committee of justices appointed by quarter sessions and of members of the county council appointed by the council.

Certain other statutory enactments call for mention. The Police Act, 1890, made provision respecting the pensions, allowances and gratuities of police constables. The provisions of s. 33 of and sched. III to that Act show that in a county, the police authority is recognised to be the standing joint committee, and that the police fund is the county fund. The Police Act, 1919, under which the Police Federation was established, provided by s. 4 that the Secretary of State might make regulations as to the government, mutual aid, pay, allowances, pensions, clothing, expenses and conditions of service of the members of all police forces within England and Wales, and that every police authority should comply with the regulations so made. This section is analogous to s. 3 of the Act of 1839, though in 1919 the matters to be dealt with in regulations were wider in scope than in 1839. Such matters included, for example, pensions, which were not mentioned in 1839. The Act of 1839 had provided that the regulations of the Secretary of State should be binding on all persons whom they might concern. In 1839 such persons would include the justices. In 1919 the standing joint committee had in a county become the police authority, and every police authority is, by the terms of the 1919 Act, required to comply with the regulations.

It is submitted on behalf of the applicants that the conclusion to be drawn is that police are paid by the police authority, and that in a county this payment comes out of the county fund. It is submitted that the police authority determine what expenditure is required, and, so to speak, indent on the county fund, but that they have a statutory duty to comply with regulations as to pay, and that, therefore, payments to police for their services ought properly to be regarded as made by the police authority, and that it would not be correct to say that police in a county are paid by the county council. It was agreed by both sides that the words "paid by" in s. 97 of the Housing Act, 1936, following as they do the words "employed or" must reasonably be read as referring to payment for services. In support of their contentions, the applicants referred to the various provisions of the Police Pensions Act, 1921, in which occur such phrases as "in respect of a pension from a police authority" and "pension allowance and gratuity payable by a police authority." On behalf of the Minister of Health, it was submitted that since police in a county are paid out of the county fund, it is correct to say that they are paid by the county council. It was pointed out that there are no statutory provisions dealing with payments by a standing joint committee, or establishing a treasurer for them, or providing for an audit of any payments to be made by them. Attention was called to ss. 182, 183 and 184 of the Local Government Act, 1933, as well as to the provisions of s. 181 dealing with a county fund. Section 181 is in these terms:

(1) All receipts of a county council, whether for general or special county purposes, shall be carried to the county fund, and all liabilities falling to be discharged by the council, whether for general or special county purposes, shall be discharged out of that fund. (2) Separate accounts shall be kept of receipts carried to, and payments made out of, the county fund (a) for general county purposes; (b) for each special county purpose, except that, where as respects any two or more special county purposes the part of the county chargeable is the same, one separate account may be kept as respects both or all of those purposes; and the account for general county purposes shall be called the general county account, and an account for any special county purpose shall be called a special county account.

Section 184 (1) is in these terms:

All payments to and out of the county fund shall be made to and by the county treasurer.

On a consideration of the various statutory provisions, the view that I have formed is that it is correct and appropriate to say that members of a county police force are persons who are paid by the county council concerned. The expenditure which their service involves must be paid out of the county fund, and the payment must be made by the county treasurer. It is, in my view, the county council who are paying. The statutory direction that every police authority must comply with regulations to be made by the Secretary of State, and that such regulations may deal with a number of topics, including that of pay, does not purport to enact that the police are to be paid by the police authority. The position remains, in my view, that county police are paid out of the county fund, and that payments out of that fund must be made by the county treasurer.

I must give effect to this view which I have formed unless there are any authorities which have laid down a contrary view. I pass, therefore, to consider certain cases which are in point. After the Act of 1888, a question arose in Somerset whether it was the county council or the standing joint committee who had control of buildings and premises for the accommodation of quarter sessions or justices out of session or for the use of the police or clerks to justices. The question was submitted to the Queen's Bench Division, where it was decided that it was the standing joint committee that had control. The matter is reported under the name Ex parte Somerset County Council (4), and in his judgment MATHEW, J., (58 L.J.Q.B. 512, at p. 515) said:

They are, therefore, to have complete control, as it seems to me, of the questions arising within the meaning of the section, "and all such expenditure as the said joint committee determine to be required for the purposes of the matters above in this section mentioned shall be paid out of the county fund, and the council of the county shall provide for such payment accordingly." Their duty is to say what expenditure shall be required, and then, upon requisition, the county council are to supply the funds, and it is the duty of the county council to obey the requisition made.

CAVE, J. (at p. 516), used these words:

... all questions arising with regard to them, or with respect to anything incidental to them, are to be determined by the standing joint committee, and not by the county council, and that, with regard to all such matters, the only thing which the county council have got to do is to pay the bill, and that, as I understand, necessarily because the county council alone has the power to raise money, and to pay that money when it has been raised. But, with the solitary exception of having the privilege of paying the bills, it seems to me that the council have nothing to do with the buildings or rooms or premises which are required . . .

In Ex parte Leicestershire County Council (5) it was decided that the control over the division of a county into police districts is vested in the standing joint committee of the county. HAWKINS, J., referred to ss. 3 (1) and 9 (1) of the Act of 1888, and went on ([1891] 1 Q.B. 53, at p. 56) :

I have given the matter attentive consideration, and I have come to the conclusion that the effect of this section is to give the standing joint committee control over the division of the county into police districts. The payment of the county police is one thing; the distribution of the county police into districts is another. The administrative duty of making and assessing the rates for the maintenance of the police force, and of directing the application and expenditure of them is, in my opinion, vested under the new Act in the county council, and the control of the division of the county into police districts is vested in the standing joint committee.

What the learned judge said about payment was doubtless said obiter, but it is reasonable to read his words as showing that he did not consider that the county police were being paid by the standing joint committee.

In Glamorgan Coal Co. v. Glamorgan Standing Joint Committee and Others (6) the question concerned the liability of the standing joint committee to pay for the expenses of housing and feeding certain additional police brought from outside to assist the county police. The housing accommodation and the meals supplied had been provided by the plaintiffs at the request of the chief constable. The county council was sued as well as the standing joint committee. No question, however, arose in regard to the payment of the police. It was held in that case by the majority in the Court of Appeal that the standing joint committee had power to enter into the contracts so as to bind themselves, and that they were, therefore, rightly sued upon them, the county council being properly joined as parties to the action as they were the persons who would have to pay the amount found due and against whom an order for payment might be necessary. The order made by the Court of Appeal was in these terms ([1916 2 K.B. 206, at p. 225]) :

Allow the appeal, vary order of the court below. Decide in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants, the standing joint committee and the county council, on the questions of liability raised on the pleadings so far as these relate to police other than metropolitan police, and against the plaintiffs and in favour of the said defendants so far as these questions relate to the metropolitan police. Declare that the defendants, the standing joint committee, are liable for the expenditure incurred by the plaintiffs as in the pleadings mentioned in respect of the police other than the metropolitan police, but not in respect of the metropolitan police. Refer the claim of the plaintiffs to an official referee, unless otherwise arranged, to ascertain the true amount thereof. Direct judgment to be entered in favour of the plaintiffs against the said defendants for the amount when ascertained. Order that the costs in the court below be plaintiffs' in any event . . .

It is helpful to read a passage in the judgment of PICKFORD, L.J. ([1916] 2 K.B., at p. 231) :

This only leaves the question whether under the statutes the standing joint committee or the county council can be sued upon the agreements made by the chief constable. If, as I think, he had created an obligation upon the county to pay, the question of whether it can be enforced by action or otherwise is purely technical, and would, I think, never have been raised but for the fact that the defendants were unwilling to pay for the untenable reason which I have already mentioned. Still, if it is a good point, they are entitled to the benefit of it. The standing joint committee is a statutory body, and its duties and liabilities are in substitution for those of the justices before the Local Government Act of 1888. Before that Act the justices under various statutes, chiefly the County Police Act, 1839, and the County and Borough Police Act, 1856, were the police authority, and were charged with the duty of supporting the police force. In order to discharge this duty they could and did make contracts for buildings, clothing, etc., for police purposes, and by s. 2 of 21 and 22 Vict. c. 92, except where otherwise provided for, contracts were made on their behalf by the clerk of the peace, and he could sue or be sued upon them, payment being made out of the county fund. In 1888 the Local Government Act, s. 9, transferred these powers, duties and liabilities to the quarter sessions and county council jointly to be exercised by the standing joint committee . . . It seems to me that if the duties and liabilities which required the making of contracts before are transferred to the standing joint committee.

there must be implied a power of contracting, and this is consistent with s. 25 of the Police Act, 1890, which gives them the power of making a particular kind of contract. It cannot, I think, be a correct construction of this legislation that the standing joint committee had no power of contracting except in the one instance mentioned in that Act. It was necessary to give them that power expressly, because it extended beyond the support of their own police.

A more difficult question is who is bound by a contract made by them. They are not an incorporated body, and it could not have been intended that the members should be personally liable, and they have no seal under which they can contract when a seal is required. In ordinary cases no difficulty arises. The standing joint committee indent, so to speak, for what they want, and the necessary contract is made by the county council, who cannot object to the requirements of the standing joint committee, but there is no provision in the Acts that the county council shall be a party to all their contracts as the clerk of the peace was a party to those of the justices. I think that the agreements mentioned in s. 25 are intended to be contracts of the standing joint committee on their own behalf and not as agents for the county council, and if that be so I think that this section, considered in connection with the latter part of s. 30 of the Local Government Act, 1888, points to all contracts made by the standing joint committee being their contracts, payment for which is to be made by the county council. I think that when the standing joint committee made a contract by doing so they determined the proper expenditure under that contract, which must be ascertained in case of dispute by the ordinary tribunals to be necessary expenditure, and the county council must pay it, but that the contract remained that of the standing joint committee. The question is not, in my opinion, very important, as the same result is obtained in each case, and the only difference is that the form of recovery is by means of a declaration that the standing joint committee are liable for the amount and an order on the county council to pay it instead of by means of a direct judgment against the county council.

Reference may also usefully be made to the judgment of BRAY, J. ([1916] 2 K.B., at pp. 241, 242):

I think the judgment should declare that the standing joint committee are liable to pay all the claims of both plaintiffs in respect of all the police other than the metropolitan police (subject to the inquiry as to the items) and that they are not liable to pay the claims in respect of the metropolitan police. As regards the county council, they were in my opinion proper parties to this action for two reasons: one because they as the paymasters are the persons really interested, and the other because I think that the plaintiffs are entitled to an order that the county council should pay to the plaintiffs the sums for which the standing joint committee are found to be liable. In my view, this case, though not dealing with any question of the payment to be made to members of the police force in respect of their services, tends to support the view which I have expressed.

For the reasons which I have given, I consider that the superintendent was and is a person paid by the Lancashire County Council, who, therefore, have power to provide a house for him. The Minister, in confirming the acquisition order, did not overstep his powers. In my judgment, therefore, this application fails.

Application dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Bird & Bird, agents for T. H. & T. Dodd & Buckley, Preston (for the applicants); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the respondent).

quished. HARRISON v. HOPKINS. [Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]
[2 All E.R. 597.]

PARKER AND OTHERS v. ROSENBERG.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Tucker and Bucknill, L.JJ.), December 10, 18, 1946.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Recovery of possession—House required by landlord—"Landlord"—Beneficiary under will—Trustees enabled to permit beneficiary use of house or to receive net rents and profits—Beneficiary not party to letting of house—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. 1 (h) (i).

By her will, J.M., who died in 1937, demised to two trustees a freehold dwelling-house on trust for sale and conversion with power to postpone and in the meantime to permit M.C.M. during her life either to have the use and enjoyment of the house or to receive the net rents and profits thereof. From and after the death of the survivor of herself and M.C.M., the testatrix gave the trust fund to N.K.M. absolutely. In 1941 the trustees let the house to the defendant for a year, and the tenancy was extended from time to time and finally terminated on May 19, 1946. The property being within the Rent Restriction Acts, the two trustees and M.C.M. claimed possession from the defendant under sched. I (h) (i) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, on the ground that M.C.M., as landlord, required the house as a residence for herself.

HELD: (i) the trustees, being personal representatives having no beneficial interest in the house, could not avail themselves of sched. I (h) of the Act of 1933: Sharpe v. Nicholls (1) followed.

(ii) M.C.M. was not a party to the tenancy agreement; she was not entitled to the reversion of the property; she was not, and would not be, "entitled to possession of the house" but for the Rent Restriction Acts, within the definition of "landlord" in s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and apart from the Acts would not be entitled to sue in ejectment; and, therefore, she could not obtain possession under sched. I (h).

[AS TO POSSESSION REQUIRED BY LANDLORD FOR HIS OWN OCCUPATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 332, para. 396; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, p. 580, Nos. 7283-7291.]

Case referred to:

(1) Sharpe v. Nicholls, [1945] 2 All E.R. 55; [1945] K.B. 382; 114 L.J.K.B. 409; 172 L.T. 363; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from Worthing County Court.

The plaintiff claimed from the defendant possession of a dwelling-house within the Rent Restriction Acts at Worthing. The county court judge made an order for possession against the defendant, who now appealed.

E. S. Fay for defendant.

B. E. Dutton Briant and F. K. Glazebrook for plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 18. TUCKER, L.J., read the following judgment of the court: This is an appeal by the defendant from a decision of His Honour Judge Archer whereby he made an order for possession in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendant in respect of a dwelling-house known as "Denmaro," St. Thomas Road, Worthing.

The plaintiffs are Alan Rodgson Parker, Warren Edward Lovesey and Edith Marianne Christine Marsh. The first two plaintiffs are trustees of the will of Emma Jessie Marsh, who died on February 20, 1937, and the third plaintiff is a sister of the testator and a beneficiary under her will. The relevant words of the will are as follows:

I devise and bequeath to my trustees (free of all estate legacy and succession duty and the duties, if any, on such duty) my freehold bungalow and land known as Denmaro St. Thomas Road Worthing aforesaid Upon trust to sell and convert the same into money at such time and in such manner as my trustees shall think fit and so that my trustees shall have the fullest power to postpone such sale or conversion for so long as they may think proper without being responsible for loss and I direct my trustees to stand possessed of the said freehold property or the proceeds of sale thereof or the investments for the time being representing the same (hereinafter called the trust fund) Upon trust to permit my sister Edith Marianne Christine Marsh during her life until sale of the said property to have the use and enjoyment thereof or to receive the net rents and profits thereof and thereafter during the remainder of her life the income of the net proceeds of sale thereof or of the investments from time to time representing the same and from and after the date of the death of the survivor of myself and my sister I give the trust fund both capital and income thereof to my niece Nora Kathleen Marsh absolutely and I hereby declare that it is my wish but without in any way limiting the discretion hereby conferred upon my trustees and without creating any trust or legal obligation that as far as possible no sale of the said property shall take place during the lifetime of my sister the said Edith Marianne Christine Marsh.

By an agreement in writing dated Feb. 19, 1941, the trustees let the premises in question to the defendant for a term of one year at a weekly rent of £1 2s. 6d. The tenancy was extended from time to time and was finally terminated on May 19, 1946. During the tenancy the third plaintiff (hereinafter referred to as "Miss Marsh") received the rents and profits from the house by permission of the trustees. The tenancy was determined by the trustees for the purpose of allowing Miss Marsh to go into occupation of the house pursuant to their discretion under the will to permit her to have the use and enjoyment thereof during her life. The house was within the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts and the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to possession under para. (h) of sched. I to the Act of 1933 on the ground that the house was required for occupation as a residence for Miss Marsh. The relevant words of sched. I to the Act of 1933 are as follows :

A court shall, for the purposes of s. 3 of this Act, have power to make or give an order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply . . . without proof of suitable alternative accommodation (where the court considers it reasonable so to do) if . . . (h) the dwelling-house is reasonably required by the landlord . . . for occupation as a residence for (i) himself . . .

There follows a proviso with regard to "greater hardship," to which it is not necessary for the present purposes to refer.

In Sharpe v. Nicholls (1), it was held by this court that personal representatives having no beneficial interest in the dwelling-house in question cannot avail themselves of the provisions of para. (h) of sched. I. It follows that the trustees in the present case could not have obtained an order for possession if they were the only plaintiffs. Can they remedy this by joining Miss Marsh as plaintiff, and was she properly joined ?

Under the will of the testator Miss Marsh had no right to compel the trustees to give her possession of the house. The trustees held the property under a trust for sale and conversion with power to postpone and in the meantime to permit Miss Marsh in their discretion during her life either to receive the net rents and profits or to have the use and enjoyment thereof and they were not bound to postpone the sale until after Miss Marsh's death. It is further to be observed that Miss Marsh was not a person with the sole beneficial interest, as the testator's niece, Nora Kathleen Marsh, was ultimately entitled to the trust fund which included the proceeds of sale of this house.

Reliance was placed by counsel for the plaintiffs on the definition of "landlord" in s. 12 (1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. It was contended for the defendant that the definition in that Act was inapplicable to the Act of 1933 since that Act itself has a definition section, viz., s. 16, which does not repeat the 1920 Act definition of "landlord," and, further, s. 18 of the 1933 Act, which provides that the Act may be cited together with the principal Acts, does not say, as in the case of s. 4 of the 1923 Act, that the Act is to be construed as one with the principal Act. This matter was discussed by MORTON, L.J., in Sharpe v. Nicholls (1). We do not consider it necessary to decide this question because we are of opinion that Miss Marsh has no title to the premises and is not a person who is or would, but for the Act, be entitled to possession of the same. She is, accordingly, not within the definition. It is clear that neither the definition section of the 1920 Act nor para. (h) of sched. I to the 1933 Act confer on anyone any right to an order for possession which he does not possess at common law. Paragraph (h) is designed to relax in certain cases the previously imposed statutory restrictions on the common law right of recovery. In the present case Miss Marsh, apart from the Rent Restrictions Acts, would not have been entitled to sue in ejectment. She was not a party to the lease and was not entitled to the reversion. There is nothing in para. (h) enabling her to sue or be added as a plaintiff. As the proper plaintiffs, the trustees, cannot bring themselves within para. (h) and Miss Marsh cannot herself sue, it follows that no order for possession could properly be made in the present case.

A further point was taken on appeal to the effect that in any event there was no evidence on which the learned county court judge could hold that the granting of the order would not cause greater hardship than its refusal. There was, in our view, evidence on which the judge could have found either way. It was a pure question of fact and there is nothing in this ground of appeal. In the result, the appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Jackson & Jackson, agents for H. D. Grey, Worthing (for defendant); Waller, Neale & Houlston, agents for Marsh & Ferriman, Worthing (for plaintiffs).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DAVEY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Tucker and Cohen, L.JJ.), December 17, 1946.]

Emergency Legislation—Liabilities adjustment order—Relief from payment of rent—Quantum—Discretion of court—"Lettable value"—Development of shopping centre arrested—Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941 (c. 24), s. 6—Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1944 (c. 40), s. 6.

The quantum of reduction of rent under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941, as amended by the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1944, is in the discretion of the county court judge. The fact that the contemplated development of a shopping centre is arrested and that some prospective tenants are prepared to take a risk and pay full rent immediately, in the hope of success later on, is in no way inconsistent with the current lettable value being comparatively low.

[FOR THE LIABILITIES (WAR-TIME ADJUSTMENT) ACT, 1944, s. 6, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 37, p. 18.]

APPEAL by the creditor from an order made at Willesden County Court under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1944, reducing the rent payable for a house and shop from £200 to £150 a year.

M. Levene for the creditor.

L. Stranger-Jones for the debtor.

SCOTT, L.J.: This is a case in which, under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Acts of 1941 and 1944, the judge reduced the rent payable for a house and shop in Wembley from the £200 a year provided for by the lease, which was for 21 years with options to determine it, to £150 a year. He did so under the provisions of s. 6 of the Act of 1944, which put a new s. 6 into the earlier Act of 1941. It runs as follows:

(1) Where at the date of the protection order the debtor is the tenant of any premises, the court may in the liabilities adjustment order provide that, in respect of any period whether before or after the making of the order, the debtor shall be wholly or partly relieved from the payment of rent—Provided that: (a) in the case of a period before the making of the order, the court shall not grant relief under this subsection unless in its opinion the lettable value of the premises was depreciated during that period as a result of war circumstances, and shall not wholly relieve the tenant from the payment of rent unless in its opinion the premises had no lettable value during that period, or reduce the rent below such amount as in the opinion of the court represents the average lettable value during that period.

The definition of "lettable value" is contained in sub-s. (2):

"Lettable value" in relation to any premises of which the debtor is tenant, means the rent at which in the opinion of the court the premises might reasonably be expected to let, or, as the case may be, might reasonably have been expected to let, under a tenancy for one year granted upon the same terms and conditions (so far as applicable) as those upon which the debtor is holding the premises.

The creditor, who was the landlord and had his rent reduced, appeals on two grounds. The first is that there was no evidence on which the judge could come to the conclusion to which he did and make a reduction of the rent. It is to be observed at once that, if there was any evidence, the quantum of reduction was a matter of discretion for the judge and, therefore, one on which we cannot interfere, even if we would. In my view, there was in this case evidence on which the judge could proceed to make the order he did. The evidence of the tenant himself, I think, was sufficient by itself for us to say that there was some evidence. Whether we should in his place have made the same reduction I express no opinion. We might have, we might not.

The other submission was that the judge misdirected himself in applying the definition of "lettable value" which predicates a hypothetical tenancy for one year granted on the same terms and conditions, so far as applicable to a one year tenancy, as those on which the debtor is holding. The judge thus referred to that in connection with the contemplated development of the neighbourhood as a shopping centre in competition with others, for which object the debtor had taken the shop and house:

The development was arrested and has not yet really commenced. The fact that certain people are willing to take a risk and pay full rent immediately, no doubt in the hope of success later on, is in no way inconsistent with the present value of a year's letting being comparatively low.

A From that expression I cannot think that he has in any way misapplied the provision of the Act. I regard the intention of the subsection which contains the definition as comparable, as TUCKER, L.J. pointed out in the course of the argument, to the measure of value afforded by the ordinary rule in rating law of the hypothetical tenant from year to year. I, therefore, see no reason for supposing that the judge has gone wrong, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

B TUCKER, L.J.: I agree. It is, of course, important to bear in mind that the machinery of these Acts is designed to assist debtors who have got into difficulties. It is, no doubt, the desire of the liabilities adjustment officer and of county court judges so far as they can, without doing any injustice to anybody else, to get the debtor on his feet again. One of the ways in which they are enabled to do that is by making reductions in the rent payable by the tenant, but, of course, great care has to be taken to see that, in endeavouring to achieve that laudable purpose, no injustice is done to the landlord who is under a contractual relationship with the tenant and at whose expense the tenant is not entitled to surmount his obstacles, subject only to this, that special provision is made in the Act for a reduction of rent in the circumstances there laid down. C I need not refer to the subsections, but they define lettable value and they require that the lettable value of the premises in question should have been depreciated as the result of circumstances due to the war. It is, therefore, very necessary for the county court judge in all these cases to see that those requirements have, in fact, been fulfilled before he makes a reduction in the rent payable by any tenant at the expense of the landlord.

D At one time I did feel some doubt with regard to these proceedings because the concluding paragraph of the liabilities adjustment officer's report of June 28, 1946, draws attention to a deed entered into on Oct. 30, 1941, between the landlord and the tenant, when bombs were dropping not very far from Wembley, whereby the parties agreed to a reduction of the rent, and continues:

E Having regard to the provisions of para. 3 of the release and waiver and the provisions of the Tenancy Agreements Order, 1946, the liabilities adjustment officer submits that para. 3 (b) of the said release and waiver shall apply and, therefore, the annual rent payable by the debtor for the premises shall be at the rate of £130 a year.

F He is there recommending, so far as I can see, that simply because the landlord and tenant, when the bombs were falling in 1941, agreed to a reduction of the rental to £130, that shall be taken to be the figure now that the bombs have stopped dropping, and the county court judge is confined to the grounds set out in s. 6 of the Act of 1944. It appears to me that everything referred to in the concluding paragraph of that report is completely irrelevant to anything with which the county court judge had to deal. However, having approached the case from that angle, I think it was necessary to see carefully what evidence there was before the county court judge, and we have been taken through every piece of evidence which was before him. I am satisfied that there was material which justified him as the tribunal of fact in making an order within the limits laid down in s. 6 of this Act. There is nothing to indicate that he in any way misdirected himself as a matter of law. This was a pure question of fact and his finding cannot, in my view, be disturbed on appeal to this court. G For those reasons, I agree the appeal fails.

I COHEN, L.J.: I also agree. Counsel has said all that could be said on behalf of the creditor. I am unable to find any indication that the county court judge misdirected himself as a matter of law, and I entirely agree with my brothers that there was evidence on which he could reach his conclusion. Counsel's argument was largely based on the suggestion that the debtor had been allowed to give evidence as an expert and that he was not qualified as an expert as to the value of the premises. I do not think that is a true view of his evidence. I think he was giving his evidence as a tobaccoist who was perfectly competent to say what he as a tobaccoist would be prepared to give for premises which were to be let on the terms that they were only to be used for the purposes of the business specified in cl. 11 of the draft lease. To that extent I think his evidence was admissible. Its value was a matter for the judge.

He had that evidence and other matters which I need not specify before him. I entirely agree, in those circumstances, that it is impossible for us to disturb his finding on this question of fact. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Montague, Adler & Arnold (for the appellant); H. R. Hodder & Son, Willesden (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] A

SUTTON v. BOOTLE CORPORATION

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott and Asquith, L.JJ., and Vaisey, J.), November 26, 27, December 16, 1946.]

Negligence—Licensee—Infant—Recreation ground—Injuries caused by defective swing—Local authority ignorant of defect—Liability. B

The plaintiff, a child of 9, while playing in the playground in one of the defendant corporation's public parks, was boarding a swing when her finger, the top joint of which was later amputated, was caught between the unguarded lug and socket of a checking device designed to prevent the swing going too far. The defect was one which could easily have been remedied. The defendants, who had no knowledge of the danger, had obtained the swing from an old-established firm of manufacturers, and the model was one which had been in use for years without any previous accident of a similar nature: C

Held: the defendants owed the plaintiff the obligation of a licensor to a licensee, and since, as such, they were bound to do no more than warn her of dangers actually known to them, no liability attached to them. D

[AS TO DUTY OF TAKE CARE IN RELATION TO CHILDREN, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 23, p. 584, para. 836; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 68-71, Nos. 433-462.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Addie (R.) & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck, [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; Digest Supp.
- (2) Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 454; [1938] 1 K.B. 212; 107 L.J.K.B. 84; 157 L.T. 380; 101 J.P. 469; Digest Supp.
- (3) Purkis v. Walthamstow Borough Council (1934), 151 L.T. 30; 98 J.P. 244; Digest Supp.
- (4) Coates v. Rawtenstall Borough Council, [1937] 3 All E.R. 602; 157 L.T. 415; 101 J.P. 483; Digest Supp.
- (5) Glasgow Corp'n. v. Taylor, [1922] 1 A.C. 44; 91 L.J.P.C. 49; 126 L.T. 262; 86 J.P. 89; 36 Digest 70, 453.
- (6) Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.
- (7) Francis v. Cockrell (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 501; 10 B. & S. 950; 39 L.J.Q.B. 291; 23 L.T. 466; 34 Digest 166, 1296. E F

APPEAL by the defendant corporation from a decision of STABLE, J., given at Liverpool Summer Assizes on June 4, 1946, in favour of the plaintiff, on the ground that it was the duty of a corporation, which provided implements for children to play with in a public recreation ground maintained by them, to provide safe and proper implements so far as skill and care could effect that result. The facts appear in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J. G

W. Clothier, K.C., and R. S. Nicklin for the appellants.

E. Wooll, K.C., and R. Heilbron for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 16. The following judgments were read. H

SCOTT, L.J.: This appeal is by the defendant corporation against a judgment of STABLE, J. in an action brought on behalf of a girl of 9 years old, claiming damages for a personal injury alleged to have been caused to her by the negligence of the corporation. The judge decided in her favour and awarded her £404 19s. 6d. The appeal is on liability only. The injury was the loss of the first and second parts of the index finger of her left hand, which was crushed in a "plank" swing belonging to and maintained by the defendants. The accident happened on the afternoon of Sunday, July 1, 1945, in a public playground reserved and specially equipped with children's delights for their recreation and amusement known as "Miller's Bridge Playground." If the judgment below is right it will have far-reaching consequences all over the country for the innumerable local authorities who have playgrounds equipped with the many varieties of such appliances, although that consideration cannot affect our decision.

A The defendants' liability, as claimed on behalf of the plaintiff and found by the judge, was that which modern text-books on the law of torts put under the general heading of "Dangerous structures and premises," where the responsibility of the occupier varies according to the relationship in which the plaintiff stands towards him, i.e., according as it is that of invitee or of licensee or of trespasser. I have no doubt that the general relationship of children coming to play in a children's playground by the public invitation of the local authority is that of licensees, and that, therefore, it was that measure of responsibility which alone was borne by the defendants. In the case of a licensee liability attaches, in my opinion, only if the occupier knows of the danger and fails to protect or warn. To decide in any particular case whether liability attaches, it is therefore essential to understand the nature of the danger very clearly. The court cannot otherwise safely decide the issue of knowledge or no knowledge.

C The story of the accident is this. This child was standing by on the ground, waiting her chance to board the swing, which held five but was only carrying four children at the moment—two of 13 years and two of 11. Eventually she tried to stop the swing as it came past her from right to left, presumably as it came near its bottom point and before it began to rise on the opposite half of its swing. I say from right to left although that is not found by the judge or even mentioned by the eye witnesses, because I think it must have been so, in view of the construction of the swing, which I will explain presently. She caught hold of something with her right hand, was carried partly off her legs, half fell, and tried to save herself with her left hand. The finger of that hand was caught and crushed. How and by what was, in my opinion, never proved with any certainty. The judge, however, held that it was in a part which was christened by the plaintiff's expert witness "the nutcracker." On the other hand, he found that the defendants had no knowledge of the existence of danger and acquitted them of any want of care in relation to the swing.

E He held that the plaintiff was a licensee; none the less he held that they were liable on the ground that because of the "nutcracker" the swing was "defective," saying that it was "a serious defect in this particular type of swing which could easily be remedied." He rejected the defendants' contention that to the plaintiff as a licensee they were only under a duty to warn or protect the plaintiff if they knew of the defect, and consequently imposed upon the defendants a measure of duty which was, in my opinion, erroneous in law. I might limit this judgment to that question of law, but having regard to the very widespread and highly desirable provision by local authorities of these playgrounds with mechanical amusements for children I think it better to state the facts with particularity. The plank-swing in question is shewn in three excellent photographs, which made it possible for the court to understand its mechanism, although it is not easy to describe it in words. I will, however, do my best.

G It consists of a long plank, about 11 ins. wide by 3 ins. thick, suspended from two tubular steel cross bars about 10 ft. above the ground, each supported by four strong tubular legs well splayed out so as to make each carrying structure rigid. The suspension of the plank is effected near each end of it by two slighter tubes carrying rings at the top which enclose the cross bar, and thus can swing freely about it. These are called the "hanger bars," because the plank hangs by them on the cross-bar. In order that the plank may be free to swing backwards and forwards, the attachment of the hanger bar at its lower end must leave it free to oscillate. That is effected by jointing it like the spoke of a wheel on to a hub which turns freely around the cross-bar which supports the plank and thus also forms an axle for the hanger bar. The latter does not revolve right round it, of course, but only backwards and forwards through a circular arc determined by the length of the hanger bar and the scope of the upward swinging movement of the swing from zero. Each end of the plank thus moves in absolute unison with the other, with the necessary result that the plank always remains horizontal however near to the level of the upper cross-bar the children may swing it. When at rest the plank is only 2-ft. above the ground and the hanger bars then hang in a vertical position.

Such plank-swings have been in use for a long time, but some twenty or so years ago it was apparent that there was danger to the children if they swung the plank very high up, and a clever braking device was invented which had the effect of bringing the upward swing quite gently to an end, before it got too high, by means of a gradual automatic increase in the braking resistance to the upward momentum. The mechanism consists of an iron stirrup, placed across but under the plank, with upturned ends enclosing the sides of the plank. It is set near to but outside the supporting cross-bar on which the hanger bar turns. The upper part of each upturned end of the stirrup carries a projecting and rounded piece called a "lug" jutting out an inch or so towards the hanger bar, which is there rectangular in section and has the side facing the lug of the stirrup hollowed out slightly, so as to make a socket against which the lug will lie when each alternate upward swing brings the hanger bar into contact with it. As the momentum of the swing presses the oscillating hanger bar harder and harder against the lug, that pressure is transmitted through the stirrup to a group of leaf springs attached to it at their top end and rigidly fixed at their lower end to the underside of the plank beyond the cross-bar. These springs exert increasing resistance against the pressure of the hanger bar on the lug, until in the end they completely stop its upward swing. The evidence does not enable us to say at what point in the upward swing the spring resistance begins to operate nor when it brings the upward swing to a dead stop, but as a guess I will assume 55 and 70 degrees respectively. The hanger bar is a pendulum, 8 ft. in length (on my figures). Adding 2 ft. for the height of its lower end above the ground when the swing is at zero, I will assume that the angles of 55 and 70 degrees represent respectively points 5 ft. 6 ins. and 8 ft. above the ground. On these figures it seems prima facie unlikely that the child's tiny finger could ever have been caught between the lug and the socket—what the expert who gave evidence for the plaintiff called "the nutcracker." For ex hypothesi its jaws are $1\frac{3}{4}$ ins. apart when the pendulum is at zero, and would not quite close till the moment before the brake begins to act. On this as on other issues of fact the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to prove that the danger point for her was near enough and low enough to be within reach of her hand, but no expert evidence was given to prove the height above the ground at which the nutcracker closed enough to grip her tiny finger if it was there to be caught. I am not a mathematician, but on my suppositions how much lower than 5 ft. 6 ins. above the ground would the mouth of the nutcracker close enough to grip the tiny finger? I can see no evidence which would indicate danger even to a skilled engineer. A fortiori there was no evidence that the defendants or their playground attendant had the faintest notion of the presence of the danger indicated by the question-begging word "nutcracker" used by the plaintiff's expert. Whereas the nutcracker was always open $1\frac{1}{2}$ ins. at the bottom of the swing (in whichever direction the swing was moving), it is clear that the plaintiff was standing with her face towards the swing as it was coming down past her (as I think) from right to left, and therefore that the nutcracker, which at the top had been open $3\frac{1}{2}$ ins., was in process of closing to its width of $1\frac{1}{2}$ ins. at its bottom position, and would not close altogether till (on my supposed figure) the swing up to the left reached 55 degrees. The fact that she had half fallen and so reduced her upward reach makes it still more difficult for her to get her hand up to anywhere near the point where the "lug" and the "socket" would come close enough together to grip the finger. The judge's comment that the defect was one "which could quite easily be remedied" following on his earlier observations makes me wonder whether he really appreciated the working of the mechanism. I certainly did not until I had thought about it quite a lot. The plaintiff's evidence is: "The girls were swinging the jerking boat, and I was trying to get on. I got hold with that hand and my hand slipped right down and got in between the two bars. The two bars got close together, and my finger came right off." My comment is that if her left hand got hold of the hanger bar and slipped down it, it could not have been caught, for the very simple reason that at the bottom of the swinging movement the socket on the hanger bar was $1\frac{3}{4}$ ins. away from the lug of the stirrup. As I have already said, it seems probable that the two would not approach each other near enough to grip the child's finger until the hanger bar had swung onwards and upwards to a height some feet above the bottom point. There is no indication of anybody pointing out this apparent misapprehension of the mechanical possibilities, but it throws prima facie doubt on the inference of fact at which the judge arrived. On the other hand, the case for the defendants presents comparable, though different, difficulties. The place where they contend that the finger was caught is between the underside of the plank and the topside of the stirrup. That gap too comes into and out of existence like the "nutcracker" as a result of the same cause, viz., the compression or release of the brake springs. It opens as the springs are compressed and closes as they are released, i.e., the precise opposite action to that of the "nutcracker." As the latter closes, the stirrup opens, and vice versa. If (as I have inferred was the fact) the accident happened in point of time just as the right-hand pair of hanging bars came past the plaintiff from right to left, it is important to remember, first, that there had been no compression at any time during that downward swing, and, secondly, that compression did not begin till after the upward half of the same oscillation had (on my guessing) taken the hanger bar to—say—55 degrees from the vertical (or thereabouts). These facts seem to me to make it equally, or even more, unlikely that she got her left hand really under the plank at a time and point when and where the plank had risen enough on the upward swing for the hanger bar not only to have come into contact with the lug, but, also, to have compressed the springs enough to depress the stirrup and produce the necessary gap to admit the finger.

The other children who gave evidence said that it was the "nutcracker" where the finger was caught. The park attendant said it was between the stirrup and plank, because he saw there what he thought was a piece of skin. The judge found as a fact that it was the former. In spite of my assumed figures of angle and height, I do not think that we can differ from him. The only reason why I have at such length discussed the probability on this issue of fact is that it seems to me to compel the inference that the defendants had neither knowledge nor suspicion that this danger was present in the spring, and there was no evidence of anything to put them on enquiry. The view taken by the judge would make the defendants' legal position almost that of an insurer of all children against all accidents caused by amusement plant, though bought from first-class suppliers and well-maintained as this was. The suppliers of this swing were a well-known, thoroughly competent firm of manufacturers making and dealing in such plant and apparatus. They had supplied 150 to 200 such swings all over the country. There had never been any similar accident. There was nothing to suggest that the swing was not maintained in perfect condition. In the absence of expert evidence on the points I have raised I find it very difficult to see how the accident happened, but it did happen.

Since writing the above explanation of the facts, so far as I can understand them, I have read the discussion of the law in the draft judgment of ASQUITH, L.J. I agree with all he says and it is unnecessary for me to add anything. The appeal must be allowed because the defendants have incurred no legal liability.

ASQUITH, L.J. (read by VAISEY, J.) : Counsel for the plaintiff has conveniently summarised the judge's findings of fact as follows : (1) That the child's finger was nipped between the "lug" and the socket ; (2) that the swing was defective and dangerous ; (3) that the defendants did not know this ; (4) that the defect could have easily been remedied ; (5) that there was no contributory negligence by the plaintiff. Like SCOTT, L.J., I see no justification for disturbing any of these findings, though, as he has pointed out, the first might be open to some question. Plaintiff's counsel, on the argument of the appeal, accepted all except the third. I propose, first, to consider the legal position on the assumption that all of the findings, including the third, stands, and, secondly, the question whether finding (3) can be successfully impeached.

I agree with my Lord that the defendants owed the plaintiff the obligation of a licensor to a licensee and no more. A licensor is bound to do no more than warn a licensee entering land in his occupation of dangers actually known to him, and, since in this case the licensors have been found not to have known the danger, if any, the appeal should be allowed. LORD HAILSHAM's dictum in Addie v. Dumbreck (1) ([1929] A.C. 358, at p. 365), which purports to impose on the licensor a duty to warn not only of dangers known to him but of any dangers of which he ought to have known, is inconsistent with other House of Lords' decisions and has been recognised by this court as uttered per incuriam: Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council (2).

The first issue of law is whether the plaintiff was a licensee and no more. The statement of claim is based entirely on the allegation that she was an invitee, though the argument for the plaintiff on the appeal exceeded the ambit of this allegation, and the judge, in my view, gave judgment for her on a basis inappropriate in law to the rights either of a licensee or of an invitee. The effect of the authorities as to who is an invitor and who a licensor is summarised in SALMOND ON TORTS, 10th ed., p. 476, in a well-known passage, which in Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council (2) was approved by this court and embodies the following neat test:

The invitor says: "I ask you to enter upon my business." The licensor says: "I permit you to enter on your business."

Judged by this test it seems plain that the plaintiff was a licensee.

Two factors were relied on in this court as imposing on the defendants a more stringent liability than that of licensors. These factors are said (it was not clear to me from the argument whether severally or in their combination, but I will assume the former) to constitute the defendants inviters or to invest them with equivalent liabilities. The first is that the plaintiff entered the recreation ground not by mere leave and licence but "as of right." The second is that the swings constituted in relation to a child an "allurement" and as such may "step up" the obligations of the defendants. I will consider these contentions in turn.

(1) The suggestion that persons entering on publicly or municipally owned parks or recreation grounds enjoy a special privileged status superior to that of licensees would seem to be ill-founded. Text-book authority is opposed to the existence of such a separate class: see SALMOND ON TORTS, 10th ed., pp. 485-487, WINFIELD ON THE LAWS OF TORTS, 2nd ed., pp. 616-620. As to the authorities, Addie v. Dumbreck (1) appears to decide that persons entering on premises in the occupation of others (otherwise than under a contract) are classifiable exhaustively as either trespassers, licensees, or invitees, and that there are no intermediate or hybrid classes such as that envisaged by MAUGHAM, L.J., in Purkis v. Walthamstow Borough Council (3). Coates v. Rawtenstall Corpn. (4) is a direct decision of this court that a municipal authority owning or occupying a recreation ground (in that case, as in this, supplying thereon swings for children) is a licensor and not an invitor. I know of no decision of the Court of Appeal to the contrary. Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council (2) is, I think, certainly not such a case, in spite of the doubts expressed by GREER, L.J., and SLESSER, L.J., and MACKINNON, L.J., are emphatic the other way. Nor, I think, can Purkis' case (3) be so construed. Unless Coates v. Rawtenstall (4) can be shown to be inconsistent with a decision of the House of Lords we are bound by it. The only House of Lords decision with which it might be argued that it was inconsistent is Corp'n. of Glasgow v. Taylor (5). For reasons which follow it is not, in my view, inconsistent. The opinion of LORD ATKINSON in that case certainly lends some colour to the view that a person entering a municipally owned park is an invitee, but the opinions of the majority, though some of them certainly use the expression entering "as of right," are very far from amounting to a clear-cut decision that persons entering public parks are more than licensees. The Glasgow Corp'n. case (5) was argued in effect on demurrer, and all it decided was that the pursuer's averments could not be struck out as disclosing no cause of action. The headnote ([1922] 1 A.C. 44) is as follows:

The father of a boy, aged seven, who died from eating the berries of a poisonous shrub growing in some public gardens in Glasgow, sued the corporation as the proprietors and custodians of the gardens for damages for the death of his son. The pursuer averred that on a piece of fenced ground in the gardens the defenders grew, among other specimen plants, a shrub bearing poisonous berries which presented a tempting appearance to children; that this enclosed piece of ground was open to the public, access thereto being by a gate which could be easily opened by young children, and was in a part of the gardens much frequented by children ; that the pursuer's son, with some other children, entered the gardens and ate some of the berries of this poisonous shrub and died ; that the defenders knew that these berries were a deadly poison, but took no precautions to warn children of the danger of picking the berries of this shrub or to prevent them from doing so ; and that there was no adequate notice in the gardens warning the public of the dangerous character of the specimen shrubs growing therein :—Held, the pursuer's averments disclosed a good cause of action against the defenders, and that the action ought to proceed to trial.

The actual averments as set out, not in the headnote, but afterwards, do, it is true, allege that the defenders knew or ought to have known that the berries were a deadly poison. But the case proceeded on the footing that actual knowledge had been alleged. No one seems to have adverted to the distinction between actual and constructive knowledge. Thus LORD BUCKMASTER says (at p. 50) :

... thirdly, that the danger was known to the appellants.

And LORD ATKINSON (at p. 53) says :

The defenders were, therefore, aware of the existence of a concealed or disguised danger to which the child might be exposed.

And he repeats this on p. 56. The suggestion which recurs in the speeches of their Lordships that the children entering this public park entered "as of right" was the result of an admission by counsel which in the language of LORD SUMNER (at p. 64) :

... may have meant no more than that the child was not doing wrong in being in the Botanic Gardens, having an unconditional leave and licence from the defenders.

It is obvious from these circumstances that the case was very far from deciding that a person entering on a public park is an invitee or necessarily more than a licensee. It merely decides that an averment of the facts of entry plus an allegation that the defenders knew of the danger was not demurrable. Obviously, so far as it averred actual knowledge, it was not, and no issue was raised as to whether the additional words "or ought to have known" made any difference, for their Lordships either did not appreciate that those words were included or treated their inclusion as immaterial. Before leaving Glasgow Corpn. v. Taylor (5), I would point out a further and vital distinction between that case and the present, namely, that, in the first, knowledge by the defenders of the danger was alleged (and for the purposes of a demurrer such allegation had to be assumed to be true) whereas in the present case it has been found as a fact not to exist.

(2) Before, however, passing to the issue of knowledge vel non (which the last sentence anticipates), I must briefly deal with the issue raised by the word "allurement"—the other factor relied on as raising the obligations of the defendants to a higher level than that of licensors. The presence of this element, which is, of course, only relevant when the entrant on the defendant's premises is a child, would seem, where it exists, to affect the occupier's duty to this extent, that a danger which is patent to an adult may not be apparent to a child. To a child it may be a concealed trap, accordingly and a warning or other preventive measure may be called for in the case of a child when it would not be called for in the case of an adult, or a warning of a more emphatic or coercive character than would suffice in the case of an adult. What objects are and what are not in law "allurements"? An exhaustive catalogue has not been laid down. Turntables, escalators and paddling pools have been held to "allure." Rivers, ponds and piles of paving stones have been held insufficiently seductive. CLERK AND LINDSELL ON TORTS, 10th ed., pp. 545, 546, place swings in the unalluring class, citing as authority Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council (2). If this classification is right it disposes of this branch of the argument, but I doubt if the case goes so far. If a swing or this swing is an allurement it is sufficient to say that no case would appear to exist in which a plaintiff relying on allurement has succeeded, save where there was actual knowledge by the defendants that the alluring object was dangerous. There was, for instance, knowledge in Glasgow Corpn. v. Taylor (5), Coates v. Rawten-stall Corpn. (4) (if a swing is an allurement), and Ellis v. Fulham Borough Council (2).

It would seem, then, that the plaintiff was a mere licensee. The other point is whether the finding that the defendants did not know the dangerous character of the swing, if dangerous it was, ought, as counsel for the plaintiff argues, to be disturbed. My Lord, in the judgment just delivered, has given a detailed description of the mechanism of the swing, which I respectfully adopt and will not repeat. Having regard to its construction and working, the occurrence of an accident to a small child with a very limited reach was, in my view, extremely unlikely and there were ample materials on which to base a finding that neither through the attendant nor otherwise can knowledge of its dangerous character—if, indeed, it can be held to have possessed any—be properly imputed to the defendants. A

In conclusion, I would remark that the trial judge, in pronouncing for the plaintiff, has assumed a standard of duty on the part of the defendants which is higher than any due even in the case of an invitor. On the stricter of the two alternative views an invitor's duty goes no further than that he shall use reasonable care to see that the premises are safe. He, however, has held in effect that the occupier warrants that the premises shall be as safe as reasonable care and skill (on the part of anyone) can make them, and he invokes in support of this decision, apart from a dictum of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Purkis' case (3), the speech of LORD MAUGHAM in Wilson & Clyde v. English (6), which, like that case, concerned purely the rights and duties as to safe plant, system of working, etc., as between employer and employee, a relationship not involved in this case. The other case in which this high standard of duty is exacted is that typified by Francis v. Cockrell (7), a case of entry under a contract and equally remote from that under review here. I agree that the appeal should be allowed. C

VAISEY, J.: I have had the advantage of reading the judgments just delivered, and I agree that on the grounds therein stated this appeal must be allowed. I would only add a few supplementary observations. D

So far as the facts of the case are concerned, I share my Lord's perplexity as to the precise manner in which the plaintiff's finger came to be injured. Each of the two rival theories ("nutcracker" and "stirrup") is supported by some evidence, and while I am not prepared to dissent from the judge's finding in favour of the former, I think that each presents difficulties of a somewhat formidable character. So much so, that I should not be indisposed to postulate a third possibility, such, for example, that the plaintiff's finger was crushed between the upper surface of the plank and the heel of the child who was standing upon it—which might, I think, quite easily have happened without either of the children becoming aware of it. All that is really certain is that the accident did in fact happen somehow, and the very uncertainty as to its exact cause convinces me that the defendants did not know, and, indeed, could not have known, of the existence of any defect, if defect there was, or of any latent danger in the mechanism of the swing. The number of "journeys" which had been made by this swing, and by the 150 to 200 other swings of similar construction, must be of almost astronomical magnitude, running, I suppose, into millions. Queues of heedless small people waiting their turn by the side of the moving "boat" must have formed on tens, or perhaps hundreds, of thousands of occasions, and many thousands of children must have tried to arrest its movement with their hands. Why, then, had this particular kind of accident never occurred before? It is extremely difficult to say and equally difficult (to my mind) to suppose that its occurrence could possibly have been foreseen. I agree in the view that the effect of the judgment under appeal was to put the defendants in the position of an insurer of the plaintiff against an utterly unpredictable risk. The authorities binding upon this court appear to me clearly to establish that on the defendants' playground the plaintiff had the status of a licensee and was, as such, entitled to no greater protection than that afforded to her by being warned against such of the dangers which she might encounter there as (being latent as opposed to apparent or obvious dangers) were actually known to the defendants. A swing must always be a source of danger to children who incautiously get in its way while it is in motion, but that is an apparent or obvious danger against which no special warning would be necessary or appropriate. I am satisfied that no knowledge can be imputed to the defendants of any danger, or any risk of danger, or of any defect of any E F G H kind in the swing, and that there has been no breach of any duty owed to the plaintiff by the defendants to form a foundation for her action.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: P. F. Walker, agent for Weightman, Pedder & Co., Liverpool (for the appellants); Isadore Goldman & Son, agents for Silverman & Livermore (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

OUZMAN v. KENNEDY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Tucker and Cohen, L.J.J.), December 16, 1946.]

County Courts—Adjournment—Action for recovery of possession—Vested right of action—Application by tenant for registration of premises under Defence Regulations—Refusal by local authority—Adjournment pending application to High Court for order of mandamus—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O. 1939, No. 927 as amended) reg. 68 CB.

In breach of a covenant in his lease, the tenant of a house sub-let rooms in the house to several tenants. After the commencement of proceedings by the landlord to recover possession of the house on that ground, the tenant applied to the local authority, under the Defence Regulations, reg. 68CB., for registration of the house as accommodation available for occupation by tenants or lodgers, which would have the effect of nullifying any covenant against sub-letting, but an order for registration was refused. The county court judge, considering that, if the local authority did register the premises, he would be precluded from giving effect on the trial of the action to the landlord's claim for forfeiture of the lease, granted an adjournment at the request of the tenant, pending an application to the High Court by way of mandamus to compel the local authority to reverse their previous decision:—

HELD: before the application by the tenant for registration the landlord had a vested right of action in respect of the breaches of covenant; reg. 68CB. had no retrospective effect; and, therefore, the landlord was entitled to have the issue of forfeiture of the lease on the ground of breach of covenant decided as a matter of law by the competent tribunal and the judge erred in law in granting an adjournment.

[AS TO COUNTY COURT JUDGE'S POWER TO ADJOURN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 8, p. 286, para. 585; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 13, p. 503, Nos. 536-538; and FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 68CB, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 38, p. 782.]

APPEAL from Brentford County Court.

The county court judge granted, at the request of the tenant, an adjournment of proceedings for the recovery of possession of premises pending an application to the High Court for an order of mandamus to a local authority calling on them to reverse a previous decision refusing registration of the premises under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB. The landlord appealed against the order for the adjournment. The facts appear in the judgment of Scott, L.J.

H. H. Harris for the landlord.

Stephen Murray for the tenant.

SCOTT, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of the county court judge in an action by a landlord for possession of a house against the sitting tenant. In the course of that action, and before trial, the judge was asked by the tenant to make an order adjourning the trial generally. The judge made that order, and the appeal is by the landlord against it. Ordinarily an order by a county court judge in regard to the conduct of proceedings is a matter within the judge's discretion, and this court is very slow to interfere with the exercise of his discretion, but in this case a question of principle of great importance is involved, and, in our view, it was transgressed by the judge.

The facts of the case relevant to this question are these. The action in the county court was on the ordinary lines. The particulars of claim, in para. 1, alleged that the landlord was entitled to possession. Paragraph 2 set out his title, namely, that on Aug. 21, 1940, he let the house to the tenant for a term of 3 years from May 27, 1940, at a yearly rent of £70 payable by monthly instalments in advance. On the expiration of the term the tenant held over subject to the terms of the agreement, i.e., she held over under common law rights. Paragraph 3 says that by the agreement the tenant undertook that she would not, without the written consent of the landlord, assign, underlet, sublet, or otherwise part with possession of the premises or any part thereof. Before us that paragraph has been slightly enlarged by the production of the agreement itself, under which, by cl. 4, the tenant covenanted to keep and use the premises as a private dwelling-house only, and, by cl. 6, covenanted in the terms of the allegation I have just read from the particulars of claim. Paragraph 4 of the particulars of claim says that the agreement contained a proviso for re-entry in the event of any breach. That is followed by an allegation of serious breaches which would be the subject-matter for trial before the judge. The defence was a denial, an alternative of waiver, and, in the further alternative, an application for relief against forfeiture. Those were the issues for trial.

As the application for adjournment was made before the county court judge had investigated the question on the merits, we must assume for this purpose that the claim by the landlord was well founded. The application by the tenant for the adjournment was made in a manner and in circumstances which, in my view, show that it was a tactical manoeuvre made to obtain an indirect advantage out of emergency legislation. The Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB. provides as follows :

(1) Where a local housing authority have established a register for the purposes of this regulation, any person having in any dwelling in the area of the authority occupied by him living accommodation which he is willing to make available, whether with or without furniture for use therein, for occupation by tenants or lodgers, may apply to the authority for registration of the accommodation and of the terms on which the householder is willing to make it available as aforesaid. (2) On application being made under the last foregoing paragraph, the local housing authority shall, if they are satisfied that the accommodation is, or will be rendered, suitable for accommodation as aforesaid and approve the said terms, enter the accommodation and terms in the register . . . Provided that the authority shall not be required to register any accommodation and may cancel the registration of any accommodation, if it appears to them that it would be likely to be made available for occupation as aforesaid without being registered under this regulation. (3) The registration . . . shall be cancelled on the application of the person for the time being entitled, subject to the rights over the accommodation of any tenant or lodger . . . (4) While accommodation is registered for the purposes of this regulation, it shall be lawful, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in any lease or tenancy or in any covenant, contract or undertaking relating to the use to be made of any land, and notwithstanding any restriction imposed by or under any enactment, for the accommodation to be made available for occupation, and to be occupied, as aforesaid in accordance with the registered terms and conditions.

The breach in question in the action was the sub-letting to several tenants who were occupying the house in breach of the covenant. The tenant's object in obtaining the adjournment was to go to the registration authority, get an order for registration, and obtain the advantages, as it was supposed by the tenant, of those provisions.

The proceedings in the county court by the landlord to obtain possession were started on June 6, of this year. On June 27 the tenant applied orally to the Chiswick Borough Council, the authority under the regulations, for registration. At first the committee of the council were disposed to grant the application, but the town clerk looked into the matter and on July 3, 1946, wrote a letter to the tenant's solicitor. After saying that the housing and town planning committee had not power to act in the matter and that their recommendation could not become effective until the meeting of the council later in the month, he says, inter alia, that he has considered the matter very carefully and come to the conclusion that the order for registration could not be made. His reasons for so thinking were that, if the order were made, it would enable the regulation to be used either (a) to prevent the application of the Rent Restriction Acts to an existing letting, or (b) to regularise a breach of contract committed before the registration of the premises. I think that the town clerk expressed the law correctly.

Paragraph 4 of the regulation, in my opinion, makes it clear that it is not intended to be retrospective because it says: "While accommodation is registered" various things may be done. That presupposes that registration will already have been effected, and lawfully effected, and thereupon makes provision for the powers to be conferred as a result of registration. Even without that paragraph, I should have been disposed to hold that the registration was not intended to act retrospectively in regard to any accrued right of action such as that of a landlord arising on the breach of a covenant which gives him a right of re-entry. Quite clearly the application for registration was not a matter which the judge ought to have treated as relevant to the application before him, and that is sufficient reason in itself for saying that he ought not to have made the order appealed from. It is essential, I think, that the question of the rights of the two parties to the tenancy agreement then existing should be tried out by the county court judge without regard to any possible proceedings under the Defence Regulation. I express no opinion in regard to the operation of the Defence Regulation should any application be made hereafter, but, in my view, it was wrong to anticipate any results of that particular application for registration.

We were asked to say that the judge's order directing an adjournment was right simply because of the proceedings which were then already pending to obtain registration. In my view, whatever might be the result of a registration if and when properly effected, the first step to be taken was to ascertain what were then the rights of the parties before the county court. For these reasons, I think that the order should be set aside with costs here and below.

TUCKER, L.J.: I agree. I think the county court judge erred as a matter of law in granting this adjournment. Were it not so we should have had no authority to interfere with the exercise of his discretion, provided that no injustice had manifestly been done thereby. The error of law was that he clearly considered that, if the local authority did register these premises, he would be precluded from giving effect on the trial of this action to the landlord's claim to forfeit this lease. I think that in coming to that conclusion he was wrong. I express no opinion with regard to the power or duty of the local authority to register these premises. Proceedings with regard to that are pending in the Special Paper, but this landlord had started an action at common law claiming forfeiture of the lease on the ground of breach of contract. In my view, he was entitled to go to be asked to deal with this matter without Mr. Ouzman, who is to have that issue decided as a matter of law by the competent tribunal, and there is nothing in the Defence Regulations, reg. 68C, which can affect one way or another the proper rights with regard to the forfeiture of this lease as between the landlord and the tenant. I am expressing no opinion about the position of any sub-tenants there may be in the premises or the precise nature of the order which the county court judge might make if he decided the issue of forfeiture in favour of the landlord, but I have no doubt that the landlord is entitled to have that matter decided by a court of law in an action which he had commenced before this regulation was made and before any application to register had been made to the local authority. It is to be observed, furthermore, that when the application to adjourn this trial was made to the county court judge, an application had, in fact, been made to the local authority and had been refused. That is a matter which is, I think, of some significance, but, despite that refusal, the county court judge was asked to adjourn the trial pending an application to the High Court by way of mandamus to compel the local authority to reverse the decision at which they had already arrived.

As I say, that application is pending, and I express no views with regard to the probability of its success or otherwise, but I would make this observation with regard to those proceedings which I hope will be brought to the notice of the court which tries that case. The pleadings have been shown to us. It is an action by way of writ against the local authority, Chiswick Corporation, claiming a mandamus directing them to register these premises pursuant to this regulation, and, alternatively, for "a declaration that the defendants are empowered by the said regulation to register the said accommodation pursuant thereto." That is an action between the tenant in the present appeal and this local authority, and the landlord in this action, Mr. Ouzman, is not a party to those proceedings. We are told that the case is what is called a friendly action to decide the rights of the parties, and that the facts and questions of law have been set out in an agreed Case pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 34, r. 1. The result is that the judge is going to be asked to deal with this matter without Mr. Ouzman, who is interested in the matter, being heard. If application had been made to the Divisional Court for an order for mandamus, provision would have been made under R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 5, for the service of the notice of motion on parties interested. Sub-r. (3) of that rule provides :

If on the hearing of the motion or summons the court or judge is of opinion that any person who ought to have been served therewith has not been served, whether or not he is a person who ought to have been served under the foregoing provisions of this rule, the court or judge may adjourn the hearing, in order that the notice of summons may be served on that person, upon such terms (if any) as the court or judge may direct.

So that under the mandamus procedure before the Divisional Court ample provision is made for seeing that all parties who may be interested in the mandamus, or certiorari, or other order, are before the court, but the present proceedings have been framed in such a way that, apparently, Mr. Ouzman will not be heard. I only mention that matter that it may be brought to the notice of the judge in considering that action when it does come on for trial. Apart altogether from those proceedings, I am of opinion that there was no ground in law which justified the county court judge in adjourning this claim for possession pending the result of these mandamus proceedings.

COHEN, L.J. : I entirely agree with what has fallen from my brethren, but, as we are differing from the county court judge on a matter which is one of discretion, I will state my reasons in my own words.

If the landlord establishes the fact, pleaded in his particulars of claim, that he had, before reg. 68CB was enacted, a vested right of action in respect of breaches of covenant against sub-letting, that vested right, it is conceded, was unaffected by the regulation. I express no opinion about what will be the relief to which the landlord will be entitled in the county court proceedings when they are heard if he establishes the facts on which they are based, but, in the circumstances, I am unable to see how the county court judge could properly come to the conclusion that any order made by him in the county court proceedings would be made a nullity by any order that a judge hearing the Special Case might make. That, however, we are told, is the reason for his decision to grant an adjournment. On the contrary, it might well be (though here again I am not expressing any concluded opinion on a point which the judge who hears the Special Case will have to decide) that the judge hearing that Special Case may consider it desirable that the facts in dispute in the county court proceedings should be ascertained before the Special Case is disposed of. It must be remarked that an application under para. (1) of reg. 68CB must be made by the person having living accommodation which could be made available for tenants or lodgers, but if the landlord succeeds in the county court action, the tenant will have forfeited any right to the living accommodation which he seeks to register. For these reasons, in addition to those given by my brethren, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Chapman-Walker's (for the appellant) ; R. Raymond Pollard & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COUCHMAN v. HILL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Tucker and Bucknill, L.JJ.), December 10, 11, 18, 1946.]

Sale of Goods—Warranty—Auction—Stipulations in catalogue and conditions of sale excluding auctioneer from responsibility for misdescription—Verbal assurance of condition—Breach—Right of buyer to damages.

The plaintiff bought at an auction sale a heifer belonging to the defendant and described in the sale catalogue as a "red and white stirk heifer, unserved." The catalogue contained the following words: "All lots must be taken subject to all faults or errors of description (if any), and no compensation will be paid for the same." By No. 3 of the conditions of sale: "The lots are sold with all faults, imperfections, and errors of description, the auctioneers not being responsible for the correct description, genuineness, or authenticity of, or any fault or defect in, any lot, and giving no warranty whatever." Before the sale and when the heifers were in the ring the plaintiff asked the defendant and the auctioneer: "Can you confirm heifers unserved?" and received from both the answer: "Yes." Between 7 and 8 weeks after the purchase the heifer suffered a

ADDENDUM.

COUCHMAN v. HILL.

Please insert where this is reported, [1947] 1 All E.R. at p. 103.

EDITORIAL NOTE. It appears that Hopkins v. Tanqueray (1854) 15 C.B. 130) was not cited to the Court of Appeal in the present case. In Hopkins v. Tanqueray the owner of a horse sent the animal to Tattersall's for sale by public auction. It was to be sold without warranty, but on the day before the sale the owner seeing H. examining the horse's legs said in perfect good faith: "You have nothing to look for. I assure you he is perfectly sound in every respect." H. replied: "If you say so, I am perfectly satisfied," and, on the faith of the representation so made to him by the owner, he bought the horse. In an action by H. for an alleged breach of warranty at the sale of the horse, it was held that the representation made by the owner on the day before the auction formed no part of the contract. MAULE, J., questioned the validity of such a secret bargain for a warranty where third parties attending the sale were bidding on the supposition that the sale was without warranty. It is possible that, if this authority had been before the court in the present case, the decision might have been the same.

which are invisible it is not reasonable.

[AS TO PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE BY AUCTION AND VERBAL STATEMENTS BY AUCTIONEERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 705, 706, paras. 1161, 1162; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 3, pp. 15-18, Nos. 111-136.

AS TO CONDITIONS AND WARRANTIES GENERALLY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 52-56, paras. 64-68; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 414-422, Nos. 480-546.]

APPEAL from Wincanton County Court.

On Dec. 15, 1945, the plaintiff bought at an auction a heifer, the property of the defendant, which was described in the sale catalogue as "unserved." The events summarised in the headnote having occurred, the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant in the county court claiming damages for breach of warranty on the sale of the heifer. The county court judge held that the plaintiff could not succeed because of the stipulations in the catalogue and the conditions of sale, and he gave judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

Gilbert C. Dare for the plaintiff.

E. S. Fay for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 18. SCOTT, L.J. read the following judgment: It is a striking feature of county court appeals that they so often present features of great interest, whether of law or of practical importance to the community, and also raise quite difficult problems for solution by the court. The present appeal presents all three features.

On December 15, 1945, the plaintiff purchased at an auction sale held at Grove Farm, Castle Cary, Somerset, a heifer, the property of the defendant, for the sum of £29. The heifer in question was one of two heifers comprised in lots 26/27 in the sale catalogue described as "two red and white stirk heifers, unserved." There can be no question on the facts found by the county court judge but that, in the absence of some special agreement to the contrary, when the hammer fell the resulting contract was subject to the printed conditions of sale exhibited at the auction and to the stipulations contained in the sale catalogue. The latter document contained these words:

Note.—The sale will be subject to the auctioneers' usual conditions, copies of which will be exhibited. The auctioneers will not be responsible for any error or misstatement in this catalogue, or in the dates of calving of any cattle. The information contained herein is supplied by the vendor and is believed to be correct, but its accuracy is not guaranteed, and all lots must be taken subject to all faults or errors of description (if any), and no compensation will be paid for the same.

No. 3 of the printed conditions of sale was as follows:

The lots are sold with all faults, imperfections, and errors of description, the auctioneers not being responsible for the correct description, genuineness, or authenticity of, or any fault or defect in, any lot, and giving no warranty whatever.

On February 6, 1946, a six months old foetus was removed from the heifer in question, and on February 26 the heifer died as a result of the strain of carrying a calf at too young an age for breeding. There was no suggestion that at the time of the sale either the defendant or the auctioneer did not honestly believe that the heifer was unserved. On the other hand, the plaintiff's evidence, which was accepted by the judge, was that he would not have bought it had he had any reason to doubt the accuracy of the description as he required an unserved heifer for service by his own bull at a time of his own choosing.

So far it is, in my opinion, clear that the plaintiff, by reason of the stipulations in the catalogue and conditions of sale, would have had no remedy by way of damages for breach of contract or warranty against the defendant unless the plaintiff is right in his contention that the language of these documents is effective only to protect the auctioneer from personal liability and affords no defence to the defendant in respect of any misstatements in the catalogue for which he would otherwise be liable. It is, no doubt, true that some of the printed conditions of sale deal only with the position of the auctioneer, and that the first part of the note in the catalogue is to the same effect, but it is, in my view, impossible to say that the words "the lots are sold with all faults, imperfections, and errors of description," and the words "and all lots must be taken subject to all faults or errors of description (if any), and no compensation will be paid for the same" are not to be incorporated as terms of the contract as between the vendor and purchaser when the hammer falls. Whether the word "unserved" amounts to a warranty or a condition is immaterial, because it is, I think, clear that it was, in any event, an error of description and as such expressly protected by the words to which I have referred. For these reasons it appears to me that, in so far as the plaintiff relied on the statement in the catalogue to support his claim for damages for breach of warranty, he necessarily failed.

The plaintiff, however, also alleged in his further particulars as follows: "The said warranty was also confirmed verbally both by the auctioneer and by the defendant on inquiry by the plaintiff prior to the sale." As to this the county court judge has accepted the plaintiff's evidence which was to the effect that at the sale and when the heifers were in the ring he asked both the defendant and the auctioneer: "Can you confirm heifers unserved?" and received from both the answer "Yes." There was no contract at that moment. There was an announcement of an auction of specific chattels. It was to the effect, first, that the auctioneer was about to make auction offers of the things and animals in the catalogue on behalf of the vendor to the public attending the auction on the terms of sale contained in the two documents, viz., the catalogue and the printed advertisement of the terms of sale hung up at the auction, and, secondly, that the vendor had given authority to the auctioneer to sell the chattels by auction in those terms. There was no contract in existence until the hammer fell. The offer was defined, the auctioneer's authority was defined, but it was in law open to any would-be purchaser to intimate in advance before bidding for any particular heifer offered from the rostrum that he was not willing to bid for the lot unless the defendant modified the terms of sale contained in the two documents in some way specified by him. There is no doubt that the plaintiff did make some attempt of the kind in order to protect himself from the risk of buying an animal that was not of the kind described.

The real question is: What did the parties understand by the question addressed to and the answer received from both the defendant and the auctioneer? It is contended by the defendant that the question meant "having regard to the onerous stipulations which I know I shall have to put up with if I bid and the lot is knocked down to me, can you give me your honourable assurance that the heifers have in fact not been served? If so, I will risk the penalties of the catalogue." The alternative meaning is: "I am frightened of contracting on your published terms, but I will bid if you will tell me by word of mouth that you accept full responsibility for the statement in the catalogue that the heifers have not been served, or, in other words, give me a clean warranty. That is the only condition on which I will bid." If that was the meaning there was clearly an oral offer of a warranty which over-rode the stultifying condition in the printed terms, that offer was accepted by the plaintiff when he bid, and the contract was made on that basis when the lot was knocked down to him. In some circumstances I concede that such a question might on its face be somewhat ambiguous, but I think in the present case the only inference that could properly be drawn by the judge or jury charged with the duty of finding the facts—and this is a question of fact as to the intention of the parties—is that the question was asked and answered with the alternative meaning indicated. That this is so follows, I think, conclusively from the plaintiff's evidence which was accepted by the judge, taken in conjunction with the admissions of the defendant that the words if used—which he denied—would have bound him. It is obvious that it was the stipulations that prompted the question. The plaintiff was not a lawyer, but he knew what he wanted. So did the defendant, and he got it. What the plaintiff wanted was to know where he stood before he made an offer which the fall of the hammer would turn into a contract.

The county court judge in a careful reserved judgment has found that this oral statement was made, and he refers to it as a warranty, but holds that its value was destroyed by the qualifying stipulations. He has not in terms put the question to himself: "Did the parties by this question and answer intend to exclude the stipulations from the contract that resulted on the fall of the hammer?" I have, accordingly, felt some doubt whether or not the proper course was to order a new trial. On reading his judgment as a whole I have, however, arrived at the conclusion that it is implicit therein that it was not the intention of the parties to exclude the stipulation. As we are of opinion that on the facts found by him he could not properly arrive at this conclusion, I think we are not compelled to put the parties to the expense of a further trial.

There was a good deal of discussion whether the description "unserved" constituted a warranty or a condition. I have, in what I have said so far, deliberately refrained from expressing a view thereon, but as a matter of law I think every item in a description which constitutes a substantial ingredient in the "identity" of the thing sold is a condition, although every such condition can be waived by the purchaser who thereon becomes entitled to treat it as a warranty and recover damages.

I think there was here an unqualified condition which, on its breach, the plaintiff was entitled to treat as a warranty and recover the damages claimed. One final word. The printed condition that the vendor will take no responsibility for errors of description of things or animals specifically offered for sale on inspection is reasonable for visible defects, but for qualities or attributes which are invisible it is not reasonable. It may well become a mere trap for the unwary. The point deserves consideration by the Auctioneers' Associations.

The appeal should, therefore, in my opinion be allowed with costs here and below, the latter on Scale B.

TUCKER, L.J.: I have had the advantage of reading my Lord's judgment before it was delivered, and I agree that the appeal succeeds for the reasons he has stated.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Roche, Son & Neale, agents for Cecil Forward & Williams, Axminster (for plaintiff) ; Butt & Bowyer, agents for Rutter & Rutter, Wincanton.

Approved and Applied. HARLING v. EDDY. [1951] 2 All E.R. 212.

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WASSELL v. WEST CANNOCK COLLIERY COY., LTD.
[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Asquith, L.JJ.), October 16, 1946.]

Emergency Legislation—Essential work—Wages—Head fireman—Bona fide rearrangement of duties by employer—Refusal to work as ordinary fireman—Essential Work (Coalmining Industry) Order, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 505) art. 4 (1) (d).

The plaintiff was a head fireman employed by the defendants in their undertaking, a scheduled undertaking as defined in the Essential Work (Coalmining Industry) Order, 1943. A rearrangement of duties genuinely carried out by the defendants with a view to economising in labour having resulted in their no longer needing the services of a head fireman, they offered the plaintiff work as an ordinary fireman. He refused to work on the new basis and remained at home for a period in respect of which he sued the defendants for wages as a head fireman. The county court judge found that work in his normal occupation as a head fireman was not available for the plaintiff during the material period and that it was reasonable to ask him to do the work of an ordinary fireman.

HELD : that the plaintiff, through his refusal of the work offered to him, had failed to qualify for payment of wages as prescribed by art. 4 (1) (d) of the Order of 1943, and was not entitled to wages for the material period, his proper course having been to accept the work offered and thereafter to raise with the defendants the question of remuneration.

Quaere : whether, had he accepted the work of an ordinary fireman, the plaintiff would have remained entitled, under art. 4 (1) (d), to the wages of a head fireman.

[FOR THE ESSENTIAL WORK (COALMINING INDUSTRY) ORDER, 1943 (S.R. & O. 1943, No. 505) see BUTTERWORTH'S EMERGENCY LEGISLATION, EMPLOYMENT. [14].]

Cases referred to :

(1) Adrema, Ltd. v. Jenkinson, [1945] 2 All E.R. 29 ; [1945] K.B. 446 ; 114 L.J.K.B. 313 ; 173 L.T. 318 ; 109 J.P. 138 ; Digest Supp.

(2) George v. Mitchell and King, [1943] 1 All E.R. 233.

APPEAL from Walsall County Court.

In June, 1935, the plaintiff was employed as a fireman in the defendant company's undertaking, a scheduled undertaking under the Essential Work (Coalmining Industry) Order, 1943.* Having carried out the usual fireman's duties until Nov. 19, 1942, he was on that date appointed head fireman, in which capacity he performed many of the duties of an ordinary fireman, but

* By art. 1 of the Essential Work (Coalmining Industry) Order, 1943 : "... 'scheduled undertaking' means an undertaking that has been entered in the schedule of undertakings under this Order." By art. 4 (1) : "Subject as hereinafter provided, where a person carries on a scheduled undertaking the following provisions shall apply :—

(a) The person carrying on the undertaking shall not terminate (except for serious misconduct) the employment in the undertaking of any person employed therein, or without terminating such employment cause him to give his services in some other undertaking . . . except with the permission in writing of a national service officer ; (b) a person employed in the undertaking shall not leave his employment except with such permission as aforesaid . . . ; (d) Without prejudice to any terms and conditions of employment more favourable to persons employed in the undertaking that may be provided for by the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, . . . the person carrying on the undertaking shall in respect of every week pay to every person employed in the undertaking . . . a sum which is not less than the guaranteed wage for that week if that person is during his normal working hours : (i) capable of and available for work ; and (ii) willing to perform any services outside his usual occupation which in the circumstances he can reasonably be asked to perform during any period when work is not available for him in his usual occupation in the undertaking."

had two other firemen under his supervision. In other respects, also, the conditions of employment of a head fireman differed from those of an ordinary fireman, and, as found by the county court judge, the grade of head fireman was recognised as a grade in the defendants' undertaking.

A The defendants' manager having, with a view to economising man-power, made arrangements which would only necessitate, for the future, the employment of two ordinary firemen, he proposed that the plaintiff should be one of those firemen and thus no longer a head fireman. An offer to that effect was made to the plaintiff by the defendants on July 18, 1945, on his return from a holiday, but he refused and did not resume work for the defendants. On Sept. 25, 1945, they applied to a national service officer for permission to determine his employment as he had not presented himself for work since July 18. Permission was refused on Oct. 24. The plaintiff continued to remain at home. On Jan. 12, 1946, he claimed full wages as a head fireman from July 18, 1945, to Jan. 11, 1946, except for a period during which he had been ill.

B The county court judge found that work as a head fireman was not available for the plaintiff during the material time; that the defendants had reasonably asked him to do other work, and that he had refused; but that the plaintiff was "capable of and available for work" within the meaning of art. 4 (1) (d) of the Order of 1943 notwithstanding that he had refused to do the work offered; and he held him to be entitled to £148 14s. 6d., the amount of wages claimed.

C The defendants appealed.

Beney, K.C., and R. H. Norris for defendants.

Fox-Andrews, K.C., and Norman Carr for plaintiff.

D MORTON, L.J. [having stated the facts]: The county court judge found that the plaintiff would have done the work of an ordinary fireman if he had been offered the wages—nothing is said about the other terms—of a head fireman. On the other hand, there is not a shred of evidence that the plaintiff ever said to the defendants: "If you pay me the wages of a head fireman I am willing to work as a fireman." The defendants said: "You can work as a fireman and receive a fireman's wages," but they never said: "You can work as a fireman at a head fireman's wages." [HIS LORDSHIP read art. 4 (1) of the Order of 1943].

E It appears to me that the intention of art. 4 (1) (d) is to get as much work done as possible, that a workman may be put to work on something else if work is not available for him in his usual occupation, and that the minimum wage is to be paid if, but only if, the workman fulfils the conditions laid down by sub para. (d). The judge found that the work of a head fireman was not available, that the proposed reconstruction was bona fide, and that it was reasonable to expect the plaintiff to undertake the duties of an ordinary fireman. The judge

F then found that the plaintiff was capable of and available for work during the period for which he claimed his wages. He pointed out that the plaintiff's employment had never been determined and he held that the defendants were liable to pay him wages although he had not done any work during the period in question. In reference to a question by counsel for the defendants, the judge said: "I think it must follow that, if they offered him fireman's work at the G normal figure of fireman's rate, that is a reasonable remuneration for that kind of work for a man employed to do that work."

Having regard to those findings, I turn back to art. 4 (1) (d), because it is plain that the plaintiff has based on it his claim that he is entitled to not less than the guaranteed wage as defined in the Order. First, was the plaintiff during his normal working hours capable of work? There is no doubt that he was, except during the period of illness for which he has not claimed. Was he available for work? I am prepared to assume in favour of the plaintiff, without deciding the point, that he was available for work in the circumstances which I have stated. Was he willing to perform any service outside his usual occupation which in the circumstances he could reasonably be asked to perform during the period when work was not available for him in his usual occupation? In my view, on the judge's findings of fact, that question must be answered in the negative. The judge has held that work was not available for the plaintiff in his usual occupation. He has held that the services outside his usual occupation which he was asked to perform, namely, the services of fireman, were services which he could reasonably be asked to perform. To my mind, it is plain that the plaintiff, in any ordinary meaning of the word "willing," was not "willing" to perform those services. In his own mind he may have resolved that, if and when he was offered a head fireman's wage, he would do the work of a fireman, but he never seems to have expressed that. He simply refused to do the work of a fireman. It seems to me to follow that he has not qualified for the amount which was awarded to him by the county court judge.

H

Counsel for the plaintiff have contended that the wage which ought to have been offered to the plaintiff was the full wage of a head fireman notwithstanding that he was being asked to do only fireman's work. That is a very difficult question, on which we have heard interesting argument, but I have not, myself, formed a concluded view on it. I am prepared to assume in favour of the plaintiff that counsel's contention is right, and that the employers were wrong in offering to the plaintiff only the ordinary fireman's wage. Even so, I think that the plaintiff fails to qualify for the remuneration which he claims. The emphasis in sub-para. (d) is on the services. Were the services which he was asked to perform services which in the circumstances he could reasonably be asked to perform? There was no work available for him as a head fireman, there was work available for him as a fireman, and the judge so held. He could reasonably be asked to perform those services, but he was not willing to perform them. If he thought that he was not being offered a proper wage, his proper course was to do the work and at once raise the question of the wages, if necessary testing the matter in the county court. Instead of that he took the step of refusing to do the work, with the result that, for some months, he did no work and his services were lost to the industry. I think, on the plain wording of sub-para. (d), that he did not qualify for the wages. The amount of his wages is regulated by the Order. If he had started to work as an ordinary fireman and the parties had failed to agree on the amount of wages payable on the true construction of the Order, the matter could have been settled by legal proceedings.

Two cases were cited, the first being a decision of the Divisional Court in Adrema, Ltd. v. Jenkinson (1). I do not think it necessary to refer to the facts of that case or the decision, as there has been no suggestion in the present case that the plaintiff's employment was terminated by what took place. We were also referred to observations of this court in George v. Mitchell and King, Ltd. (2). I do not think it necessary to refer to any of those observations because the facts there were different from the facts in the present case in the vital particular that there the work was available for the workman in his usual occupation whereas that was not so here. In my view, the judgment in favour of the plaintiff cannot stand, and the appeal will be allowed.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree, but as we are differing from the county court judge I will add a few observations on the construction of the sub-paragraph of the Order on which this appeal depends.

The plaintiff claims wages from the defendants as his employers over a period during which he did no work for them. He puts forward that claim by virtue of the provisions of the Order of 1943. This case turns on the construction of art. 4 (1) (d) and in particular of sub-para. (d) (ii). One, perhaps, the main, purpose, of sub-para. (d) is to deal with cases where the employer is unable to offer work which would, on the applicable wage rates, enable the person employed to earn his ordinary wage. A very obvious example, which must have occurred many times in the war, is where a man's normal employment is to work on some material which, for a particular week or for a period, has not come forward from the suppliers, so that there is nothing for that workman to do at his ordinary job. As the Order of 1943 ties the workman to the employment, subject to serious misconduct or the consent of the national service officer, and as it is clear from the Order that it might be desirable to keep men in their existing employment although there was temporarily no work for them to do, it would have been unreasonable to keep a man so tied unless he were paid something in the nature of the average wage which he was able to earn when work at his ordinary job was available for him. This sub-paragraph in fact provides that, if he is there and willing to work, he is to receive the guaranteed wage as defined although the employer may be unable to give him work to do.

The sub-paragraph also provides (and this, of course, is the point on which the case turns) that, if the ordinary work is not available for the workman, he can be asked to do other work, and he must be ready to do that work if he is to qualify for the guaranteed wage. Arguments were addressed to us on the question which arises where a man has been asked to do work other than his ordinary work, namely, what remuneration is he to receive? It was submitted, on the one hand, by counsel for the defendants that, where alternative work, held to be reasonable within the meaning of the Order, is offered, it carries its normal wage, that is to say, the normal rate of the alternative work. That is a circumstance to be taken into account in deciding whether the workman can reasonably be asked to do that work. On the other hand, it was submitted by counsel for the plaintiff that, where a man is asked to do work other than his ordinary work, he is entitled, under the Order, to what I will call his old rates, applied on a calculation of the guaranteed minimum, if the normal rate for the new work is less than the sum so arrived at. I agree with MORTON, L.J., that that question is not an easy one, and I express no view about it, because, in my view, this appeal succeeds even assuming that counsel for the plaintiff is right in the submission which he made on that point.

The plaintiff was asked to perform work which he could, on the county court judge's finding, reasonably be asked to perform. On the other hand, on the assumption which I am making, the terms proposed by the employers were less favourable than the terms which the plaintiff would have been entitled to claim and therefore to receive under the Order. I entirely agree with what my brother MORTON has said with regard to the result of the county court judge's findings on the evidence of what took place between the plaintiff and the defendants at the material dates, namely, July 18, and after. If the plaintiff had taken the line that he was perfectly willing to do a fireman's work, but claimed that on doing that work he was entitled to a head fireman's rates and conditions, it seems to me at least probable that the employers would have told him to do the work, saying that of course they would pay him what he was entitled to under the Order, and that their respective lawyers should consult about it, with the result that the work would have been done. The plaintiff, however, it is clear from the evidence and from the judgment, did not take that line. In those circumstances he seems to me to have failed to satisfy the condition which he has to satisfy, namely, that he was willing to perform the services outside his usual occupation, which, in the circumstances as found by the county court judge, he was reasonably being asked to perform. For these reasons I think that the appeal succeeds.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Peacock & Goddard, agents for Haden & Stretton, Walsall (for the defendants); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Underhill, Wilcock & Taylor, Wolverhampton, (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R.C.C.

Applied. R. v. EAST KERRIER JJ.
352] 2 All E.R. 144.

R. v. BODMIN JUSTICES. Ex parte McEWEN.
[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
December 20, 1946.]

Crown Practice—Certiorari—When order granted—Justices interviewing witness in absence of accused and advisers.

Magistrates—Indictable offence triable summarily—Necessity for judicial exercise of jurisdiction—Order to pay costs—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 24 (1).

The applicant, a soldier, during a disturbance in the barrack room, stabbed a fellow-soldier in the back with a bayonet, as a consequence of which the injured soldier was not expected to live, but did in fact recover. The applicant was charged before petty sessions with wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, but, at the request of both the prosecution and the defence, the justices allowed the charge to be reduced to one of unlawful wounding, and, assuming jurisdiction under the Criminal Justice Act,

1925, s. 24 (1), dealt with the case summarily. An officer of the applicant's unit gave some evidence as to character and said he could say a lot more but thought he had better not do so. The justices, having retired to consider their sentence, sent for the officer and interviewed him in their room in the absence of the applicant and his advisers. The applicant was sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment. On a motion for an order of certiorari :—

HELD : justice must not only be done, but must manifestly be seen to be done, and the interviewing by the justices of the officer in the absence of the applicant and his advisers could not be justified and the conviction must be quashed, the justices being ordered to pay the costs of the application for certiorari. A

Per cur : It was never intended that justices should deal, under the Criminal Justices Act, 1925, s. 24 (1), with cases of the nature of, and with the consequences which were described in, this case. Justices should deal with such matters judicially, and, though they must take into account what the prosecution and the defence say with regard to whether or not a case is a proper one for the charge to be reduced, they are not bound to assent to dealing with it summarily. B

[AS TO GROUNDS FOR CERTIORARI TO QUASH GENERALLY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 880-889, paras. 1484-1493; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 16, pp. 417-431, Nos. 2763-2918; AS TO INDICTABLE OFFENCES TRIABLE SUMMARILY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, pp. 582-586, paras. 1026-1029; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, p. 317, Nos. 330, 331.] C

Case referred to :

(1) R. v. Essex JJ., Ex p. Perkins, [1927] 2 K.B. 475; 96 L.J.K.B. 530; 137 L.T. 455; 91 J.P. 94; Digest Supp.

MOTION for an order of certiorari to remove, for the purpose of quashing, an order made by the petty sessions for the borough of Bodmin on Oct. 9, 1946, the ground for the motion being that the justices had interviewed a witness in the absence of the accused and his advisers. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J. D

C. Besley for the applicant.

H. J. Astell Burt for the justices.

H. E. Park for the prosecution. E

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is an application for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a conviction of one John McEwen who, on Oct. 9, 1946, was charged before the petty sessions for the borough of Bodmin with wounding one Arthur Millington with intent to do grievous bodily harm, contrary to the Offences against the Person Act, 1861—an offence which I may state is punishable with penal servitude for life. Apparently, before the facts were gone into, for some reason or another both the prosecution and the defence asked the justices to deal with the case as one of unlawful wounding. F

The facts which emerged, of which the justices were informed when they consented to deal with this case, were these. The applicant was a soldier and this matter arose out of a disturbance in the barrack room at Bodmin Barracks, a depot of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. We are told that the applicant and another soldier returned from the town to barracks after lights out and entered the room in which Millington and others were sleeping. The lights were out. The applicant insisted on turning the lights on, and the men in the room, among whom was Millington, asked him to turn the lights off, otherwise there would be trouble. The applicant and his companion, both of whom had been drinking, began to quarrel with the others and particularly with Millington, who was kicked. Ultimately the applicant fetched his bayonet and returned to Millington. When he went for his bayonet most of the men ran from the room leaving Millington and another soldier who tried to take the bayonet from the applicant. During the ensuing struggle Millington received a stab in the back from the applicant with the bayonet. As a consequence of the injury, when he was admitted to the Royal Cornwall Infirmary, Truro, the doctors did not expect him to live, and an application was made to the justices of Truro for his evidence to be taken by deposition, pursuant to the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1867, s. 6. Fortunately, however, he did recover, and, because of that fact, I suppose, the justices considered that it was a proper case to allow the charge G to be reduced to one of misdemeanour, unlawful wounding, and consented to deal with the case.

H

By s. 24 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, under which they assumed jurisdiction :

A Where a person who is an adult is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an indictable offence, being one of the offences specified in sched. II to this Act the court, if it thinks it expedient so to do, having regard to any representation made in presence of the accused by or on behalf of the prosecutor, the character and antecedents of the accused, the nature of the offence, the absence of circumstances which would render the offence one of a grave or serious character and all the other circumstances of the case (including the adequacy of the punishment which a court of summary jurisdiction has power to inflict), and if the accused, when informed by the court of his right to be tried by a jury, consents to be dealt with summarily, may, subject to the provisions of this section, deal summarily with the offence . . .

B The offence of wounding with intent is not one of the offences specified in the schedule, but unlawful wounding is. The justices would have had no jurisdiction to proceed under that section if the charge had been made one of wounding with intent, so when they were asked by the prosecution and the defence to do so, they reduced the offence to one of unlawful wounding and then consented to deal with it summarily.

C Here is a case in which a man's life has been seriously imperilled and if he had died the applicant would have been charged with murder. It was never intended that justices should deal under that section with cases of this sort, where a man, whether under the influence of drink or not, takes a bayonet and stabs another in the back with the consequences which are disclosed here, and for justices to deal with it by treating it as nothing much more than common assault is a most extraordinary state of affairs. Justices should remember that they have to deal with matters of this sort judicially, and, although they must take into account what the prosecution and the defence say with regard to whether or not it is a proper case for the charge to be reduced, they are not bound, because the prosecution want to get the matter dealt with there and then without the necessity of going to the assizes (where this case undoubtedly should have been sent) to assent to dealing with it summarily. It is only due to the fact that this man recovered that the applicant was not charged with murder. That the justices should deal with such a case under these provisions is most unfortunate. That, however, is not a ground for certiorari. The justices having done this, this court cannot interfere with it. We can only express grave disapproval that the justices acted in this way.

E Certiorari can, however, be granted on another ground. An officer of the applicant's unit was present in court and was asked to give the man a character. He gave him a character—not a bad character—and added that there was a lot more that he could say but he would not say it. The character that he gave was :
F “The accused is a very good worker when he is not under the influence of drink. Since this stabbing affair we have not had any trouble with him. I could say a lot more, but I think I had better not.” The justices then retired to consider their sentence, and, during their retirement, they sent for the officer and interviewed him in their room. Whether the officer stayed in the room for one minute or G whether he stayed there for five minutes does not matter. The justices were interviewing a person who had been in court in connection with the case and had given the justices information in connection with the case, and they were interviewing him in their room in the absence of the accused or his advisers. That is a matter which cannot possibly be justified. I am not suggesting for one moment that the justices had any sinister or improper motive in doing it. It may be that they sent for the officer in the interests of the accused. It may be
H that the information which the officer gave was in the interests of the accused. That does not matter. Time and again this court has said that justice must not only be done but must manifestly be seen to be done, and, if justices interview a witness in the absence of the accused, justice is not seen to be done, because the accused does not and cannot know what was said. The consequence of this unfortunate incident is that this conviction must be quashed. The applicant ought never to have been tried by the justices. He ought to have been sent to the assizes. He received a sentence of six months' imprisonment. This court must, in these circumstances, quash the conviction.

HUMPHREYS, J. : So far as I am concerned, the judgment which has just been delivered is the judgment of the court.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : We should not give costs against justices merely because they came to a wrong decision, but in this case it is the conduct of the justices which is attacked. They are responsible. It was entirely their action which led to this application, which has succeeded. They were given notice of this application. In the case cited by counsel for the justices, R. v. Essex JJ., Ex p. Perkins (1), there is no suggestion made against the justices. We shall give costs against the justices in this case. A Conviction quashed.

Solicitors : Robbins, Olivey & Lake, agents for Thrall, Llewellyn & Spooner, Truro (for the applicant) ; Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert, agents for Stephens & Scown, St. Austell (for the justices and the prosecutors). B

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THOMSON v. KNIGHTS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), December 17, 1946]

Criminal Law—Conviction—Uncertainty—Street traffic—Having charge of motor vehicle when under influence of drink or a drug—Road Traffic Act, 1930, (c. 43), s. 15 (1). D

The appellant was convicted by justices of being "unlawfully in charge of a motor vehicle . . . whilst under the influence of drink or a drug . . ." contrary to s. 15 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930.

HELD : the conviction was not bad for uncertainty, since the sub-section, by the words quoted, created one offence, namely, being in charge of a motor vehicle while in a state of self-induced incapacity, whether that incapacity was due to drink or a drug, and not the two offences of being in charge of a vehicle (1) while under the influence of drink and (2) while under the influence of a drug. E

[AS TO UNCERTAINTY AND DUPLICITY IN CHARGES, see Halsbury, 2nd Edn., Vol. IX, p. 136, para. 178, 2 Supp., and as to DRIVING UNDER INFLUENCE OF DRINK OR DRUGS, see HALSBURY, 2nd Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 674, 675, paras. 993-995.] F

Cases referred to :

- (1) R. v. Jones, ex p. Thomas, [1921] 1 K.B. 632 ; 90 L.J.K.B. 543 ; 124 L.T. 668 ; 85 J.P. 112 ; 42 Digest 873, 217.
- (2) R. v. Wells, etc., JJ., Ex p. Clifford, (1904) 91 L.T. 98 ; 68 J.P. 392 ; 42 Digest 873, 216.
- (3) Cotterill v. Lempriere, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 634 ; 62 L.T. 695 ; 54 J.P. 583 ; 42 Digest 728, 1504.
- (4) R. v. Slater. Ex p. Bowler (1903). 67 J.P. 299 ; 26 Digest 559, 2537. G

CASE STATED by the appeals committee of Essex Quarter Sessions.

The appellant who was discovered at night in his shirt sleeves sitting, apparently drunk and incapable, in the driving seat of a car which was broadside on across a road, was convicted by Romford justices of being unlawfully in charge of a motor vehicle when "under the influence of drink or a drug . . ." He appealed to quarter sessions on the ground that the conviction was bad for uncertainty. Quarter sessions upheld the conviction, but stated this Case for the opinion of the High Court. H

Curtis Bennett, K.C. and G. L. Hardy for the appellant.
Alban Gordon for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is a Case Stated by the appeals committee of Essex Quarter Sessions who upheld the conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Romford of the appellant of being "unlawfully in charge of a motor vehicle . . . whilst under the influence of drink or a drug to such an extent as to be incapable of having proper control of the vehicle, contrary to s. 15 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930."

A The sole point that was taken before the appeals committee and the sole point taken here is that, the conviction stating, as it does, that the appellant was driving "whilst under the influence of drink or a drug," is bad for uncertainty because, it is said, driving under the influence of drink is one offence and driving under the influence of a drug is another offence.

In my opinion, that is not sound. I think the section creates one offence. I paid great attention to the argument of counsel for the appellant and at first I was rather attracted by it, but I think counsel for the respondent provided the correct answer. In my opinion, the section creates three offences, and not six. These offences are: Driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of drink or a drug to such an extent as to be incapable of having proper control of the vehicle; or attempting to drive in those circumstances; or being in charge of a motor vehicle when under the influence of drink or a drug. I think that counsel for the respondent is right when he says that the words "under the influence of drink or a drug" are merely adjectival. The offence is driving or attempting to drive or being in charge of a vehicle when incapable of having proper control of the vehicle and that incapacity is caused by drink or a drug. C I do not think that Parliament meant to create one offence of being incapable by reason of a drug and another offence of being incapable by reason of drink. What it meant to provide for was that a man who drove, or attempted to drive, or was in charge of, a car when in a self-induced incapacity, whether it was due to drink or drugs, committed the offence. There is no question of an alternative offence or two offences. The appeal, in my view, fails and should be dismissed. D HUMPHREYS, J.: I am of the same opinion. I would only observe that, in my view, the cases on this subject were admirably explained in the judgment of LORD COLERIDGE in R. v. Jones, Ex parte Thomas (1), where he dealt with R. v. Wells, etc. JJ., Ex parte Clifford (2), on which counsel for the appellant naturally relied, and also Cotterill v. Lempriere (3) and R. v. Slater, Ex p. Bowler (4). E He pointed out that in each of those cases there were two separate offences charged of which a person had been convicted in one conviction, which everybody knows is wrong and contrary to law. He pointed out that in the case with which he was then dealing—of a person charged under one of the sections of the Motor Car Act, 1903, with driving recklessly and at a speed dangerous to the public—having regard to the circumstances of the case the real offence was driving in a manner dangerous to the public by reason of one or other of F two things, and that a conviction in which the defendant was convicted of those supposed two offences was really a conviction for one single act. The same reasoning applies to the present case. I think the appellant was convicted, as my Lord observed during the argument, of the offence of being in charge of a motor car whilst intoxicated or under the influence of something which made him incapable of having proper control of the vehicle. I think it is one offence of which he was convicted, and not two.

G LEWIS, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Alwyn Williams & Co. (for the appellant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Arthur Morgan, Chelmsford (for the respondent).

* [Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

REX v. LEAMINGTON SPA LICENSING JJ's, Ex parte
PINNINGTON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
December 11, 1946.]

Intoxicating Liquors—Licensing—Ordinary removal of licence—Removal from county licensing division to borough within same county—Jurisdiction of borough justices to hear the application—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 24 (3). A

The licensee of premises situated at N., in the county of W., applied to the justices for the borough of L., which was within the same county, for an order authorising the ordinary removal of his licence to premises within that borough. N. was in a county licensing district and L. was a borough having a separate commission of the peace, and was, accordingly, a licensing district within the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 2. B

HELD : s. 24 (3) of the Act gave justices power to remove a licence from premises situated in one licensing district to premises in another licensing district, provided that both districts were within the same county, and, therefore, the justices in the present case had power to authorise the removal of the licence.

[AS TO REMOVAL OF LICENCE, ORDINARY OR SPECIAL, see HALSBURY, 2nd Edn., Vol. 19, pp. 29, 30, paras. 67-72; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, p. 36, Nos. 291-295.] C

MOTION for an order of mandamus.

The applicant made an application to the justices of the borough of Leamington Spa for their authorisation of an ordinary removal of a licence from licensed premises situated at Napton, Warwickshire to licensed premises situated within the borough. The justices dismissed the application on the ground that they lacked jurisdiction to hear it, and the applicant now applied for an order of mandamus directing them to hear and determine the matter. The facts appear fully in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J. D

Beresford, K.C., and Gerald Howard supported the motion.
Flowers, K.C., and Percy C. Lamb showed cause.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The licensee of certain premises known as the Bull and Butcher at Napton, in the county of Warwick, applied to the justices of the borough of Royal Leamington Spa for an order for the removal of the licence from those premises to certain other premises known as the Joiners' Arms, within the borough. Leamington Spa is not a county borough, nor is it a borough having a separate court of quarter sessions, but it is a borough having a separate commission of the peace. The justices of the borough declined to entertain the application on the ground that they had no jurisdiction so to do, being of opinion that they had no power to grant an application for the removal of a licence situate in what I may call a county division of the geographical county into a borough within the same county. E

The question we have to determine is simply one of the construction of the Act. We could not consider the policy of the matter, unless there were some ambiguous phrase. Then we might have to consider, according to the well known principles of construction, what the purpose of the Act was or what was the particular mischief at which it was aimed, but no such point as that seems to me to arise in this case. The Act contains certain clear provisions and all that we have to do is to apply them. F

The Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 2 provides : G

For the purposes of this Act, a licensing district is a petty sessional division of a county, and a borough having a separate commission of the peace. H

One has, therefore, two kinds of licensing districts. By s. 24 (3) :

An ordinary removal of a justices' licence may be authorised to any premises within the licensing district in which the premises are situated from which it is desired to remove the licence, or to any premises within a licensing district within the same county, by the licensing justices of the district to which it is desired to remove the licence.

For some time I had some difficulty in seeing what was the grammatical construction of that sentence, which I think is somewhat obscure, but I think it becomes clear if one removes the words "are situated" to later in the section so that it reads in this way : "An ordinary removal of a justices' licence may be authorised to any premises within the licensing district in which the premises from which it is desired to remove the licence are situated, or to any premises within a licensing district within the same county."

A The section, therefore, seems to me to deal with two things. You can either remove a licence from premises situate in a licensing district to other premises situate in the same licensing district, or you can remove a licence from premises situate in one licensing district to premises in another licensing district, provided that the two districts are within the same county. Leamington Spa is a licensing district and is in the same county as Napton, which is another licensing district, and it follows, I think, from the plain words of s. 24 (3), that an application can be made to the justices of Leamington Spa for an order of removal from Napton to their licensing district which is in the same county. It, therefore, seems to me
B clear that the justices had jurisdiction to hear this application.

Counsel appearing to show cause further contended that in s. 110, which is a definition section, there is a statement as to what the expression "county" is to include. It is to include ... any riding, part, or division of a county having a separate commission of the peace and a separate court of quarter sessions.

C That means that each riding of the county of York is a separate county, or that East Sussex and West Sussex are two separate counties. That does not throw any light on the question which we have to decide. You could not remove a licence from East Sussex to West Sussex, but you could remove it from one licensing district of East Sussex to another licensing district of East Sussex ; The section goes on :

D For the purposes of the provisions of this Act as to appeals from the refusal of licensing justices to grant a renewal, transfer, or special removal of a justices' licence, the area of the county shall be deemed to include any borough, or any part thereof, which is locally situated in the county, and for the purpose of the powers and duties of quarter sessions as compensation authority, the area of the county shall be deemed to include any borough, not being a county borough, which is locally situated in the county.

It will be observed that the words "ordinary removal" are not included. If one turns to s. 29, which deals with appeals, one finds that exactly the same
E provision has been made there in effect as is made in s. 110, because it is provided that, in the case of any borough which is situated within the county, the appeal shall lie to the county justices and not to the borough court of quarter sessions. If one may carry one's mind back to the time when this Act was being passed and to the discussions which took place, it may be remembered that one of the reasons, and I think the main reason, for that provision was that it was not thought desirable that a recorder, who had nothing to do with the county in the F ordinary way, but was simply a judge of a borough court of quarter sessions, should have to decide licensing matters, and, therefore, it was decided that the appeal should go to the county quarter sessions, although the order appealed from arose within a borough. It may be that those words in s. 110 are tautologous and are not really necessary, because, the matter has been already dealt with in s. 29. Equally, the provision that the compensation authority in respect of premises
G situated in a borough shall be the county quarter sessions may also be redundant, because that has been already provided for in s. 2, but I can only give the words in s. 24 and in s. 2 (1) their plain and ordinary meaning. It seems to me to be clear, provided that the two licensing districts are situated in the same county, that an order for removal can be made from one to the other, notwithstanding the fact that one is borough and the other is county. For these reasons, I think that the order for mandamus must go.

H HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion. The matter turns on the proper construction of s. 24 (3), and I agree with the construction put on that section by my Lord. This case does not come within the language of the first part of s. 24 (3), because the premises to which it is proposed to remove the licence are not within the same licensing district as the premises from which it is proposed to remove the licence, but I think that the case does come within the second part of that section because the premises to which it is proposed to remove the licence are within a licensing district within the same county. That, in my opinion, really concludes this matter.

I only desire to add that I am not as much impressed as my Lord is by the difficulty created by the words in s. 110, which deals with appeals. It is true that by s. 29 it is made quite clear that the appeal (which, be it said, does not apply to this case at all because there is no appeal in the case of an ordinary removal) from a refusal to grant a renewal, transfer, or a special removal, is :

... to the court of quarter sessions for the county in which the premises in respect of which the appeal is made are locally situated, and the appeal shall be to the court of quarter sessions for the county, although the premises are situated in a borough having a separate court of quarter sessions.

One might expect to find there some such words as "and for the purpose of this section a county shall include a borough having a separate court of quarter sessions." It is true that that is the notion of the Act throughout, but, when it came to s. 110, which is the definition section, it was, not unreasonably, thought necessary to define these matters. Inasmuch as the words which I have suggested might have been added at the end of s. 29 are not there, the draftsman had to deal with two separate matters—the question of appeals from a refusal of licensing justices to grant a renewal, transfer, or special removal, and also the jurisdiction of the compensation authority, and what he has done is to explain the meaning of the word "county" in relation to those two separate matters. They are different, because the first part of the section deals with a county including a county borough, and the second part of the section only includes in the county a borough which is a county borough. It seems to me that that was put there for a purpose. It may be that it was unnecessary. It may be that the court would have construed the Act in the same way without it, but I think that that is the explanation of why one finds that elaborate definition section. In my view, it is not clear that this mandamus should go. It is plain that we have nothing to do with the question to what court an appeal, which does not lie in this case, would lie, if it did lie, nor are we concerned with the question what is the body to which the question of compensation would go, although there is, in truth, no doubt about it. The matter depends on the language of s. 24, and I agree that the mandamus should go.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Order for mandamus.

Solicitors : Godden, Holme & Co. ; Gregory, Rawcliffe & Co., agents for Wright Hassall & Co., Leamington Spa.

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LOEWENTHAL v. VANHOUTE AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.,), December 16, 1946.]

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Effect of subsequent notice to quit.

Where a notice to quit has been given, a subsequent notice to quit is of no effect unless it can be inferred from other circumstances that a new tenancy has been created after the expiry of the first notice. If there is no agreement, express or implied, for a new tenancy, the mere fact that the landlord's solicitor, to get possession, gives another notice to quit is not any reason for inferring any agreement for a new tenancy, and the first notice is not waived by the subsequent notice.

Doe d. Brierly v. Palmer (1) distinguished.

[AS TO EFFECT OF SECOND NOTICE TO QUIT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., pp. 143, 144, para. 154 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, p. 457, Nos. 6047-6050.]

Case referred to :

(1) Doe d. Brierly v. Palmer (1812), 16 East, 53 ; 104 E.R. 1009 ; 31 Digest 457, 6049.

ACTION for possession of a furnished flat.

On Sept. 14, 1946, the landlord gave a notice to quit expiring on Sept. 21, 1946. On Sept. 30, 1946, the tenants referred the question of the rent of the flat to a tribunal appointed under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, but the landlord claimed that the tenants had no protection under that Act since the tenancy had already been determined. The tenants, however, claimed that the tenancy was still existing because, on Oct. 4, 1946, the landlord's solicitors had sent a second notice to quit and the second notice (it was submitted) amounted to a waiver of the first.

H. G. Garland for the landlord.

J. R. O. Jones for the tenants.

DENNING, J. : In this case Berthe Loewenthal claims possession of a flat which she let furnished to the defendant tenants. The letting was a weekly letting as from Feb. 9, 1946. The rent was at first £3 13s. 6d. a week, but as the landlord put in extra furniture it was raised to £4 4s. a week. On Sept. 30, 1946, the tenants referred the matter of the amount of the rent to a tribunal under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, and it is plain from s. 5 of that Act that, if on Sept. 30, 1946, the tenancy was still subsisting, the tenants would have the benefit of the Act because a notice to quit which was given after that date would not be effective before the decision of the tribunal was given or within three months thereafter. So, if the landlord had to rely on a notice dated Oct. 4, 1946, he could not claim possession, but the landlord says he does not need to rely on a notice to quit of that date. The landlord says the notice to quit was given before and expired before the tenants applied to the tribunal, namely, on Sept. 14 to expire on Sept. 21, 1946. It was a perfectly good notice to quit, he says, and the tenancy, accordingly, expired on Sept. 21, 1946.

The point that is raised by counsel for the tenants is that that notice to quit was waived by a subsequent notice to quit, because on Oct. 1, 1946, the landlady having then consulted solicitors, the solicitors wrote to the tenants saying that they had been instructed that the tenants had ignored the notice of Sept. 14 and they were sending in due course a formal notice to quit and deliver up possession of the premises on Oct. 12. They followed that by sending a formal notice to quit in the terms indicated. Counsel for the tenants cited a passage from WOODFALL'S LANDLORD AND TENANT, 24th ed., p. 981, which says :

Generally speaking, giving a second notice to quit amounts to a waiver of a notice previously given . . .

In my judgment, that statement in the text book is not accurate. It is based on a decision of LORD ELLENBOROUGH in Doe d. Brierly v. Palmer (1), but when that case is examined it does not support the proposition. There is an observation by LORD ELLENBOROUGH in the course of the argument (16 East 53, at p. 56), which is the apparent basis for the proposition, but it is not in itself sufficient to carry it.

In my opinion, the law is well settled now that, when a forfeiture of a lease is incurred, the lease is voidable and not void, and in those circumstances the giving of a notice to quit may recognise the subsistence of the lease and may, therefore, waive the forfeiture, but in the case where a tenancy is determined by a notice to quit, the position is entirely different.

In this case the tenancy was determined on Sept. 21, 1946, the notice to quit having been given on Sept. 14. When a valid notice has been given, a new tenancy can be created only by an express or implied agreement. A subsequent notice to quit is of no effect unless other circumstances form the basis for inferring a new tenancy having been created after the expiry of the first notice. Applying that test in the present case, it is plain that there was no agreement, express or implied or to be inferred, for any new tenancy. The tenancy expired on Sept. 21. On Sept. 23, the tenants offered rent. It was refused. That showed plainly that the landlord was not going to create a new tenancy, and the mere fact that a solicitor, in order to get possession, gave another notice to quit, is not, in my judgment, any reason for inferring any agreement for a new tenancy.

I hold that the tenancy came to an end on Sept. 21, 1946. The tenancy having so come to an end, the tenants had no longer any right to be there, and when they went to the Furnished Rent Tribunal on Sept. 30, 1946, it was then too late, because the protection afforded by the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, only applies to notices to quit after the contract has been referred to the tribunal. It does not have any effect on notices to quit given before the matter is referred to the tribunal. There, therefore, is no protection to the tenants under either the Rent Restrictions Acts or the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, and there must be judgment for the landlord for possession.

Judgment for landlord for possession in 21 days and mesne profits up to the date of possession with costs.

Solicitors : Telfer & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; H. G. Greenwood (for the defendants)
[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND
BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA. THE JULIA.
[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), November 8, 11, 13, December 13, 1946.]

Sale of goods—Contract expressed to be on c.i.f. terms—Special clause for payment against delivery order—Payment on receipt of delivery order addressed to sellers' agents—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery—Right of buyers to return of sum paid.

Contract—Impossibility of performance—Frustration—Sale of goods—Contract expressed to be on c.i.f. terms—Payment of price against receipt of delivery order addressed to sellers' agents—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery—Right of buyers to return of sum paid.

By a contract dated Apr. 24, 1940, a Belgian company agreed to buy a quantity of rye to be delivered at Antwerp. The contract, which was expressed to be on c.i.f. terms, provided that payment was to be against bill of lading, or delivery order and policy, and/or certificate and/or letter of insurance at Antwerp. On Apr. 30, 1940, in accordance with the usual practice between the parties during a long period, the purchase price was paid by the buyers on receiving a delivery order addressed to the cargo agents of the sellers. This delivery order contained a statement that the bearer had been given a share in a certificate of insurance covering a certain quantity of rye ("War and S.R. and C.C. risks clause included"). Owing to the German invasion of Belgium, the ship carrying the rye did not proceed to Antwerp but was diverted while at sea to Lisbon, where the cargo was sold by the sellers for a price less than the sum which the buyers had paid. The sellers offered to account to the buyers for the proceeds received from the sale at Lisbon, but the buyers claimed the return of the amount paid by them on the ground that the consideration for the payment had wholly failed. They contended (a) that, since the sellers tendered merely a delivery order, the contract became an ex-ship contract, and until the actual delivery of the goods the sellers remained in control of them; (b) that the document against which the purchase price was paid was not good tender under the contract because it did not pass the property in the goods, and, therefore, there had been a total failure of consideration; (c) that the contract was frustrated owing to the German occupation of Antwerp:—

Held: (i) the contract was a c.i.f. contract.

(ii) there was no failure of consideration, because the buyers had received against their payment a document for which they had agreed to pay, the rights under the document being, in a business sense, the equivalent of the goods, and, although the property in the goods had not passed to the buyers, the risk had. (Inglis v. Stock (5) and Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd. (6) applied). Therefore, the buyers were not entitled to recover from the sellers the sum which they had paid.

[As to C.I.F. CONTRACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 210-225, paras. 280-299; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 575-581, Nos. 1801-1836.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 122; [1943] A.C. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 433; 167 L.T. 101; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Denbigh Cowan & Co. & Atcherley (R.) & Co. (1921), 90 L.J.K.B. 836; 125 L.T. 388; 39 Digest 580, 1834.
- (3) Biddell Brothers v. Clemens (E.) Horst Co., [1911] 1 K.B. 934; reversd., sub nom., E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A.C. 18; 81 L.J.K.B. 42; 105 L.T. 563; 17 Com. Cas. 55; 39 Digest 575, 1801.
- (4) Tregelles v. Sewell (1862), 7 H. & N. 574; 158 E.R. 600; affd. (1863), 7 H. & N. 584, Ex. Ch.; 39 Digest 495, 1119.
- (5) Inglis v. Stock (1885), 10 App. Cas. 263; 54 L.J.Q.B. 582; 52 L.T. 821; affg., S.C. sub nom., Stock v. Inglis (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 564; 39 Digest 530, 1433.
- (6) Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 78; 92 L.J.K.B. 331; 128 L.T. 402; 39 Digest 529, 1421.
- (7) Produce Brokers New Co. (1924), Ltd. v. Wray, Sanderson & Co., (1931) 39 Lloyd L.R. 257.
- (8) Smyth (Ross T.) & Co., Ltd. v. Bailey, Son & Co., [1940] 3 All E.R. 60; 164 L.T. 102; Digest Supp.

SPECIAL CASE stated by an umpire.

By a written contract dated Apr. 24, 1940, made in Antwerp, Luis de Ridder, Ltd. (acting by their Antwerp agents, Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd.) agreed to sell to Comptoir d'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S.A. about 500 tons of Plate rye for shipment by S.S. Julia :

... at the price of $4.025 per 100 kilos c.i.f. Antwerp on the terms conditions and rules contained in Form No. 41 of the London Corn Trade Association . . . Any special condition applying hereto shall be treated as if written on such Form.

The contract further provided :

Payment to be made by nett cash on first presentation of and in exchange for first arriving copy/ies of bill/s of lading . . . and/or delivery order/s and policy/ies and/or certificates and/or letter/s of insurance at Antwerp . . .

In over 900 transactions between the parties during the 10 years before the date of the contract, the practice had been for the buyers to pay to the Belgian Grain Co. the amount named in the provisional invoice on receiving from them a delivery order addressed to F. van Bree S.A., cargo agents of the sellers, and on the arrival of the vessel carrying the shipment in question the buyers handed this delivery order to Carga S.A., their own cargo superintendents at Antwerp. Carga S.A. then presented the delivery order to F. van Bree S.A., who issued against it a release authorising the delivery to Carga S.A. of the goods. After Carga S.A. had received this release, their representatives and those of F. van Bree S.A. attended together on the steamer and drew samples of the shipment. The goods, however, could not be actually delivered until the captain's release had been obtained, and this was issued to F. van Bree S.A. and was never physically in the buyers' hands. On Apr. 30, 1940, the sellers presented to the buyers a delivery order for the rye and on the same day the buyers paid to the sellers the purchase price. The delivery order contained a statement that the bearer of the order had been given a share in a certificate of insurance covering a certain quantity of rye (" War and S.R. & C.C. risks clause included"), but the certificates themselves were delivered to F. van Bree S.A., and neither on this occasion nor in any other transaction between the parties did the certificate pass through the buyers' hands. Owing to the German invasion of Belgium, the Julia never arrived at Antwerp but was diverted to Lisbon, where she discharged her cargo and the rye was sold by the sellers at a price less than the sum which the buyers had paid. The sellers offered to account to the buyers for the proceeds received from the sale at Lisbon, but the buyers replied claiming that the contract had been rendered impossible of performance by reason of the occupation of Belgium and had been unilaterally broken by the sellers and that the buyers were entitled to reimbursement in full of the sums paid under it. This claim was repudiated by the sellers, and on Sept. 7, 1945, the buyers demanded arbitration under the contract.

The arbitrators being unable to agree on an award, the umpire appointed by them was requested to make his award in the form of a Special Case. The umpire found (a) that the property in the rye had not passed to the buyers ; (b) that the parties had intended to make a c.i.f. contract. By para. 16 of the award the umpire stated the question of law as follows :

The question of law for the decision of the court is whether upon the facts as found and upon a true construction of the contract the buyers are entitled to recover from the sellers the sum of £1,243 12s. 2d., together with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from Apr. 30, 1940.

The umpire held that the written contract was on its face a c.i.f. contract to be performed by the sellers by the tender of documents in accordance with the terms thereof, and he rejected the buyers' contention that the sellers' election to tender a delivery order rendered the contract one under which they were under an obligation to deliver the actual goods at Antwerp. Para. 18 of the award was as follows :

Subject to the decision of the court, therefore, I answer the question of law stated in para. 16 hereof in the negative and I award and declare as follows : (a) The buyers . . . are not entitled to recover from the sellers . . . the sum of £1,243 12s. 2d. paid by the buyers on Apr. 30, 1940, nor any interest thereon . . .

H. U. Willink, K.C., and E. W. Roskill for the buyers.

Patrick Devlin, K.C., and J. V. Naisby for the sellers.

Dec. 13. MORRIS, J. : This is an award in the form of a Special Case under the Arbitration Act, 1934, s. 9 (1) (b), stated by the umpire appointed by the respective arbitrators for the parties after disputes had arisen under a written contract dated Apr. 24, 1940, for the purchase and sale of a quantity of Plate rye.

The claim of the buyers for the return of the sum of £1,243 12s. 2d., stated to be the equivalent of the dollars paid, is a claim for money had and received. It is for the return of money the consideration for the payment of which is alleged wholly to have failed. A claim so formulated prompts the two inquiries (a) for what consideration was the money paid, and (b) has such consideration wholly failed. I use the word "consideration" in the sense which is here applicable, bearing in mind what was said by VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., in his speech in Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd (1). VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., said ([1942] 2 All E.R. 122, at p. 129):

In English law, an enforceable contract may be formed by an exchange of a promise for a promise, or by the exchange of a promise for an act—I am excluding contracts under seal—and thus, in the law relating to the formation of contract, the promise to do a thing may often be the consideration; but, when one is considering the law of failure of consideration and of the quasi-contractual right to recover money on that ground, it is, generally speaking, not the promise which is referred to as the consideration, but the performance of the promise.

The contract of Apr. 24, 1940, is one for the sale of goods. The stipulated price is stated: "price . . . c.i.f. Antwerp." The parties used a printed form of contract designed by the London Corn Trade Association for contracts intended to be on c.i.f. terms. The parties can hardly be heard to complain, therefore, if their contract were interpreted as a c.i.f. contract: compare the observations of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Re Denbigh Cowan & Co. and Atcherley & Co. (2). The contract as made, however, contains clauses either attached by slips or printed on the back, and all the words, phrases and clauses used and their inter-relation have to be considered in forming a conclusion as to the meaning and construction of the contract. The wording of the first of the attached clauses, in my view, gives to the sellers a right to choose between various courses. There may be either a bill of lading or a delivery order. There may be a policy of insurance tendered or there may be a certificate or letter of insurance. The buyers could not insist on having a bill of lading in preference to a delivery order; neither could they insist on having a policy of insurance instead of either a certificate or a letter of insurance, but they could refuse to accept documents other than those specified in the contract.

On behalf of the buyers, attention was directed to the nature of the delivery order that was in fact presented by the sellers to the buyers. Insistence was placed on the fact that the document presented was merely an authority addressed by one agent of the sellers to another. In my view, this is not a consideration that is decisive. The buyers did not decline to receive the so-called delivery order, and did not assert or suggest that a document more nearly corresponding to what would normally be regarded as a delivery order should be tendered to them. At the arbitration the buyers contended for, while the sellers disputed, the admissibility of evidence as to the previous course of business. That evidence showed both the course of business in the past and also what would have happened if the pressure of events had not prevented the S.S. Julia from reaching Antwerp. If, at the buyers' insistence, the evidence is considered, it shows ample reasons why the buyers did not refuse to take the delivery order which they received. In the dealings of the past there had been evolved methods and arrangements which were convenient and which had proved workable and they were acceptable to both sides. Similar considerations apply also to the position regarding insurance, even though no actual document was received by or on behalf of the buyers. It is too late, therefore, for the buyers to suggest that the documents tendered to them and received by them, against which they made payment, were not documents which they accepted as documents which the sellers in accordance with the contract might present to them. If the sellers had, pursuant to the option given to them by the contract, presented to the buyers a bill of lading and a policy or policies of insurance, and if payment had been made, it could not have been contended that thereafter the payment could have been recovered as money paid on a consideration which had wholly failed unless the goods despatched were, after arrival, rejected as not being the goods contractually prescribed, but it is said that, inasmuch as the sellers in the exercise of their option acted as they did in this case, the contract in effect became an arrival or an ex-ship contract.

This submission bears resemblance to one of the arguments rejected by the Court of Appeal in Re Denbigh Cowan and Atcherley (2). That case, in my view, largely turned on the construction of the particular words of the contract then under review, and it was not a case in which the ship failed to arrive at its destination. In my view, that authority is in no way decisive of the present issue, though, in so far as guidance is given, it tends to support the submissions of the sellers rather than those of the buyers. BANKES, L.J., in giving judgment in that case, said (90 L.J.K.B. 836, at p. 839) :

I think the alternative in the clause is one giving the seller the option to substitute a delivery order for one of the documents which under a c.i.f. contract he is under an obligation to tender ; and that the document for which the delivery order may be substituted is one of the usual documents under a c.i.f. contract which he has to tender and which would give the buyer the right to possession of the goods. I would, therefore, read the clause in this way : " Payment cash against delivery of all the usual documents under a c.i.f. contract or delivery order in lieu of one of those documents necessary for giving possession of the goods ".

The question which throughout has to be borne in mind is whether the payment was made on a consideration which has wholly failed. It is to be observed that this is a different question from the question whether the time for making payment had under the contract arrived. There can be little doubt that such time did arrive, and that the buyers for good reasons took no point that the documents presented to them were not documents as specified in the contract. Prima facie, therefore, it would seem that the buyers received against payment that for which they stipulated, and that the consideration had not wholly failed. The matter requires, however, much deeper examination. A similar stage is reached and passed where payment is made against tender of a good and valid bill of lading and insurance policy, yet, if after arrival the goods are rejected as not being in accordance with the contract description, the payment made may be recovered. In such a case the payment made is, therefore, conditional. Even so, however, there is no condition imported that the ship shall safely arrive at the port of destination. To import any such condition would be to introduce a notion which would be out of tune with the conception of a contract on c.i.f. terms. Further, if any such condition were implied, it would seem to make meaningless or otiose the passing or tender of certificates of insurance or of some document or indorsement which, whatever its precise legal significance, would as a matter of business secure the result that the buyers would recover the value of the goods if they were lost in transit.

In Biddell Brothers v. Clemens Horst Co. (3), in his dissenting judgment in the Court of Appeal, KENNEDY, L.J., said ([1911] 1 K.B. 934, at p. 960) :

It is noticeable that in the course of the argument in Tregelles v. Sewell (4), MARTIN, B., observes, " The purchaser was to have a policy of insurance, which is usually considered as equivalent to the goods," and earlier in the same argument WILDE, B., asked, " If the meaning is ' to be delivered at Harburgh,' what necessity is there for insurance ? "

On the facts as found it would appear that the property in the rye did not pass to the buyers. The goods were not appropriated. This is, however, in my view, an immaterial consideration. What is of consequence is to consider whether the risk passed. In my view, it did. I see no difficulty in the conception of the passing of the risk even in the case of goods which are neither specific nor appropriated : compare Inglis v. Stock (5) and see also Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd. (6).

The contract was made on the terms, conditions and rules contained in Form 41 of the London Corn Trade Association as varied or supplemented by any term or clause in or attached to the contract. The terms included, therefore, the rye terms prescribing a guarantee as to condition on arrival. Another term provided that all average was to be for sellers' account. In my view, these and certain other particular terms were not intended by the parties to have, and did not have, the effect of deflecting the contract from its basis as one on c.i.f. terms.

Produce Brokers New Co. v. Wray Sanderson & Co., Ltd. (7) is a case depending upon the construction of the particular words of a particular contract, and does not give guidance in the present case save so far as it illustrates how buyers may make a payment conditional. In his judgment ROCHE, J., said (39 Lloyds, L.R. 257, at p. 260) that it was a contract which was of a mixed character.

In my judgment, the buyers in this case, when they made payment, received what the sellers, while exercising certain limited options, were, by the terms of the contract, obliged to hand over. If they handed over a document purporting to be a delivery order, and containing an indorsement as to insurance, which, in fact, failed to satisfy contract requirements, then the buyers might have protested and refused acceptance. But if the buyers accept a document purporting to be a delivery order and in a form which had, in very many previous transactions, been mutually regarded as a delivery order, being a document of a kind which, when used in the manner found by experience to be mutually convenient, resulted in physical possession of the goods being secured, then, in my view, the position under the contract so far as consideration is concerned is the same as if a bill of lading had been handed over. In neither event does the physical delivery of the goods constitute the consideration.

In his judgment in Tregelles v. Sewell (4), MARTIN, B., said (7 H. & N. 574, at p. 582):

On consideration I think the true meaning of the contract is this, "When you, the defendant, have performed what you were bound to do, and put the goods on board a ship destined for Harburgh, and handed me the bill of lading and a policy of insurance, I will pay you £5 14s. 6d. per ton, less the freight." The defendant having done all he was bound to do, is entitled to keep the money he got.

The contrary view involves reading into the contract a term that the ship will arrive, or some similar term, but only reading in any such term if the sellers should exercise their option to present a delivery order rather than a bill of lading. But if the contract purports to be and sets out to be a c.i.f. contract, it would seem surprising if the mere exercise of an option to hand over a delivery order rather than a bill of lading should have the result that into the contract is to be read a condition which is repugnant to the whole nature of a c.i.f. contract. It is to be observed also that the handing over of the delivery order was necessarily an act which followed the shipment of the goods and the procuring of a contract of affreightment and the securing of proper insurance cover, so that the steps ordinarily to be taken before documents can be tendered in operating a normal c.i.f. contract had in the present case all been taken.

In my view, the buyers received against their payment a document for which they had agreed to pay, and there was no failure of consideration. This does not mean that the contract was a sale of documents and not of goods. It means that the rights under the document were taken to be, in a business sense, the equivalent of the goods. In Ross T. Smyth & Co., Ltd. v. T. D. Bailey, Son & Co. (8), LORD WRIGHT in his speech in the House of Lords said ([1940] 3 All E.R. 60, at pp. 67, 68):

The contract in question here is of a type familiar in commerce, and is described as a c.i.f. contract. The initials indicate that the price is to include cost, insurance and freight. It is a type of contract which is more widely and more frequently in use than any other contract used for purposes of sea-borne commerce. An enormous number of transactions, in value amounting to untold sums, are carried out every year under c.i.f. contracts. The essential characteristics of this contract have often been described. The seller has to ship or acquire after shipment the contract goods, as to which, if unascertained, he is generally required to give a notice of appropriation. On or after shipment he has to obtain proper bills of lading and proper policies of insurance. He fulfils his contract by transferring the bills of lading and the policies to the buyer. As a general rule, he does so only against payment of the price, less the freight, which the buyer has to pay. In the invoice which accompanies the tender of the documents on the "prompt"—that is, the date fixed for payment,—the freight is deducted, for this reason. In this course of business, the general property in the goods remains in the seller until he transfers the bills of lading. These rules, which are simple enough to state in general terms, are of the utmost importance in commercial transactions. I have dwelt upon them perhaps unnecessarily, because the judgment of the Court of Appeal might seem to throw doubt on one of their most essential aspects. The property which the seller retains while he or his agent, or the banker to whom he has pledged the documents, retains the bills of lading is the general property, and not a special property by way of security. In general, however, the importance of the retention of the property is not only to secure payment from the buyer but for purposes of finance. The general course of international commerce involves the practice of raising money on the documents so as to bridge the period between shipment and the time of obtaining payment against documents. These credit facilities, which are of the first importance, would be completely unsettled if the incidence of the property were made a matter of doubt. By mercantile law, the bills of lading are the symbols of the goods. The general property in the goods must be in the seller if he is to be able to pledge them. The whole system of commercial credits depends on the seller's ability to give a charge on the goods and the policies of insurance.

A Later in his speech, LORD WRIGHT said (ibid. at pp. 69, 70) :

I have thought it important, however, to state the general rules in as simple terms as possible, and to construe the material sections of the Act. KENNEDY, L.J., in Biddell Brothers v. Clemens E. Horst Co. (3), in pointing out that, if the goods are lost during the ocean transit, the buyer must still implement his contract when the documents are tendered to him, said ([1911] 1 K.B. 934, at p. 959) : "The vendor tenders the bill of lading with the insurance policy and other shipping documents (if any) to the purchaser, to whom, from the moment of shipment the property has passed . . ."

B Such expressions must be read subject to all the qualifications which were fully present to the mind of that great commercial judge. He was not in that case concerned with the jus disponendi. In the very example which he gives, if the jus disponendi had been reserved, the property in the goods in the strict sense could never pass at all. It could pass, if at all, only when the documents were taken up against payment, and before that could happen, the goods had been lost. This illustrates one peculiarity of the C c.i.f. contract, which is that the sale can be completed after the loss of the goods by the transfer of the shipping documents. That does not mean that a c.i.f. contract is a sale of documents, and not of goods. It contemplates the transfer of actual goods in the normal course, but, if the goods are lost, the insurance policy and bill of lading contract—that is, the rights under them—are taken to be, in a business sense, the equivalent of the goods.

D If the prior dealings between the parties are to be looked at, then the delivery order was undoubtedly a document of commercial value, and in many hundreds of previous transactions the practical worth of such a document, as bringing about the result that physical possession of the goods would, by the handling of the document, be secured, had been demonstrated. Whatever may have been the legal value of the delivery orders which the buyers were accustomed to accept, such delivery orders doubtless possessed commercial value.

E The buyers submitted that the sellers were under obligation, if they tendered a delivery order, to tender such a delivery order as would entitle the buyers to obtain the goods, that the buyers must not be prevented by any action of the sellers from obtaining the goods, and that the sellers must remain ready and willing to exercise rights against the ship or to give the buyers rights against the ship. They submitted that, if the contract became abortive either because of the action of the sellers or because of some frustrating event occurring at a time when nothing more had been done than the handing over of, inter

F alia, a delivery order, whether in ordinary form or not, in exchange for payment, then the consideration wholly failed. They further submitted that, if, while the sellers were in complete control of the goods, they negotiated with the ship and arranged that the ship should go to another port than that destined, then the consideration wholly failed, because in such event essential conditions remained unfulfilled. In so far as these submissions suggest that the sellers

G did not pass the kind of delivery order which they should have done, it is too late for the buyers to take the point. The buyers accepted the document as being of the nature for which the contract stipulated. In so far as the submissions involve that, whenever there is a delivery order handed over instead of a bill of lading, there is an implied condition that the ship will arrive, in my view, the submissions are erroneous for the reasons which I have stated. In so far as the submissions suggest that the sellers were guilty of some irregular

H conduct in regard to the bill of lading, it is to be observed that no such case was pleaded. In the points of claim it was alleged that it became impossible for the Julia to proceed to Antwerp.

I desire to say nothing that is not strictly necessary for a consideration of the issue which now arises, but it is pertinent to observe that the delivery order signed by the agents of the sellers is expressed to be for a quantity of rye ex bill of lading for 1,120,000 kilos rye in bulk. The sellers may have owed certain obligations to the buyers in regard to the holding and handling by them or their agents of the bill of lading which would make them liable for any wanton or inexcusable dealings on their part resulting in detriment to the buyers. I need say no more than that the pleadings do not raise an inquiry into or complaint concerning what was done by the sellers after the occupation of Antwerp by the German armed forces. The claim made by the buyers was that the consideration for the payment made by them wholly failed. In my view, it did not.

I should state that, as a contention alternative to and separate from their main arguments, the sellers submitted that in any event the consideration did not wholly fail. They submitted that if, pursuant to contractual obligation, the sellers gave a delivery order, they were giving a document with which the buyers could deal before the time for taking physical delivery arrived. A delivery order was given, and so it was urged that the consideration had not wholly failed. I do not find it necessary to express a view in regard to this.

For the reasons which I have indicated, I am of the opinion that the question of law stated in para. 16 of the award should be answered in the negative. I uphold the award set out in para. 18. The buyers must pay the costs before me.

Award upheld.
Solicitors: Richards, Butler & Co. (for the appellants); Thomas Cooper & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HOLLORN v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), December 11, 1946.]

Royal Forces—Pension—Attributability—Anxiety state resulting from fear of overseas service.

The appellant, who enlisted in September, 1942, had a hysterical breakdown in Sept., 1943, which, in the opinion of a psychiatrist, was the result of fear of going on service abroad. There was no record of any previous nervous trouble in him or in his family. In Nov., 1943, as a result of his anxiety state, the appellant's employment was changed to that of storeman. In June, 1944, after another breakdown he was again examined by a psychiatrist and appeared before a medical board, and in August, 1944, he was discharged as unfit for any form of military service in consequence of psycho-neurosis. A collation of opinions by the Medical Services Division of the Ministry of Pensions made it clear that the seeds of psycho-neurosis were laid in early life and were due to a combination of hereditary and environmental factors, and that war strain, however severe, was not the sole cause of the neurosis, but that very severe strain could give rise to a temporary neurotic breakdown even in a stable, well-poised man:—

HELD: the strain of hard training followed by orders for foreign service might have been a precipitating cause of the appellant's neurosis, and as war service had not been proved not to be a cause of that neurosis, the compelling presumption in favour of the appellant was not rebutted, and the proper finding in point of law was that the neurosis was attributable to war service.

Minister of Pensions v. Chennell (1) applied.

[FOR THE PENSIONS APPEAL TRIBUNALS ACT, 1943, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, p. 480.]

Case referred to:

(1) Minister of Pensions v. Chennell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 719.

APPEAL by the claimant from a decision of a pensions appeal tribunal that psycho-neurosis, resulting from fear of being sent on service overseas, was not attributable to war service. The facts appear in the judgment.

G. H. Crispin for the appellant.

Stephen Chapman for the respondent.

DENNING, J.: This is a case stated by the tribunal in respect of a man who enlisted on Sept. 1, 1942, and was discharged on Aug. 14, 1944, as unfit for any form of military service in consequence of anxiety state, sometimes called psycho-neurosis. There is a compelling presumption in his favour.

In 1943, during the course of his service, he went sick and was seen in Sept. by a psychiatrist. The psychiatrist enquired closely into his history. He found there was no record of any nervous trouble in him or his family beforehand. A drug called amytal was administered to him, and, in the opinion of the psychiatrist, under the influence of that drug, the cause of his breakdown was elicited from him. He confessed that his unit had orders for foreign service. From that the psychiatrist formed the opinion that this man had a hysterical breakdown as the result of fear of going abroad. That was in Sept., 1943. In Nov., as the result of the anxiety state, his employment was changed and he became a storeman, but it is to be noted that on June 5 and 6, 1944, he had to see the medical people again and was ordered to report for psychiatric examination. It was then recommended that he should appear before a medical board with a view to being discharged, and he was, in fact, discharged with an anxiety state in Aug., 1944. It may be that his breakdown in June, 1944, was also a manifestation of the fear of going overseas because it was about "D" day and men in this country did not know who or who would not be going overseas. He claims a pension now on the ground of his complaint of psycho-neurosis, the presumption, as I say, being in his favour.

Much assistance has been given to the tribunal and to the court by a collation of opinions on psycho-neurosis which has been made by the Medical Services Division of the Ministry of Pensions. It is plain from that summary that the seeds of psycho-neurosis are laid in early life due to a combination of hereditary and environmental factors and also that war strain, no matter how severe, is not the sole cause of it. That finding, of course, does not conclude the matter because, as I have already said in Minister of Pensions v. Chennell (1), to justify a finding of attributability in cases under this warrant it is not necessary that war service should be the sole cause or even that it should be the effective and predominant cause. It is sufficient that it should be a cause of the trouble. The opinion goes on to say that very severe strain can give rise to a temporary neurotic breakdown even in a stable, well-poised man, but in such a personality the neurosis state does not persist after discharge from the army. Even in such a man, war service may be a cause of neurosis and may persist, as I read this opinion, at the time of discharge from the army. But suppose the individual is not a stable, well-poised man. Suppose he is not so well balanced as some. It seems to follow that in such a man also severe strain could produce a neurosis, and how long it persisted after discharge would depend on the circumstances of the individual case. At all events, there is nothing in this opinion to negative the fact that some conditions of war service may be a cause of neurosis, although probably not the sole cause. In this case the strain of hard training followed by orders for foreign service may have been a precipitating cause of the neurosis. Then, when I have before me the finding of the psychiatrist who saw the man and administered the drug, who came to the conclusion that he was suffering Then, when I have before me the finding of the psychiatrist who saw the appellant and administered the drug, who came to the conclusion that he was suffering then from a hysterical breakdown as the result of being under orders for foreign service, and when I find that in Aug., 1944, soon after D-day, he was discharged on account of his neurosis, and especially when I find there is no history in him or his family beforehand, it seems to me quite plain that the compelling presumption in his favour is not rebutted. The proper finding in this case is that in point of law, inasmuch as war service is certainly not proved not to have been a cause, the neurosis is attributable to war service.

I say nothing about how long the disability lasts. That is an entirely different question and may be one for another tribunal. All I hold is, on the facts of this case, that at the time of the discharge the compelling presumption is not rebutted. The appeal is, therefore, allowed, and a finding of attributability will be recorded.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Culross & Co. (for the appellant); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRACEGIRDLE v. OXLEY

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys, Lewis, Cassels and Denning, JJ.), December 18, 1946.]

Street and Aerial traffic—Motor vehicle—Dangerous driving—Excessive speed—“Not, in fact, dangerous to the public”—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 11 (1).

Magistrates—Perverse decision—Remittance by High Court of Case Stated with direction to convict.

The respondent, a lorry driver, was charged under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 11 (1), with unlawfully driving a motor vehicle at a speed dangerous to the public having regard to all the circumstances of the case. The maximum speed allowed for the vehicle in question was 20 miles an hour, but it was travelling, heavily laden, at a speed of over 40 miles an hour along a main road which carried a heavy volume of traffic, and the driver overtook another vehicle without giving any signal. The justices, however, decided that, although the vehicle was being driven at a speed in excess of the legal speed limit, the speed was not in fact dangerous to the public who were on the road or might reasonably be expected to be on the road :—

HELD : the offence created by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 11 (1) was driving at a speed which was dangerous, actually or potentially, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and that offence had been proved.

Per curiam. If justices come to a decision to which no reasonable bench of magistrates could come, the High Court can interfere because the position is then the same as if the justices had come to a decision of fact which there was no evidence to support.

Kingman v. Seager (1) and Durnell v. Scott (2) followed.

Judgment of HUMPHREYS, J., in Kingman v. Seager (1) explained.

[AS TO DANGEROUS DRIVING, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 669, 670, para. 979; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp., Street and Aerial Traffic, Nos. 222a-222s.

AS TO MAXIMUM SPEED LIMITS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 666, 667, paras. 974, 975.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Kingman v. Seager, [1938] 1 K.B. 397; 107 L.J.K.B. 97; 157 L.T. 535; 101 J.P. 543; Digest Supp.

(2) Durnell v. Scott, [1939] 1 All E.R. 183; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by justices for the Bucklow division of the county of Chester. The respondent was charged on an information with dangerous driving, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 11 (1). The justices found that the lorry he drove was being driven at a speed in excess of the legal speed limit on a main road which carried a heavy volume of traffic, but they dismissed the information on the ground that the speed was not in fact dangerous to the public who were on the road or might reasonably be expected to be on the road. The justices dismissed the information, and the appellant, a police superintendent appealed. Since a point of considerable importance was raised by the case, particularly in view of the decisions in Kingman v. Seager (1) and Durnell v. Scott (2), it was heard by a court of five judges. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

S. R. Edgedale, and J. G. K. Sheldon for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

H. L. Parker as amicus curiae.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The respondent, Oxley was charged for that he, on Jan. 4, 1946, at Peovei, in the county of Chester, did on a certain public highway there situate, called Holmes Chapel Road, unlawfully drive a certain motor vehicle, to wit, a heavy motor lorry, at a speed dangerous to the public having regard to all the circumstances of the case. The justices dismissed the information, and the facts which they have found were these. The respondent drove a heavy motor lorry of an unladen weight of 6 tons 3 cwt. 1 quarter, carrying a load of 8 tons, so that it was substantially a vehicle of a total weight of between 14 and 15 tons. The maximum speed allowed for that class of vehicle was 20 miles an hour. The vehicle was driven along the Holmes Chapel Road, Peover, for a distance of one mile and its speed varied between 40 and 45 miles an hour. It was driven on the correct side of the road and passed one slowly driven brewer's lorry which it overtook on a right-hand bend giving no signal of intention to pass. There was no other traffic on the road and no member of the public was actually placed in a position of danger. The justices find that the road is a first-class wide main road and carries a heavy volume of traffic from Liverpool and Manchester to the Potteries and London. There was one converging road, two bends, five farm entrances and one narrow bridge on the length of highway covered by the police test which was being carried out. The vehicle was overtaken and stopped, the respondent was informed of the speed at which he had been travelling, and he replied: "I was talking. I have no speedometer." The justices then say that they decided that, although the vehicle was being driven at a speed in excess of the legal speed limit, in view of the type of road and the situation of the test the speed was not in fact dangerous to the public who were on the road or to the public who might reasonably be expected to be on the road, and, in fact, that there was nothing which distinguished this case from any other ordinary case of exceeding the speed limit, and they dismissed the information. The question they put to the court was whether their decision was correct, it having been proved or admitted that the vehicle was driven at an exceptionally high rate, and whether they were bound to convict of driving at a speed dangerous to the public even though in the circumstances they did not think there was danger to the public who were on the road or might reasonably have been expected on the road.

It certainly seems a very startling decision, so startling that one is bound to ask oneself whether it was a decision to which any reasonable bench of justices could come. Here is a motor lorry of a very considerable weight, hurtling along the road at a pace which is found to be over 40 miles an hour, passing another vehicle without giving signals, only reducing very slightly in one case at a bend, negotiating a narrow bridge and so forth, and it is said that that is not a case of dangerous driving. It is remarkable that the justices in certain parts of Cheshire seem to hold rather strange views on the subject of dangerous driving and also seem to pay singularly little attention to the decisions of this court, for the two cases which caused those of us who sat to hear this case last July to decide that the present case should be heard before a full court were both cases which came from Cheshire. In both cases the justices had dismissed the informations, and in both cases this court remitted the informations, not for further hearing, but with a direction to convict. It is difficult, indeed, without going meticulously into small details, to see any broad distinction between the facts in the present case and the facts in those two previous cases.

It is, of course, said that we are bound by the findings of fact set out in the Case by the justices, and it is perfectly true that this court does not sit as a general court of appeal against justices' decisions in the same way as quarter sessions, for instance, sit as a court of appeal against the decisions of courts of summary jurisdiction. In this court we only sit to review the justices' decisions on points of law, being bound by the facts which they find, provided always that there is evidence on which the justices can come to the conclusions of fact at which they arrive. I should state that the court has had the advantage of argument from Mr. Parker, on the instructions of the Treasury Solicitor, who has intervened as amicus curiae to enable the court to have the benefit of a full argument on one side and the other, and Mr. Parker concedes that, if justices come to a decision to which no reasonable bench of justices, applying their minds to proper considerations and giving themselves proper directions, can come, then this court can interfere, because the position then is exactly the same as though the justices have come to a decision of fact which there was no evidence to support.

The first case to which it is necessary to refer is Kingman v. Seager (1). The present case comes from the Bucklow division of Cheshire where the justices sit at Knutford. Kingman v. Seager (1) was concerned with an appeal from a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Middlewich in Cheshire. The facts in that case were, as I say, very similar to the facts in the present case. One can find certain small distinctions, for instance, they found in the Case there that the lorry was driven over a cross road at a speed of 40 miles an hour or over. Though there was not, admittedly, a "cross road" in the case we are considering, there were converging roads, which makes very little difference. In the present case, too, there were farm entrances and so forth. I do not think there were found to be any farm entrances in Kingman's case (1). However, the court in that case had no difficulty in reversing the decision of the justices, who had found that there was no offence committed, and the court sent the case back with a direction to convict.

If one looks at the headnote alone in Kingman's case (1), it might be said that it can be distinguished on the ground that the justices there only considered the question whether persons were actually put into danger and not the question of potential danger by reason of the amount of traffic which might reasonably be expected to be on the road. The headnote—I am not saying that it is inaccurate—says ([1938] 1 K.B.D. 397):

The offence of dangerous driving under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 11 (1), is complete if potential danger to traffic which might reasonably be expected to be on the road is proved, it being unnecessary to establish actual danger to any member of the public.

However, when one reads the judgment of the court carefully, it is obvious—and, indeed, DU PARCQ, J., said so in terms—that the court was sending the case back to the justices to convict because, in their opinion, the decision to which they had come was one to which no reasonable bench of justices could come. If the court had been dealing with the case merely on the ground that the justices had not considered whether there was potential danger, they would have remitted the case to them for further hearing. But the court did not do that. The court sent the case back with a direction to find that the offence was proved and that there was to be a conviction.

There are some expressions of opinion in the judgments in that case which, I think, go rather far, unless the facts and circumstances of the case are clearly borne in mind. Taken by themselves, these expressions of opinion might be taken as meaning that, wherever justices find excessive speed, they must find dangerous driving. I do not think that any member of the court meant to lay that down as universally applicable, for the reason that there are many cases, apart from any question of danger to the surface of the road, in which it would be perfectly safe to drive a heavy motor vehicle at almost any rate of speed. If you are crossing Dartmoor or a moor in Yorkshire, where there are no hedges on either side of the road and you can see for miles, and where perhaps, the only other vehicle within 20 miles is the police car that is chasing you in your lorry, of course there is no danger to the public, and it would be unreasonable then to say you are driving recklessly, or at a speed or in a manner which is dangerous to the public having regard to the amount of traffic, because there is not only no traffic but it would not be reasonable to expect any traffic thereabouts, since you are driving over a wide open space where you can see the roads are empty. Of course, if traffic does appear and you do not slow up, a different set of considerations may apply. I think it is obvious that what was meant in the judgments in Kingman's case (1), and particularly in the judgment of HUMPHREYS, J., was that when you take all the circumstances of the case into consideration, speed alone can be decisive. Supposing, for instance, you are driving on an arterial road, say the Great West Road going out of London or any of the main roads surrounding or in London, it is obvious that you can be driving there at a pace which in itself must be a danger to the public. It is clear in Kingman v. Seager (1) that the court, in remitting the case for conviction, were doing so because they thought that the finding of the justices was perverse, though that is not stated in terms.

Durnell v. Scott (2), came from the neighbouring petty sessional division of Sandbach. Whether the justices were the same I do not know. I imagine they were not as they were sitting in a different division, but there was evidently, I think one may say, very close liaison work between the justices of Middlewich and the justices of Sandbach, because the justices of Sandbach gave their decision in precisely the same words as the justices of Middlewich had given their decision in Kingman v. Seager (1) except that they were careful in Durnell v. Scott (2) to add to their decision, which was given after the judgment in Kingman v. Seager (1), the words:

... we did not think there was in fact danger to the public either on the road or which might reasonably have been expected on the road.

They put that in, I suppose, hoping thereby to distinguish the case from Kingman v. Seager (1), but the court sent the case back to them with a direction to convict, and again obviously it was because the court came to the conclusion that no reasonably-minded bench of justices could come to that decision.

A In the present case the justices of the Bucklow division have found that there was a lorry being driven down this main road at a speed approaching 50 miles an hour, giving no signals and charging at narrow bridges and so forth. They have not stated it in the Case, if it be the fact—and, therefore, I suppose it is not the fact—that this road is a place where one can see for miles. One knows something about this part of Cheshire, and it is not likely that you would find such a road there. At any rate, the justices of the Bucklow division have not stated that, but they have left the court with the fact that this is a main arterial B road which carries a large volume of traffic between the great manufacturing towns of the north, the Potteries, and London, and, in spite of these two previous decisions and of the fact that it had been shown that the addition of the words in regard to potential danger had not saved the justices' decision in Durnell v. Scott (2), for some reason or other the justices in the present case have proceeded to set out their decision in terms which are copied word for word from Durnell v. Scott (2). One feels obliged to say that these justices appear C to be acting in a somewhat contumacious manner.

Justices have to remember that their courts are all inferior to this court and they are under the jurisdiction of this court. If justices persist in disregarding decisions given previously by this court on a set of facts which cannot be distinguished from the facts which are before the justices in any particular case, then they are guilty of a grave dereliction of duty, because D it is their duty to obey the rulings of this court. If they do not obey the rulings of this court and persist in giving decisions which are contrary to the judgments of this court, they will find themselves in serious trouble. In this case the court takes exactly the same view as the court has done in the two previous cases. In the opinion of the court, it is impossible to say that a reasonably-minded bench of justices, having facts such as these before them, could come to a decision that no offence had been committed. This case will go back E to the justices with an intimation that the offences have been proved and a direction to convict.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree with the judgment given by my Lord, and I desire to say no more than this as to the action which the court has thought right to take. For a very great number of years, whenever justices have found facts from which only one conclusion can be drawn by reasonable persons F honestly applying their minds to the question before them, and have refused to draw that only conclusion, then this court has invariably upset the decision of the justices in the appropriate manner. I want to say one other word as to the judgment which I gave in Kingman v. Seager (1). Having read it again, I can quite appreciate that that judgment might be read as amounting to this, that the only question that need be considered in a prosecution for driving at a speed dangerous to the public is the speed itself. If it conveys that impression X to the reader, then, of course, it is wrong. I did not intend to say that, and I do not think myself I am reported as saying quite that. What I did say was ([1938] 1 K.B. 397, at p. 400) :

I understand the finding of the justices to mean that a speed cannot be " dangerous " unless some element of actual danger is proved.

I added :

I That is wrong. The danger to which the section refers is to be found in the speed itself.

I there had in mind the language of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 11 (1), which I think may be read, so far as is necessary for the purpose of the present case and for the decision in Kingman v. Seager (1), as follows : " If any person drives a motor vehicle on a road ... at a speed ... which is dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances " then he is guilty of an offence. What I wanted to convey was that the manner in which he was driving becomes immaterial. He may be convicted because he is driving too fast and only because he is driving too fast, but, of course, there must be taken into consideration all the circumstances of the case, because a speed which is too fast on one road in certain circumstances may not be dangerous when driving on another road in other circumstances. I also had in mind the peculiar finding of the justices in that case. They said in their Case that they had taken into consideration the fact that the vehicle was in good condition, having only one week previously been returned by the makers after being reconditioned, and in stating their decision they used the words: "In view of the condition of the vehicle, the type of road, and the situation of the occurrence, the speed was not in fact dangerous to the public." What I intended to convey there was that the question of the condition of the vehicle was perfectly immaterial. All that had to be looked at was the speed, and I still hold the view that there may be speeds proved which are in themselves dangerous to the persons who use the high road. I do not think anyone can define what is, or is not, the speed that comes within that category, but that a person driving along any road in England at 100 miles an hour would be driving at a speed dangerous to the public would, I think, be admitted by everybody. The offence created by this section is driving at a speed which is dangerous actually or potentially, having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

LEWIS, J.: I cannot usefully add anything to the judgments that have been delivered, with which I wholly agree.

CASSELS, J.: I also agree with the judgments which have been delivered.

DENNING, J.: I agree. The question whether a determination by a tribunal is a determination in point of fact or in point of law frequently occurs. On such a question there is one distinction that must always be kept in mind, namely, the distinction between primary facts and conclusions from those facts. Primary facts are facts which are observed by the witnesses and proved by testimony; conclusions from those facts are inferences deduced by a process of reasoning from them. The determination of primary facts is always a question of fact. It is essentially a matter for the tribunal who sees the witnesses to assess their credibility and to decide the primary facts which depend on them. The conclusions from those facts are sometimes conclusions of fact and sometimes conclusions of law. In a case under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 11, the question whether a speed is dangerous is a question of degree and a conclusion on a question of degree is a conclusion of fact. The court will only interfere if the conclusion cannot reasonably be drawn from the primary facts, and that is the case here. The conclusion drawn by these justices from the primary facts was not one that could reasonably be drawn from them.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Geoffrey C. Scringgeour, Clerk to Cheshire County Council, Chester (for the appellant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOLSOVER URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BOLSOVER COLLIERY CO., LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), December 10, 11, 12, 20, 1946.]

Mines—Coal mine—Seams passing under sanitary works—Notice of intention to work—Particular seams not specified—Validity of notice—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, (c. 17), s. 22—Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883 (c. 37).

A colliery company owned mines under, or within 40 yards from, sanitary works owned and controlled by a local authority. By a notice given to the authority under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, the company stated that, "as owners, lessees and licensees entitled to work and get seams of coal under or within the prescribed distance of" the authority's sanitary works (described as being situated within three named parishes), they gave notice "that we are desirous of working the said seams of coal and that it is our intention to work the same on the expiration of 30 days after the service upon you of this notice." In due course the company worked some of the seams. The local authority contended that the notice was bad (a) because the company had not specified which particular seams they desired to work, and (b) because the notice covered too large an area :—

HELD : it was not necessary for the company to particularise the seams of coal which it intended to work, and the notice did not cover too large an area, and, the notice was, therefore, valid.

Midland Ry., Co. v. Robinson (2) applied.

[AS TO NOTICE OF INTENTION TO WORK, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 645-647, paras. 1392, 1393; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, pp. 154-156, Nos. 360-368.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Mason (R.) & Sons (1886), 56 L.J.Q.B. 255; 57 L.T. 116; 11 Digest 153, 354.
- (2) Midland Ry. Co. v. Robinson (1887), 37 Ch.D. 386; affirmed, sub nom. Midland Ry. Co., & Kettering, Thrapston & Huntingdon Ry. Co. v. Robinson (1889), 15 App. Cas. 19; 59 L.J.Ch. 442; 62 L.T. 194; 54 J.P. 580; 11 Digest 150, 328.

ACTION by a public authority, owning and controlling certain sanitary works, for a declaration that a notice by a colliery company of intention to work seams of coal under or within 40 yards from their works was not a valid notice under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 22, and the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, on the grounds (a) that the notice did not specify the particular seams of coal which the company desired to work, and (b) that the notice covered too large an area.

R. M. Montgomery, K.C., and Lionel Edwards for the plaintiffs.
D. L. Jenkins, K.C., and L. M. Jopling for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. ROXBURGH, J., read the following judgment: The plaintiffs, the urban district council of Bolsover, own and control a sewage system in the parish of Bolsover in the county of Derby, which consists of the Bolsover sewage works, the Carr Vale sewage works, and sewers which carry sewage from its various sources to the works. I need not describe in detail the component parts of this sewage system. It is enough to say that some parts are underground and some are not. Under these "sanitary works"—for they are such within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, (hereinafter called "the Act of 1883")—or within 40 yards therefrom lie mines and minerals, owned, leased or occupied by the defendants, Bolsover Colliery Co., Ltd.

On Dec. 17, 1929, the defendants gave the plaintiffs a notice in the following terms :

Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the Bolsover Colliery Workings. We hereby give you notice under and by virtue of the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 22-27, that we intend on the expiration of 30 days from the service of this notice to work the coal of which we are the lessees in the seam known as the First Waterloo Seam at the Bolsover colliery lying in the area of protection comprising your works and appurtenances situate in the parishes of Bolsover and Scarscliffe in the county of Derby.

On Dec. 4, 1930, the defendants gave the plaintiffs another notice, in these terms :

Bolsover and Creswell Collieries. Under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, we, Bolsover Colliery Co., Ltd., as owners, lessces and licensees entitled to work and get seams of coal under or within the prescribed distance of your works of sewerage, drainage, sewerage disposal, lighting and water supply, including all buildings, fixtures, pipes, fittings and apparatus connected with such work or works, all or any of the same lying and being situate within the parishes of Bolsover, Scarscliffe and Elmlton in the county of Derby, hereby give you notice that we are desirous of working the said seams of coal and that it is our intention to work the same on the expiration of 30 days after the service upon you of this notice.

On receipt of those notices, the plaintiffs did nothing. The defendants in due course worked coal lying under or within 40 yards of the "sanitary works." The plaintiffs desire to claim that those workings have caused subsidence and damage to their "sanitary works," and, with a view to prosecuting such a claim, they issued a writ in this action on Mar. 4, 1946, seeking a declaration that the two notices which I have read were not valid notices on the true construction of the Act of 1883 and of s. 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. (hereinafter called "the Act of 1847").

The relevant statutory provisions are as follows. Section 19 of the Act of 1847 provides :

The undertakers shall from time to time, within 6 months from the time at which any pipes, conduits, or underground works shall have been laid down or formed by them, cause a survey and map to be made of the district within which any such pipes or underground works shall be laid, on a scale not less than one foot to a mile, and shall cause to be marked thereon the course and situation of all existing pipes or conduits for the collection, passage or distribution of water and underground works belonging to them, in order to show all such underground works within the said district, and shall, within 6 months from the making of any alterations or additions, cause the said map to be from time to time corrected, and such additions made thereto as may show the line and situation of all such pipes, conduits and underground works as may be laid down or formed by them from time to time after the passing of the special Act ; and such map and plan, or a copy thereof, with the date expressed thereon of the last time when the same shall have been so corrected as aforesaid, shall be kept in the office of the undertakers, and shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested in the same within the said district.

Section 20 provides :

The undertakers shall from time to time, within 3 months from the time at which any such map or plan, or any such correction thereof or addition thereto, shall have been made as aforesaid, deposit with the clerks of the peace in England or Ireland, and with the sheriff clerks in Scotland, of every county, and the town clerk of every burgh in Scotland, in which such district or any part thereof may be situate, and also with the parish clerks of the several parishes in England, and clerks of the union of the several parishes in Ireland, and the schoolmaster of the several parishes in Scotland, in which such underground works shall be situate, copies of the said map or plan, with all such particulars and all such corrections and additions as aforesaid, so far as relates to such counties, burghs, and parishes respectively.

Section 21 provides :

The said clerks of the peace, sheriff clerks, and town clerks, parish clerks, clerks of the union, and schoolmasters shall receive the said copies of the said map and plan respectively, and shall keep the same, and shall allow all persons interested to inspect the same and take copies or extracts of and from the same, in the like manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for default, as is provided in the case of maps and plans deposited under [the Parliamentary Documents Deposit Act, 1837].

Section 22 provides :

Except where otherwise provided for by agreement between the undertakers and other parties, if the owner, lessee, or occupier of any mines or minerals lying under the reservoirs or buildings belonging to the undertakers, or under any of their pipes or works which shall be under ground, and shall be described in the map or plan which shall be so kept and deposited as herein-before mentioned, or within the prescribed distance, if any, and if no distance be prescribed within 40 yards therefrom, be desirous of working the same, such owner, lessee or occupier shall give the undertakers notice in writing of his intention so to do, 30 days before the commencement of working ; and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be lawful for the undertakers to cause such mines to be inspected by any person appointed by them for the purpose, and if it appear to the undertakers that the working of such mines or minerals is likely to damage the said works, and if they be willing to make compensation for such mines to such owner, lessee, or occupier thereof, then he shall not work the same ; and if the undertakers and such owner do not agree as to the amount of such compensation, the same shall be settled as in other cases of disputed compensation.

Section 23 provides :

If before the expiration of such 30 days the undertakers do not state their willingness to treat with such owner, lessee, or occupier for the payment of such compensation, it shall be lawful for him to work the said mines, and to drain the same, by means of engines or otherwise, as if this Act and the special Act had not been passed, so that no wilful damage be done to the said works and so that the said mines be not worked in an unusual manner .

Section 26 provides :

A For better ascertaining whether any such mines are being worked or have been worked so as to damage the said works, it shall be lawful for the undertakers, after giving 24 hours' notice in writing, to enter upon any lands through or near which the said works are situate, and wherein any such mines are being worked or are supposed so to be, and to enter into and return from any such mines or the works connected therewith, and for that purpose it shall be lawful for them to make use of any apparatus or machinery belonging to the owner, lessee, or occupier of such mines, and to use all necessary means for discovering the distance from the said works to the parts of such mines which are being worked or about to be worked.

Turning to the Act of 1883, s. 2 provides :

B In this Act, the expression "sanitary work" means any existing or future building or work constructed by or vested in or under the control of a local authority under the powers or for the purposes of so much of the principal Act or of any general or local Act or Provisional Order as relates to the construction or maintenance of any works of sewerage, drainage, sewage disposal, lighting, or water supply, and includes any fixtures, pipes, fittings, or apparatus connected with any such work, and belonging to or used by the local authority; the expression "support" includes vertical and lateral support: The expression "Sanitary Act" means the Act or Provisional Order under the authority of which a sanitary work has been or is constructed or is maintained, whether such Act or Order was passed and confirmed before or after the commencement of this Act: The expression "person" includes a body corporate.

C Section 3 provides :

D The provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 18-27 (both inclusive) with respect to mines, shall, in relation to any sanitary work of a local authority, be deemed to be incorporated with this Act and with the Sanitary Act under the authority of which such sanitary work has been or is constructed or is maintained, with the following modifications (that is to say): (1) For the purposes of such incorporation the said provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, shall be construed as if the expression "the undertakers" referred to the local authority, and as if the expression "the special Act" referred to such Sanitary Act and this Act, and as if expressions relating to pipes, conduits, or other works referred to the sanitary work: (2) The local authority, by or with any notice under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, of willingness to treat for or make compensation, or of intention to prevent or interfere with the working of any mines, may specify and define the nature and extent of support which they require to be left, and any such notice may extend to minerals beyond the distance of 40 yards mentioned in the said Act or to such less distance as the local authority think fit: (3) As regards sanitary works existing at the passing of this Act the local authority shall cause the survey and map referred to in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 19, to be made within 12 months after the passing of this Act . . .

F The plaintiffs never caused a survey and map to be made on the scale prescribed by s. 19 of the Act of 1847, nor did they deposit any map or plan as required by s. 20 of that Act, and they concede that, as regards those portions of the "sanitary works" which are underground, they cannot succeed in this court in the face of the decision in South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. R. Mason & Sons, (1). But they contend that the obligations imposed by s. 19 and 20 of the Act of 1847 do not extend to those portions of the "sanitary works" which are not underground.

G This is a difficult question, but I shall assume, without deciding, that this contention is well founded, and that, in respect of such portions of their "sanitary works," the plaintiffs were entitled to a notice under s. 22 of the Act of 1847. On that assumption, I must consider the validity of the second notice. The plaintiffs abandoned their challenge to the first notice at the Bar.

H There is no doubt that the defendants were at the date of the notice desirous of working seams of coal under, or within the prescribed distance from, the "sanitary works," and, in fact, they have since done so in due course. The seams which they have so worked are the First Waterloo Seam, the Deep Hard Seam and the Black Shale Seam, but these seams are only three among many, and the main objection to the notice, and the only objection which clearly emerged before the evidence had been closed, was that it did not specify the particular seams of coal which the defendants were desirous of working. If on receipt of the notices the plaintiffs had availed themselves of their rights under the Act of 1847, they could readily have ascertained everything that they required to know to protect themselves, and their present predicament is due to their complete disregard of the notices, but the question is, not what the plaintiffs could have done, but what the defendants were bound to do.

Looking at s. 22 of the Act of 1847 unaided by authority, I should be disposed to think that any owner, lessee, or occupier of any subjacent mines or minerals, who was desirous of working any such mines or minerals, discharged his obligation by merely giving notice of his intention to work the subjacent mines or minerals 30 days before the commencement of working, and that such a notice could only be impeached by showing that he had no bona fide intention of working at all, but, in fact, I am not unaided by authority. I refer to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Midland Ry. Co. v. Robinson (2). That case depended on the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, s. 78, which is not distinguishable from s. 22 of the Act of 1847 for the present purpose. The land there in question contained ironstone and limestone. The mineral owner gave notice that he was desirous of working the mines and minerals under the railway and adjoining thereto as set out in an annexed plan. Two objections were taken: (i) that the owner did not intend to work the minerals himself, but to let them; (ii) that the area shown on the annexed plan was too large. COTTON, L.J., said in his judgment (37 Ch.D. 386, at pp. 395-397):

It has been decided that the railway company is not bound to give their notice under s. 78 of their desire or intention to purchase within 30 days. They may give that at any time. They may postpone their intention of purchasing on the owner giving notice of his intention to work until the support which would be taken away by working becomes to them a practical question. That is very important, because, if they were bound within the 30 days once for all to make up their minds as to whether they would buy or not, questions would arise which, in my opinion, do not arise here. Also, as far as I can see, if they think it advisable (but I am far from saying it would be in this case), they may give notice to the landowner to buy one plot at one time and another plot at another time, that is to say, to buy the minerals in that portion which there is an immediate danger of his working, and they must afterwards, when he is coming near to work another portion, give another notice of their intention to buy that. As regards the possibility of giving notice at any time, that is settled; but then we come to a great deal that is unsettled. The question raised here was this: was there any intention or desire on the part of the defendant to work the mines within the meaning of this section and had he the right to express such a desire? That question turns upon this. It is said that no one but an owner, lessee, or occupier who is intending to work personally, that is to say, by his servants and those who are merely acting for him, could give such a notice, and that an owner of minerals who is not desirous of working as his own speculation, but desirous of having the mine worked by a lessee, cannot give such a notice. I think a great part of the argument in this case turns upon that, but, in my opinion, that contention of the railway company is wrong. What are the words here? "If the owner, lessee or occupier of any mines or minerals lying under the railway . . . or within 40 yards therefrom be desirous of working the same such owner, lessee, or occupier shall give to the company notice in writing of his intention so to do." There is nothing, in my opinion, there to restrict an owner from giving a notice unless he intends by his own servants and his own agents to work it. If he intends to do it in the way which is usually adopted by owners by letting it to lessees who will work, rendering him a royalty or rent, in my opinion he is a person who, being deprived of that right and deprived of that mode of employing his land, would be entitled to compensation under s. 6, and comes within the terms of this clause as an owner who is desirous of working. To hold the contrary would very largely prejudice owners of mines under or near a railway, because a man cannot make arrangements for letting a mine unless he is able to assure those who are offering to take that they can work it if they take a lease; but, if he does not know whether the railway company will exercise their right or whether they will allow it to be worked by him or his lessees, it is impossible for him to enter into any arrangement with persons who are willing to work and to lay out, as is very often necessary, a large sum of money in order to enable them to work profitably the minerals of which they are lessees. In my opinion that contention cannot prevail. Although I doubt whether if the notice means personally working, that is to say, by his servants, we could hold that the defendant was desirous of working, yet as he had a right to give the notice of his desire to work by means of lessees, in my opinion, on the evidence it is clearly established that he was desirous of doing so, and that there was a strong probability of his being able to let it, even at the time when he gave this notice. I quite agree that there must be not only an expression of desire, but an honest actual existence of the desire to work either by himself or his lessees to justify an owner in giving such a notice. If he gave the notice when it was obvious either that there were no minerals, or that he could not possibly intend [those words are very strong] either to let them or work them himself, that would be vexatious, and the court would not allow that to be acted upon. If it was acted upon it is very true the railway company might be put to some expense in arbitrations, unless they made an offer of rather more than nothing, which is probably what the arbitrator would give if there were no minerals or no possibility of working them. In my opinion, therefore, if it appeared that the notice was a mere vexatious one, that would not be a notice of a desire to work within the meaning of this section.

Later, COTTON, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 399) :

A Then it is said that this notice is a great deal too large. In this case the extent seems to be about a mile and a half. I give no opinion as to what would be the result if the owner of 20 miles of land through which the railway went gave a general notice of this sort. It may be that the court would come to the conclusion that there was not an honest actual intention of working those minerals. But in an ordinary case all difficulty is got rid of, in this way, that, where the railway company know the owner is intending to work any particular portion of that which is included in his notice, they can at once, although the 30 days may have elapsed, give him a counter-notice and say they are going to purchase the minerals in that portion.

LINDLEY, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 402) :

B Then it is said that, if the notice is upheld, we should be putting a construction upon the Act which would expose railways to dangers never contemplated and that we should be enabling landowners to give general notices, which would be excessively embarrassing. I was struck with this contention, but, if examined, it will be found incorrect. Let me suppose this case : that a landowner, when the railway company gives him notice to take his land, or soon afterwards, gives a general roving notice to the railway company of his intention to work the minerals. What is the position of the railway company ? They may disregard the notice. If they think it is frivolous C they need not do anything. They have power of inspecting ; they have power of ascertaining what it is desirable to do for the protection of their own interests. If they come to the conclusion that the notice is seriously meant and that the landowner really does intend to work the minerals, and that there are minerals to work, they can give him a counter-notice, and if you look at the words "any part thereof" in ss. 78 and 79 it appears to me to be tolerably plain that the railway company can limit their counter-notice, if so disposed, to a portion only of the minerals referred to. Of D course, the consequence of that is that if they do limit their counter-notice, the landowner who has served a more general notice, can force them to give another notice if he is in a position really to work the minerals ; but the railway company can judge of their own interests about that.

LOPES, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 405) :

E It was also suggested that the notice was too large, that the land in question extended for nearly 2 miles, and that the notice therefore was an embarrassing notice to the company. I do not myself see that difficulty, because in the first place I think that it is open to the company when they give their counter-notice to confine it to any such portions of the land in the extent of 2 miles as they think fit. Then if they desire, they might go to arbitration or to a jury to assess the value of the minerals, with respect to that particular area.

F That judgment was affirmed in the House of Lords. In his speech LORD HERSHELL said (15 App. Cas. 19, at p. 32) :

G It remains for me to consider the subsidiary contention of the appellants, that the respondent was not in the present case "desirous of working" the mines. The first objection raised is that he had no intention of working them himself, that is, by his own servants, but only by lessees or licensees. I agree with the court below that this objection cannot, upon the true construction of the section, be sustained. Then it was urged that there was no real desire to work, but only to compel the appellants to purchase the minerals. I quite concur with what COTTON, L.J., said, that "there must be not only an expression of desire, but an honest actual existence of the desire to work either by himself or his lessees, to justify an owner in giving such a notice. If he gave the notice when it was obvious that there were no minerals, or that he could not possibly intend either to let or work them himself, that would be vexatious, and the court would not allow that to be acted upon."

H That decision appears to me to show that an owner, who is acting in good faith, can give a valid notice before he has come to any arrangement with his proposed lessee for working, and before any shaft has been sunk, and such an owner could not be expected to particularise the seams of coal which the proposed lessee might wish to work. There is nothing in the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, s. 78, or in s. 22 of the Act of 1847, to suggest that the form of the notice ought to vary with the varying circumstances of persons giving notices, and nothing in those judgments to which I have referred indicate that the notice need contain anything beyond an expression of intention to work mines or minerals lying in the area in question. Accordingly, I hold that the notice is not invalid because it does not particularise the seams of coal.

Two further grounds of objection to the notice were put forward by counsel for the plaintiffs in his reply. He challenged it because it referred, not only to sewerage works, but also to lighting and water supply works, but he conceded that this challenge could only succeed if the plaintiffs did not own or control any lighting or water supply works in the parish of Bolsover and, as no evidence was adduced on this point, this challenge is without evidence to support it. Counsel for the plaintiffs also challenged the notice on the ground that the parish of Bolsover was an excessively large area. He had earlier disclaimed any intention to rely on the fact that the notice extended to two other parishes. Looking at the facts of the present case in the light of the passages from Midland Ry. Co. v. Robinson (2) which I have cited, I cannot hold that the notice covers an area too large. Accordingly, I dismiss the action.

Action dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Lewin, Gregory, Torr, Durnford & Co. agents for Jones & Middleton, Chesterfield (for the plaintiffs) ; Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Davies, Sanders & Co., Nottingham (for the defendants).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

EARP v. ROBERTS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., and Lewis, J.), December 13, 1946.]

Medicine—Advertisement—Advertisement referring to an article as a cure for tuberculosis—Advertisement, circular and letter together amounting to an advertisement—Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941 (c. 42), s. 8 (1).

The appellant advertised a certain article, "Tassa," in a periodical, stating that it contained "the only antiseptic both harmless and efficient in every form of disease," and that full information would be given on application. In answer to a letter asking for further information, the appellant wrote a letter stating that Tassa cured tuberculosis, and he inclosed a circular in regard to antiseptic treatment with Tassa. The appellant was charged under the Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941, s. 8 (1), with unlawfully taking part in the publication of an advertisement referring to an article in terms calculated to lead to the use of that article for the purpose of the treatment of human beings for tuberculosis :

HELD : the advertisement, the circular (which was in itself an advertisement) and the letter accompanying the circular together amounted to an "advertisement" within the meaning of the sub-section referring to Tassa in terms calculated to lead to its use as a cure for tuberculosis, and, therefore, the appellant was guilty of an offence against the sub-section.

CASE STATED by the Chertsey justices.

The appellant was charged under the Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941, s. 8 (1), with unlawfully taking part in the publication of an advertisement referring to an article in terms calculated to lead to the use of that article for the purpose of the treatment of human beings for tuberculosis. The justices held that an advertisement in a periodical, a circular and a letter accompanying the circular together amounted to an advertisement that the article in question was a cure for tuberculosis, and they convicted the appellant. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Robert Fortune for the appellant.

G. R. Blanco White, K.C., and Cyril Morgan for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is a Special Case stated by the justices for the petty sessional division of Chertsey. The appellant was summoned before them for unlawfully taking part in the publication of an advertisement referring to an article, to wit, "Tassa," in terms which were calculated to lead to the use of that article for the treatment of human beings for tuberculosis, contrary to the Pharmacy and Medicines Act, 1941, s. 8 (1), which provides :

Subject to the provisions of this Act, no person shall take any part in the publication of any advertisement referring to any article, or articles of any description, in terms which are calculated to lead to the use of that article or articles of that description for the purpose of the treatment of human beings for any of the following diseases, namely . . . tuberculosis.

An advertisement is not defined, but it is stated in s. 17 of the Act that it includes "... any notice, circular, label, wrapper or other document, and any announcement made orally or by any means of producing or transmitting light or sound."

The appellant inserted the following advertisement in a periodical known as "Health and Life":

A Tassa. Despite recent discoveries, Tassa still contains the only antiseptic both harmless and efficient in almost every form of disease which chemical science has yet produced. Restores and preserves health. Full information on application.

Then there are set out the prices, which are not inconsiderable. A letter was written to the appellant asking for further information, and in answer to that letter the appellant wrote a letter in which he said:

B Tassa is much superior to penicillin, for the latter is not, like Tassa, by any means harmless; nor is it of the least use for curing cancer or tuberculosis, both of which Tassa does cure.

With that letter he inclosed a circular in regard to antiseptic treatment with Tassa.

C The justices found, and, in my opinion, rightly found, that, taking those three documents together—the advertisement in which full information is proffered to anybody who likes to ask for it, the circular (which is in itself an advertisement), and the letter which accompanied it—they amounted to an advertisement that Tassa is a cure for tuberculosis. I think they came, not only to the right decision, but to the only possible decision. If it were not so, every inventor of a quack remedy could avoid the Act by publishing advertisements of the remedy in which it is stated that further information will be given on application, and then, when, in response to the advertisement, an application is made to him for information about his drug, medicine or whatever he may be selling, sending a circular with a letter saying: "This is a cure for tuberculosis," or some other disease which he is prohibited from offering to cure. I think the justices came to a right decision and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

D LEWIS, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

E Solicitors: Gale Thomas & Son (for the appellant); A. C. Castle, solicitor to the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

F A.-G. OF ONTARIO AND OTHERS v. A.-G. OF CANADA AND OTHERS—(A.-G. OF QUEBEC intervening)

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Jowitt, L.C., Viscount Simon, Lord Macmillan, Lord Wright, Lord Greene, M.R., Lord Simonds and Lord Goddard, C.J.), October 23, 25, 28, 29, 31, November 1, 1946, January 13, 1947.]

G Dominions—Legislative powers—Establishment of Supreme Court with exclusive and final appellate jurisdiction—Exclusion of appeals to Privy Council from dominion and provinces—British North America Act, 1867 (c. 66), ss. 91, 92, 101—Statute of Westminster, 1931 (c. 4).

Privy Council—Appeals—Power of dominion legislature to exclude appeals from dominion and provincial courts—British North America Act, 1867 (c. 66), ss. 91, 92, 101—Statute of Westminster, 1931 (c. 4).

H The power vested in the Canadian parliament by s. 101 of the British North America Act, 1867, to establish a general Court of Appeal for Canada, was necessarily subject to the prerogative right of His Majesty the King, since that right was not expressly or by necessary intendment excluded, and this limitation was recognised by s. 54 of the Canadian Supreme Court Act, 1927. That, however, was a restriction or fetter on the legislative power of the dominion which has been removed by the Statute of Westminster, 1931, and it is now within the power of the dominion parliament to enact that the jurisdiction of its Supreme Court shall be ultimate. No other solution is consonant with the status of a self-governing dominion.

Given the power to abrogate imperial statutes, the authority conferred by s. 101 of the British North America Act, 1867, stands unqualified and absolute. Since the Statute of Westminster, 1931, the dominion parliament has power, not only to determine in what cases and under what conditions the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court may be invoked, but also to deny appellate jurisdiction to any other court. Consequently, the dominion parliament is competent to exclude appeals to His Majesty in Council not only in criminal cases or civil cases falling within the subject-matter of s. 91 of the Act, but also in every other case which can be brought before any provincial court in Canada.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] The decision in this case is of paramount constitutional importance since there is implicit in it a pronouncement that, since the passing of the Statute of Westminster in 1931, any of the dominions—Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the Irish Free State, and Newfoundland (and India if and when she attains dominion status), as well as Canada—can provide for the establishment within the dominion of a court of appeal with “exclusive, ultimate, final, and conclusive” jurisdiction, unless some provision in the constitution of the dominion prohibits such a step being taken. If this course were followed by all the dominions, the function of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as the final court of appeal of the Empire would practically cease. With regard to the present matter, in British Coal Corporation v. R., [1935] A.C. 500, it was held that the limitations imposed on the Canadian legislature by the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, and also by the doctrine forbidding extra-territorial legislation, were abrogated by the Statute of Westminster, 1931, and that, accordingly, there now remained only such limitations as flowed from the British North America Act, 1867. It was, therefore, held to be competent for the Canadian legislature, under s. 91 of the Act, to pass an Act (Canadian Statute, 23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 53) prohibiting appeals to the King in Council in criminal matters. While not disagreeing with the reasoning in that case, the Judicial Committee in the present case have expressed the view that it can also be supported on the wider ground that s. 101 of the Act, now that the limitations referred to no longer exist, directly authorises the establishment by the Canadian legislature of a court with final and exclusive jurisdiction both in civil and criminal matters. Their Lordships hold that it is within the power of the Canadian legislature to pass a Bill entirely abolishing appeals to the King in Council, both from the Supreme Court and from provincial courts. It should be noted that the Bill in question has not yet been passed, the debate on the second reading having been adjourned that the present adjudication on the legislative competence of the Canadian legislature might be obtained.

AS TO THE APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF HIS MAJESTY IN COUNCIL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 221-237, paras. 425-454; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 17, pp. 476-503, Nos. 393-666.

FOR THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1867, ss. 91, 92, 101 AND 129, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 5, pp. 364-367, 368, 372; and FOR THE STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER, 1931, see ibid., Vol. 24, p. 125.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Bertrand (1867), L.R. 1 P.C. 520; 4 Moo. P.C.C.N.S. 460; 16 L.T. 752; 31 J.P. 531; sub nom. A.-G. of New South Wales v. Bertrand, 35 L.J.P.C. 51; 17 Digest; 477, 402.
- (2) Nadan v. R., [1926] A.C. 482; 95 L.J.P.C. 114; 134 L.T. 706; Digest Supp.
- (3) British Coal Corp'n. v. R., [1935] A.C. 500; 104 L.J.P.C. 58; 153 L.T. 283; Digest Supp.
- (4) A.-G. for Ontario v. A.-G. for Canada, [1912] A.C. 571; 81 L.J.P.C. 210; 106 L.T. 916; 17 Digest 428, 96.
- (5) Crown Grain Co., Ltd. v. Day, [1908] A.C. 504; 78 L.J.P.C. 19; 99 L.T. 746; 17 Digest 441, 173.
- (6) Croft v. Dunphy, [1933] A.C. 156; 102 L.J.P.C. 6; 148 L.T. 62; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by special leave from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, given on Jan. 19, 1940, and reported 1940 S.C.R. 49, on a question which was referred to the court under the Supreme Court Act, 1927, s. 55. The question referred to the court was whether a Bill, to amend that Act by the substitution of a section giving the Supreme Court exclusive ultimate appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and for Canada and abolishing appeals from any court in Canada to His Majesty in Council was ultra vires the parliament of Canada. The Supreme Court certified that the parliament of Canada was competent to enact the Bill in its entirety. From this judgment the Attorney-Generals of Ontario, British Columbia and New Brunswick appealed, the Attorney-General of Quebec intervening to support. The Attorney-Generals of Canada, Manitoba and Saskatchewan were respondents to the appeal.

E. R. Magone, K.C. (of the Canadian Bar) for A.-G. of Ontario, Wilfrid Barton, K.C. and Frank Gahan for A.-G. of British Columbia.

Frank Gahan for A.-G. of New Brunswick, F. P. Varcoe, K.C. (of the Canadian Bar) and Charles Russell for A.-G.s of Canada, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

L. E. Beaulieu, K.C. (of the Canadian Bar) for A.-G. of Quebec.

The Board took time for consideration.

A Jan. 13. LORD JOWITT, L.C., read the following judgment of their Lordships.

This appeal is brought from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada given on Jan. 19, 1940, on a question which was referred to that court under the provisions of s. 55, the Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1927 (c. 35). From the recitals contained in the order of reference which was made by the Governor-General in Council on Apr. 21, 1939, it appears that, at the fourth session of the eighteenth Parliament of Canada, Bill 9, entitled "An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act" was introduced and received first reading in the House of Commons on Jan. 23, 1939, and that on Apr. 14 of the same year the debate on the motion for the second reading of the Bill was adjourned that steps might be taken to obtain a judicial determination of the legislative competence of the parliament of Canada to enact the provisions of the said Bill in whole or in part. The following question was accordingly referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for hearing and consideration:

C Is said Bill 9 entitled "An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act" or any of the provisions thereof and in what particular or particulars or to what extent ultra vires of the parliament of Canada?

The contents of the Bill, a short but pregnant one, must be stated in full. They are as follows:

D 1. Section 54 of the Supreme Court Act, c. 35 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

54. (1) The Supreme Court shall have, hold and exercise exclusive ultimate appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and for Canada; and the judgment of the court shall, in all cases, be final and conclusive.

E (2) Notwithstanding any royal prerogative or anything contained in any Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom or any Act of the Parliament of Canada or any Act of the legislature of any province of Canada or any other statute or law, no appeal shall lie or be brought from any court now or hereafter established within Canada to any court of appeal, tribunal or authority by which, in the United Kingdom, appeals or petitions to His Majesty in Council may be ordered to be heard.

F (3) The Judicial Committee Act, 1833, chapter forty-one of the statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 1833, and the Judicial Committee Act, 1844, chapter sixty-nine of the statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 1844, and all orders, rules or regulations made under the said Acts are hereby repealed in so far as the same are part of the law of Canada.

2. Nothing in this Act shall affect any application for special leave to appeal or any appeal to His Majesty in Council made or pending at the date of the coming into force of this Act.

3. This Act shall come into force upon a date to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council published in the Canada Gazette.

G On Jan. 19, 1940, the Supreme Court certified that the opinions in respect of the question referred to it were as follows:

By the court:—The parliament of Canada is competent to enact the Bill referred in its entirety. By CROCKET, J.: the Bill referred is wholly ultra vires of the parliament of Canada. By DAVIS, J.: The Bill referred, if enacted, would be within the authority of the Dominion parliament if amended to provide that nothing therein contained shall alter or affect the rights of any province in respect of any action or other civil proceedings commenced in any of the provincial courts and solely concerned with some subject-matter legislation in relation to which is within the exclusive legislative competence of the legislature of such province.

H From this judgment of the court the Attorney-Generals of Ontario, British Columbia and New Brunswick have by special leave brought this appeal which the Attorney-General of Quebec has intervened to support. The Attorney-Generals of Canada and of Manitoba and Saskatchewan are respondents to the appeal. The hearing of the appeal was postponed until the conclusion of the war. Their Lordships think it worth while to observe that H.M. Attorney-General in England took no part in the controversy, which has throughout been between the Dominion of Canada and certain of the provinces, on the one hand, and others of the provinces, on the other hand. The single issue has been whether, as the appellants contend, the subject matter of Bill 9 falls within the exclusive powers committed to the provincial legislatures of the provinces of Canada under s. 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, or, as the respondents contend, is within the powers of the parliament of Canada under s. 101, or, alternatively, under s. 91, of that Act. An alternative argument was faintly addressed to their Lordships by counsel for the appellants that the Bill lay within the powers of neither provinces nor Dominion, but H.M. Attorney-General in England did not intervene to support this view and their Lordships see no valid reason for accepting it.

The sections of the British North America Act to which it is necessary to refer are ss. 91, 92, 101 and 129. Sections 91 and 92 fall within part VI of the Act which is entitled "Distribution of Legislative Powers" and by s. 91 it is enacted:

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces; and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms of this section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say:—

Then follow 29 enumerated classes covering a very wide field, of which for reasons which will later appear mention must be made of number 27:

The criminal law, except the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters.

Section 91 ends with the words:

And any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section shall not be deemed to come within the class of matters of a local or private nature comprised in the enumeration of the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

Section 92 is as follows:

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say:—

Then follow 16 enumerated classes, in which the provincial aspect of the subject-matter is reiterated. It is upon the fourteenth class that the appellants rely:

The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organisation of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

They also call in aid the thirteenth class:

Property and civil rights in the province.

The sixteenth and last class is:

Generally, all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.

Section 101 (which falls within part VII of the Act entitled "Judicature") is in these terms:

The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time provide for the constitution, maintenance and organisation of a General Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

Before stating how this power has been exercised it will be convenient to refer to s. 129 of the Act and briefly to re-state the familiar facts in regard to appeals to His Majesty in Council. Section 129 of the Act provides:

Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick at the union, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal commissions, powers, and authorities, and all officers, judicial, administrative, and ministerial, existing therein at the union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick respectively, as if the union had not been made; subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the parliament of Great Britain, or of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland), to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the parliament of Canada, or by the legislature of the respective province, according to the authority of the parliament or of that legislature under this Act.

A The Act further made provision for the admission of other colonies or provinces into the union. The manner in which this power was exercised and the growth of Canada to a great dominion are matters of history which need not be narrated here. Suffice it to say that to the provinces originally brought within the union and to those afterwards admitted to it the relevant provisions of the British North America Act which have been cited equally apply, and for them all the question is the same, whether it is for them or for the dominion to legislate in regard to appeals to His Majesty in Council whether from their own provincial courts or from the Supreme Court of Canada set up under s. 101 of the Act.

B Their Lordships have, in the consideration of this case, been greatly assisted by the elaborate statements appearing in the factums and formal Cases of the parties and in the opinions of the learned judges of the Supreme Court in regard to the manner in which the appeal from the several provinces to His Majesty in Council has from time to time been regulated. It does not, however, appear to their Lordships to be necessary to consider these matters in detail nor to distinguish those cases in which appeal is said to lie as of right from those in which it is said to lie by leave under the prerogative. This has been for practical purposes a convenient mode of division, but fundamentally in both classes of case the appeal is founded on that prerogative which as long ago as 1867 in R. v. Bertrand (1) (L.R. 1 P.C. 520, at p. 530) was described as :

C . . . the inherent prerogative right, and, on all proper occasions, the duty, of the Queen in Council to exercise an appellate jurisdiction, with a view not only to ensure, so far as may be, the due administration of justice in the individual case, but also to preserve the due course of procedure generally.

D The exercise of this appellate jurisdiction is regulated generally by the Judicial Committee Acts, and in regard to each of the provinces of Canada either (as, for example, in the case of Manitoba) by Orders in Council or, (as in the case of Ontario and Quebec) by provincial statutes made under the authority or assumed authority (it matters not which) of the Constitutional Act of 1791, or (as in the case of British Columbia) by an imperial statute, and the only difference between the two classes of case is that an appeal may be said to lie as of right when an appellant brings his appeal under the provisions of the relevant Order in Council or statute, and, when he cannot do so, but can only appeal by special leave of the Sovereign on the advice of the Judicial Committee itself, then the appeal is sometimes said to be under the prerogative, a description which, if it is intended to be exclusive, is inaccurate.

F It is convenient shortly to re-state what immediately after the Act, and, indeed, at all times until the passing of the Statute of Westminster (to which reference will shortly be made), was the constitutional bar to legislation whether by dominion or province in regard to appeals to His Majesty in Council. In the first place, it must be remembered that by the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, any colonial law which was repugnant to the provisions of an Act of the United Kingdom extending to the colony either by express words or necessary intendment was void and inoperative to the extent of such repugnancy. It followed that neither dominion nor province could then validly legislate so as to abolish a right of appeal to the Sovereign in Council which was provided by imperial Acts. In the second place, the doctrine which imposed a territorial limitation on the powers of colonial legislatures might be regarded as a fetter on the legislative competence of dominion or province to deal with the so-called "prerogative" right of appeal. In the third place, the express terms of the exception in s. 129 of the British North America Act, to which reference has been made, precluded any alteration of imperial Acts.

G It is now necessary to return to s. 101 of the Act. Acting under its authority, H the parliament of Canada, in the year 1875, passed the Supreme Court of Canada Act, which has from time to time been amended and, as amended, is now R.S.C. 1927, c. 35. Under that Act a Supreme Court of Appeal was established which, under s. 35, was to have, hold, and exercise an appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and throughout Canada. It prescribed the limits within, and the terms on, which an appeal might be brought from the courts of the provinces, and by s. 54 provided that the judgment of the court should in all cases be final and exclusive and that no appeal should be brought from any judgment or order of the court to any court of appeal established by the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland by which appeals or petitions to His Majesty in Council might be ordered to be heard, saving any right which His Majesty might be graciously pleased to exercise by virtue of his royal prerogative. It is this s. 54 which the Bill now challenged seeks to amend, and two things may be noticed about the section as originally enacted. In the first place, it is silent, as is the whole Act, about appeals from the provincial courts to His Majesty in Council. In the second place, so far as appeals from the Supreme Court are concerned, it expressly saves the prerogative while denying any appeal as of right. A

Such being the position before 1931, in that year was passed the Statute of Westminster, an Act of the imperial Parliament, which has as its sub-title "An Act to give effect to certain resolutions passed by Imperial Conferences held in the years 1926 and 1930." The recitals in the preamble of this Act, after referring to the reports of the conferences, affirm that it is proper to set out that, as the Crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations and as they are united by a common allegiance to the Crown, it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the Commonwealth in relation to one another that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles should thenceforth require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom, and that it is in accord with the established constitutional position that no law hereafter made by the parliament of the United Kingdom shall extend to any of the said dominions as part of the law of that dominion otherwise than at the request and with the consent of that dominion. By s. 2 (1) it is provided that the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall not apply to any law made after the commencement of the Act by the parliament of a dominion (which by definition includes the Dominion of Canada), and by s. 2 (2) that no law and no provision of any law made after the commencement of the Act by the parliament of a dominion shall be void or inoperative on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England or to the provisions of any existing or future Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom or to any Order, rule, or regulation made under any such Act, and the powers of the parliament of a dominion shall include the power to repeal or amend any such Act, Order, rule, or regulation in so far as the same is part of the laws of the dominion. By s. 3 it is declared and enacted that the parliament of a dominion has full power to make laws having extra-territorial operation. (It may be noticed that this power is not given to the legislature of a province). By s. 4 it is provided that no Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of the Act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion unless it is expressly declared in that Act that that dominion has requested and consented to the enactment thereof. It remains only to refer to s. 7, which deals with Canada only. By that section it is provided (by sub-s. (1)) that nothing in the Act shall be deemed to apply to the repeal, amendment, or alteration of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1930, or any Order, rule, or regulation made thereunder; (by sub-s. (2)) that the provisions of s. 2 of the Act shall extend to laws made by any of the provinces of Canada and to the powers of the legislatures of such provinces; and (by sub-s. (3)) that the powers conferred by the Act on the parliament of Canada or on the legislatures of the provinces shall be restricted to the enactment of laws in relation to matters within the competence of the parliament of Canada or of any of the legislatures of the provinces respectively. B C D E F G

It is in the light of this Act of transcendent constitutional importance that the question must now be considered whether it is competent for the parliament of Canada to enact, not only that the Supreme Court of the dominion shall have appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and for Canada, but also that that jurisdiction shall be "exclusive" and "ultimate." This question must be considered under two heads—first, in regard to appeals from the Supreme Court itself, and, secondly, in regard to appeals direct from the provincial courts to His Majesty in Council. H

First, then, as to appeals from the Supreme Court itself. Here the question is whether under sub-s. (1) of the substituted s. 54 the jurisdiction can validly be made "ultimate," by which, as the subsequent new subsections make clear, is intended the abolition of appeal from the Supreme Court to His Majesty in Council. On this question their Lordships can entertain no doubt. The power vested in the dominion parliament by s. 101 of the British North America Act to establish a general Court of Appeal for Canada was necessarily subject to the prerogative right of His Majesty, since that right was not expressly or by necessary intendment excluded, and this limitation was recognised in the first words of s. 54 of the Supreme Court Act. But that was a restriction or fetter on the legislative power of the dominion which could be removed and has been removed by an Act of the imperial Parliament, and, since it has been removed, it must be within the power of the dominion parliament to enact that the jurisdiction of its Supreme Court shall be ultimate. No other solution is consonant with the status of a self-governing dominion.

Secondly, as to appeals direct from provincial courts to His Majesty in Council. It is in regard to these appeals that the validity of the Bill has been more strenuously challenged, and their Lordships have felt the familiar difficulty of determining which of two alternative meanings is to be given to an instrument, the authors of which did not contemplate the possibility of either meaning. For how could it be supposed in 1867, only two years after the passing of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, that the competence of either the dominion or the provincial legislatures to pass laws directly repugnant to Acts of Parliament of the United Kingdom and to the common law relating to the prerogative could be the subject of judicial determination? Yet this is the question which must now be decided. In its solution their Lordships have the advantage of two recent pronouncements of the Board, Nadan v. R. (2) and the British Coal Corporation case (3), the first before, the second after, the passing of the Statute of Westminster, and it will be convenient to see what these cases decided.

In Nadan's case (2) the question was as to the validity of s. 1025 of the Criminal Code of Canada if and so far as it purported to prevent the King in Council from giving effective leave to appeal against an order of a Canadian court in a criminal case. Criminal law, including the procedure in criminal matters, was, it will be remembered, one of the subjects to which under s. 91 of the British North America Act the exclusive authority of the parliament of Canada extended. It was argued that the legislative power so conferred was complete and included power to limit the royal prerogative to entertain an appeal. The Board after a review of the prerogative and of the manner in which the Judicial Committee had been in effect established as a court of appellate jurisdiction rejected the argument, holding that, however widely the powers conferred by s. 91 were construed, they were confined to action to be taken in the dominion and did not authorise the dominion parliament to annul the prerogative right of the King in Council to grant special leave to appeal, and further holding that s. 1025 of the Criminal Code, if and so far as it was intended to have that effect, was repugnant to the Judicial Committee Acts and, therefore, void and inoperative by virtue of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865.

In 1935 there came before the Board the British Coal Corporation case (3) in which the same question was raised, but with the vital difference that in the meantime the Statute of Westminster had been passed. The section of the Criminal Code then in force [s. 10 (4) as amended by R.S.C. 23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 53, s. 17] purported in unambiguous terms to abolish the appeal to His Majesty in Council;

Notwithstanding any royal prerogative or anything contained in the Interpretation Act or in the Supreme Court Act no appeal shall be brought in any criminal case from any judgment or order of any court in Canada to any courts of appeal or authority in which in the United Kingdom appeals or petitions to His Majesty may be heard. The validity of this provision was challenged by certain persons who sought leave to appeal in a criminal case from a judgment of the Court of King's Bench (Appeal Side) of the province of Quebec. But it was challenged in vain. The Board, after once more expounding the nature of appeals to His Majesty in Council, explained the decision in Nadan's case (2) thus ([1935] A.C. 500, at p. 516):

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment was based on two grounds only: (1) that s. 1025 was repugnant to the Privy Council Acts of 1833 and 1844 and was therefore void under the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865; (2) that it could only be effective if construed as having an extra-territorial operation, whereas according to the law as it was in 1926 a dominion statute could not have extra-territorial operation. These two difficulties as the law then stood could only be overcome by an imperial statute. . . Such, their Lordships think, is the meaning of the decision in Nadan's case (2) . . .

The Board proceeded to consider the question whether the difficulties had been overcome. Recalling (ibid., at p. 517) the words used by LORD LOREBURN, L.C., in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in A.G. for Ontario v. A.G. for Canada (4) ([1912] A.C. 571 at p. 581):

Now, there can be no doubt that under this organic instrument the powers distributed between the Dominion on the one hand and the provinces on the other hand cover the whole area of self-government within the whole area of Canada. It would be subversive of the entire scheme and policy of the Act to assume that any point of internal self government was withheld from Canada.

(words that their Lordships reiterate in regard to the present appeal), the Board concluded that both difficulties had been removed by the Statute of Westminster. It was said ([1935] A.C. 500, at p. 520):

There now remain only such limitations as flow from the Act itself, the operation of which as effecting the competence of dominion legislation was saved by s. 7 of the statute, a section which excludes from the competence of the dominion and provincial parliaments any power of "repeal, amendment or alteration" of the Act.

It has been properly urged on behalf of the appellants that at the conclusion of their judgment (ibid. at p. 523) the Board observed that they were dealing only with the legal position in Canada in regard to that type of appeal in criminal matters and that it was there neither necessary nor desirable to touch on the position as regards civil cases. It was this consideration that led DAVIS, J., in the present case to give the qualified opinion already cited in regard to the validity of the referred Bill. This opinion rightly recognises that, whether or not the reasoning of the Board in the British Coal Corporation case (3) extends beyond the subject-matter of legislation which was by s. 91 of the British North America Act confided to the dominion parliament, at any rate, it cannot be limited to one only of the 29 classes of subject-matter enumerated in that section, and that, just as an appeal to His Majesty in Council may by dominion legislation be abrogated in respect of "the criminal law . . . including the procedure in criminal matters," so it may be abrogated in respect of, e.g., class 21 'Bankruptcy and insolvency' or class 22 'Patents of invention and discovery.'

But the conclusion reached by DAVIS, J., involves a distinction which their Lordships would not willingly adopt. For if, as he holds, the subject-matter provides the test whether the right of appeal may be abrogated by dominion legislation so that it may not be abrogated in respect of classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the provinces under s. 92, a strange result would follow. It must be remembered that in the provincial courts the subject-matter of litigation may arise as well under dominion as under provincial legislation. The judicial and legislative spheres are not coterminous, provincial courts determining all questions except those for which a special court is set up under s. 101, whether the rights of the parties spring from the common law or from dominion or provincial statutes. Thus, if the right of the dominion parliament to prohibit appeals to His Majesty in Council from a provincial court depended on the subject-matter in suit, the result would be that from the same court an appeal might lie in one suit to the Supreme Court of Canada only, but in another to that court or to His Majesty in Council, nor is it impossible that in the same suit two or more questions might be raised in respect of which different rights of appeal would arise. This result is yet more remarkable when it is remembered how wide is the scope of those classes of subjects which, falling within s. 91 of the Act, can on this hypothesis be excluded from appeal to His Majesty in Council. Only the residue of civil cases, in which the rights of the parties were determinable by reference to other than dominion legislation, would remain the subject of such appeal.

Therefore, while their Lordships give full weight to the observation with which the judgment in the British Coal Corporation case (3) concluded, and do not doubt that that case rightly decided that the dominion parliament was competent to exclude appeals in criminal cases for the reasons therein appearing, they must observe that that decision can be supported on wider grounds which cover not only criminal cases and not only civil cases falling within the subject-matter of s. 91 but also every other case which can be brought before any provincial court in Canada.

In coming to this conclusion their Lordships do not think it useful to embark on a nice discrimination between the legislative powers contained in ss. 91 and 92 respectively of the Act. Nor, as it appears to them, is it necessary to determine whether the words of head 14 of s. 92, "The administration of justice in the province," would, if they were disembarassed of any context, be apt to embrace legislation in regard to appeals to His Majesty in Council. There appear to be cogent reasons for thinking that they would not, but their Lordships do not make this the ground of their decision, for it is elsewhere, it is in s. 101 of the Act, that the solution lies.

In his judgment in the matter under appeal DUFF, C.J., used these words (1940 S.C.R. 49, at pp. 64, 65):

A Assuming even that s. 92 gives some authority to the legislatures [of the provinces] in respect of appeals to the Privy Council, that cannot detract from the power of Parliament under s. 101. Whatever is granted by the words of the section, read and applied as prima facie intended to endow parliament with power to effect high political objects concerning the self-government of the dominion (s. 3 of the British North America Act) in the matter of judicature, is to be held and exercised as a plenary power in that behalf with all ancillary powers necessary to enable parliament to attain its objects fully and competely. So read it imports authority to establish a court having supreme and final appellate jurisdiction in Canada.

B The vital words in the passage cited, with which their Lordships are in full agreement, are the words in the last line "and final," but, in the opinion of their Lordships, the same considerations lead to the conclusion that the court so established must have, not only "final" or "ultimate," but also exclusive, appellate jurisdiction. They would emphasise that s. 101 confers a legislative power on the dominion parliament which by its terms overrides any power conferred by s. 92 on the provinces or preserved by s. 129. "Notwithstanding anything in this Act" are words in s. 101 which cannot be ignored. They vest in the dominion a plenary authority to legislate in regard to appellate jurisdiction, which is qualified only by that which lies outside the Act, namely, the sovereign power of the Imperial Parliament. This was fully recognised in Crown Grain Coy. v. Day (5).

D What then is the power of the dominion parliament since the Statute of Westminster has come into operation? It is useful to examine what the position would be if now for the first time the dominion legislature thought fit to exercise its power under s. 101. Nor is this a fanciful or inept mode of examination, for the power is to provide "from time to time" for a general court of appeal. To their Lordships it appears reasonably plain that, since, in the words used by LORD ROBERTSON in delivering the opinion of the Board in the Crown Grain Coy. cases (5) ([1908] A.C. 504, at p. 507)—the subject in conflict belongs primarily to the subject-matter committed to the dominion parliament, namely, the establishment of the Court of Appeal for Canada—to that parliament also must belong the power not only to determine in what cases and under what conditions the appellate jurisdiction of that court may be invoked, but also to deny appellate jurisdiction to any other court. That natural attribute of sovereign power was, no doubt, qualified by an external constitutional limitation, namely, the existence of imperial statutes, but, given the power to abrogate such statutes, the authority conferred by s. 101 stands unqualified and absolute.

F It is possible to regard this matter from a somewhat wider point of view, as, indeed, it is regarded in the judgment of DUFF, C.J. Giving full weight to the circumstances of the union and to the determination shown by the provinces as late as the imperial conferences which led to the Statute of Westminster that their rights should be unimpaired, nevertheless, it appears to their Lordships that it is not consistent with the political conception which is embodied in the British Commonwealth of Nations that one member of that Commonwealth should be precluded from setting up, if it so desires, a supreme court of appeal having a jurisdiction both ultimate and exclusive of any other member. The regulation of appeals is, to use the words of LORD SANKEY in the Coal Corporation case (3), a "prime element in Canadian sovereignty," which would be impaired if, at the will of its citizens, recourse could be had to a tribunal in the constitution of which it had no voice. It is, as their Lordships think, irrelevant that the question is one that might have seemed unreal at the date of the British North America Act. To such an organic statute the flexible interpretation must be given that changing circumstances require, and it would be alien to the spirit with which the preamble to the Statute of Westminster is instinct, to concede anything less than the widest amplitude of power to the dominion legislature under s. 101 of the British North America Act.

In this connection some argument was addressed to their Lordships on the importance of uniformity of legal decision, which, it was urged, could not be secured if appeal lay indifferently to the Supreme Court of Canada or to His Majesty in Council. For a decision of the Supreme Court would, at least, be final, though its jurisdiction would not on this hypothesis be exclusive. Against this it was contended that the British North America Act contained, in s. 94, a provision whereby the postulated uniformity of law could be obtained. In their Lordships' opinion this section provides an imperfect remedy for a state of affairs in which an important dominion Act might be finally interpreted in one way by the supreme court for a province which did not admit appeals to His Majesty in Council, and in another way by the Judicial Committee for a province which did admit such appeals, neither tribunal admitting the authority of the other. But it is the possibility of such a conflict, creating a different law for different provinces out of the same Dominion Act, which points the way to a truer interpretation of the British North America Act in the light of the Statute of Westminster. It is, in fact, a prime element in the self-government of the dominion that it should be able to secure through its own courts of justice that the law should be one and the same for all its citizens. This result is attainable only if s. 101 now authorises the establishment of a court with final and exclusive appellate jurisdiction. The words used by LORD MACMILLAN in delivering the opinion of the Board in Croft v. Dunphy (6) on a question that arose in regard to one of the specific subjects enumerated in s. 91 are equally applicable in the consideration of s. 101. He said ([1933] A.C. 156, at p. 163):

... their Lordships see no reason to restrict the permitted scope of such legislation by any other consideration than is applicable to the legislation of a fully Sovereign State.

It is right to conclude with some observations on s. 7 of the Statute of Westminster on which counsel for the appellants strongly relied. Subsection (1) of s. 7 is in general terms, and it was urged that to interpret the statute 'as vesting in the dominion parliament a power which it did not before possess was in effect to repeal or amend, or, at least, to alter, the British North America Act, but their Lordships cannot accept this reasoning. Necessarily the effect of the statute is to amend and alter the Act in so far as from the operation of the statute there arises a new power in the legislatures both of the dominion and the provinces. The question is in which legislature the power is vested in regard to this particular subject-matter. That is a question of construction on which their Lordships have stated their opinion. Subsection (2) does not call for further comment here. In regard to sub-s. (3), the same observations appear to apply as to sub-s. (1). If on the true construction of the British North America Act the conclusion had been that the power to legislate for the abrogation of appeals to His Majesty in Council was vested under s. 92 in a provincial legislature, that would have been an end of the matter. It is just because their Lordships have come to a different conclusion that sub-s. (3) does not assist the appellants.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal fails and that it ought to be declared that Bill 9 of the Fourth Session of the Eighteenth Parliament of Canada entitled "An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act" is wholly intra vires of the parliament of Canada, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Solicitors: Blake and Redden (for the Attorney-General of Ontario); Gard, Lyell & Co. (for the Attorney-Generals of British Columbia and New Brunswick); Charles Russell & Co. (for the Attorney-Generals of Canada, Manitoba and Saskatchewan); Lawrence Jones & Co. (for the Attorney-General of Quebec).

[Reported by C. R. L. PHILLIPS, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. COLLINS.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), January 14, 1947.]

Criminal Law—Sentence—Outstanding charge—Taking into consideration—Conviction of receiving stolen property—Outstanding charge under Road Traffic Acts.

A Offences against the Road Traffic Acts for which disqualification for driving or the indorsement of the offender's licence is imposed (e.g., driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of drink), are not proper cases to be taken into consideration by the court when passing sentence for another class of offence (e.g., offences of dishonesty, such as receiving stolen goods).

B Aliter, if a prisoner is charged on indictment with an offence under the Road Traffic Acts for which he is liable to be disqualified or to have his licence endorsed and there is a second charge under the Acts outstanding against him.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. The reason for this decision may not, perhaps, be apparent at first sight. The courts today regard as of the greatest importance, as being enacted for the safety of the public and being only incidentally punitive, the provisions in the Road Traffic Acts that, on conviction of certain offences, the offender may be disqualified for holding a licence for a substantial time or may have his licence endorsed.

C This power of disqualification and endorsement can only be exercised by the court where an offender has been convicted of one of the specified motoring offences created by the Acts. If an outstanding charge of such an offence is taken into consideration in sentencing an offender who has been convicted of an offence of, say, dishonesty or violence, there is no conviction under the Road Traffic Acts and the court cannot discharge the duty which is on it to protect the public against a dangerous, careless, or incompetent driver.

D AS TO OUTSTANDING CHARGES BEING TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, p. 258, para. 365; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 472, 473, Nos. 5070—5091.

AS TO DRIVING UNDER INFLUENCE OF DRINK, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, p. 674, paras. 993, 994.]

Case referred to:

(1) Whittall v. Kirby, [1946] 2 All E.R. 552; 175 L.T. 449; 111 J.P. 1.

E APPLICATION for leave to appeal against a conviction before the Recorder of London at the Central Criminal Court.

The applicant was found guilty on two charges of receiving stolen property. After he was convicted the recorder was informed that there was a warrant out against him for driving a motor car whilst under the influence of drink. At the applicant's request, the recorder took that fact into consideration in passing sentence.

F The applicant did not appear.

The Crown did not appear.

G LORD GODDARD, C.J. [delivering the judgment of the court]: The applicant was convicted before the recorder at the Central Criminal Court on two charges of receiving a stolen motor car and a stolen suitcase and its contents and was sentenced to 3 years' penal servitude. In respect of both charges the case was about as clearly proved as any case could be. There is, however, one matter which has arisen on which it is desirable to say something of which I hope notice will be taken. After the applicant was convicted, the police informed the recorder that there was a warrant out against him for driving a motor car while under the influence of drink. No doubt, it was proper for the police to give the recorder that information, but the recorder then asked the applicant if he desired that charge to be taken into consideration. He said he did, and the recorder agreed to take it into consideration. In the opinion of this court, offences against the Road Traffic Acts, which on conviction might involve disqualification for driving or the indorsement of the licence, are not proper cases to be taken into account when sentencing a prisoner for a different class of offence. No doubt, if a man is charged on indictment with an offence under the Road Traffic Acts for which he is liable to be disqualified, and there is a second charge against him for the same class of offence, the court might take that into account. But the reason why, in the opinion of this court, these offences ought not to be taken into consideration when a man is charged with another class of offence is that, unless there is a conviction of driving under the influence of drink or, for instance, driving a car when uninsured, there is no power to disqualify the prisoner from holding a licence, and parliament has ordained that unless special circumstances exist, which is a matter with which the Divisional Court dealt at some length a short time ago [in Whittall v. Kirby (1)], the prisoner must be disqualified and, in certain other cases, the licence must be endorsed. In this particular case, I daresay no harm was done because the applicant received a sentence of 3 years' penal servitude. None the less, if the case had been inquired into, the court might have considered that a period of disqualification for 5 or 10 years might be appropriate or, if it had turned out that the applicant had been convicted two or three times before, the court might have imposed a disqualification for life. Or again, if a sentence of six months' hard labour was passed in a particular case for some other offence, it would be most unsatisfactory to take into consideration a case of driving under the influence of drink, because the period of disqualification must be for a year. So this court lays it down that, for the future, offences under the Road Traffic Acts for which disqualification or the indorsement of the licence is imposed, are not proper cases to be taken into account when passing sentence for dishonesty or some other matter.

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

affirmed. H.L. [1948] 1 All E.R. 616.

HOLT v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), November 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, December 19, 1946.]

Revenue—Excess profits tax—Disposal of company's stock at under market value—Disposal for benefit of person holding controlling interest in the company—Purchase of shares from sole shareholder—Liability to tax of vendor of shares—Finance Act, 1943 (c. 28), s. 24 (1) (2) (4).

By s. 24 of the Finance Act, 1943: "(1) Where any of the stock in trade of a company is disposed of otherwise than for at least its full market value and is so disposed of either to, or directly or indirectly for the benefit or by the procurement of, any persons who directly or indirectly hold, or are in a position to obtain, a controlling interest in the company, and any of that stock is disposed of by any person at a profit but in circumstances in which, apart from this section, the full tax (as hereinafter defined) is not payable or, in the opinion of the Commissioners [of Inland Revenue], is unlikely to be recovered, the commissioners may direct—(a) that such sum as may be specified in the direction, being the sum which, in the opinion of the commissioners, is equal to the full tax, shall be chargeable by way of excess profits tax; and (b) that that sum shall be a joint and several liability of such persons as may be specified in the direction, being the company and the persons who, in the opinion of the commissioners, obtained (but for this section) financial benefits as a result of the transactions aforesaid and any other transactions which, in the opinion of the commissioners, were effected in connection with or in association with any of the said transactions. . . (2) In this section, the expression 'the full tax' means the excess profits tax which, if the stock, instead of being disposed of otherwise than for at least its full market value, had, at the time when it was so disposed of, been sold by the company on its own behalf in the ordinary course of trade for its full market value, would have become payable by or in respect of that company for the chargeable accounting period during which the stock was so disposed of, no account being taken of any relief for deficiencies of profits."

H. was the beneficial owner of the whole of the share capital in W.H., Ltd., distillers and whisky merchants. In 1942 H. agreed to sell all his shares, and, on Mar. 5, 1942, he transferred them to nominees of S. for £1,399,775, or £38 7s. 0d. a share. On the same date the company, now controlled by S. through his nominees, sold 509,441 gallons of whisky to the G.B. Co. for £82,880 16s. 7d., the "full market value" being £2,255,547. The G.B. Co., which was controlled by S. and purchased the whisky on his behalf, resold it at a considerable profit. In 1943 the Commissioners of Inland Revenue made a direction in which, after computing the market value of the whisky and declaring their opinion that the full tax was not payable or was unlikely to be recovered, they assessed the sum which should be chargeable by way of excess profits tax and apportioned it as to £1,107,775 to H., being the difference between the price at which he sold his shares and the price at which they were valued, namely, £8 a share or £292,000 in all. On appeal by H., the special commissioners affirmed the direction.

HELD, (i) stock of W.H., Ltd. had been disposed of for less than its full market value for the benefit of S., who held a controlling interest in the company, and was later disposed of by S. and other persons at a profit, and, therefore, the matter fell within s. 24 (1) and the commissioners were authorised to make a direction under s. 24 (1) (a) that a sum equal to the full tax should be chargeable by way of excess profits tax.

(ii) the sale of the shares by H. to S. was an essential step in the carrying out of this main transaction and the shares could only have been acquired by S. for the purpose of that transaction, and, therefore, H. was a person who had obtained financial benefits as a result of a transaction which had been effected in connection with or in association with the main transaction.

(iii) it was unnecessary for the Crown to prove (a) knowledge by H. at the time of the transfer of the shares of the scheme then entertained by S., or (b) some connection or association between the transactions in the mind of S., such as the payment of an extravagant price for the shares in the expectation of realising a large profit, or (c) that the shares had been necessarily paid for out of money realised from the main transaction, or (d) the aggregate profit realised by all the persons concerned.

(iv) as a result, H. was chargeable to tax under s. 24 (1), but under s. 24 (1), proviso (ii), and s. 24 (4) (b), his liability was limited to the extent by which the consideration which he had obtained for the shares was greater than it might have been expected to be if the stock had been sold by W.H., Ltd., immediately before the transfer in such circumstances that the full tax became payable by the company, and that excess was the sum directed by the commissioners.

(v) the words "in the ordinary course of trade" in s. 24 (2) indicate a sale for the best price obtainable on any available market, and they cannot be construed to exclude a particular market because a company has not previously dealt in that market.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] There is here a sharp divergence of opinion between the English Court of Appeal and the First Division of the Court of Session. The matters in issue now await the final determination of the House of Lords whose opinion, it is understood, is being sought both by the Crown in the Scottish cases and by the taxpayer in the present proceedings.

AS TO EXCESS PROFITS TAX, see HALSBURY, Supp. 1946, Vol. 28, para. 1041A et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Howard de Walden (Lord) v. I.R.C., [1942] 1 All E.R. 287; [1942] 1 K.B. 389; 111 L.J.K.B. 273; 25 Tax Cas. 121; Digest Supp.
- (2) Gollin v. I.R.C., [1943] 1 All E.R. 346; 168 L.T. 274; 25 Tax Cas. 161; sub. nom. Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gollin, 112 L.J.K.B. 343; Digest Supp.
- (3) Ross and Coulter and Others v. Inland Revenue, 1946 S.C. 134;

APPEAL by Commissioners of Inland Revenue against a decision of ATKINSON, J., on the hearing by him of a Case Stated by the special commissioners of income tax. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.), D. L. Jenkins, K.C., and R. P. Hills for the commissioners.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., and F. Heyworth Talbot for the taxpayer.

Cur. adv. vult.

December 19. LORD GREENE, M.R., read the following judgment: This appeal raises important questions as to the meaning of s. 24 of the Finance Act, 1943, a section which has retrospective effect and is directed against certain types of transactions resulting in the avoidance of excess profits tax.

The taxpayer, Mr. Stanley S. Holt, was the beneficial owner of the whole of the issued share capital of W. H. Holt & Sons (Chorlton-cum-Hardy) Ltd. (hereinafter called "the company") consisting of 36,500 ordinary shares of £1 each. The company carried on business as distillers and whisky merchants. It owned a distillery in Scotland and its stocks of whisky amounted to about 560,000 gallons, which were carried in the balance sheet at a sum of £75,146.

By a contract contained in two letters dated Feb. 18, 1942, the taxpayer agreed to sell his shares in the company for £1,399,775, or £38 7s. 0d. a share, to a Mr. Barclay, who was acting for an undisclosed principal. By this contract the taxpayer also agreed to appoint such directors as Mr. Barclay might nominate and to procure the resignation of the existing board. Mr. Barclay was, in fact, acting on behalf of a Mr. J. D. Stewart. Some doubt appears to have arisen whether this was the real name of Mr. Barclay's principal, or an assumed name, or even an invented name, to cover the identity of a group of co-adventurers. This question appears to be for present purposes immaterial. The shares were transferred on Mar. 5, 1942, to two nominees of Mr. Stewart who were appointed directors of the company in place of the existing directors, who resigned on the same day. On the same Mar. 5 the company sold 509,441 gallons of whisky, being the greater part of its stock, to a company called Glasgow Bonding Co., Ltd. for £82,880 16s. 7d., a price which was far less than the full market value of the whisky as found by the special commissioners. The Glasgow company was controlled by Mr. Stewart and it purchased this whisky on his behalf. It is not necessary for the purpose of this judgment to explain the complicated transactions by means of which this stock of whisky found its way on to the market or to state the names and interests of the various persons who participated in the profits of the deal. The greater part of the 509,441 gallons, namely 420,483, was sold for a gross sum of £2,005,795 3s. 0d. of which the net sum of £1,999,463 was found by the special commissioners to have been the full market value for the purposes of the section. A further quantity of 46,893 gallons was also sold for its full market value amounting (net) to £186,175. The remainder of the 509,441 gallons was acquired in the first instance by various persons at prices less than the full market value. How these persons dealt with the parcels so acquired by them does not for the most part appear. The full market value of the whole of the 509,441 gallons (including the sums of £1,999,463 and £186,175 above mentioned) was found to have been £2,255,547. The taxpayer contends that this finding was based on a misinterpretation of the provisions of the section relating to full market value and that on the true construction of those provisions the figure should have been £705,222.

From this brief summary of the relevant facts it will be seen that the whisky in question was found to have been sold by the company to Mr. Stewart for a sum far less than its full market value. Mr. Stewart was enabled to bring about this purchase so beneficial to himself by reason of his control of the company, and that control he had obtained by means of the shares which he had purchased from the taxpayer. The question whether or not the taxpayer knew of the scheme thus put into execution by Mr. Stewart and those associated with him under which the greater part of the company's whisky stock came to be sold in such a way as not to render the company liable to excess profits tax (a liability which would have absorbed practically the whole of the profit realised on the sale) was not fully explored before the special commissioners for the reason that in the Crown's contention such knowledge was immaterial. Whether the taxpayer knew or did not know, the fact remains that the sale of his shares to Mr. Stewart was an essential step in carrying the scheme into effect, and he received the sum of £1,399,775 for his shares which, as I have already stated, was at the rate of £38 7s. 0d. a share. The commissioners found that, if the whisky had been sold by the company on its own behalf in the ordinary course of trade for its full market value, the price which the taxpayer might have expected to obtain for his shares would have been only £8 a share of £292,000 in all. The explanation for this low figure is, of course, that excess profits tax would have absorbed the greater part of the profit that would have been realised by the company. The excess profits tax which would have been so payable by the company was found by the special commissioners to be £2,146,389. Of this sum £1,107,775, being the difference between the purchase price of the shares and their value at £8 a share, was apportioned to the taxpayer as his share of the liability to excess profits tax which the section imposes on those who obtain financial benefit from transactions of this kind. This apportionment was based on the view that, on the true construction of the section, the financial benefit received by the taxpayer was £1,107,775. The taxpayer contends that the special commissioners have misconstrued the section and that, if it is correctly construed, there was no evidence before the commissioners on which they could find that the taxpayer had received any financial benefit at all. We are not concerned with the other persons implicated on whom tax was charged under the decision of the special commissioners and I shall not complicate this judgment by referring to them.

Section 24 belongs to a class of legislation which, in recent years, has become increasingly common. For convenience, I may refer to it as legislation directed against "tax-evasion." In many branches of the law relating to taxation it has been found that the tax can be avoided by means of ingenious schemes, and many pages of the statute book have been devoted to attempts to defeat them. I need only mention as examples the legislation relating to what is conveniently called "company sur-tax," the legislation relating to certain kinds of "settlements," the legislation relating to transfer of assets resulting in payment of income to persons abroad, and legislation directed against avoidance of excess profits tax itself. It is a common feature of legislation of this class that amendments and extensions of increasing stringency are found to be necessary in order to defeat the many varieties of technique in tax evasion which occur in practice. If I may quote words of my own in a tax-evasion case (Howard de Walden v. C.I.R. (1) ([1942] 1 All E.R. 287, at p. 289) :

For years a battle of manoeuvre has been waged between the legislature and those who are minded to throw the burden of taxation off their own shoulders on to those of their fellow-subjects. In that battle the legislature has often been worsted by the skill, determination and resourcefulness of its opponents.

In the case of excess profits tax an earlier attempt to deal with evasion of the tax was made in s. 35 of the Finance Act, 1941. This was followed in 1943 by the much more sweeping section with which we are now concerned. The section, like many tax-evasion enactments, is constructed in a highly artificial manner in order to bring within the framework of the existing legislation a transaction which in its very nature falls outside it. The tax which the legislature is concerned to recover is the tax which a company would have incurred if it had acted in a way in which it did not act in fact. The liability for the tax is then charged on those individuals (in addition to the company itself) whose activities brought about the evasion of tax which has taken place. The tax is still called excess profits tax although, as charged on the individuals concerned, it is not charged on their individual profits. The reason is that the object of the section is to recover for the revenue the tax that it has lost, not to impose a tax on profits made by individuals. The making of a profit (or financial benefit, as it is called) by an individual is, it is true, a condition precedent to any liability on his part, but the extent of his profit is not the measure of his liability save in the special case of transferors of shares under proviso (ii) to sub-s. (1) and (4), and save in any other case to the extent that the commissioners in the exercise of their discretion may appropriate to him a part only of the full tax commensurate with the profit that he has made.

This very broad sketch of the object aimed at by the section is sufficient to bring out its artificial character and I shall have more to say on the subject as I proceed. One word of warning may be added at the outset. The language used by the legislature invites the criticism that its natural interpretation will in various assumed states of fact lead to hardship, and on this an argument is based that words must be implied which will cut down that natural interpretation. The argument is a familiar one and is, in my experience, commonly used on behalf of the taxpayer in tax-evasion cases. It clearly appealed to the Court of Session in the cases to which reference will be made later. On the other hand, the Crown can and does point to the startling failure to achieve the full results obviously aimed at by the legislature if its language is construed in the narrow sense contended for by the taxpayer. In the present case, Sir Cyril Radcliffe, on behalf of the taxpayer, very fairly agreed that these arguments really cancel one another out, and he based his case—properly, in my opinion—on what he submitted was the natural meaning of the language itself. As will be seen, the legislature has provided such machinery as it considered to be fair and reasonable with a view to avoiding or mitigating cases of hardship.

Section 24 is given retrospective effect by subs. (8), presumably because it was intended to cover transactions known or suspected to have already taken place. That sub-section provides that the enactments relating to excess profits tax shall be deemed always to have had effect as amended and extended by the section. The Act received the Royal Assent on July 22, 1943, more than a year after the happening of the events which gave rise to the present claim by the Crown. The section is a long and complicated one. Its object is to obtain from the persons (including the company) and in the circumstances mentioned therein what is described as the "full tax" which a company would have had to pay if its stock had been sold in "the ordinary course of trade for its full market value" instead of being disposed of for less than its full market value. It will be seen at once that this method of charging the excess profits tax which the company (in assumed circumstances) would have had to pay on persons other than the company is a highly artificial one and presents difficult problems, both of policy and of draftsmanship, particularly in the matter of determining the range of persons to be charged and the conditions necessary to impose liability on them.

The necessary requirements for setting the section in motion is to be found in the opening paragraph of subs. (1). I can summarise its operation, since it is not disputed that in the present case this requirement was satisfied. Stock of the company must be disposed of at less than its market value for the benefit of persons controlling the company and subsequently disposed of by "any person" at a profit but in circumstances in which the full tax is not payable or, in the opinion of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, is unlikely to be recovered. In the present case (a) stock of the company was disposed of (b) for less than its market value (c) for the benefit of Mr. Stewart, who, by virtue of the share purchase, controlled the company (d) and was subsequently disposed of by Mr. Stewart and other persons at a profit (e) the full tax not being payable or, in the opinion of the commissioners, being unlikely to be recovered.

When the conditions stated in this part of the sub-section exist, the machinery provided for achieving the objects of the section consists of a "direction" which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue are empowered to make. The first step (a) is to direct that the "full tax" is to be "chargeable by way of excess profits tax." This presents no particular difficulty. The next step (b) has as its object to define the range of persons on whom and the conditions in which the liability created—in the air, so to speak—by para. (a) is to fall. The direction is to be that the sum made chargeable under para. (a) shall be a joint and several liability of the persons specified in the direction. The persons who are so to be made jointly and severally liable are the company (which in the circumstances envisaged in the first part of the sub-section may have made no profit at all and cannot in any event have made a profit equal to the full tax) and "the persons who, in the opinion of the commissioners, obtained (but for this section) financial benefits as a result of the transactions aforesaid" (namely, the sale and subsequent disposal of the stock mentioned in the first part of the sub-section) "and any other transactions which, in the opinion of the commissioners, were effected in connection with or in association with any of the said transactions."

This is in many ways a remarkable provision. The first thing worth noticing about it is that the liability to be imposed on the specified persons is in no way measured or limited by the financial benefits which they may have obtained. Any person who has sold even a small part of the stock in question at a profit to himself may find himself made liable for the full tax, which may amount (as in the present case) to a very large sum indeed. But the legislature has provided what it, no doubt, considered to be in practice reasonable safeguards against hardships which would inevitably result from so stringent an enactment. These safeguards may be summarised as follows:—(a) The commissioners are given, by proviso (i), a wide discretion under which they may apportion the amount of the full tax and it would, no doubt, be permissible under this direction to effect such an apportionment as might bring the liability to tax of a given person into some sort of line with his financial benefits. (b) There is in proviso (ii) a special protection to transferors of shares who (as in the case of the present taxpayer) did not obtain their shares under any such transaction as is referred to in the sub-section and were not, apart from the transfer, concerned in any such transaction. Under this proviso there must be apportioned to such a transferor of shares no greater part of the full tax than is equal to "the amount by which he is under subs. (4) . . . deemed to have . . . financially benefited." (c) Sub-section (3) provides in effect that where persons, by virtue of a direction, became jointly and severally liable as between themselves and the Crown, their liabilities inter se are to be proportionate to their respective financial benefits. (d) Sub-section (5) gives special protection to barristers, solicitors, accountants and certain transactions by dealers (this sub-section will be examined more closely later in this judgment). Finally, (e) [subs. 7] there is a right of appeal to the special commissioners, who are empowered to vary, confirm or cancel the direction. It is common ground that this right of appeal is quite general in character and under it the special commissioners are entitled to override both the opinion and the discretion of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

The discretion given to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may, I think, be described as an unusual method of imposing liability on the subject. It is not, however, unprecedented and in cases where the nature of the subject-matter calls for wide language in order to prevent evasion, it may be regarded as a useful device for minimising the risk of hardship in individual cases. An example of such a discretion is to be found in s. 34 of the Finance Act, 1927, which deals with certain cases of sur-tax. There the special commissioners are to charge the taxpayer to sur-tax or adjust his liability to sur-tax so as to give such relief as may be just, having regard to all the circumstances. In Gollin v. C.I.R. (2) in a judgment with which the other members of the court agreed, I said of the section ([1943] 1 All E.R. 346, at p. 349):

... that language appears to me to give to the special commissioners the widest possible discretion to do what appears to them as just-minded men to be just in the circumstances of the case . . . The whole matter is left at large, and they would be entitled to take into consideration anything which to them appeared to be relevant to the question of justice.

Sub-section (2) defines the expression "full tax" and, as its interpretation is in controversy, I will deal with it later in this judgment. Sub-section (4) also deals with controversial matter relating to financial benefits which transferors of shares are to be deemed to have received.

Acting under this section [s. 24] the Commissioners of Inland Revenue on Dec. 17, 1943, made a direction under which they set out the transactions to which they had given consideration, viz. the sale by the taxpayer of his shares in the company, the sale of the whisky to Mr. Stewart, and a number of subsequent sales by or on behalf of Mr. Stewart. They computed the market value of the whisky at £2,356,472, and, after declaring their opinion that the full tax was not payable or was unlikely to be recovered, they assessed and charged the full tax at £2,320,170. They then proceeded to apportion the tax, as to £1,107,775 to the taxpayer and as to £1,212,395 to 45 persons and companies as a joint and several liability. It is not necessary for me to say anything about the fate of the various appeals from this direction which was modified in certain respects and in relation to certain of the named persons by the special commissioners. We are only concerned with the present taxpayer, against whom the special commissioners affirmed the direction.

Between the hearing by the special commissioners on Feb. 15, 1944, and following days and the hearing of the appeal by the taxpayer to the King's Bench Division on a Case Stated, judgment was delivered in a number of Scottish cases—Ross & Coulter and others v. Inland Revenue (3)—in which transactions of the same general nature came up for consideration. One of the principal questions which the Court of Session had to decide was thus stated by the Lord President (LORD NORMAND) (1946 S.C. 134, at p. 156):

The most important question, and the most general question which we shall have to decide, is whether shareholders, who parted with their shares without any awareness of a scheme, actual or prospective, to realise the stocks so as to escape liability for the tax, are caught in the meshes of the section.

This question had, in effect, been answered in the affirmative by the special commissioners in Scotland, but the Court of Session reversed their decision. In the present case this issue of awareness was not pursued to any definite conclusion before the special commissioners since the Crown was there maintaining, as it maintains before us, that such awareness is not in the least necessary.

As an alternative to this submission, the Solicitor-General before us wished to extract from the case a finding that the taxpayer was aware of the existence of a scheme, and in the further alternative he argued that the matter should be sent back to the special commissioners for further investigation. Having regard to the view which we have formed, it was not necessary for us to deal with these alternative submissions, which were not fully argued before us.

In the King's Bench Division ATKINSON, J. followed the decision of the Court of Session on this point of awareness, and he expressed his agreement with that decision without giving any reasons of his own. An examination of the judgments in the Court of Session makes it clear that the arguments both of the Crown and of the taxpayer before that court were different in important respects from those presented to us by the respective parties to this appeal. In particular, Sir Cyril Radcliffe, on behalf of the taxpayer, did not endeavour to support what, without disrespect, I may call the extreme view taken by the Court of Session. He conceded that there were cases in which an ignorant vendor of shares could nevertheless be made liable under the section, but he argued that these cases were restricted within certain defined limits, none of which, he said, applied to the present case, but before I come to the main issue in the case, viz. whether or not the taxpayer can be made liable at all, it will be convenient to dispose of an argument which related to the quantum of his liability, assuming that he is liable at all.

This question arises under subs. (2) of the section and was dealt with by the special commissioners by an interim decision. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue had found the full market value of the stock sold to be £2,356,472, a sum reduced by the special commissioners to £2,255,547. These valuations were based on the prices obtainable in the broker's market, where the highest prices for whisky were obtainable. It was argued on behalf of the taxpayer that the valuation ought to have been on the basis of what the company would have been able to obtain for the stock if it had disposed of it in accordance with what had been its usual practice, which was not to sell in the broker's market. The figure of what would have been obtained if this practice had been followed was stated in evidence to be £705,222. The answer to the question depends on the true construction of subs. (2) of s. 24, which reads as follows:

In this section, the expression "the full tax" means the excess profits tax which, if the stock, instead of being disposed of otherwise than for at least its full market value, had, at the time when it was so disposed of, been sold by the company on its own behalf in the ordinary course of trade for its full market value, would have become payable by or in respect of that company for the chargeable accounting period during which the stock was so disposed of, no account being taken of any relief for deficiencies of profits.

In my opinion, the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and the special commissioners came to a correct decision. As the special commissioners point out, the words used are "in the ordinary course of trade," and not "in the ordinary course of its trade." The reference to sale in the ordinary course of trade for full market value appears to me to indicate, according to the ordinary meaning of language, a sale for the best price obtainable on any available market, and I cannot construe it as excluding a particular market merely because the company had not previously dealt in it. The notional sale by the company referred to in the sub-section would not have been the sort of sale which the company in its ordinary methods of trading would, according to the evidence, have adopted, viz., a sale of 509,441 gallons at an assumed point of time. The notional sale is to be a sale "at the time when it was so disposed of," i.e. in the present case, the sale to Mr. Stewart. A sale of that character would in its nature have been something outside the ordinary business practice of the company. The figure of £2,146,389 taken by the special commissioners as the full tax is based on their valuation of the stock, and, apart from the point which I have just discussed no question is raised with regard to it. On the question of "full market value," the same argument as that now put forward by the taxpayer was submitted to and rejected by the Court of Session in the cases to which I have referred.

I now come to the main question in the case, which is whether in the circumstances the taxpayer can be charged with any tax at all. I must set out verbatim the relevant passages in the section. The first is para. (b) of subs. (1), under which the direction of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue imposes the joint and several liability for the full tax which is made chargeable under para. (a). It runs :

... that sum shall be a joint and several liability of such persons as may be specified in the direction, being the company and the persons who, in the opinion of the commissioners, obtained (but for this section) financial benefits as a result of the transactions aforesaid and any other transactions which, in the opinion of the commissioners, were effected in connection with or in association with any of the said transactions.

- A I note in passing that the phrases "the transactions aforesaid" and "the said transactions" obviously refer to the transactions mentioned in the first part of the sub-section, viz., the sale of the company's stock for less than its full value and its subsequent disposal at a profit. I may, for convenience, call these transactions "the main transactions." The "other transactions" (which I may call "the associated transactions") are not in any way limited or defined save that they must, in the opinion of the commissioners, have been "effected in connection with or in association with" any of the main transactions. Any person, therefore, who, in the opinion of the commissioners, obtained "financial benefits" from the main transactions or an associated transaction is a proper subject of the joint and several liability to be imposed by a direction. It is not disputed that a sale of shares by a person in the position of the taxpayer may be an associated transaction provided that a link of the necessary description between that sale and the main transaction is shown to have existed. The Crown's case is that, as the sale by the taxpayer was an essential step in the carrying out of the main transaction in the present case and the shares can only have been acquired by Mr. Stewart for that purpose, it follows, on the ordinary meaning of the language used, that the commissioners could properly hold that the sale was "effected in connection with or in association with" the main transaction ; that, contrary to the view taken by the Court of Session, nothing of the nature of mens rea is required to be proved against the transferor of shares ; and that no special link such as is suggested on behalf of the taxpayer need exist before the necessary "connection" or "association" can be established. On behalf of the taxpayer it was argued that there can be no such "connection" or "association" unless a link of one or other of the following descriptions can be shown to have existed, viz., (1) knowledge of the scheme on the part of the transferor of the shares—this was the only link which, in the opinion of the Court of Session, could establish liability ; (2) some connection or association in the mind of the purchaser, such as the payment of an extravagant price in the expectation of realising a large profit ; (3) payment of the purchase price out of the money realised on the stock, coupled with proof that it could not have been provided otherwise. These arguments, together with another argument as to the meaning of "financial benefits" in para. (a), I will discuss when I have completed my citation of the section.

- F The next relevant passage is proviso (ii) to subs. (1), which is in the following words :

where any person has (apart from this section) obtained financial benefits as aforesaid but only by reason of the transfer by him of shares which he did not obtain under any such transaction as aforesaid and he has not, apart from that transfer, been concerned in any such transaction as aforesaid, the direction shall apportion the said sum so that there is apportioned to him no greater part thereof than is equal to the amount by which he is, under sub-s. (4) of this section, deemed to have (apart from this section) financially benefited.

- G In the application of this proviso to the facts of the present case, it may be pointed out (1) that the taxpayer did not obtain his shares under the main or an associated transaction, (2) that, apart from the transfer of his shares, he was not found to have been concerned in the main or any associated transaction.
- H It follows, therefore, that, if he obtained financial benefits by reason of the transfer of his shares, he is entitled to have his liability limited by a suitable apportionment to the amount "by which he is, under subs. (4) . . . deemed to have . . . financially benefited." Sub-section (4) (so far as relevant) is as follows :

(4) Where any such transaction as aforesaid consists of the transfer of any shares, the persons transferring the shares shall be deemed to have (apart from this section) financially benefited . . . (b) if they did not obtain the shares under any such transaction as aforesaid, to the extent by which the consideration which they obtained for the shares is greater than it might have been expected to be if the stock had been sold by the company immediately before the transfer in such circumstances that the full tax became payable by or in respect of the company.

The maximum liability that could be imposed on the taxpayer (assuming him to be liable at all) was, therefore, the difference between the sum of £292,000 (£8 a share) and £1,399,775 (£38 7s. 0d. a share), viz. £1,107,775, the sum for which he has, in fact, been made chargeable under the direction as affirmed by the special commissioners.

This para. (b) has particular reference to the argument already mentioned as to the meaning of "financial benefits" in subs. (1) (b), which I will now endeavour to explain, so far as I am able to understand it. It was said that before any person could be brought within the ambit of the charge at all, he must be shown to have received "financial benefits"; that subs. (4) (b) does no more than quantify the financial benefits of a vendor of shares who has been shown abundante to have received financial benefit in fact; and that in the present case there was no finding that the taxpayer had received any financial benefit in fact and that the price for which he sold the shares may have been no more than their real market value as an investment. This argument I am quite unable to accept. Paragraph (b) of subs. (4) appears to me to do more than quantify a benefit already proved to have been obtained in fact. Under the sub-section a transferor of shares in the position of the taxpayer is to be "deemed to have financially benefited" to the extent mentioned in para. (b). This, to my mind, clearly fixes him with financial benefit to that extent by the mere force of the statute and it is sufficient to make him a proper subject of charge once he is shown to have received for his shares a consideration greater than he would have received if the company had sold the stock in such circumstances that the full tax became payable. The argument involves the proposition that in the case of the transferor of shares two different kinds of financial benefit must be considered by the commissioners, viz., (1) financial benefit in fact, (2) that financial benefit artificially quantified under subs. (4) (b). Moreover, it would mean that once a quite small financial benefit was shown to have been obtained in fact, the whole of the heavy liability mentioned in subs. (4) (b) would fall on the vendor, while, if no such financial benefit was obtained, he would escape altogether.

There are other indications which confirm me in my view. At the end of proviso (ii) to subs. (1) there is a reference to ... the amount by which he is, under sub-s. (4) of this section, deemed to have (apart from this section) financially benefited.

This language appears to me to be more consistent with the view that subs. (4) both prescribes the existence of the benefit and defines what its quantum is to be. Moreover, subs. (4) (b) enacts categorically that a transferor of shares shall be deemed to have financially benefited to the extent stated. This is not, as it appears to me, the natural way in which to express a mere quantification of a benefit already proved to exist. I should have expected to find some such wording as that "the benefit obtained by a transferor of shares who is shown to have financially benefited shall be deemed to," etc., or, perhaps, the insertion of the words "no more and no less."

There are other considerations which appear to me to be worth mentioning. Sub-section (4) deals with two classes of transferors of shares. Paragraph (b) deals with what may be called "original transferors," para. (a) deals with transferors who acquired their shares under an associated transaction. They may, perhaps, be called "mesne transferors." Each class is to be "deemed to have (apart from this section) financially benefited." The bracketed words "apart from this section" are significant. They or their equivalent appear in several places in the section in connection with the phrase "financial benefits" and are used to indicate that the "financial benefits" referred to are gross benefits without taking into account the diminution in benefit which will be caused by the imposition of tax. Sub-section (4), therefore, is dealing with a subject-matter, namely, "financial benefit," which the legislature by the bracketed words tells us is going to be diminished by the imposition of tax. What then is the "financial benefit" which a transferor of shares is to be deemed to have (apart from the section) received? The fact that it is an "associated" transaction implies, of course, the existence of the "main" transaction, and the "financial benefit" which is referred to in the sub-section is, in my opinion, the financial benefit obtained as a "result" of the "associated" transaction in question itself, viz., the transfer of shares. The opening words of subs. (4) on this reading, when written out at length, will run as follows: "where a transaction which, in the opinion of the commissioners, was effected in connection with or in association with any of the 'main' transactions consists of the transfer of any shares, the persons transferring the shares shall be deemed to have (apart from this section) financially benefited as a result of that connected or associated transaction as follows. . . ." The sub-section then proceeds to draw a datum line which is necessarily different in each case. In the case of the "mesne transferors," para. (a), it is the price which they paid for their shares, and any excess over this price obtained on a subsequent transfer is to be regarded as financial benefit whatever the ultimate result to the transferor may be. In the case of original transferors, para. (b), a different datum line had, of course, to be adopted. This datum line is fixed by the legislature at a value to be attributed to the shares as at the date of the transfer in accordance with the formula laid down in the paragraph. Any excess over and above this datum line is to be regarded as the financial benefit derived from the "associated" transaction of transfer.

I cannot leave this topic without referring to certain opinions expressed on it in the Court of Session in Ross and Coulter v. Inland Revenue (3). The Lord President appears to have linked up this question with his view that "innocent" shareholders are not within the mischief of the section. He says (1946 S.C. 134, at p. 166):

... a transferor of shares who was aware that such a scheme was afoot, and can therefore be presumed to have extracted from the promoter, as part of the price of his shares, a part of the promoter's prospective profits, is a party to a transaction effected in connection with or in association with the scheme, and will be deemed under sub-s. (4) (b) to have obtained financial benefits as a result of the transfer and the scheme . . .

He does not appear to think that the fact of financial benefit is to be established aliunde save to the extent that knowledge of the scheme will be sufficient to establish the fact that the transferor with knowledge must be "presumed" to have extracted from the promoter of the scheme "part of the promoter's prospective profits." The Lord President's construction of subs. (4) would thus appear to be as follows: "Where any such transaction as aforesaid consists of the transfer of any shares by persons having knowledge of a scheme, the persons transferring the shares shall be deemed to have obtained a financial benefit in that their knowledge of the scheme must be presumed to have enabled them to extract from the promoter part of his prospective profits and the amount of that financial benefit shall be deemed to be," etc. With the utmost deference, I do not know any principle of construction which would justify so drastic a treatment of simple language. LORD MONCRIFF's view (ibid. pp. 174 et seq.) is agreed with by LORD RUSSELL (ibid. at p. 194). I will not quote this passage, which is a long one. It appears to me to assume that an actual financial benefit must be proved aliunde because there is a "paramount need of finding such an actual financial benefit" which the enactment "insists shall be found as the necessary usher and antecedent to any liability for tax." This, with respect, seems to me to be assuming the very point which requires to be decided, viz., in the special case of transferors, does the enactment so insist? If it be assumed that it does, it, of course, follows that sub-s. (4) (b) is nothing but a quantifying provision. As will have been seen, my own approach is a different one.

I have already summarised the taxpayer's argument as to the nature of the link between the transfer of shares and the main transaction and I will now state as succinctly as I can my conclusions on it. On the point decided by the Court of Session, namely, that knowledge of a scheme must be proved against a transferor of shares before he can be made liable, I find myself constrained to take a different view. Nowhere in the section are there to be found any express words to the effect that a transferor of shares or any other person is only to be charged with tax if he knew of the existence of a scheme. If such knowledge was to be necessary, nothing would have been easier than to say so in the statute itself. The learned Lords of Session appear to me, if I may say so with all respect, to have been too much influenced by considerations of possible hardship to persons innocent of any knowledge of the scheme, and they did not, I think, appreciate that on the construction that they adopted the scope of the section would be unduly limited. After all, the object of taxing Acts is to obtain money for the revenue from persons who are considered by the legislature to have acquired property or made profits which the legislature thinks ought to render them liable to tax. Whether or not the fortunate person who acquires the property or obtains the profits does so with knowledge of how or why they come to him appears to be an irrelevant consideration in legislation of this kind. The Court of Session appears to have thought that a mens rea is necessary and they seem to have regarded the transactions aimed at by the section as in some sense guilty transactions. It is, perhaps, worth noting that in the legal sense there was nothing guilty in a transaction which at the time that it was effected was perfectly lawful, whatever one may think of the social morality of those who took part in it. The importation of the idea of guilty knowledge cannot, I think, be justified either by the language of the section or by its general object and character.

The section may, it is true, in many cases operate as a penal section and is, undoubtedly, intended in that respect to act as a deterrent, but it applies not only to future but also to past transactions in respect of which no question of deterrence can possibly arise. What the legislature is minded to do is, as I have already said, to recover the tax which it conceives itself to have lost. If a transfer of shares has been effected in connection with or in association with the main transaction, that transfer necessarily forms a link in the chain which has resulted in the revenue losing tax, whether the transferor of the shares knew of it or not. From the point of view of the revenue, it seems to me to be the most natural thing in the world that a transferor of shares should be made to disgorge what the legislature regards as being his financial benefit, whether he knew or did not know of the scheme. Why should he not? I can see no injustice about it. If only transferors with knowledge are to be hit, it is only to such "guilty" transferors that the limitation of liability in proviso (ii) will apply, and I ask myself: "Why should the legislature thus go out of its way to favour guilty transferors above other participants in the transaction?" I can see no answer to this question. It would seem more natural to have left such transferors to share the joint and several liability imposed on other persons, since it would have been their deliberate act which had enabled the scheme to be put into operation. The crucial words are those towards the end of para. (b) of subs. (1), viz., "transactions which, in the opinion of the commissioners, were effected in connection with or in association with any of the said transactions." Speaking for myself and reading these words in what appear to me to be their natural meaning, I can find no reason for interpreting them as requiring any such subjective or financial links as were suggested to be necessary by Sir Cyril Radcliffe. They appear to me to mean exactly what they say and no more, namely, that a transaction may be treated as what I have called an associated transaction if the commissioners find (on proper evidence, of course) that it was "effected in connection with or in association with" any of the main transactions, and this refers to a connection or association in fact and not to some subjective link existing in the minds of the transferors or transferees or both or to some financial link between the profit obtained by the promoters and the payment of the purchase price of the shares. In the present case there can be no doubt to my mind that the sale by the taxpayer of his shares to Mr. Stewart was connected or associated in fact with the purchase by Mr. Stewart of the company's whisky. The sale of the shares was an essential preliminary to the acquisition of control of the company by Mr. Stewart, just as the acquisition of control was an essential preliminary to the purchase of the whisky by Mr. Stewart at an undervalue and its subsequent disposal at a profit. How can this relationship of one transaction to another be better described than by the words "connected" and "associated"? I do not know. The commissioners are made the judges of what is connected or associated. If the fact-finding duty imposed on them by the legislature is intended to be limited to certain narrow categories of connection or association, I should have expected the legislature to say so rather than leave it to the courts to discover. I can see no justification for writing in to the language words which are not there.

The reasons which I have given, if correct, are sufficient to dispose of the argument submitted to us on behalf of the taxpayer. I may add a few words in relation to the second and third suggested "links." The suggestion that the necessary connection or association would be found if the purchaser of the shares had given an extravagant price for the shares in the hope of realising a profit seems to me to be artificial in the extreme. What is an "extravagant" price? Would the present taxpayer have incurred liability if he had sold his shares for £10? The argument, in my opinion, only needs to be stated to be rejected. The same observation applies to the suggestion that inability on the part of the purchaser of the shares to pay for them otherwise than out of the profits realised or expected to be realised by the resale of the whisky "is a possible pre-condition of liability." This would mean that, if the purchaser was a very rich man who

- A could pay for the shares out of his own resources without having recourse to the profits realised or expected to be realised, the transferor would escape liability.
- I must now turn to subs. (5), which provides that a barrister, solicitor, or accountant is not to be treated as having received financial benefits by reason only that he received in the ordinary course of his profession remuneration in respect of ordinary professional services rendered in connection with any such transaction at not more than the customary rate. There is a similar provision
- B in favour of bankers who only receive the customary rate of interest. These provisions clearly apply to the persons referred to, whether they know or do not know of the nature of the transaction. If their connection with the transaction goes beyond the rendering of such services or if they receive remuneration above the usual rate, the protection given by the sub-section will not operate. I see nothing unreasonable or oppressive in this which seems to me to be entirely in accordance with the policy of the legislature as expressed in the comprehensive
- C language which it has employed. I certainly do not find myself compelled or even inclined to construe these provisions as having been inserted ex majore cautela. Moreover, another case is given exemption by the sub-section, which admittedly cannot be construed as having been inserted ex majore cautela. It is the case of a merchant who deals in stock of the kind in question, buys some of the stock of the company at its full market value, and subsequently disposes of it at a profit.
- D Such a case would have occurred if, for example, a whisky merchant had bought some of the company's whisky from Mr. Stewart at the full market price, kept it for a while, and then resold it at a profit, the price of whisky having gone up in the meanwhile. Such a merchant might or might not know the circumstances in which and the purpose for which Mr. Stewart had bought the whisky, but in either case the sub-section relieves him of liability, thus setting a limit to the sequence through which the transaction can be pursued. There are two ways of
- E dealing with such a clause as this. One is to interpret the main provisions of the section in a narrow sense, perhaps by reading into it qualifications and limitations which are not to be found in express words, and then to interpret the clause as having been inserted ex majore cautela. The other is to treat the clause as part of the whole context in which the main provisions of the section are to be construed and as helping to decide whether those provisions are to be construed in a broad or a narrow sense. If the answer is in a broad sense, the clause then becomes
- F a real exception inserted to exclude the cases mentioned from the operation of the main provisions. The Court of Session chose the former alternative and that is what was contended for by counsel for the taxpayer here. Personally, with all respect, I prefer the latter alternative. I have already given my reasons for thinking that the main provisions of the section are intended to cast the net very wide indeed, in the first instance, with certain ways of escape provided. Sub-
- G section (5) provides an additional way of escape limited to the particular cases mentioned, which were naturally considered to fall outside the policy of the legislature and, therefore, required to be expressly exempted. The sub-section appears to me to confirm my view that the technique of draftsmanship adopted was not in drafting the main provisions to restrict their scope, but to draw them in wide terms, leaving special cases to be exempted by special words. The doctrine of ex majore cautela implies that the natural meaning of the language used by
- H the legislature in the main provisions is sufficient in itself to exclude the exempted cases. Here, as it appears to me, the doctrine can only be made applicable by writing in to that language qualifications which are not there. Once this is done, it is, of course, necessary to treat the exemptions as having been inserted ex majore cautela. If, however, contrary to my view, the sub-section is to be treated as having been inserted ex majore cautela, I adhere to my opinion already expressed as to the interpretation of the other provisions of the section.

The last argument put forward on behalf of the taxpayer can be dealt with quite shortly. I have referred earlier in this judgment to the discretion given to the commissioners. In proviso (ii) to subs. (1) they are directed to apportion the full tax so that there is apportioned to a vendor of shares

... no greater part thereof than is equal to the amount by which he is, under sub-s. (4) ... deemed to have ... financially benefited.

It is argued that the words "no greater part" mean that the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have a discretion under which they may apportion a part less than the stated limit. Whether or not this is a correct interpretation, it is not necessary to consider. I will assume that it is. It is then said that the special commissioners cannot have realised that they were given such a discretion, since there is nothing in the Case to suggest that they ever considered the matter. On the contrary, it is said, their language shows that they did not regard themselves as having any such discretion, since they find that the taxpayer's financial benefit was £1,107,775 and say that this sum "must" be apportioned to him. The word "must" as here used cannot, in my opinion, bear the weight which it is sought to place on it. The special commissioners were hearing an appeal from a direction by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue who had apportioned the sum named to the taxpayer, and we are told that the nature of the discretion contended for was clearly put before them in argument. In effect, the special commissioners are saying no more than that the appeal "must" be dismissed. The word "must" is commonly used by judges in (for example) such a phrase as "this action must be dismissed," or "an injunction must be granted," and the special commissioners, in my opinion, were here using it in that sense. It may be observed that, if the special commissioners had apportioned a smaller sum to the taxpayer, the difference would have had to be apportioned to the other persons concerned, or some of them, and it is not surprising that both the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and the special commissioners took the course that they did.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe also relied on the fact that the special commissioners had not found what the aggregate profit realised by all the persons concerned was. This is, no doubt, true, but he argued that without such a finding the special commissioners were not in a position to exercise their discretion in the matter of apportionment. I cannot agree with this construction. It must surely have been realised that it would often be impossible to discover all the profits that had been made from a given set of transactions. Moreover, I cannot see how the absence of full information as to the profits realised by others can affect the discretionary power to apportion to the transferor of shares any proportion of the tax up to the permissible maximum. The profits made by others seem to me to have no bearing on the question what ought to be apportioned to the taxpayer. Whatever profits the others may have made, the taxpayer's profit is ascertained, and there can be nothing unfair in apportioning to him a proportion of the tax commensurate with his profit whatever the profit made by other persons may have been. The commissioners, in my opinion, were entitled to act on the material that was before them.

As I am taking a view contrary to those expressed by the Lords of Session, in Ross and Coulter v. Inland Revenue (3), I would have liked, out of respect to them, to examine their judgments in detail. I hope that I shall not be thought disrespectful if I do not do so. This judgment has already occupied a great deal of time and my reasons for differing will, I think, already be clear. There is, however, one point on which I should add a few words, namely, the meaning of the words "concerned in" in proviso (ii) to subs. (1). The Lord President says (1946 S.C. 134, at p. 163):

In my opinion, "concern in" a transaction signifies an active interest in it and in this context an active financial interest... In my opinion, what is relevant is not bare knowledge or awareness but knowledge or awareness enabling the shareholder to bargain for a better price than he could have bargained for without it. But, if knowledge is proved, it becomes reasonable to presume that it would be used, and used with effect, in negotiating the price for the transfer of the shares: It is those who are in this position of advantage who are "concerned in" the transactions.

I am afraid that I cannot agree with this method of interpreting the phrase "concerned in." Proviso (ii) itself speaks of a transfer of shares by itself without qualification as being one way of being "concerned in" the main transaction, since it speaks of a transferor of shares who "has not, apart from that transfer, been concerned in any such transaction," and I can find no justification in the context for limiting the quite general word "concerned" to persons who have an active financial interest due to the fact that their knowledge of the scheme puts them in an advantageous bargaining position. The appeal is allowed with costs here and below.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree so entirely with the conclusion reached by my Lord and with the reasons he has given therefor that I do not desire to add anything of my own.

LORD GREEN, M.R. : I am authorised by ASQUITH, L.J. to say that he has read the judgment which I have just delivered and agrees with it.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : The Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue) ; F. O. S. Leak, Burgess, Battersby & Co. (for the taxpayer).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

B

LLOYD-DAVIES v. LLOYD-DAVIES

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Morton and Somervell, JJ.)
December 19, 1946.]

Divorce—Decree absolute—Appeal pending—Discretion of trial judge—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 31 (1) (e), 183 (1), 184 (1).

C

The right of a respondent to appeal from a decree nisi of divorce is an absolute right. A divorce judge, when an application is made to him to make a decree absolute, must inform himself whether or not there is an appeal pending against the decree nisi. If there is an appeal pending, he has no discretion or right to pronounce a decree absolute, because by doing so he would be destroying the respondent's right of appeal. Whether or not an appeal is vexatious is a matter for the Court of Appeal, and not one which the trial judge should consider.

D

[EDITORIAL NOTE. It is possible that when, owing to the need to expedite relief in divorce suits, the normal period for making absolute a decree nisi was reduced from six months to six weeks, the fact was overlooked that difficulties might arise owing to the time within which an appeal against a decree nisi must be entered being the same as the latter period. The position, however, is not likely to lead, as might appear at first sight, to injustice to a would-be appellant. Owing to the practice of the Divorce Registry, the department which receives applications for decrees nisi to be made absolute is aware of any appeals against decrees nisi which are set down. This, coupled with the fact that an application to make absolute a decree nisi is not entertained until the period of six weeks has actually elapsed, should ensure that no respondent should suffer any interference with his right of appeal. Where, as in the present case, the petitioner applies for the decree absolute to be expedited, notice of that application is given to any respondent who has entered an appearance, and there would then be an opportunity for the respondent or his advisers to inform the court dealing with the application to expedite if an appeal is proposed.

E

F

[AS TO APPEALS FROM DECREES NISI AND ABSOLUTE, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 775, para. 1226 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 487-489, Nos. 5195-5213].

G

APPLICATION by the husband, who had served notice of appeal against a decree nisi, for a stay of an order of WALLINGTON, J., that the cause should be listed among the causes in which decrees absolute were being made on a certain day.

The husband appeared in person.

William Latey for the wife.

H

LORD GREENE, M.R. : This application raises what appears to be a novel point in divorce procedure. The reason why it has not come up for discussion before is, no doubt, that until recently a period of at least six months had normally to elapse between the decree nisi and the decree absolute. Now the period is reduced to six weeks, and the consequence is that, whereas in most cases in the old days an appeal would have been heard and determined before the six months had elapsed, nowadays it is equally certain that, save in exceptional circumstances, an appeal will not be heard before the six weeks have elapsed. The question is : What is the effect of serving a notice of appeal on the power of the Divorce Court to make absolute the decree nisi against which the appeal is brought.

In the present case the wife obtained a decree nisi on Nov. 8, 1946. She was anxious to re-marry before the six weeks elapsed, and applied to the trial judge, WALLINGTON, J., to have the decree nisi made absolute before the six weeks elapsed. WALLINGTON, J., heard the parties in chambers and was informed that the husband had served a notice of appeal against the decree nisi. The judge, we are told, took the view that the appeal was vexatious and that its existence ought not to prevent him from making the decree absolute as asked. He did not make it absolute there and then because that was not the appropriate occasion, but he gave instructions that the cause should be listed among the causes in which decrees absolute were being made on a particular day. The effect of that would be that it would have appeared in the list among a number of other causes to be made absolute, and it would be made absolute unless the judge for some reason refused to make it absolute. The husband came before us and complained of that procedure, and he applied for a stay of the decree absolute. I do not think that is technically the right way to describe the relief he asked for, but that cannot be allowed to affect us. Having heard the nature of his application, we thought it right to direct him to give notice to the other side, and we have had the advantage of hearing counsel who has appeared for the wife before us.

The position it will be observed, is rather curious. First, save in cases which by statute or rule admit of no appeal, the right of a litigant to appeal against a judgment which is adverse to him is given by statute and cannot be taken away. We, therefore, have before us, an appeal which is perfectly competent in pursuance of the husband's statutory right, and whether or not that appeal is vexatious, whether or not there is any merit or foundation for it, is a matter for this court and not for the trial judge to decide. The litigant has the right to come to this court and nobody has the right to stop him coming here. It is impossible for us on an interlocutory application of this sort to consider whether or not the appeal has any merits because we can only decide what merit there is in an appeal when we have heard it, and the husband has the right to require us to hear his appeal. The wife, on the other hand, has a statutory right to have her decree nisi made absolute, subject to the qualification that a divorce judge has a discretion to postpone the making of the decree absolute to a time subsequent to the expiration of the statutory period of six months or six weeks. Those are the rights of the two parties. It is obvious that there might be a conflict between those two rights. If the decree is made absolute while an appeal is pending, the effect must necessarily be to render the appeal completely abortive. The making of the decree absolute would nullify the appeal and deprive the appellant of the right which is statutorily in him to have his appeal heard and determined by this court.

I am confirmed in that view by the fact that counsel agrees that that in fact is so, but I base my view on the language of the statute itself. Under the Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 183 (1) :

Every decree for a divorce . . . shall, in the first instance, be a decree nisi not to be made absolute until after the expiration of six months from the pronouncing thereof, unless the court by general or special Order from time to time fixes a shorter time.

and of course by the recent Order, which is a general Order, the court has fixed for the decree absolute six weeks. Then s. 184 (1) provides :

As soon as any decree for divorce is made absolute, either of the parties to the marriage may, if there is no right of appeal against the decree absolute, marry again as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death, or, if there is such a right of appeal, may so marry again, if no appeal is presented against the decree, as soon as the time for appealing has expired, or, if an appeal is so presented, as soon as the appeal has been dismissed.

That sub-section says nothing about pending appeals from decrees nisi. The only appeal mentioned is an appeal against the decree absolute, and it says in terms that the parties may marry again if there is no right of appeal against the decree absolute. The statute lays down the circumstances in which there is a right of appeal against a decree absolute. That is to be found in s. 31 (1) (e), which provides :

No appeal shall lie . . . from an order absolute for the dissolution or nullity of marriage in favour of any party who, having had time and opportunity to appeal from the decree nisi on which the order was founded, has not appealed from that decree.

It follows, therefore, that, if a decree absolute is made, the husband will not be in a position to appeal against it under s. 184 (1) because he is not a person who had no opportunity to appeal against the decree nisi. On the contrary, he has actually appealed from the decree nisi, and therefore, his right of appeal against the decree absolute would never arise. The effect of that section seems to me to be that, directly a decree absolute were made, first, the appeal against the decree nisi would become abortive because the parties would be at liberty to marry again under s. 184, and, secondly, there would be no chance of appealing against the decree absolute because the husband could not satisfy the provisions of s. 31 (1) (e). That appears to lead to the result that, on the one hand, the husband has got a statutory right to appeal, and, on the other hand, the terms of the legislative provisions regarding divorce, construed literally and by themselves, put it within the power of the Divorce Court to destroy that statutory right to appeal.

- A The provisions of the two sections have got to be reconciled, and the only way of reconciling them is this. The right of appeal is absolute and is not to be in any way interfered with, and the divorce judge when an application is made to him to make a decree absolute must inform himself (he would naturally be informed) whether or not there is a pending appeal. If there is a pending appeal, in my judgment, he has no discretion or right to pronounce a decree absolute, because by doing so he would be destroying the right to appeal to this court.
- C Whenever there is an appeal to this court the judge has no option. He must not take any step which would make the appeal ineffective, and the making of the decree absolute would make the appeal ineffective. I am confirmed in that view by this fact. We are told that within the memory of the officials at the Divorce Registry it has never been the practice to put a cause in the list to have the decree made absolute in a case where there is a pending appeal. The cause is simply kept out of the list, and I think that this practice must have originated from a recognition of what I have been saying, that the judge ought not to make a decree absolute when there is known to be an appeal pending.
- D It was suggested that the proper course for an appellant to take who knew or thought that he would not get his appeal heard and determined before the expiration of the period before the decree was due to be made absolute was to apply to the judge or to this court under R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 16. That rule says :

- E An appeal shall not operate as a stay of execution or of proceedings under the decision appealed from, except so far as the court appealed from, or any judge thereof, or the Court of Appeal, may order. . .

It is suggested that R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 16, was incorporated under the Divorce Rules, r. 81. Rule 81 is as follows :

- F Subject to the provisions of these rules and of any statute, the Rules of the Supreme Court shall, notwithstanding the provisions of Ord. 68 thereof, apply with the necessary modifications to the practice and procedure in any matrimonial cause or matter to which these rules relate.

- Order 58, r. 16, is, in my judgment, quite inept to deal with the particular problem that we are discussing, having regard to the fact that the right of appeal is an absolute right and to the fact that it is peculiar to divorce that once the decree absolute is made and there is no right of appeal against it the parties are at liberty to re-marry. The axe has fallen and nothing can be done to undo what has been done.
- G

- Taking the whole thing together, in my judgment, the divorce judge, even if technically he has a discretion to make the decree absolute, is not entitled to exercise that discretion in a case where to his knowledge there is a pending appeal. A fortiori he is not entitled to say : " I am going to make this decree absolute because I do not think there is anything in the appeal." That appears to me to be the inevitable result of the legislation relating to this question. It must not be thought from what I have said that I do not appreciate the hardship on the wife who wishes to re-marry and go abroad, but we are here to administer the law as laid down by Parliament, and we cannot make exceptions because of hardships. It is suggested that something might be done to see that the husband does not delay in the prosecution of his appeal. The opportunities for delay in the case of an appeal are nothing like what they are in the case of an action, because when an appeal has found its way into our list, it can only be stood out of the list for some good cause. Nevertheless there are ways in which the appeal could be delayed, though not for any indefinite period, and counsel would be quite within his rights to come to this court and ask for directions in the event of his considering that the husband had been to blame for any delay. He could come and ask for a date to be fixed, and from what we have heard of the case I think it extremely likely that we should accede to an application to expedite the hearing of this appeal. I do not think we are entitled at this stage to impose conditions on the husband. His right of appeal is an absolute right of appeal, and we have no right to refuse him relief or to impose, as a condition of giving him that relief, some condition or obligation on him. On the other hand, the court is concerned to see that undue hardship is not caused to the other side, and counsel may take it that his application to expedite the appeal will receive our serious consideration. A
- H

The result is that we must make an order that the cause is not to appear in the list for making the decree absolute pending the determination of the appeal.

MORTON, L.J.: I agree. I think that the conclusion which my Lord has stated is the inevitable result of the existing legislation. Counsel has suggested that this appeal is wholly vexatious and that it is an attempt on the part of the husband, out of spite, to prevent his wife marrying the man whom she desires to marry and who is proceeding overseas at an early date. It is impossible for us to determine today whether that is so or is not so. If that is the fact, the husband's behaviour is extremely contemptible, but we cannot pre-judge that issue. He has an absolute statutory right of appeal, and at this moment we do not know whether it is well founded or not. I agree with the order of the court. B C

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Ludlow & Co. (for the wife).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] D

CHANDLER v. STREVETT

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Bucknill and Somervell, L.JJ.), November 21, December 10, 1946.] E

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Recovery of possession—Premises required by landlord for own occupation—Hardship—How far question of fact—Matters for consideration—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1) sched. I. (h).

By s. 3 of and sched. I (h) to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, the court has power to make an order for the recovery of possession of a dwelling-house within the Rent Restriction Acts without proof of suitable alternative accommodation if the house is reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for himself, "Provided that an order . . . shall not be made . . . if the court is satisfied that having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the question whether other accommodation is available for the landlord or the tenant, greater hardship would be caused by granting the order . . . than by refusing to grant it." F G

Semble. per SCOTT, L.J.: The question where lies the balance of hardship is not one of fact on which there is no appeal to the Court of Appeal under s. 105 of the County Courts Act, 1934. The county court judge's finding of the facts on the evidence is final, but his inferences regarding the incidence of hardship is open to review. H

Per BUCKNILL, L.J.: The question what is reasonable in all the circumstances must be a difficult, and, at times, almost insoluble, problem on which different minds may arrive at different conclusions. In certain circumstances an order for possession might be reasonable although it imposed greater hardship on the tenant than on the landlord. The question whether a house is reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for himself is one entirely of fact for the county court judge.

Matters to be considered on the issues of hardship and reasonable requirement by the landlord discussed.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. In his judgment BUCKNILL, L.J., states that the burden of proving greater hardship under the proviso is on the tenant. The authority for that proposition is Robinson v. Donovan [1946] 2 All E.R. 731, and the cases there cited.

AS TO POSSESSION OF PREMISES REQUIRED BY LANDLORD FOR OWN OCCUPATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 332, para. 396; and FOR CASES, see A DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 580, 581, Nos. 7283—7297.]

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of JUDGE ARCHER, K.C., at Brighton and Lewes County Court, granting to the landlord possession of a house under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 (1), and sched. I, para (h). The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J.

H. Glyn-Jones, K.C., and B. E. Dutton Briant for the appellant.

Aitken Watson, K.C., and Anthony Harmsworth for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 10. The following judgments were read.

SCOTT L.J.: The tenant appeals from an order for possession obtained against him by his landlord under para. (h) of sched. I to the Rent Restrictions Act, 1933. There were two issues below:

(1) on the defence that the landlord had agreed to sell the house to the tenant, with a counter-claim, added at the hearing, for specific performance; and (2) on the balance of hardship. On the first issue I am satisfied that the judge was right in holding that the correspondence disclosed no acceptance by the tenant of the landlord's offer to sell before receipt by him of a letter from the landlord withdrawing the offer.

The hardship issue raises, in an interesting, and, I think, inescapable, form, the question how far that problem should be regarded by this court as a question of fact on which there is no appeal under s. 105 of the County Courts Act, 1934. Each case must, of course, depend on its own facts, but there are two aspects which frequently call for consideration and certainly do so in the present case. The first is that it is to the balance of hardship that the judge is directed to turn his mind, and that means that he has to add up the items of hardship proved in evidence on each side of the statutory profit and loss account or balance sheet (for either metaphor will serve) and then see on which party the greater hardship falls. The second is that the judge is called on to operate the process by putting a hardship value on the various items on each side. That involves making very human estimates of comparative values on which widely divergent views may be taken by any two human minds. Did Parliament intend to leave that very difficult task in its entirety and finally to the county court judge to the exclusion of the Court of Appeal and even of the House of Lords, and, if not, where did it draw the line? If in any given case there is evidence for the landlord of one particular burden to be suffered or of one particular loss of benefit to be borne, while on the tenant's side there are several of each, or one that to the Court of Appeal seems vastly more serious than the hardships on the landlord's side, is the decision of the county court judge to the diametrically opposite effect conclusive on the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords? Is it the law that such a problem of human happiness and misery, or comfort and inconvenience, are just mere questions of fact with which the Court of Appeal cannot interfere at all, or, on the other hand, do these problems lie in the debatable land of fact and law, matters of inference and opinion on which the Court of Appeal and House of Lords may give guidance? Another aspect of the problem is seen in the difference between the two judicial functions, on the one hand, of finding specific facts on contentious and contradictory evidence, and, on the other, of drawing the right inferences from the specific facts when so judicially established.

In the present case there are certain "facts" indisputably proved—facts regarding which there was no evidence to the contrary. In addition, there are certain inferences which I should draw and the judge apparently, and, I think, really, refused to draw. The result is that, if it is open to me, I utterly disagree with his general conclusion that the hardship which would have been caused to the landlord if he had not got his order for possession would outweigh the hardship in fact caused to the tenant by the order.

I will tabulate some of what I will call "the items" on each side of the profit and loss account which were clearly proved: (1) The landlord has another house, namely, the one he is living in; the tenant has tried hard to get one in the district where his business compels him to live and cannot. (2) The tenant's desire and need for his present house are both obviously very real; the landlord's desire for the house was obviously not for his own occupation but in order to sell it with vacant possession, as is shown by a series of his letters and his general conduct. (3) The tenant's failure to finance his purchase of the house from the landlord was to some extent due to his being still tied to the army; had he been free and back at his business he would probably have got his second mortgage. On the other hand, the landlord was continually, and, perhaps, dishonestly, trying to bluff the tenant into believing that he was still bound by his tenancy agreement to give up possession. The landlord never once referred to the Rent Restrictions Acts, and it is impossible to imagine that he did not know all about them. I regard his letters as in that sense dishonest.

In the result, I can see no reasonable justification for the judge's conclusion on the hardship issue and am satisfied that he must have arrived at it by erroneous inferences from the facts and correspondence. I, therefore, regard his conclusion as unjust and think that the appeal should be allowed with costs here and below.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: This appeal raises the difficult question whether there was any evidence on which the judge could come to the conclusion from which the appeal has been made.

The appellant was the tenant of a house, No. 56 Goldstone Crescent, Hove. The respondent was the landlord. The landlord brought an action in the county court for recovery of possession of the house on the ground that he required it for his own use and occupation. The tenant, by his defence, claimed the protection of the Rent Acts. At the hearing on July 27, 1946, the judge made an order for possession in favour of the landlord, to take place on Dec. 25, 1946.

The points argued before the court on this appeal were whether there was evidence before the judge on which he could properly come to the conclusion (1) that it was reasonable to make the order, (2) that the dwelling house was reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence, (3) and most important, whether on the evidence the judge ought to have been satisfied that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the question whether other accommodation was available for the landlord or the tenant, greater hardship would be caused by granting the order for possession than by refusing it. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence on the first point and continued]: Section 3 (1) of the Rent Act, 1933, enacts that no order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling house shall be made "unless the court considers it reasonable to make such an order." Was there evidence on which the court could come to this conclusion? The question of what is reasonable in all the circumstances must be a difficult and, at times, almost insoluble, problem on which different minds may arrive at different conclusions. It seems to me, for instance, that in certain circumstances an order for possession might be reasonable although it in fact imposed greater hardship on the tenant than on the landlord. Taking all these things into consideration, I do not see how this court can say that there was no evidence on which the court could decide that it was reasonable to make the order giving possession to the landlord.

The next question was whether the house was reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for himself (which includes his wife) and his daughter, in accordance with para. (h) of sched. I to the Act of 1933. That he so required the house was clearly proved. The question is whether his requirement was reasonable in all the circumstances. It seems to me that the same kind of test must be applied here as in the first question, although in this case the reasonableness hinges more on the actual requirements of the landlord. For instance, one would consider the nature and place of his business (if any), the size of his family, his actual residence or lack of one at the time of asking for the order. Questions of health and cost of living and innumerable other possible factors may have to be taken into account. The question is one entirely of fact for the judge, and I do not see how this court can say that there was no evidence to support his conclusion that the landlord reasonably required the house for occupation as a residence.

The third question for this court to decide is whether the court ought to have been "satisfied that having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the question whether other accommodation was available for the landlord or the tenant, greater hardship would be caused by granting the order ... than by refusing to grant it." These are the actual words at the conclusion of para. (h) of sched. I. They are as wide as they can be. The judge is to consider the problem of other accommodation, but he has to consider all the circumstances of the case, and then, if he is satisfied that an order for possession will cause greater hardship to the tenant than the landlord, he must not make it. The burden of proving greater hardship under this proviso is on the tenant. Unless the judge is satisfied of that then he must make the order, provided the other conditions of reasonableness and occupation as a residence by the landlord have been complied with. In this case ought the judge to have been satisfied in this way? If the question turned solely on the hardship of being without a residence, I think clearly the condition would have been satisfied because the tenant had no alternative accommodation and the landlord had. But that is not the only thing to be considered. Was there any other material factor in this particular case? The only two grounds were, (1) the wife's ill health and (2) the tendency of the landlord and his son-in-law to be on bad terms with one another. As regards the wife's health, I can see no effective reason for thinking that her health would be better at Hove than at Kingston. There was no evidence about the daughter's preference for Hove or Kingston as a residence. The continuance of her care of her mother is an important factor in the problem. As regards the second reason, I think the bad feeling between the landlord and his son-in-law is not likely to be cured merely by a change of residence.

In my view, therefore, in this case the only effective question to consider on this matter of hardship was the question of accommodation. On that question it seems to me that the evidence was all one way. The landlord had a residence; the tenant, his wife and five children, if evicted, had none. I think, therefore, that the judge was wrong in law in that he did not pay due regard to the proviso in para. (h), and that the appeal should be allowed.

SOMERVELL, L.J., [read by SCOTT, L.J.] : This is an appeal by the tenant from an order made by the county court judge ordering the tenant to give up possession of 56, Goldstone Crescent, Hove, of which the plaintiff is the landlord.

The first point argued by counsel for the tenant was that in 1944 a binding agreement was entered into by the parties under which the landlord undertook to sell the premises to the tenant. This agreement is said to be contained in letters. The county court judge decided that they did not constitute a binding agreement. I think he was clearly right and this point, therefore, fails.

The second point was that there was no evidence on which the judge could make the order or that the judge was wrong in law in making an order for possession. The Acts give the county court judge a very wide discretion, and emphasis has been laid many times (as it was by counsel for the landlord) on the principles on which this court will or will not interfere with a decision of the kind in question here.

In the first place, it is clear to me that counsel for the tenant can rely only on the facts found or undisputed. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence and continued:] It has been suggested that the landlord did not really want the house as a residence for himself. There is force in this suggestion, but for the purpose of my judgment I will assume that the landlord, if he gets an order, will move into the house with, as he stated, his wife, daughter and son-in-law.

There was no evidence that there was other accommodation available for the tenant and his family. The evidence was that the tenant and his wife had made considerable efforts to find other accommodation without any success. The landlord had alternative accommodation in the flat in which he and those with whom he intended to move were living. There was no evidence about the size of the flat. There was no suggestion that the two couples could not continue to live there. The rent was higher than the rent which the landlord was receiving from the tenant. It was on the first floor and the landlord said that if he got No. 56 he would make arrangements so that his wife could live wholly on the ground floor.

The landlord's claim was made under para. (h) of sched. I to the Act of 1933. The case is a borderline one, but I have come to the conclusion that, applying that provision and the general principle of the Acts to the admitted facts, the county court judge came to a conclusion that was wrong in law. It is emphasising the obvious to point out that the Acts were passed, and have been continued and extended, to meet the hardships which would have arisen but for them, whether by increase of rent or ejectment, from the absence of alternative accommodation. In cases brought under s. 3 (1) (b) of the Act of 1933 the court has to be satisfied that suitable alternative accommodation is available. This is not so under para. (h) of sched. I, but, under that paragraph, in having regard to all the circumstances of the case the court is expressly enjoined, in deciding on the issue of greater hardship, to have regard to the question whether other accommodation is available for the tenant or the landlord. These words and the general principles of the Acts make it clear, to my mind, that alternative accommodation, though not a condition under para. (h), is normally the most important of the circumstances to which regard must be had. Admittedly, the landlord with his son-in-law had a financial motive for requiring the house, and also the motive based on his wife's health. There was no medical evidence as to the latter and she was able to go out fairly regularly to lunch outside the flat, but I accept the statements about her health and they seem to me sufficient to establish that the landlord reasonably required the house. I find it, however, impossible to hold that the county court judge correctly applied the law on the issue of greater hardship. On the evidence, the landlord and those with him had a flat in which they could continue to live whereas the tenant and his large family of children had nowhere to go. There seems to me, therefore, to be only one possible answer on the issue of greater hardship, and that is one in favour of the tenant. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Walmsley & Stansbury, agents for J. E. Dell & Loader, Brighton (for the appellant); Blakeney & Co., agents for Cyril Wheeler, Brighton (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. H.L. [1948] 1 All E.R. 948.

CONGREVE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Tucker and Cohen, L.JJ.), November 6, 7, 8, December 9, 1946.]

Income Tax—Sur-tax—Avoidance of tax—Transfer of assets to company abroad—Transfer of assets to company in United Kingdom subsequently moved abroad—By whom transfer to be made—"Associated operation"—What income deemed income of transferor—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 18 (1).

A wife, who, with her husband, was ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom but domiciled abroad, held controlling interests in an English trading company and in investment companies, formed for the purpose of evading liability to tax, in England and abroad. A series of transfers between these companies, entered into in order that the wife might escape the incidence of income tax and sur-tax, resulted in the transfer of income to persons abroad. Throughout these transactions the wife's father was acting with the authority of his daughter, who signed such documents as he advised her to sign. In pursuance of the Finance Act, 1936, s. 18, as amended, assessments to tax were made on the wife and on the husband in right of his wife.

HELD, (i) a transfer was within the mischief of s. 18 (1), although it was not a transfer by the individual whom it was sought to charge with tax or by his agent. Even if the preamble to s. 18 connoted activity by the individual concerned, the condition of activity would be fulfilled if the execution of the transfer were procured by the individual concerned even though it was not actually executed by him or his agent.

(ii) an individual ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom could be charged with tax on the income of a company resident or domiciled outside the United Kingdom although that company was not so resident or domiciled at the date of the relevant transfer or operation, for the material date so far as residence was concerned was the date at which the income became payable and not the date of the transfer or associated operation.

Semble: The removal abroad of the control of the company was an "associated operation" in relation to the assets transferred, since the effect of the removal was to alter the incidence of taxation under case IV in relation to the income of the assets transferred.

(iii) in any event, the liability of the taxpayers under the section was measurable by reference to the whole of the respective incomes of the various companies to which the transfers had been made, directly or indirectly, and not only to such parts of the income of those companies as arose from the assets so transferred to them or from assets acquired by the companies as a result of associated operations related to such transferred assets. Under s. 18 (1) the income of the non-resident which the resident individual had the power to enjoy by reason of the transfer either alone or in conjunction with associated operations was that income which was deemed to be income of that individual for all purposes of the Income Tax Acts, and there was no justification in the language of the section for an analysis of that income in order to ascertain the source from which the income arose.

Decision of WROTTESELEY, J., [1946] 2 All E.R. 170, reversed.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1936, s. 18, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 29, p. 230.]

APPEAL from WROTTESELEY, J., reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 170, where the Case Stated is set out.

Assessments to tax under the Finance Act, 1936, s. 18, as amended, were made on a husband and wife, who were both ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom but domiciled abroad, in respect of income arising out of a series of tax-evading transfers between English companies and companies abroad which resulted in the transfer of income to firms abroad. The transactions were entered into in order that the wife, who had a controlling interest in the companies, might escape the incidence of income tax and sur-tax. The special commissioners of income tax found that the wife was an individual who had, by means of a transfer in conjunction with associated operations, acquired rights by virtue of which she had, within the meaning of s. 18, power to enjoy the income covered by the assessments, which was income payable to persons resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom. On appeal, WROTTESELEY, J., held that (i) it was a condition precedent to the application of the section that the transfer be made by the person striving to avoid liability to tax, (ii) the section did not apply to cases where the transfer was made to a company in the United Kingdom which, after the transfer, removed abroad, and (iii) it was only the income referable to assets which the wife transferred herself or caused to be transferred that was to be deemed to be her income for the purpose of the Income Tax Acts and not the whole income of the company concerned. WROTTESELEY, J., therefore, allowed the appeal and remitted the Case to the commissioners to deal with it in accordance with his judgment. From this order the Crown appealed and the taxpayers cross-appealed asking that the decision of the commissioners be reversed on all points.

D. L. Jenkins, K.C., J. H. Stamp and Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.

J. Millard Tucker, K.C. and F. Heyworth Talbot for the taxpayers.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 9. COHEN, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This case raises the question of the liability of Mr. and Mrs. Congreve (hereinafter collectively referred to as "the taxpayers") to income tax and sur-tax under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1936, s. 18, as amended by subsequent Finance Acts. The determination of the question involves the consideration of a large number of transactions which are clearly set out in the Case.* As counsel said at the outset of his address on behalf of the taxpayers the facts are not in dispute. We shall only refer to so much of those facts as is necessary to make clear the questions of law which now arise for decision and shall refer to the various companies involved in the matter by the descriptions assigned to them in the Case and adopted by WROTTESELEY, J.

* See [1946] 2 All E.R., p. 171.

Mrs. Congreve was the only child of a Mr. Glasgow, an American citizen who resided in England from 1892 until 1939, when he gave up his residence in England and returned to America with his wife. He built up a most successful business which he sold in 1912 to an English company, Humphreys & Glasgow (England). By December, 1927, he had become the owner of a little over 93,000 shares out of the 100,000 issued shares of £1 each of the company. He was chairman and managing director of the company from the date of its incorporation until Sept. 30, 1939. It is, we think, a fair inference from the facts found that throughout the transactions with which we are concerned he was acting with the authority of his daughter who signed such documents as he advised her to sign. Mrs. Congreve was born in England and has throughout been resident in England, although on coming of age she confirmed and has since retained her American citizenship. She married Mr. Congreve on July 30, 1935. At a late stage in these proceedings it was ascertained that Mr. Congreve was domiciled in Eire, but he and his wife have at all material times been ordinarily resident in England. Humphreys & Glasgow (England) was a trading concern. All the other companies concerned were merely investment companies, and it is plain from the facts found in the Case that every one of them was formed for the purpose of avoiding liability to sur-tax. At all material times (a) Mrs. Congreve was directly or indirectly the controlling shareholder of Humphreys & Glasgow (England); (b) she owned all the issued share capital of Humphreys & Glasgow (Canada) and Rockbridge, (c) she owned all the issued share capital of Margreve and through Seventy-Three the outstanding debentures of Margreve, (d) through her holding of £430,000 debentures in Seventy-Three which had been issued at 50 per cent. discount and were repayable on demand at 20 per cent. premium she was in a position within the meaning of the section to enjoy the whole income of Seventy-Three, (e) as the controlling shareholder of Humphreys & Glasgow (England) which held substantially the whole share capital of Humglas and until Dec. 1, 1937 the whole of the class A debentures of Humglas, she was able to control Humglas and enjoy within the meaning of the section the income of Humglas, (f) as the controlling shareholder of Humphreys & Glasgow (England) which held all the debentures of Glow, she was able to enjoy within the meaning of the section the income of Glow. We must add that Margreve, Seventy-Three and Glow were incorporated in England, but that at the material dates the control of each of these companies had been vested abroad with the result that they had become resident outside the United Kingdom for the purpose of the Income Tax Acts. Humphreys & Glasgow (Canada) and Rockbridge were Canadian companies resident in Canada.

We now turn to the Finance Act, 1936, s. 18, which so far as material is in the following terms :

For the purpose of preventing the avoiding by individuals ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom of liability to income tax by means of transfers of assets by virtue or in consequence whereof, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, income becomes payable to persons resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom, it is hereby enacted as follows : (1) Where such an individual has by means of any such transfer, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, acquired any rights by virtue of which he has, within the meaning of this section, power to enjoy, whether forthwith or in the future, any income of a person resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom which, if it were income of that individual received by him in the United Kingdom, would be chargeable to income tax by deduction or otherwise, that income shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to income tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed to be income of that individual for all the purposes of the Income Tax Acts.

In the section in its original form there followed the following proviso :

Provided that this sub-section shall not apply if the individual shows in writing or otherwise to the satisfaction of the special commissioners that the transfer and any associated operations were effected mainly for some purpose other than the purpose of avoiding liability to taxation.

By the Finance Act, 1938, s. 28 (2), the proviso was repealed and the following provision substituted :

(1b) The last two foregoing sub-sections shall not apply if the individual shows in writing or otherwise to the satisfaction of the special commissioners either—(a) that the purpose of avoiding liability to taxation was not the purpose or one of the purposes for which the transfer or associated operations or any of them were effected ; or (b) that the transfer and any associated operations were bona fide commercial transactions and were not designed for the purpose of avoiding liability to taxation.

Section 18 (2) of the Act of 1936 defines "associated operations" as follows :

For the purposes of this section an associated operation means, in relation to any transfer, an operation of any kind effected by any person in relation to any of the assets transferred or any assets representing, whether directly or indirectly, any of the assets transferred, or to the income arising from any such assets, or to any assets representing, whether directly or indirectly, the accumulations of income arising from any such assets.

Section 18 (3) of the Act of 1936 supplies the test to be applied in deciding whether an individual ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom is to be deemed to enjoy income of a person resident or domiciled abroad. It was admitted that, if the taxpayers were otherwise liable to tax, they must be deemed to have power to enjoy the income of the companies resident abroad with whom we are concerned. I need not, therefore, read this subsection.

Section 18 (4) was relied on by the judge in the court below as supporting his decision on one aspect of the case, but counsel for the taxpayers said in this court, and we think rightly, that it was not in point. I need not, therefore, pause to read it. Section 18 (5) so far as material, is as follows :

For the purposes of this section—(a) a reference to an individual shall be deemed to include the wife or husband of the individual ; (b) the expression "assets" includes property or rights of any kind, and the expression "transfer," in relation to rights includes the creation of those rights ; (c) the expression "benefit" includes a payment of any kind . . . (e) references to assets representing any assets, income or accumulations of income include references to shares in or obligations of any company to which, or obligations of any other person to whom, those assets, that income or those accumulations are or have been transferred.

Section 18 (7) is as follows :

The provisions of this section shall apply for the purposes of assessment to income tax for the year 1935-36 and subsequent years, and shall apply in relation to transfers of assets and associated operations whether carried out before or after the commencement of this Act : Provided that, for the year 1935-36, no income shall be charged to tax at the standard rate by virtue of the provisions of this section, but sur-tax shall be assessed and charged as if any income which would, but for this proviso, have been charged as aforesaid had in fact been so charged.

In pursuance of this section Mrs. Congreve was assessed to sur-tax for the financial year 1935-36 and Mr. Congreve was assessed in right of his wife to income tax for the five years beginning with the year 1936-37 and to sur-tax for the six years beginning with the year 1935-36.

Before the special commissioners the taxpayers sought to escape liability under the proviso to sub-s. (1) or under sub-s. (1B) which was substituted for that proviso, but the commissioners rejected that contention. Their finding on this point was one of fact and the taxpayers did not seek to disturb it before the judge or before us. They, however, raised three other points.

First, they contended that a transfer was not within the mischief of the section unless it was a transfer by the individual whom it was sought to charge with tax or by his agent. Accordingly, they said they could not be taxed on the income of Humglas or of Glow since the only transfer of assets to Humglas was by Humphreys & Glasgow (England). Secondly, they argued that an individual ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom could not be charged with tax on the income of a person resident or domiciled outside the United Kingdom unless that person was so resident or domiciled at the date of the relevant transfer or associated operation. Accordingly, they said that as Margreve, Seventy-Three and Glow were resident and domiciled in England at the date of the transfers to them respectively, Mr. Congreve could not be assessed to tax on the income of these companies. Thirdly, they contended that in any event their liabilities under the said sections were measureable by reference, not to the whole of the respective incomes of the various companies to which transfers had been made, directly or indirectly, but only to such parts of the income of those companies as arose from the assets so transferred to them or from assets acquired by the companies as a result of associated operations related to such transferred assets. The judge decided in favour of the taxpayers on the second and third points. On the first point he accepted the argument that the section deals only with transfers made by the individual by means of which he or she acquired rights, but he held that a person who, by owning all or practically all of the capital of an investment company, is able to bring about such a transfer as is referred to in the section is a person who has avoided tax by means of a transfer. In the result, he held that the taxpayers were not liable to tax on the income of Humglas, Margreve, Seventy-Three or Glow, and he allowed the appeal and remitted the Case to the commissioners to deal with in accordance with his judgment. From this order the Crown appealed and the taxpayers cross-appealed asking that the decision of the special commissioners be reversed on all points.

I return to the section. As pointed out by the judge ([1946] 2 All E.R. 170, at p. 181):

... this section contains something in the nature of a preamble, for it opens with a statement as to the purpose of the section, and the court is therefore not left to ascertain the purpose of the section by a consideration of the language of the operative part merely. The court knows in advance what the purpose is. If, therefore, any question should arise as to whether the language of the section applies to any particular transaction, and if this question is not clearly answered in the operative part of the section, the court may properly resort to the express intention to see if this affords any help.

Indeed, the opening words are something more than a preamble, since by reason of the words "such an individual" and "such a transfer" a court construing the section is bound to import into the operative part portions of the preamble. Making the necessary interpolations, sub-s. (1) reads as follows: "Where an individual ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom has, by means of any transfer of assets by virtue or in consequence whereof, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, income becomes payable to persons resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations acquired any rights" etc. These are the only interpolations which are necessary to give effect to the word "such," but counsel for the taxpayers says that the wording of the preamble necessitates one further interpolation, namely, the addition after the words "transfer of assets" of the words "made by him." In support of this argument he relies mainly on the use in the preamble and in the operative portion of the phrase "by means of." This phrase, he says, in contrast to the phrases "by virtue of" and "in consequence of" which also appear both in the preamble and in sub-s. (1) means something active, and, having regard to the expressed purpose of preventing the avoiding by individuals of liability to income tax, the activity which the legislature had in mind must be activity by the individual whose liability to tax is under consideration. Counsel relied in further support of this construction on the proviso to sub-s. (1) (as it stood in the Act of 1936) whereby the subsection was excluded if the individual could satisfy the commissioners that the transfer and any associated operations were effected mainly for some purpose other than the avoidance of tax. We do not think, however, that the proviso is really of any assistance to counsel, since the language of the proviso would be equally appropriate if the transfer were by any person other than the individual concerned. Counsel further relied on sub-s. (2) which provides that, for the purpose of the section, an associated operation means in relation to any transfer an operation of any kind effected by any person in relation to any of the assets transferred. He contended that the words "by any person" would be unnecessary if a transfer was within the mischief of the section though not executed by the individual concerned as transferor. We are unable to agree with this contention. We think that the reason for the insertion of the words "by any persons" is to make it clear that the associated operation might be effected by any person and need not be effected by the transferor whoever the transferor might be.

I return to counsel's main argument. We do not think the words "by means of" connote activity by the individual concerned. According to the SHORTER OXFORD DICTIONARY the primary meaning of the words is "by the instrumentality of a person or thing" and they are fully satisfied if the avoidance of tax is effected through the instrumentality of the transfer by whosoever it is executed. A fortiori is this the case if we take the secondary meaning given in that dictionary "in consequence of, owing to." Nor do we think that the use of the phrase in the preamble in conjunction with the word "avoiding" compels us to interpolate something that is not there and read "by means of transfer of assets" as if it were "by means of transfer of assets made by them." Moreover, we agree with the judge that the taxpayers' argument derives no support from the use of the word "acquired" in connection with the words "by means of" in sub-s. (1) since, as he points out, "as used by lawyers the word 'acquired' has long covered transactions of a purely passive nature and means little more than receiving." Indeed, that is the second ordinary meaning given in the SHORTER OXFORD DICTIONARY. In addition, it would be contrary to the expressed object of the section if the words "means" and "acquired" were construed in the active sense for which the taxpayers contend. It would put back on the Revenue the burden of proving affirmatively that the benefits to the taxpayer, resulting to him in fact through transfers and associated operations, had all been brought about by his own activities, whereas the section is, in our opinion, plainly and successfully drafted with the intent of casting the burden of disproving tax avoidance on the taxpayer. For these reasons, we agree, on this point, with the conclusion of the commissioners.

But, even if we were prepared to accede to the argument that the preamble connoted activity by the individual concerned, we think this condition would be fulfilled if the execution of the transfer were procured by the individual concerned, even though it was not actually executed by him or his agent. Counsel for the taxpayers, in commenting on the judgment of WROTTESELEY, J., said, and counsel for the Crown agreed, that execution by a company could not be said to be execution by the individual even though the individual owned all or practically all the shares in the company. We think, however, that the decision of the judge can be upheld on the ground we have stated, since it is, we think, in the present case a reasonable inference from the facts found that the execution and performance of the transfers and associated operations in question by all the companies concerned were procured by Mrs. Congreve acting through her agent, Mr. Glasgow. We should have been prepared, if it had been necessary, on this alternative ground to uphold the decision of the commissioners.

I turn now to the second point. Counsel for the taxpayers said that, on its true construction, the section required that at the date of the execution of the transfer, the transferee should be resident or domiciled outside the United Kingdom and that the subsequent removal of the control abroad was not an associated operation since it was not effected "in relation to any of the assets transferred or any assets representing... any of the assets transferred or to the income arising from any such assets, or to any assets representing... the accumulations of income arising from any such assets." We think this argument fails in limine, since it is, we think, reasonably clear that, on the true construction of the preamble, the material date, so far as residence is concerned, is the date at which the income becomes payable and not the date of the transfer or associated operation. Having come to this conclusion, we do not find it necessary to decide whether the removal of the control abroad was an associated operation. We think, however, that there was considerable force in the argument of counsel for the Crown that the removal abroad was an associated operation in relation to the assets transferred, since the effect of the removal was to alter the incidence of taxation under case IV in relation to the income of the assets transferred.

I turn now to the third point. Having regard to our decision on the first point, I doubt whether it really arises, but since the case may go higher and the point was decided in the court below and fully argued before us, we think it better to express our opinion on it. The contention was tentatively put forward by this court in Lord Howard de Walden v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1). It was rejected by counsel on both sides in that case and we think it is obvious from the language of LORD GREENE, M.R., in his judgment that he doubted whether it was tenable. In that case the Master of the Rolls said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 287 at p. 289):

An intermediate suggestion favoured by neither side was to the effect that the only income of the non-resident which is to be deemed to be income of the transferor is that part of the income which is traceable to the assets transferred. No doubt, in the majority of cases which in practice come within the scope of the section, the transferee will have been constituted, either individually as a trustee or as a corporation, for the sole purpose of carrying out the transaction and will have no other income, but cases might arise where the transferee selected was, for example, an existing corporation with very large assets and income of its own, and the income attributable to the assets transferred might be a very small proportion of its total income. It cannot be supposed, argues counsel for the appellant, that the legislature can have intended to produce such an extreme result as might be produced upon the second of the three constructions, since it would impose an entirely disproportionate penalty on the taxpayer, and, rejecting the intermediate view, which, he said, could not be reconciled with the language used, he arrived, by a process of elimination, at his own construction as being the only possible one. We find it impossible to accept the argument of counsel for the appellant. If, as it seems to us, the language of the section clearly does not limit the income of the non-resident, in respect of which the taxpayer is charged, to the actual benefit which he draws from the income of the non-resident—a construction, he it observed, which would largely defeat the expressed purpose of the section—it is illegitimate to force upon that language a strained construction merely because it may otherwise lead to a result which to some minds may appear to be unjust. However, even if the only alternative to the construction of counsel for the appellant is the second of the three constructions, we are not prepared to say that it is necessarily as unjust as he contends. The section is a penal one, and, whatever its consequences may be, they are intended to be an effective deterrent to practices which the legislature considers to be against the public interest. For years a battle of manoeuvre has been waged between the legislature and those who are minded to throw the burden of taxation off their own shoulders on to those of their fellow subjects. In that battle the legislature has often been worsted by the skill, determination and resourcefulness of its opponents, of whom the present appellant has not been the least successful. It would not shock us in the least to find that the legislature has determined to put an end to the struggle by imposing the severest of penalties. It scarcely lies in the mouth of the taxpayer who plays with fire to complain of burnt fingers. It is not, however, necessary for us to choose between the second and third constructions. We would rather defer that choice until a case which raises the issue can be considered on its own facts.

We agree with counsel for the taxpayers that sub-s. (3) is not dealing with quantum, but is merely defining the test to be applied in determining whether an individual has power to enjoy the income of a non-resident. To ascertain the quantum on which tax can be levied, one must return to sub-s. (1). Under that subsection the only question is: What income of the non-resident does the resident individual have power to enjoy by reason of the transfer either alone or in conjunction with associated operations? It is that income which is deemed to be income of that individual for all purposes of the Income Tax Acts, and we find no justification in the language of the section for an analysis of that income in order to ascertain the source from which the income arises. It may be, as was said by the judge in the court below, that the result may in some cases be capricious, but, as was said by the Master of the Rolls in the passage we have cited, "it is illegitimate to force upon the language of the section a strained construction merely because it may otherwise lead to a result which to some minds may appear unjust." The section is a penal one, and, if the penalty is considered to be too high, that is a matter for the legislature and not for us.

One point was taken before us which is not dealt with by the judge. It relates only to Humglas. It was said that the taxpayers could not be liable to tax on the income of Humglas since at the date of the transfer by Humphreys & Glasgow (England) to Humglas, Mrs. Congreve was already the holder of her 65,000 shares in Humglas and she acquired no rights by virtue of the transfer. Such rights as she could enjoy, she already possessed. Counsel for the taxpayers admitted, however, that, if he was wrong on the first contention dealt with above, this argument would not be open to him. We need not, therefore, consider it.

For these reasons we think the appeal ought to be allowed and the cross-appeal dismissed. The taxpayers must pay the costs here and below.

Appeal by the Crown allowed. Cross-appeal by the taxpayers dismissed. Costs in both courts to be paid by the taxpayers.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Slaughter & May (for the taxpayers).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WALLACE v. CLENCH.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), December 20, 1946.]

Magistrates—Summary jurisdiction—Limitation of time—Prosecution under Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 6—Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (c. 10), s. 2 (1), (3)—Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10 (1).

Emergency Legislation—Price control—Prosecution for selling goods at a price in excess of the maximum price—Period within which summary proceedings may be brought—Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (c. 10), s. 2 (1), (3)—Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10 (1).

Prosecutions under the Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 6, may be brought within 12 months of the offence being committed, as provided by reg. 10 (1), and are not required to be brought within 6 months, as provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 11, in cases where no special limit of time is prescribed by another statute or provision having the force of statute.

[AS TO LIMITATION OF TIME UNDER SUMMARY JURISDICTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, pp. 598, 599, para. 1043; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, pp. 325-327, paras. 392-395.]

FOR THE SUPPLIES AND SERVICES (TRANSITIONAL POWERS) ACT, 1945, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 38, p. 629; and FOR THE DEFENCE (PRICE CONTROL) REGULATIONS, 1945, reg. 10 (1), see ibid., p. 827.]

CASE STATED by Epping, Essex, justices.

Informations were preferred by the appellant on behalf of the Board of Trade against the respondent under the Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945. The justices held that, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 11, they had no jurisdiction to inquire into the offences, because the informations were not laid within 6 months of the offences being committed. The appellant appealed. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. L. Parker for the appellant.

J. L. Elson Rees for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case Stated by the justices of Epping, Essex, on prosecutions by the Board of Trade against the respondent for selling goods at a price in excess of the maximum price, contrary to the Utility Furniture (Maximum Prices and Charges) Order, 1944, art. 1, as amended; the Utility Bedding (Maximum Prices) Order, 1945, arts. 1 and 3; the Cloth and Household Textiles (Utility) (Maximum Prices) Order, 1945, arts. 1 and 3; the Goods and Services (Price Control) Act, 1941, s. 1; and the Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 6. The simple question raised by the Case is whether a prosecution for those offences can be launched within twelve months of the offence being committed or whether the time limit of six months which is imposed by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 11, applies and the summonses were out of time. The justices came to the conclusion that the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, applied, and that, as the offences were more than six months old, they had no jurisdiction to inquire into them.

In spite of the able argument of counsel for the respondent, I think it is reasonably clear that the appeal must be allowed. It is necessary to remember that, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 11, the time limit of six months is only imposed where no other statute imposes a longer period. A regulation has the effect of a statute provided it is within the powers conferred on His Majesty for making regulations.

The point which arises here is this. Under the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945, which was passed on Dec. 10, 1945, at a time when the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, was in force, it was provided [by s. 2 (1)] that the powers conferred on His Majesty by the principal Acts (i.e., the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, and certain amendments thereof) should be extended so as to enable His Majesty to make such defence regulations as appeared to him necessary or expedient :

...for controlling the prices to be charged for goods of any description or the charges to be made for services of any description, whether or not such regulations are necessary or expedient for the purposes specified in [the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 1 (1)].

Those concluding words were inserted so that it should not be necessary for His Majesty, on making regulations which are authorised by the Act of 1945, to consider whether they were necessary for the efficient prosecution of the war, the war having, so far as hostilities are concerned, come to an end. Parliament thought it necessary to keep a regulation-making power alive to enable His Majesty to make regulations with regard to fixing prices during what I may call the transitional period from war to peace.

It is clear that His Majesty could legislate by means of regulations under the original powers conferred on him by the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939. By s. 1 (1) of that Act it was provided that His Majesty could make regulations, and, by s. 1 (2), without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by the Act on the Crown, he could make provision for the apprehension and punishment of offenders and for their trial by a court, not being a court-martial, in accordance with such procedure as should be provided for by the regulations. Pausing there, it is beyond argument that a time limit on prosecutions is a matter of procedure. It is what is sometimes called adjective law. By s. 1 (2) (d) of the Act of 1939, regulations might be made :

...amending any enactment,...suspending the operation of any enactment, and for applying any enactment with or without modification.

I need not stop to consider whether there is any difference between amending an enactment or applying it with a modification, but it seems to me beyond question that the plain words of this Act enable His Majesty to make a regulation which has the effect of amending an Act already in force.

When the Supplies and Services (Transitional) Powers Act, 1945, was passed, the Act of 1939 was nearing the end of its life. It expired, in fact, on Feb. 24, 1946. In view of the fact that the Act of 1939 was coming to an end, Parliament passed the Supplies and Services (Transitional) Powers Act, 1945, which enables His Majesty to make certain regulations which have effect under s. 2 (3) notwithstanding that the original Act (i.e., the Act of 1939) has expired. The power to make regulations under the Act of 1939 was still in existence when the Act of 1945 was passed, and it is clear that s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1945 provides that His Majesty might still, in the time between the passing of the Act of 1945 and the expiration of the Act of 1939, make regulations on certain matters, such as the controlling of prices to be charged for goods, which regulations would remain in force notwithstanding that the Act of 1939 had expired. Among other regulations which His Majesty made were the Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, which dealt with the control of the price of goods. A necessary part of control is the imposing of penalties and making provision for the prosecution of offenders, because that is the only way in which control can be made effective. The Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10 (1), provides :

Summary proceedings in respect of an offence under the principal Act or the Act of 1941 may, notwithstanding anything in the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, be commenced at any time not later than 12 months from the date of the commission of the offence.

It seems to me to be clear beyond argument that, in so enacting, His Majesty made a regulation which amended the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or applied those Acts with the modification that a prosecution should take place within twelve months and not six. It seems to me, therefore, that this regulation is perfectly valid, and we need not consider whether or not the Goods and Services (Price Control) Act, 1941, applies. Section 2 (2) of the Act of 1945 provides :

Without prejudice to the generality of the power conferred by the last foregoing subsection, any defence regulation made in pursuance thereof may amend the Goods and Services (Price Control) Acts, 1939 to 1943.

Accordingly, in my opinion, under s. 2 (1) and (3) of the Act of 1945, the Defence (Price Control) Regulations, 1945, reg. 10, is valid to extend the time during which prosecutions may be brought from six to twelve months. The appeal will be allowed, and this case must go back to the justices that they may hear the case and adjudicate on it.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree and have nothing to add.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

A

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Solicitor, Board of Trade (for the appellant) ; R. I. Lewis & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

B

I.T.P. (LONDON) LTD. v. WINSTANLEY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), December 16, 1946.]

Gaming and Wagering—Prize competition—Conducted “in connection with trade or business”—Football pool coupons sold by newsagent and tobacconist by agreement with promoters—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 26 (1) (a).

C

Promoters of a football pool entered into an agreement with a newsagent and tobacconist under which the latter sold coupons for a penny each, retained the money and, in addition, received a commission in respect of every customer who bought coupons and entered the football pool. The promoters were convicted under the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 26 (1) (a), of having unlawfully conducted in connection with a business of newsagent and tobacconist a competition in which prizes were offered for forecasting results, and the newsagent was convicted for aiding and abetting :—

D

HELD : there must be some nexus between the carrying on of the competition and the trade or business in connection with which it was alleged to have been carried on, and, subsequently, the convictions must be quashed.

E

[FOR THE BETTING AND LOTTERIES ACT, 1934, s. 26 (1) (a), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 27, p. 292.]

Case referred to :

(1) Thomson v. Clanmorris (Lord), [1900] 1 Ch. 718 ; 69 L.J.Ch. 337 ; 82 L.T. 277 ; 9 Digest 132, 703.

CASE STATED by Liverpool justices.

F

The first appellants were convicted under the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 26 (1) (a), of having unlawfully conducted in connection with a business of newsagent and tobacconist a competition in which prizes were offered for forecasting football results. The second appellants, the proprietors of the business, were convicted of aiding and abetting. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

G

Gilbert Beyfus, K.C. and James Amphlett for the appellants.

Basil Neild, K.C., and Edward Steel for the respondent (the chief constable of Liverpool).

H

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is a Case Stated by a court of summary jurisdiction for the city of Liverpool before whom the appellant company, I.T.P. (London) Ltd., who are promoters of football pools, were summoned for a breach of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 26 (1) (a), for having unlawfully conducted, in connection with a business of newsagent and tobacconist, a certain competition in which prizes were offered for forecasting football results. The circumstances stated by the justices showed that when it became unlawful, under the Control of Paper (No. 70) (Economy) Order, 1945, to supply coupons for football competitions without making any charge for them, it being provided that people could be supplied with coupons for entering into these competitions only on payment of not less than a halfpenny, the appellants entered into an agreement with the second appellants, a man and his wife who carried on a newsagent's and tobacconist's shop in Liverpool, under which they were to sell coupons for a penny each, which they were allowed to keep, and were also promised eighteen pence commission for every customer who bought a coupon and entered the football pool. The second appellants were charged with aiding and abetting the commission of the offence.

Section 26 (1) simply provides :

It shall be unlawful to conduct . . . in connection with any trade or business . . . (a) any competition in which prizes are offered for forecasts of the result . . . of a future event.

The sub-section does not indicate what connection there should be with the trade or business and when one has to construe an Act which is altering the law one is entitled, in the words of LINDLEY, M.R., in Thomson v. Clanmorris, [1900] 1 Ch. 718, at p. 725, to have regard not only to the words used, but to the history of the Act, and the reasons which led to its being passed. You must look at the mischief which had to be cured as well as at the cure provided.

The history of the Act and the mischief which had to be cured is, I think, within the memory of all of us. Before the Act it was common for people who were carrying on a trade or business to offer prizes for a competition as an encouragement to people to do business with them. That was regarded as being undesirable, and it was prohibited.

Here it is said that the appellant company were conducting their competition in connection with the trade or business of the second appellants. The second appellants are carrying on a business, but the Act does not say "in connection with any person who carries on a trade or business." The Act says: "in connection with any trade or business", and there must be some nexus, as it seems to me, between the carrying on of the competition and the trade or business in respect of which it is said to have been carried on. I do not think the words of the sub-section are apt to create an offence in the present case. At any rate, whatever may have been the intention, if there is a doubt about the matter one must always, with a penal section, construe it in favour of the accused person who must be given the benefit of the doubt, it being held that there is no offence.

One thing which naturally weighs with me very much is the difference between this section and s. 22 in the same part of the Act of 1934, which deals with lotteries and prize competitions, because, when dealing with a lottery, there are the most elaborate provisions as to what is prohibited. The printing of any tickets is prohibited, the distribution or offering or advertising for sale or distribution of any tickets is forbidden. In this case, as counsel for the appellants has pointed out, (and, to my mind, it is perfectly sound) if there has been an offence, it was equally an offence to ask a printer to print the tickets because the printing of the tickets was, no doubt, a necessary part of conducting one of these competitions. It seems to me to be extravagant, in those circumstances, to say that the printer might be penalised, or that a person who is conducting a competition of this sort might be penalised if he got tickets printed, though it would be equally in connection with the business of a printer. I cannot say that I think these words are at all apt to create the offence which is said to have been committed here, and, in my opinion, the appeal should be allowed with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Amphlett & Co. (for the appellants) ; W. H. Baines, Town Clerk, Liverpool (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROUTH AND ANOTHER v. JONES,

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Evershed, J.), December 6, 20, 1946.]

Trade—Restraint of trade—Reasonableness—Covenant by doctor in “assistantship” agreement—Covenantees general practitioners—Covenant not to “practise or cause or assist any other person to practise in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery nor accept nor fill any professional appointment” within 10 miles for 5 years—Severability.

On Mar. 8, 1943, the defendant, a qualified surgeon and physician, became medical assistant to the plaintiffs, who carried on together the business of general medical practitioners in a small town. By an agreement, dated Dec. 31, 1943, the defendant covenanted not to “practise or cause or assist any other person to practise in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery nor accept nor fill any professional appointment . . . whether paid . . . or whether honorary within a radius of 10 miles” from the partnership address for 5 years after the termination of his assistantship. The assistantship was determined in Mar., 1946, and the defendant desired to exercise his profession in or near the town in question:—

HELD: (i) in the case of a general medical practise, there existed a subject-matter of contract or a proprietary interest properly entitled to protection.

(ii) the restriction in the second part of the covenant, i.e., not to “accept nor fill any professional appointment,” was not reasonable or necessary for the protection of any proprietary interest of the plaintiffs, and was too wide to be enforced.

(iii) the covenant not to “practise or cause or assist any other person to practise in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery” was not severable and such a restriction could not be justified.

British Reinforced Concrete Co. v. Schelff (6) applied.

(iv) assuming that severance of the first part of the covenant was permissible, the plaintiffs’ practise being that of country general practitioners, a covenant against practising (as a principal or assistant) in any department of medicine, surgery or midwifery, during the period and in the area limited, was too wide to be enforced. Protection against competition could only be against competition with the business in fact conducted by the employers at the material date.

[AS TO RESTRAINT OF TRADE IN CONTRACTS OF EMPLOYMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 408—418, paras. 683—698; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 21—26, Nos. 135—173, and pp. 63—65, Nos. 657—675.

AS TO SEVERABILITY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 427—430, paras. 712, 713; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 46—50, Nos. 473—509.] Cases referred to:

(1) Fitch v. Dewes, [1921] 2 A.C. 158; 90 L.J.Ch. 436; 125 L.T. 744; 43 Digest 34, 276.

(2) Mason v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co., Ltd., [1913] A.C. 724; 82 L.J.K.B. 1153; 109 L.T. 449; 43 Digest 22, 143.

(3) Herbert Morris, Ltd. v. Saxelby, [1916] 1 A.C. 688; 85 L.J.Ch. 210; 114 L.T. 618; 43 Digest 24, 154.

(4) Attwood v. Lamont, [1920] 3 K.B. 571; 90 L.J.K.B. 121; 124 L.T. 108; 43 Digest 20, 131.

(5) Mills v. Dunham, [1891] 1 Ch. 576; 60 L.J.Ch. 362; 64 L.T. 712; 43 Digest 62, 641.

(6) British Reinforced Concrete Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Schelff, [1921] 2 Ch. 563; 91 L.J.Ch. 114; 126 L.T. 230; 43 Digest 35, 310.

MOTION by the plaintiffs, general medical practitioners, for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant, formerly employed as an assistant in their partnership business, from committing breaches of a covenant contained in the agreement under which he had been employed. At the hearing of the motion the parties requested the court to treat the motion as the trial of the action. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. C. Dickens for the plaintiffs.

I. J. Lindner for the defendant.

Dec. 20. EVERSLED, J. read the following judgment. This is a motion on the part of the plaintiffs, who carry on together the business of general medical practitioners in the small town of Okehampton, in Devon, asking for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant, formerly employed as an assistant in the business, from committing breaches of a covenant in restraint of trade contained in the "assistantship agreement" (as it is called) dated Dec. 31, 1943, which regulated the terms of the defendant's employment by the plaintiffs.

Soon after counsel for the plaintiffs had begun to open the motion it became apparent to me that, in the circumstances of the case, there would be difficulties in the way of my making any interlocutory order, particularly since it would be necessary for me to express a view on the construction of the material clause in the agreement. The parties thereupon requested me to treat the motion as the trial of the action and to determine the issues finally between them on the facts before me in evidence. I have felt some uneasiness, I confess, in regard to this request, in case the matter goes to a higher court, but since it was agreed that the evidence contained all the material facts and that there was no dispute as to these facts between the parties, I have thought it my duty to accede to the parties' request to save them from further expense.

I first turn to the agreement itself. The document discloses that the business of the plaintiffs was the familiar one of a general medical practise. The defendant (who was and is a qualified surgeon and physician) was engaged as medical assistant at an annual salary of £590 per annum, together with certain other privileges. No term was fixed for the appointment, which was determinable by one month's notice on either side. It is unnecessary to travel in detail through the thirteen clauses of the agreement. It is clear that the defendant would be required to act, as he did act, in his professional capacity on behalf of the partners and, in that capacity, to attend, as he did, the patients of the business.

Clause 12 of the agreement was as follows :

The assistant agrees with the principals that he will not during this contract of service save in the employ of the principals nor within the space of 5 years thereafter practise or cause or assist any other person to practise in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery nor accept nor fill any professional appointment whether whole time or otherwise whether paid by fees salary or otherwise or whether honorary within a radius of 10 miles from 11 East Street Okehampton aforesaid. And if the assistant shall so practise or cause or assist any other person to practise within the radius aforesaid or in any way violate this provision he shall forthwith pay to the principals or as they shall direct or to their successors in title the sum of £100 for every month or part of a month during which he shall violate or continue to violate this provision as ascertained as liquidated damages and not by way of penalty and without prejudice to the right of the principals or their successors in title to obtain an injunction to restrain such violation. Provided that nothing in this clause contained shall prevent the assistant from practising within the said radius under any scheme for State medical service hereafter introduced in the event of his being required so to do under any statutory powers orders or regulations.

Although the agreement is dated Dec. 31, 1943, it appears from the first clause that the defendant's engagement had been effective from Mar. 8, 1943, and it is the fact that the agreement was presented to the defendant by or on behalf of the plaintiffs for his execution some considerable time after he had started work for the plaintiffs. The defendant was not, in fact, separately advised on it.

At the time of the defendant's engagement and for the greater part of his service, one of the plaintiffs, Dr. Wilson, was, I understand, away on military service, and the defendant's engagement was, no doubt, in part attributable to that fact. The defendant's services were duly determined by a month's notice in Mar., 1946. The defendant has bought a house in Okehampton and desires, so far as he lawfully can, to earn his living by the exercise of his profession in and around Okehampton.

Counsel, in the course of his argument, referred me to certain cases and I have since referred to others. I am reluctant to attempt any addition to what LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., [in Fitch v. Dewes (1)] has called the generous elucidation of these matters, but, in view of the reference made by counsel for the plaintiffs to some of the older cases, tabulated in the ENGLISH AND EMPIRE DIGEST, I feel it necessary for me to state briefly what I conceive to be the general principles of law applicable to cases of this character, so far as material to the present action.

If, as a matter of history, all contracts in restraint of trade were at one time regarded as obnoxious to the policy and principles of the common law (see, for instance, HOLDSWORTH'S HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW, Vol. VIII, pp. 56-62), later, and particularly in the nineteenth century, this conception was greatly modified. The courts reflected the social and economic ideas of the time by the emphasis placed on freedom of contract. Later, again in accordance with changing social concepts, and especially after the two decisions of the House of Lords in Mason v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co. (2) and Morris v. Saxelby (3) in 1913 and 1916, the law, as I understand it, was again modified. I take its present complexion to have been fully and accurately explained and described by YOUNGER, L.J., with the approval of ATKIN, L.J., in Attwood v. Lamont (4). According to this formulation of the law it must, as I conceive, be regarded as now clear that provisions in restraint of trade comprised in contracts between masters and servants in (contracts for the sale of goodwill contrast to) are treated as prima facie unenforceable and will only be sustained if and so far as they can be shown to be reasonably required for the protection of some subject-matter of contract, some proprietary interest properly entitled to protection. In the absence of special circumstances, an employer has no such proprietary interest as entitles him to protection from the competition of his former servant per se, nor can a former servant be restrained from turning to account his own business or professional skill, although that skill was acquired while he was in the service of his former master. On the other hand, where the circumstances are such that the servant has, by virtue of his engagement, been put in the position of learning his master's trade secrets, or of acquiring a special or intimate knowledge of the affairs of the customers, clients or patients of his master's business or of means of influence over them, there exists a subject-matter of contract, a proprietary interest or goodwill in the matter which is entitled to protection, since otherwise the master would be exposed to unfair competition on the part of his former servant—competition flowing not so much from the personal skill of the assistant as from the intimacies and knowledge of the master's business acquired by the servant from the circumstances of his employment.

It is, in my judgment, clear that the character of a general medical practise is such that one who is employed therein (as was the defendant) as a medical assistant, necessarily acquires such a special and intimate knowledge of the patients of the business that the employers, in a contract of service with the servant, are entitled to protect themselves against unfair competition on the servant's part. In other words, that in such a case there exists a subject-matter of contract or a proprietary interest properly entitled to protection. I conceive I am entitled to come to this conclusion, in the absence of any evidence directed to the point, as a matter of general notoriety or from a reading of such cases as have come before the courts in reference to the business of doctors. I have also in mind the evidence in this respect of Mr. Tattersall and Dr. Burns, put in on the plaintiffs' behalf, by my leave, since the motion was heard. And I refer again to the language of LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., applied to the case of a solicitor's business, in Fitch v. Dewes (1). He said ([1921] 2 A.C. 158, at p. 164):

Such a business depends upon the existence of goodwill; upon the association and the intimacy which exist between him who carries on that business and the clients of the firm, an intimacy founded upon many complex considerations not easily to be defined, but very easily to be understood.

But it is also clear, in my judgment, from the formulation of the law which I have attempted (and it is in terms so stated by YOUNGER, L.J., in Attwood v. Lamont (4)) that, in all cases of master and servant, the onus lies upon the master seeking to enforce the covenant to prove both that some subject-matter of contract entitled to protection exists and that the covenant sought to be enforced is reasonably required for its protection. It follows, in my judgment, that since the two decisions of the House of Lords in Mason v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co. (2) and Morris v. Saxelby (3), some of the earlier judicial statements in regard to the onus of proof—e.g., that of LINDLEY, L.J., in Mills v. Dunham (5) ([1891] 1 Ch. 576, at p. 586)—can no longer be regarded as good law. I do not understand any of the observations in Fitch v. Dewes (1) to be in conflict with this proposition.

Certain other general propositions may also be stated. (i) As regards severability, a composite covenant may only be severed if, and to the extent that, on its true construction, the covenant in truth consists of two or more separate covenants. (ii) In contracts in restraint of trade, as in other contracts, the principle will be applied in case of real ambiguity and doubt that the contract will be construed contra proferentes. (iii) In considering the efficacy of a covenant such as is here in question, it is true that not only the proper interest of the covenantor and the covenantee, but also the proper interest of the public must be considered. But it is also, in my judgment, true that, if the covenant in question is shown to conform to the proper interests of the covenantor and the covenantee in the light of the general formulation of the law which I have above attempted, then the public interest would equally be served. I say this because in the present case the defendant's evidence was, in fact, directed to showing that there was a dearth of doctors in and around Okehampton, and it was argued that that fact ought at least to have a bearing on the question whether the defendant's covenant should be enforced. In my judgment, there is no substance in this argument. If it be true that the inhabitants of this region should have more doctors, it does not follow that they should have the defendant as one of them. If the public interest is invoked, it must not be forgotten that it is very much in the public interest that contracts should be honoured.

In the light of these statements of principle I turn to the particular covenant in this case involved. It is, in my judgment, reasonably clear that the covenant is severable into two parts, the second part being covered by the words "nor accept nor fill," etc. Whether it is further severable remains to be considered later, but it is also, in my judgment, plain that the second part of the covenant covered by the language to which I have referred is too wide and cannot be enforced. Assuming in the plaintiffs' favour that the time limit of five years ought to be read into this second branch of the covenant, and that the phrase "any professional appointment" ought to be limited to any appointment connected with the profession of a doctor or surgeon, still it would cover such appointments as honorary lecturer to the St. John Ambulance and, indeed, any appointment under a local authority or otherwise for which medical or surgical skill might constitute a qualification. In my judgment, notwithstanding the argument in Mr. Tattersall's affidavit, such a restriction cannot be justified as reasonable or necessary for the protection of any proprietary interest of the plaintiffs, but, having regard to the severance, the covenant or covenants comprehended in the earlier part of the clause are not so far vitiated.

I find it extremely difficult to appreciate in what circumstances the defendant might be supposed to "cause" another to practise in medicine, surgery or midwifery, but the word "assist" cannot, I think, exclude financial assistance, so that the defendant is, for example, by his covenant prohibited from advancing money to a lady to enable her to establish a maternity home within the area. Again, in my judgment, such a restriction cannot, in the circumstances, be justified. Unless, therefore, a further severance is permissible, the whole covenant necessarily falls. I have come to the conclusion that, on the principles which I have stated, no further severance is allowable.

In my judgment, as a matter of construction, the covenant not to practise or cause or assist another to practise is a single and indivisible covenant, just as would be a covenant not to practise directly or indirectly or as a principal or an agent. The so-called "blue pencil" test can, since Attwood v. Lamont (4), no longer, I think, be accepted as sufficient. The essential words "in any department of medicine surgery or midwifery" are not repeated, and the language of the provision in regard to liquidated damages "if the assistant shall so practise or cause or assist any other person to practise within the radius aforesaid or in any way violate this provision," etc., seems to me to indicate that the true intent and purport of the covenant was a single covenant against exercising the defendant's profession as a principal or as a servant or agent, and I do not think it was intended to draw a distinction between practising as a principal on the one hand and exercising the profession vicariously or as another's servant on the other, so that the former might take effect notwithstanding the invalidity of the latter. As the clause stands, I have little doubt that the word "practise" means practise as a principal. It might, however, well be argued that if (as a result of severance) the words "or cause or assist," etc., are excluded, the word "practise" in its new context would include practising either as a principal or as another's assistant, and, if there is substance in this argument, the effect of the severance would be to alter the construction of what is left—a result fatal to severance. My view is, I think, supported by the decision of YOUNGER, L.J., in British Reinforced Concrete Co. v. Schelff (6), in which he pointed out that, although there was reputable authority for severance of areas or of trades or of classes of customer, there was none for such severance as was there, and is here, in question, and that in the light of the more recent authorities such an extension of the doctrine of severability should not be countenanced.

A This conclusion disposes of the case, but I add that if, contrary to my opinion, further severance is permissible so as to permit consideration of a separate covenant against practising, i.e., as a principal or as another's assistant, or even as a principal only, in any department of medicine, surgery or midwifery, during the period and within the area respectively limited, I am, to say the least, gravely doubtful whether on the evidence the covenant can be supported. Much of the evidence filed on the defendant's behalf was adduced to show that the prohibited area was too wide, but having regard to the comparatively rural character of the area I should not be prepared to hold that a ten mile radius was excessive, nor that the time limit of five years, notwithstanding the insecurity of the defendant's tenure of his office, was fatal to the enforceability of the covenant. The difficulty in the plaintiffs' way seems to me to arise from the use of the formula "any department of medicine, surgery or midwifery." In the case of surgery, the formula would appear necessarily to cover such specialised branches of the art as ophthalmic, orthopaedic or plastic surgery, as it would also presumably cover dental and even veterinary surgery. In the case of medicine, to take but one example, radio therapeutics or radiology would be barred. There is in the evidence no suggestion that any such "departments" of surgery or medicine were comprehended in the plaintiffs' practise, and I should certainly not expect to find them covered by the practise of a "country g.p." Even, therefore, if the relevant clause in the agreement is construed in all respects most favourably to the plaintiffs (notwithstanding the general rule of construction, i.e., contra proferentes, to which I have already alluded), the objections to the plaintiffs' claim are formidable. In saying this I am not suggesting that, where a proprietary interest, entitled to protection, is shown to exist, a covenant in order to be enforceable must in terms be expressed to be referable strictly to that interest. Proper and reasonable protection may well justify a general restriction against competition, but it must be competition with the business or businesses in fact conducted by the employers at the material date.

E It is, no doubt, true (as appears from the evidence of Mr. Tattersall and Dr. Burns) that, if any of the restrictions contained in the present covenant are unenforceable, the selling value of the plaintiffs' business will be pro tanto diminished, but I do not think that such a result is (as the deponents seem to suggest) sufficient justification for the restriction. In his affidavit Mr. Tattersall (who is manager of the British Medical Bureau) goes so far as to say that the restraint in the present case is reasonably necessary for the protection of the plaintiffs. It is necessary for me to point out that that question is for me to decide and that Mr. Tattersall is not, by qualification or otherwise, entitled to give evidence in that form. In any case, for the reasons I have given, I disagree with him.

H I propose, however, to rest my conclusion on the view that, fairly construed, the obligation of the defendant under cl. 12 of the agreement cannot be severed so as to consist of more than two separate covenants. I confess I have not arrived at my conclusion without some regret, for I take the view that a man ought to honour his part of a bargain, the corresponding obligations of which he expects to be observed by the other party, and it is no part of the duty of the court in such cases to relieve an obligor of bad bargains merely because they are bad. But my regrets are tempered by two considerations. First, it is to be remembered that in contracts between a master and servant the latter is necessarily at a disadvantage, and in cases of covenants in restraint of trade on the part of servants there is, I think, an obligation on the part of masters to be scrupulous to see that such covenants are framed with precision and care and do not attempt exaction beyond the requirements of propriety. On no view can the present covenant pass satisfactorily the first part of this test, though it is stated to be commonly imposed indiscriminately, be it noticed, upon assistants and vendors. Secondly, counsel for the defendant has stated that, whatever the result of the present action, the defendant is ready and willing to undertake for some period not to accept as patients any persons who were patients of the plaintiffs' business at the time when the defendant's service was terminated. The undertaking, when formulated, may be incorporated in the order of this court. Subject to such undertaking and to a recital of the parties' consent to treat the motion as the trial, the order will be that this action is dismissed with costs.

Motion dismissed with costs, the parties consenting to treat the motion as the trial, and the defendant undertaking for the period of 18 months from Mar., 1946, not to accept as patients any persons who were patients of the plaintiffs' business at the time when the defendant's service was terminated.

Solicitors: Hempsons (for the plaintiffs); Biddle, Thorne, Welsford & Barnes, agents for G. D. Cann & Hallett, Okehampton (for the defendant).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SUMMERS AND OTHERS v. MINISTER OF HEALTH.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), December 9, 10, 1946.]

Public Health—Housing—Compulsory purchase order—Confirmation by Minister—Matters to be considered by Minister—Originating notice of motion entered at Crown Office within 6 weeks after publication of notice of confirmation, but notice of motion not served on Minister or local authority within the 6 weeks—Whether notice of motion out of time—Power of court to enlarge time for service—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), sched. II, para. 2—R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74; Ord. 64, r. 7.

The objectors to a compulsory purchase order (made on Feb. 9, 1946), in sending their objections to the Ministry of Health, stated that the objections set out were "the principal grounds of objection." The Minister, after considering the objections and certain other documents which were before him, confirmed the compulsory purchase order, the confirmation order being published on May 4, 1946. The objectors made an application under the Housing Act, 1936, sched. II, para. 2, for the Minister's order to be quashed on the grounds (a) that a requirement of the Act had not been complied with, in that the Minister had failed properly or fully to consider their objections, no opportunity having been given to them to elaborate the objections which had been set out; (b) that documents which were before the Minister when he made his decision had not been made available to the objectors. Of the six documents objected to, three had been received by the Minister from another government department before the compulsory purchase order had been made (i.e., while the Minister was still acting in an administrative capacity) and two were communications between the Minister and the local authority, also written before that date. The sixth, dated Mar. 15, 1946, was from another government department to the local authority stating that that department raised no objection to the proposed use of the site for housing purposes. The originating notice of motion by which it was sought to quash the confirmation order was entered at the Crown Office on June 14, 1946, but the notice of motion was not served on the Minister or on the local authority until June 20, 1946, more than six weeks after the publication of the confirmation order and a preliminary point was taken by the Minister that the notice was out of time:—

Held: (i) the notice of motion was out of time because not only should the originating notice of motion have been entered at the Crown Office within 6 weeks from the date of the publication of the confirmation order as provided by sched. II, para. 2, to the Act of 1936, but also, under R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74, the notice of motion should have been served within that period on the Minister and on anyone else on whom it was to be served. The court had, however, power under R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 7, to enlarge the time for service, since the period for service was specified by the rules and not by the Act, the "application" (the period for which was specified by sched. II, para. 2, to the Act) being, as indicated by R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 71, the originating notice of motion.

(ii) it was not necessary for the Minister, before adjudicating on the matter, to send any of the documents in question to the objectors, and they had not been prejudiced by not having them.

Miller v. Minister of Health (2) and Offer v. Minister of Health (4) applied.

(iii) it was not established that the Minister had failed properly and in a correct manner to consider the objections and there was no ground for quashing the order.

Miller v. Minister of Health (2) followed.

[AS TO COMPULSORY PURCHASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 571—573, paras. 1207—1211; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp., Public Health, Nos. 502 m et seq.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Stafford v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 621; 110 J.P. 210; sub. nom. Mowsley No. 1 Compulsory Order, 175 L.T. 101.
- (2) Miller v. Minister of Health, [1946] K.B. 626; 110 J.P. 353.
- (3) Errington v. Minister of Health, [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; Digest Supp.
- (4) Offer v. Minister of Health, [1936] 1 K.B. 40; 105 L.J.K.B. 6; 153 L.T. 270; Digest Supp.

APPEAL under the Housing Acts, 1925-1944, against an order of the Minister of Health confirming a compulsory purchase order made by the rural district council of Atcham.

Notice of the confirmation of the order was published on May 4, 1946. On June 14, the objectors entered at the Crown Office an originating notice of motion asking for the Minister's order to be quashed on the ground that their interests had been substantially prejudiced by reason of a requirement of the Housing Act, 1936, not having been complied with. The notice was not served on the Minister until June 20, 1946. A preliminary point was taken by the Minister that the notice of motion was out of time, but the court was asked to hear the matter on its merits before dealing with the preliminary objection. The facts appear in the judgment.

A. W. L. Franklin for the applicants (the objectors).

H. L. Parker for the Minister.

MORRIS, J.: On February 9, 1946, the rural district council of Atcham made an order for the compulsory purchase of certain land. Notice of that order was given to the applicants on the present motion, and on Feb. 27 notice of objection was sent to the Minister of Health. The order for compulsory purchase was confirmed by the Minister on Apr. 23, 1946, notice thereof being given on Apr. 24, and on May 4, the order was published. The present originating notice of motion is brought on the ground stated therein, namely, that the order of the Minister should be quashed because the interests of the applicants have been substantially prejudiced by reason of a requirement of the Housing Act, 1936, not having been complied with. What is said is that the Minister failed to consider the objections of the applicants before confirming the order. Schedule II, para. 2, to the Act of 1936 provides that if any person is aggrieved by an order for compulsory purchase or a clearance order, or is otherwise aggrieved as set out in the paragraph, and:

... desires to question the validity thereof on the ground that it is not within the powers of this Act or that any requirement of this Act has not been complied with, he may, within 6 weeks after the publication of the notice of confirmation of the order, or of the approval of the plan, make an application for the purpose to the High Court ...

A preliminary point was taken in this case that the notice of motion was out of time. That matter was argued, but I was asked, whatever view I formed in regard to that objection, to hear this matter on its merits, and, after hearing the argument on the preliminary point, I proceeded so to do. I propose, therefore, first to deal with this matter on the merits of the submissions addressed to me, and afterwards to deal with the preliminary objection.

If an application is made to the High Court, sched. II, para. 2 (ii), to the Act of 1936 provides that the court :

if satisfied upon the hearing of the application that the order, or the approval of the plan, is not within the powers of this Act or that the interests of the applicant have been substantially prejudiced by any requirement of this Act not having been complied with, may quash the order, or the approval of the plan, either generally or in so far as it affects any property of the applicant.

The precise ground given in the present notice of motion being that a requirement of the Act has not been complied with in that the Minister failed to consider the objections of the applicants, it is necessary to consider what took place after the objections of the applicants were lodged.

The objections were sent to the Minister of Health on Feb. 27. They stated six grounds, stated to be "the principal grounds of objection." Schedule I, para. 3 (a), to the Act provides that, before submitting the order to the Minister, the local authority must publish in one or more newspapers a notice in the prescribed form and set out what that notice must state. No complaint is made in regard to that matter. By sched. I, para. 3 (b), it is provided that the local authority shall :

serve on every owner, lessee and occupier . . . a notice in the prescribed form stating the effect of the order and that it is about to be submitted to the Minister for confirmation and specifying the time within and the manner in which objections thereto can be made.

There is a prescribed form, and no point is taken that the notice in this case was not given in the appropriate manner. The notice informed the present applicants that the rural district council of Atcham had made a compulsory purchase order. It informed the applicants as to the way in which they could object, and it also informed them, in summary form, as to the requirements of the Acts in regard to the duties of the Minister. The notice in the latter part was in the following terms :

Where, however, the order is submitted to the Minister after Aug. 3, 1944, and before the expiration of 2 years from that date, the Housing (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1944, provides that where any objection is made to the order and is not withdrawn, the Minister may after considering the objection, confirm the order (with or without modification) without causing a public local inquiry to be held.

That is a reference to s. 2 of the Act of 1944 and the notice accurately states the effect of the section.

The present case came within the time limit indicated by that section. The Minister, therefore, was under a duty to consider the objection, but might decide not to hold a public local inquiry. The evidence which is before the court includes an affidavit from Mr. Thomas William Williams, a principal in the Housing Division of the Ministry of Health, who in the course of his official duties was responsible for the consideration of this compulsory purchase order. Mr. Williams says :

In such consideration I considered the objections made on behalf of the applicants herein by the letter of Feb. 27, 1946, from Messrs. Barber & Son . . .

On the face of it, therefore, it appears that the Minister did not fail to consider the objections of the applicants to the order before he confirmed the order, but the matter requires far deeper consideration, because what is said on behalf of the applicants is that the Minister did not fully or properly consider the objections. In particular, it is said that no opportunity was given to the applicants to elaborate the objections which they had formulated. Further, it is said that certain material and certain documents which were before the Minister were not made available to the applicants, and it is submitted that the documents in question ought to have been made available. On behalf of the applicants, reliance was placed on the decisions in both Stafford v. Minister of Health (1) and Miller v. Minister of Health (2), as well as on passages in Errington v. Minister of Health (3).

The documents which were before the Minister when the objections of the applicants were being considered are set out in the affidavit of Mr. Williams.

It is said by counsel for the applicants that, although there was no objection to the Minister looking at the documents referred to in Mr. Williams' affidavit, those documents ought to have been submitted to the applicants so that they might consider them. In this connection, counsel for the applicants relies on a passage in the judgment of HENN COLLINS, J., in Miller's case (2), where the judge said ([1946] K.B. 626, at pp. 628, 629):

A That does not mean, as the authorities have shown, that he is not to use any knowledge which has come to him, so to speak, extra-judicially, but all the material which has been formulated for his judicial consideration must be available to him on both sides.

B Further, in dealing with Miller's case (2), counsel for the applicants submits that there was far more material before the Minister in the present case than existed in Miller's case (2). Counsel for the applicants also says that there are other passages in the judgment of HENN COLLINS, J., in Miller's case (2) which assist him, for he submits that it would appear in the present case that the Minister did not accept the "principal heads of objection" formulated by the applicants in their notice, and that, not having accepted them, the Minister should have invited the applicants to elaborate those points. Counsel for the applicants calls attention to the fact that the notice of objection refers to the grounds of objection as "the principal grounds of objection," and submits that that was an indication that the applicants would wish to elaborate or to add to the grounds unless the Minister was accepting what they were, by the notice of objection, submitting.

C It is necessary to consider the nature of the documents which were before Mr. Williams (as he states in his affidavit) at the time when he was considering, in the course of his duty, the objections of the applicants. There was, first, a report of a conference held at Atcham on Jan. 1, 1946, attended by the engineer and surveyor to the Atcham rural district council, the county planning officer, and representatives of the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Health and of the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning. There was, secondly, a copy of a letter of Jan. 18, 1946, addressed by the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning to the clerk to the Atcham rural district council in which it was stated that, although no objection on planning or agricultural grounds would be raised to the development of the said site, it had been requested by the Ministry of Agriculture that consideration should be given to development taking place first at an alternative site. Thirdly, there was a copy of a letter, dated Jan 16, 1946, addressed by the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries to the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning. These three documents had been sent on Jan. 18, 1946 by the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning to the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Health.

F These documents all appear to have come into existence before what has been conveniently described as the lis came to be adjudicated on. In this connection, I think that what was said by GREER, L.J., in Offer v. Minister of Health (4), is of importance. He said ([1936] 1 K.B. 40, at p. 48):

G To my mind, Parliament intended that these semi-official duties should be conferred upon a Minister who naturally will have some knowledge of the matter before he begins his semi-judicial inquiry, and will possibly have had communications with the local authority before what I have called the "lis" is joined between the objecting property owners and the local authority, and who will therefore have some knowledge and have given some opinion about the matter.

I think, also, it is relevant to observe in Stafford v. Minister of Health (1), that CHARLES, J., in his judgment, said (175 L.T. 101):

H Before the matter was gone into at all, the Minister had, quite properly, taken the opinion of several people of competence and in positions of importance, such as Mr. Clay, the Ministry's regional architect. He visited the site, accompanied by Mr. Mitchell of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning and the council's sanitary inspector and surveyor, and he recommended that subject to clearance from the regional planning officer, the local authority be authorised to negotiate for the purchase of six properties, one of them being the site in question, the Mowsley site.

Reference to that circumstance is also found in the report in the LAW REPORTS ([1946] K.B. 621, at p. 622) where, in a statement of the facts, this sentence is to be found:

The Minister had previously taken the opinion of competent persons, including the Ministry's regional architect, who visited the land in question in company with an official of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning, and the sanitary inspector and surveyor of the rural district council, and recommended that, subject to the regional planning officer's approval, the local authority should be authorised to negotiate for the purchase of six properties, one of them being the appellant's land in question. In his judgment, in Miller's case (2), HENN COLLINS, J., refers to the distinction between material that had come into existence before the lis, and material which he describes as being material formulated for the judicial consideration of the Minister. A

It seems to me that the first three documents which I have mentioned in this case came into existence before the lis was joined, and that they were not documents which the Minister was obliged to submit to the applicants before the Minister came to a decision. The position in this regard is very different, as it seems to me, from the position with which CHARLES, J., was dealing in Stafford v. Minister of Health (1). In that case, after a landowner had submitted grounds of objection to the Minister, the Minister sent the notice and those grounds to the local authority for their observations thereon without informing the landowner. The local authority sent a detailed reply to the Minister, and it was with that situation that CHARLES, J., was dealing. In that connection, CHARLES, J., said ([1946] K.B. 621, at p. 625): B

If the rural district council's view was to be taken, and it was proper that it should be, it ought to have been communicated to the appellant, who should then have had an opportunity of presenting in adequate form the case which he had done no more than adumbrate by the headings in his grounds of objection. C

The three documents to which I have referred came into existence because of the normal practice of having a visit to a site, and of ascertaining the views of any other government departments that might be affected. I am told that it is the practice to obtain a clearance from other government departments—in other words, to ascertain whether they have any objection to the proposed acquisition of land. D

The other documents are as follows. The fourth was a letter dated Feb. 4, 1946, addressed by the clerk to the Atcham rural district council to the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Health. The fifth was a copy of a letter dated Feb. 8, 1946, addressed by the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Health to the clerk to the Atcham rural district council. Both those letters were in date prior to the lis being ready for adjudication. The sixth document was a copy of a letter dated Mar. 15, 1946, addressed by the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning to the clerk of the Atcham rural district council, confirming that, so far as the Ministry of Town and Country Planning and the Ministry of Agriculture were concerned, no objection was taken to the proposed use of the site. The affidavit says that this copy had been sent on Mar. 15 by the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning to the Midland Regional Office of the Ministry of Health. That letter from the regional planning officer states that he had pleasure in confirming that, so far as his department of the Ministry of Agriculture was concerned, no objections were raised to the proposed use of the site for housing purposes. That letter is dated Mar. 15, and is subsequent to the notice of objection being sent to the Minister, but it appears from the consideration of Mr. Williams' affidavit that the application of the council to the Minister for his confirmation was not in fact made until the second half of March, and I think it is reasonable to assume that it was not made until after the date of this letter. Apart, however, from that consideration, the letter is comparable in its contents with the letter dated Sept. 13, 1945, which was the document considered by HENN COLLINS, J., in Miller v. Minister of Health (2). That was a letter from the regional planning officer to the clerk of the particular rural district council, and by it information was given that certain sites were considered satisfactory, the observations of other interested government departments having been received and considered. That letter, and, indeed, the letter of Mar. 15 to which I have referred, indicate that other government departments which might be interested had informed the Minister of Health that they did not wish to present any considerations or objections. E F G H

A In my view, none of these documents was a document which the Minister was obliged to send to the applicants before he adjudicated on this matter. There was a seventh document, or rather series of documents, consisting of the reports of the district valuer and the mineral valuer in regard to the site. Quite properly, no point was taken by counsel for the applicants in regard to those documents, which dealt purely with matters in regard to which the district valuer and the mineral valuer could give information, and they are in an entirely different category. It seems to me, therefore, that no complaint can be made by the applicants that these documents were not sent to them, and that it cannot be urged that the Minister had failed properly or judicially to consider their objections or that there had been anything by way of violation of the principle of natural justice. I cannot conceive that it would have assisted the applicants to know that other departments did not object to the confirmation order or that the Ministry of Agriculture were not supporting the objections of the applicants.

B That, I think, is sufficient to indicate the reasons why I consider that this motion must fail, but, in deference to the argument of counsel for the applicants, I must say a word in regard to some submissions that he made about Miller's case (2). He said that in the present case the Minister had a greater volume of material before him than existed in Miller's case (2). That really only means that in the present case, there are six or seven documents now being considered, whereas in Miller's case (2), there was one document that gave rise to the legal argument. I do not think that that makes any difference in regard to the principle of the matter.

C Lastly, counsel for the applicants submitted that in the present case it would appear that the Minister of Health had not accepted what the objectors urged in their heads of objection, and that it was therefore obligatory for the Minister to have invited the objectors to elaborate. It does not follow that because the Minister confirmed the order, he did not consider that there was validity from the objectors' point of view in many of the grounds indicated by them. Counsel for the applicants relied on the words "principal grounds of objection." I do not think that by the use of the word "principal" objectors are saying that they propose to follow up their letter by some further letter. The objectors are invited to send objections, and it is open to them to draft their objections as fully as they choose. If they use the words "principal grounds of objection," that may only mean that they are urging the objections that they regard as their principal objections and those which they wish the Minister to consider, but, if one looks at the particular objections here, it may well be that the Minister considered that what the objectors were urging was correct in substance. For example, by the first objection, the applicants said that the land proposed to be scheduled was land that was absolutely vital for the proper occupation, management and agricultural development of the farm. The Minister may have been persuaded of that. He may have accepted that suggestion. He may have accepted also what was set out in other objections, but he may have thought that other considerations which he had to take into account were overriding considerations and that he ought in the public interest to confirm the order. It is argued that different considerations apply to grounds 5 and 6, in which it is stated that more suitable sites were available. It is to be observed that in Miller's case (2), one of the grounds of objection was ([1946] K.B. 626):

G . . . that there was other more suitable land available for the council's housing scheme and that it was not necessary for the purpose of the scheme to take the land in question.

H In spite of the fact that there was that objection, HENN COLLINS, J., dismissed the appeal of the objectors. That objection, as it seems to me, raises an issue of policy regarding which the Minister, acting in the capacity in which he has to act, has all the material available for arriving at a correct determination. In my view, therefore, the ways in which counsel for the applicants seeks to use the authority of Miller's case (2) do not avail him to succeed in this application. In my opinion, therefore, it is not established that the Minister failed properly and in a correct manner to consider the objections of the applicants, and, therefore, this appeal fails.

I can deal briefly with the preliminary point that was raised in regard to time. The confirmation of the Minister was published on May 4, 1946, and sched. II, para. 2, to the Act of 1936 provides that an objector may:

. . . within six weeks after the publication of the notice of confirmation of the order . . . make an application for the purpose to the High Court.

R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 71, provides :

An application under the Housing Act, 1936, sched II, para. 2 . . . shall be made by an originating notice of motion to a judge of the High Court selected for the purpose by the Lord Chancellor.

R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74, provides :

The notice of motion shall, within the time limited by the said respective enactments for making the application, be entered at the Crown Office and be served on the appropriate Minister and also :—(i) if the application relates to a clearance order or a compulsory purchase order on the authority by whom the order was made. . . .

Six weeks from May 4 elapsed on June 15. The originating notice of motion in this case was entered at the Crown Office on June 14, i.e., within the six weeks. It was not served upon the Minister until June 20, i.e., after the six weeks. Though I have not the precise date, I understand that it was not served on the council until after the six weeks. The first question that arises is on R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74, whether the service on the Minister and on the council must be within the six weeks as well as the entering of the notice of motion at the Crown Office. My view is quite clear—that within the six weeks there should be both entry at the Crown Office and the service on the Minister and on anyone else who has to be served. In my view, therefore, this notice of motion was not served on the Minister or on the council within the appropriate time, and so was out of time.

The next question that arises, however, is whether there is any power in the court, under R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 7, to enlarge the time, for I was invited by counsel for the applicants, in the event of my being against him on the construction of R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74, to enlarge the time. This depends on the question whether the application to the High Court includes both the entering of the originating notice of motion and the service on any persons who must be served. If all the steps (i.e., the entering in the Crown Office and service) must take place to constitute an application, then the application was not made within the time limit specified by statute. If, however, the application is to be deemed to be the originating notice of motion entered at the Crown Office, then such entry was within the statutory period, but the service was not effected within the period specified by the rules. If the service was not within the period specified by rules as opposed to statute, then under R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 7, there would be power in the court to enlarge the time. In my view, the application to the High Court is indicated by R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 71, to be the originating notice of motion which was entered within the six weeks. The service was specified by the rules, and, though it was not effected within the time indicated, I think that there is power in the court to enlarge the time. In the present case, therefore, it is within my power to enlarge the time under R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 7. In the circumstances it would, I think, be appropriate to enlarge the time, and so permit the applicants to present their case to the court. The motion, in my view, fails, and must be dismissed.

Application dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Tamplin, Joseph & Flux, agents for Dean & Espley, Wellington, Salop (for the applicants) ; Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the respondents).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILLIS AND ANOTHER v. BROOKS AND OTHERS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Oliver, J.), October 24, 25, November 12, 1946.]

Libel—Trade union—Right of union to sue—Allegation of “rigging” a ballot.
Trade Unions—Libel against union—Right of union to sue—Allegation of “rigging” a ballot.

A Defamatory statements were published in a newspaper accusing a trade union of deliberately “rigging” a ballot of its members.

HELD : the union itself could maintain an action for libel, for its entity could not be divided up into different parts so as to deprive it of its right to sue if it were libelled, and it was no defence to such an action to say that the accusation was not against the union but only against its officers.

National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian (3) applied.

B [AS TO DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS CONCERNING CORPORATIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 390, 391, para. 473; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 13, p. 408, Nos. 1282-1285.

AS TO ACTIONS BY TRADE UNIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 529, 530, paras. 829, 830.]

Cases referred to :

- C (1) Williams v. Beaumont (1833), 10 Bing 260; 3 Moo. & S. 705; 3 L.J.C.P. 31; 10 Digest 1220, 8628.
 (2) Manchester Corp'n. v. Williams, [1891] 1 Q.B. 94; 60 L.J.Q.B. 23; 63 L.T. 805; 54 J.P. 712; 13 Digest 408, 1284.
 (3) National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian, [1945] 2 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 81; 115 L.J.K.B. 43; 174 L.T. 8.

D ACTION for damages for libel. The plaintiffs, the London Society of Compositors, a trade union, sued the editor, publishing company and printers of an article appearing in TRUTH. The main defence was that the union, as a whole, had no cause of action since the article in question was an accusation, not against the union, but against its officers. The facts and the article complained of appear in the judgment.

Gilbert Paull, K.C., and F. H. Lawton for the plaintiffs.

E Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and H. P. J. Milmo for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 12. OLIVER, J. : This is an action for libel brought by the secretary of the London Society of Compositors and by the trade union itself against the editor, publishers, and printers of an article appearing in TRUTH on Oct. 26, 1945. The first plaintiff accepted a sum of money paid into court by the defendants with a denial of liability, and he fell out of the action.

F The article complained of is as follows :

G TRUE TO TYPE ? One of my many compositor friends has shown me a circular recently issued by the London Society of Compositors giving notice of a ballot to be taken on affiliation to the International Typographical Secretariat. Neither my friend nor the fellow members of his “ chapel ” had heard of this organisation before. They are still in the dark about its objects, as the union [i.e., the plaintiff society] has taken no steps to enlighten them ; it is, in fact, highly secretive about the matter. The circular was sent to fathers of the chapel (i.e., chairmen of the house branches) who are enjoined to apply for “ the exact number of ballot papers required.” One would expect a democratic union like the London Society of Compositors to send to each branch one ballot paper for each member. Otherwise, there is bound to be a strong suspicion of selective balloting ; it would obviously be quite simple to issue a ballot paper only to those who are internationally minded and would vote for anything having an international flavour. To get a truly democratic result the union should clearly issue a ballot paper to each member, and with it a statement explaining the International Secretariat, giving reasons for and against affiliation. It is to be feared that our powerful trade unions have long discarded what many of them openly call “ old-fashioned ” democracy. Long and successful practice in the manipulation of the undemocratic “ block-vote ” has made trade unions expert in devising ballots guaranteed always to give a desired result.

For the plaintiff union it was contended that this article clearly conveyed to readers that the ballot named in the article was deliberately “ rigged ” by substantially confining the opportunity to vote to such members as were known to be "internationally minded." For the defendants it was contended that the article was incapable of any such meaning and that, if fairly construed, it came to no more than a criticism of a system of voting which might be used to secure the result desired. It was expressly conceded by counsel for the defendants that it was no part of his case that there was a word of truth in the suggestion that anything improper had in fact been done.

[HIS LORDSHIP held that the article contained "an unequivocal suggestion that in the case of this ballot the plaintiff union rigged the voting in the way suggested and does so habitually in other ballots where a result is desired," and he continued:] The second contention of counsel for the defendants was that in the circumstances of this case there was no actionable libel on the trade union. Counsel for the defendants drew my attention to a series of old authorities beginning with Williams v. Beaumont (1) and continuing down to Manchester Corporation v. Williams (2). Counsel for the plaintiff union drew my attention to FRASER ON LIBEL AND SLANDER, 7th ed., p. 90, in which the editors criticise the decision in Manchester Corporation v. Williams (2) and suggest that it would not be upheld in the Court of Appeal. The question came before the Court of Appeal in National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian (3), after reading which I make bold to express my agreement with the comment of the editors of FRASER ON LIBEL AND SLANDER. Counsel for the defendants did not seriously contend that an action for libel imputing something very like corruption, as in this case, would not lie in any circumstances at the suit of a trade union, but he put forward the proposition that this was an accusation that one part of the union, namely, its officers, had cheated of their right to vote another part of the union, namely, those of its members who were not "internationally minded," and he argued that in such circumstances the union as a whole could not be plaintiff. It appears to me that the Court of Appeal have decided in Gillian's case (3) that there is no difference in this matter between a trade union and a limited company, and that the entity of a trade union cannot be divided into different parts consisting of various of its members so as to deprive it of its right to sue if it is libelled. So to decide would be to say that a member of the union could not sue the union if it libelled him, or that a shareholder in a company could not sue the company in such a case. I think the contention of counsel for the plaintiff union is sound and that this contention of the defendants fails. On the question of damages, I call this rather a bad and spiteful libel, published in a paper with a wide circulation without the slightest inquiry into the facts. I award damages of £500, with costs, and there will be judgment for that amount against each of the defendants.

Judgment for the plaintiff union for £500 damages with costs.

Solicitors : Shaen, Roscoe & Co. (for the plaintiffs) ; Lewis & Lewis & Gisborne & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

TENDLER v. SPROULE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 14, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Recovery of possession—Breach of an obligation of the tenancy—Covenant not to use premises for any business but only “as a private dwelling-house”—Tenant taking in paying guests—Reasonableness of order for possession—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1) (a), sched. I, para. (a).

By a tenancy agreement the tenant agreed “not to use the premises . . . for any trade or business but keep the same as a private dwelling-house only.” After the contractual tenancy had expired, the tenant held over as a statutory tenant under the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The tenant having taken in two lodgers or “paying guests,” the landlord brought an action for possession under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 (1) (a) and sched. I, para. (a), on the ground that there had been a breach of an obligation of the tenancy under the contract.

HELD: (i) the taking in of lodgers or “paying guests” was a breach of the covenant not to use the premises for any business, and also of the covenant to keep them “as a private dwelling-house only,” and there had, therefore, been a breach of an obligation of the tenancy within sched. I, para. (a), of the Act of 1933.

Thorn v. Madden (1) followed.

(ii) whether it was reasonable to make an order for possession was a matter for the discretion of the judge. When evidence was led which was directed to the question of reasonableness and the judge gave a decision giving possession to the landlord, the Court of Appeal would always assume that he had applied his mind to the question of reasonableness before giving his decision.

[AS TO RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF PREMISES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 227-230, paras. 249, 251; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 157-160, Nos. 2905-2915, and Nos. 2918-2932.]

AS TO ORDER FOR POSSESSION ON BREACH OF AN OBLIGATION OF THE TENANCY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329, 330, paras. 392, 393.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Thorn v. Madden, [1925] Ch. 847; 31 Digest 158, 2909.

(2) Hobson v. Tulloch, [1898] 1 Ch. 424; 67 L.J. Ch. 205; 78 L.T. 224; 40 Digest 320, 2713.

(3) Porter v. Gibbons and Bissett (1904), 48 Sol. Jo. 559; on appeal, 48 Sol. Jo. 814; 31 Digest 158, 2908.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour DEPUTY JUDGE MARKS, at Kingston-on-Thames County Court.

In an action for possession the judge held that the taking in of two paying lodgers by the tenant constituted a carrying on of a trade or business contrary to a covenant in the tenancy agreement, and he made an order for possession under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 (1) (a) and sched. I, para. (a). The tenant appealed. The facts appear in the judgment.

G. H. Crispin for the tenant.

S. N. Bernstein for the landlord.

MORTON, L.J.: Counsel for the tenant has said all that could possibly be said in support of this appeal, but, in my view, the decision of the deputy county court judge was right.

On May 28, 1941, the predecessor in title of the landlord entered into an agreement with the tenant. That agreement was made between one Ellis, thereafter called the landlord, of the one part, and Mr. Sproule, thereafter called the tenant, of the other part. The landlord agreed to let and the tenant agreed to rent premises known as No. 35 Claremont Road, Teddington, in the county of Middlesex, for a term of three years from Feb. 1, 1941. There is no doubt that the contractual tenancy has expired and that the tenant has held over as a statutory tenant under the protection of the Rent Restrictions

Acts. The lease contained an agreement by the tenant :

... not to use the said premises or any part thereof for any trade or business but keep the same as a private dwelling-house only and not to exhibit any notice plate of name or profession on any part of the said premises.

On Dec. 18, 1945, the plaintiff bought the property, subject to the existing occupation, under the Acts, of the tenant, and the point which now arises is this. It is said that by taking in two lodgers or paying guests the tenant has committed a breach of the covenant which I have read; that the case comes within the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I, para. (a); and that the deputy county court judge had jurisdiction to make an order for possession in favour of the landlord if he thought it reasonable so to do. The deputy county court judge held that, following the judgment of TOMLIN, J., in Thorn v. Madden (1), what had occurred constituted a carrying on of a trade or business contrary to the covenant in the agreement, and he gave judgment for the landlord for possession in six months. A

Before us, counsel for the tenant has taken two points—first, that there was no breach of the covenant, and, secondly, that, even if there was a breach of covenant, it was not reasonable for the deputy county court judge to make an order for possession. Dealing with the first point, all that we know in the present case is that during the tenancy the tenant took in (to quote the judge) “two paying lodgers.” In my view, the taking in of two paying lodgers is a breach of a covenant “not to use the said premises or any part thereof for any business.” I think also that it is a breach of the covenant to keep the premises “as a private dwelling-house only.” Counsel for the tenant has pointed out that in Thorn v. Madden (1) the tenant had taken active steps to secure paying guests by writing letters to various parties, whereas in the present case we do not know from the evidence or from the finding of the judge what steps, if any, were taken to obtain those paying guests. In Thorn v. Madden (1) TOMLIN, J., said ([1925] Ch. 847, at p. 851): B

I think that, where, as here, a lady is of set purpose occupying a house which she is aware is beyond her means and, for the purpose of supplementing her means and enabling her to live in the house, is securing, to use a neutral term, visitors to come and live there for short or long periods upon payment for board and residence, it is impossible to say that the house is being used as a private residence only . . . I think that such a case as this . . . amounts to carrying on a business. C

I do not think that the decision of TOMLIN, J., was based on the fact that the tenant wrote letters to persons to endeavour to induce them to become paying guests. I think that the real gist of the decision is that the taking in of paying guests is a business and that a house which, or part of which, is used to take in paying guests is not a house which is being kept as a private dwelling-house only. In the course of his judgment TOMLIN, J., said (ibid., at p. 851): D

This is not like a case between two friends, when to the one desiring to pay a visit the other says: “I cannot afford to keep you, but I shall be delighted to see you if you will pay.” E

I express no view on the question whether that would or would not be a breach of such a covenant as this court has to construe to-day. That question can be decided if and when it arises. F

With regard to the other cases which have been cited to us, the decision of ROMER, J., in Hobson v. Tulloch (2) supports the view which I have formed, and I do not think that the decision of KEREWICH, J., in Porter v. Gibbons and B'ssett (3) was well-founded. The case is very shortly reported, and it may be that there were matters before the judge which do not appear in the report, but according to the report (48 Sol. Jo. 559) the defendant, who was the lessee : G

... had received friends and acquaintances who, with their families, stayed for long periods and contributed to the cost of carrying on the establishment by a fixed weekly or monthly payment. H

It seems to me that this was a breach of the covenant “not to use the said premises except as a private dwelling-house.” For these reasons I am of opinion that in the present case there has been a breach of an obligation of the tenancy.

As to the second question, whether it was reasonable to make an order for possession, that is, of course, a matter within the discretion of the judge.

Evidence was given as to the position of the landlord. She said :

I am married. I have a child of 17 months. My husband was discharged from the forces sick in 1943.

And, apparently, she was living with her mother. I can see no grounds on which this court can interfere with the exercise of his discretion by the deputy county court judge. It was at one time suggested that he had not applied his mind to the question of reasonableness at all, but we are informed by counsel for the landlord, who appeared in the court below, that the judge said he considered it reasonable to make an order, although that does not appear in his written judgment. Apart from that, when evidence is led which is directed to the question of reasonableness, and when the judge gives a decision giving possession to the landlord, this court will always assume that he has applied his mind to the question of reasonableness before giving his decision. For these reasons I think that this appeal must be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree, and have nothing to add.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I also agree and have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Culross & Co. (for the appellant); Jacques, Asquith & Jacques (for the respondent).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re VICKER'S LEASE ; POCOCK v. VICKERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 13, 1947.]

Lease—Fishing rights—Grant for a term of years—Retention by owner of "one rod for her own use"—Effect of retention.

By a lease, dated Dec. 15, 1933, the owner granted to the lessee the exclusive right of fishing in the River T. and the right to have and carry away the fish when caught together with the right of access and egress to the river and of passing and repassing along its banks for a term of 21 years from Dec. 25, 1933, at a certain rent. By cl. 3, the owner retained "for her own use a rod in the said fishing." The lessee died on May 24, 1943, and the owner died on Feb. 19, 1946. The question for determination was whether the right which the owner had reserved under cl. 3 conferred on her an inalienable life interest or whether all rights under it came to an end on her death :—

HELD : on the true construction of the lease, the provision in cl. 3 was not limited to the owner personally during her life, but reserved to her a beneficial interest in a rod in the fishing during the term of the lease.

[AS TO RESERVATION OF FISHING RIGHTS, see HALSBURY, Halsam Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 110, 111, para. 118,; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 25, p. 20, Nos. 168-171.]

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the construction of a lease.

A. C. Nesbitt for the executors of lessee.

G. C. D. S. Dunbar for the executors of owner.

ROXBURGH, J. : By a lease dated Dec. 15, 1933, made between Bertha Vickers, of The Mill House, Greatbridge, near Romsey, in the county of Southampton, spinster (thereinafter called the owner), of the one part, and Percy Coventry Tarbutt (thereinafter called the tenant), of the other part, the owner thereby granted and demised to the tenant the exclusive right, privilege and liberty of shooting (subject to such rights already given) over the land coloured pink and of fishing in the River Test as shown on the plan annexed hereto in the parish of Romsey in the county of Southampton, and the right to have and carry away the fish when caught together with the right of access and egress thereto and of passing and repassing along the banks of the said river [and certain other hereditaments] to hold to the tenant for the term of twenty one years from December 25, 1933 [at a certain rent.]

Clause 3 is as follows :

It is hereby understood and agreed that the owner shall retain for her own use a rod in the said fishing but not on either bank between the Mill and Greatbridge.

By Clause 4:

The tenant hereby covenants with the owner that he will observe and perform the provisions and stipulations contained in the first schedule.

I need not read the provisions of the first schedule in detail, but they impose on the tenant far-reaching obligations for the preservation of the fishing.

The question which I have to determine is what was the extent of the right which the owner reserved under cl. 3. Miss Vickers died on Feb. 19, 1946. Mr. Tarbutt had already died on May 24, 1943, and his executors contend that on the death of Miss Vickers all rights under cl. 3 came to an end. There is in the lease no reference to the successors in title of either the owner or the lessee, but it is conceded that the lease itself remains in force notwithstanding the death of both the original parties and that in every other place in which the word "owner" occurs in this lease—and it occurs in a good many places—it includes not only Miss Vickers but also her successors in title. It is, however, said that in cl. 3 the word "owner" is to be restricted to Miss Vickers personally by reason of the words "for her own use."

Mr. Nesbitt, on behalf of the executors of the lessee, has submitted that the true effect of cl. 3 was to confer on Miss Vickers an inalienable life interest. He says that she could not have authorised even her nephew to fish. He argues that she might herself have fished even though she had ceased to have any interest in the reversion, and he asks me to give that meaning to this reservation or exception—I do not think it makes much difference which it is—because of the words "for her own use." I do not feel able to give that meaning to those words. It seems to me that the draughtsman contemplates the fishing, which is the subject-matter of this lease, as consisting of a bundle of rods and visualises the owner as granting the rods, but retaining one rod for her own use. I do not think that the words "for her own use" involve any conception except the conception that that rod is to belong beneficially to the owner. It is a narrow and difficult point, but, bearing in mind that the tenant had only a term of years and, therefore, could not grant Miss Vickers a life interest, bearing in mind that there is no reference in terms to the lady's life at all, and bearing in mind the extraordinary consequence that would follow from Mr. Nesbitt's submission, namely, that she could not even have authorised a nephew to use a rod, on the whole I prefer the view which I have stated.

I will make a declaration in the following form:

Upon the true construction of the lease, the provision in cl. 3 thereof was not limited to Bertha Vickers personally during her life, but reserved to her a beneficial interest in a rod in the said fishing during the term of the lease which was capable of devolving on her personal representatives.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Holmes, Son & Pott (for the lessee); Montagu's & Cox & Cardale, agents for Branson & Son, Sheffield (for the owner).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. NATIONAL ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL, Ex parte MIDGLEY HARMER, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL, (Lord Greene, M.R., Morton and Somervell, L.JJ.),
December 20, 1946.]

Emergency Legislation—National Arbitration Tribunal—Jurisdiction—"Trade dispute"—Claim by employees for increase in wages following an agreement between an employers' confederation and trade unions—Employers in question not parties to agreement—Employers already paying higher rate of wages than that mentioned in agreement—Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, (S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1305), arts. 5, 7.

Under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58 AA (1), the Minister of Labour and National Service was empowered to make Orders (inter alia): "(a) for establishing a tribunal for the settlement of trade disputes . . . (c) for requiring employers to observe such terms and conditions of employment as may be determined in accordance with the order to be, or to be not less favourable than, the recognised terms and conditions." By the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, the National Arbitration Tribunal was set up. By art. 5 of the Order there was an obligation on employers in any particular trade or industry to observe recognised terms and conditions of employment, and by art. 7 "trade dispute" was defined as "any dispute or difference between employers and workmen . . . connected with . . . the terms of the employment." On May 23, 1945, the Minister referred to the tribunal a dispute arising out of a claim by some of the employees of M.H., Ltd., for an increase of pay under the terms of an agreement, dated Aug. 9, 1944, between the Engineering and Allied Employers' National Federation and certain trade unions. M.H., Ltd., who were not a party to that agreement, were paying their employees at a higher rate than that mentioned in the agreement, and they contended that the agreement did not, therefore, apply to them, that art. 5 of the Order of 1940 did not make it apply, and that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the dispute.

HELD : the dispute between M.H., Ltd., and their employees was a "trade dispute" within the meaning of the Order of 1940 and the National Arbitration Tribunal had jurisdiction to entertain the dispute.

[FOR THE CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT AND NATIONAL ARBITRATION ORDER, 1940, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 33, p. 734].

APPEAL by the employers, Midgley Harmer, Ltd., from an order of a Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division (LORD GODDARD, C.J., HUMPHREYS and SINGLETON, JJ.), dated May 31, 1946, dismissing a motion for an order of prohibition directed to the National Arbitration Tribunal to prohibit them from entering into the consideration of a particular reference.

The Minister of Labour and National Service had referred to the tribunal, under the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, a dispute arising out of a claim by certain workmen employed by Midgley Harmer, Ltd., for increases in rates of pay under the terms of an agreement, dated Aug. 9, 1944, between the Engineering and Allied Employers' National Federation and certain trade unions. Midgley Harmer, Ltd., were paying their employees at a higher rate than that mentioned in the agreement, and they claimed that, therefore, the agreement did not apply to them, that art. 5 of the Order of 1940 was inapplicable, and that the National Arbitration Tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the dispute. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Robert Fortune for the employers.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.) and W. Arthian Davies for the Minister of Labour and National Service.

Lord Meston for the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : The appellants are an electrical firm, Midgley Harmer, Ltd., who employ a number of female employees, and we are told that the wages that they have been in the habit of paying have always been higher than those generally prevalent in the industry. On May 23 1945, the Minister of Labour and National Service, purporting to act under the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, art. 2, referred to the National Arbitration Tribunal what is described as a dispute. The nature of the dispute is set out in the schedules to that order of reference. The parties were Midgley Harmer, Ltd. and the female members of a union known as the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation employed by Midgley Harmer, Ltd. in the machine shop and at inspecting and assembling. The particulars of the dispute were as follows :

The dispute arises out of a claim made by the workmen mentioned in sched. I for increases in rates of pay under the terms of the agreement dated Aug. 9, 1944, between the Engineering and Allied Employers' National Federation and certain trade unions.

The dispute, in substance, is this. It is said on behalf of the workpeople that, under the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, they are entitled to certain increases of wage which that agreement provided for, irrespective of what wages they were previously receiving. The employers, on the other hand, say that they are not bound to give the increases referred to, having regard to the fact that the level of wages they were paying to their female employees was already as high as it was. It is argued on behalf of the employers that the National Arbitration Tribunal has no jurisdiction to entertain this dispute, for reasons which I shall endeavour to explain in a moment. Before I do so, I will refer to the Orders which constitute the National Arbitration Tribunal and lay down its jurisdiction.

Under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58AA (1), the Minister of Labour and National Service, "with a view to preventing work being interrupted by trade disputes," was empowered to make provision by Order for a number of matters. The only ones that are relevant to the present question are these :

(a) for establishing a tribunal for the settlement of trade disputes, and for regulating the procedure of the tribunal . . . (c) for requiring employers to observe such terms and conditions of employment as may be determined in accordance with the Order to be, or to be not less favourable than, the recognised terms and conditions.

Under the powers so given, the Minister made the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, art. 1 of which is as follows :

For the purpose of settling trade disputes which cannot otherwise be determined there shall be constituted by the Minister a tribunal to be called "the National Arbitration Tribunal" and the provisions of the schedule to this Order shall have effect with respect to the constitution and proceedings of the tribunal.

Then follow various provisions prescribing the conditions and the manner in which trade disputes are to be referred to the National Arbitration Tribunal. The only limit on the jurisdiction of the tribunal which appears there is that the matters that can be referred to it are confined to trade disputes. The definition of "trade dispute" is to be found in art. 7 of the Order. It is as follows :

... "trade dispute" means any dispute or difference between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen connected with the employment or non-employment, or the terms of the employment, or with the conditions of labour, of any person.

It appears to me to be really incapable of argument that, on the true construction of that definition, the present dispute is not a trade dispute within the meaning of the Order. The employers, on the one hand, and the workpeople, on the other, are in dispute or difference connected with the terms of employment, namely, the wages which the employees are to be paid. Prima facie, therefore, the matter is clearly a trade dispute in respect of which the National Arbitration Tribunal is the competent body to decide. I must, however, explain more about these Orders to bring out the point which I understand counsel for the employers to be making. The Minister was given power, under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58AA (1) (c), to make provision :

for requiring employers to observe such terms and conditions of employment as may be determined in accordance with the Order to be, or to be not less favourable than, the recognised terms and conditions.

Pursuant thereto the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, provides in art. 5 for an obligation on employers to observe what are described as "recognised terms and conditions." Putting it shortly, the machinery adopted is of this nature. The object of art. 5 is to compel all employers to fall into line with such terms and conditions as have been negotiated in the industry by representative bodies of employers, on the one hand, and by trade unions, on the other. In other words, its object is to bring the terms and conditions observed by all employers, including those who are not bound by such a national or general trade agreement by being parties to it, (being, perhaps, outside the federation), up to the same level as those recognised in the negotiated trade agreement. They need not, however, necessarily be brought up to that precise scale, because the regulation provides an alternative, namely, "conditions . . . not less favourable than the recognised terms and conditions". Article 5 (1) is as follows :—

Where in any trade or industry in any district there are in force terms and conditions of employment which have been settled by machinery of negotiation or arbitration to which the parties are organizations of employers and trade unions representative respectively of substantial proportions of the employers and workers engaged in that trade or industry in that district (hereinafter referred to as "recognised terms and conditions") all employers in that trade or industry in that district shall observe the recognised terms and conditions or such terms and conditions of employment as are not less favourable than the recognised terms and conditions.

The agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, mentioned in sched. II of the reference, was an agreement dealing with the wages of females and providing for certain increases. It was made between the Engineering and Allied Employers' National Federation, on behalf of the employers, and the Amalgamated Engineering Union, the Transport and General Workers Union and the National Union of General and Municipal Workers, on behalf of the workmen. Midgley Harmer, Ltd., were not parties to that agreement, and it is to meet such a case as this that art. 5 of the Order of 1940 was made. The employers' case, as far as I understand it, is of this nature. They say that this agreement, which, for convenience, I shall call the national agreement, does not provide for increases to be given to female workers save in the case of those who are earning wages at rates mentioned in the agreement itself. It does not apply, they argue, and art. 5 does not make it applicable, to a case where the wages of the female workers are already above the scales mentioned in the agreement. Therefore, it is said, the National Arbitration Tribunal has no jurisdiction to take this controversy into consideration, in other words, it is not competent to the employees to say that this agreement applies to them and gives them the right, pursuant to art. 5 of the Order of 1940, to the increase which they are demanding. The employees say that the effect of the agreement, on its true construction, as put into force against the employers under art. 5 of the Order, gives to the female employees of Midgley Harmer, Ltd. the right to the increases mentioned, irrespective of what they were earning before.

Why that does not constitute a trade dispute, I am afraid I am incapable of understanding. I have endeavoured to follow the argument of counsel for the employers and, while understanding it, I am unable to detect in it any foundation at all. He tried to fortify his argument by a reference to a previous decision of the National Arbitration Tribunal in a case which, for all practical purposes, we are told, was on all fours with the present case. That decision is described as Award No. 696 of the tribunal. The dispute was described in the reference in that case as a dispute arising out of a claim made by the workmen that the company should observe the agreement dated Aug. 9, 1944, which is the same agreement as in this case. The tribunal, in its award, made it clear that it had directed its mind to the question whether or not the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, on its true construction and as compulsorily applied to the employers under art. 5 of the Order, compelled the employers to give an increase of wages mentioned in the agreement, irrespective of what the workers had been earning before. They addressed their minds to that very question and said that the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, provided for an advance on the rate which each worker was receiving immediately before Aug. 1, 1944, whatever such rate may have been. So there is the very same question, and the National Arbitration Tribunal construed the national agreement in that sense. They have, of course, exclusive jurisdiction and it is not for this court, or for any other court, to say whether their construction was right or wrong, but the question whether it was right or wrong has nothing to do with their jurisdiction. Once a matter falls within their jurisdiction, they are entitled to decide it. Counsel for the employers says that, when he comes before the tribunal, he will be met by this previous decision, and the probabilities are that the tribunal will follow what they have already decided. It may be that they will. I am not suggesting that they will or that they should. They have, undoubtedly, power to come to whatever decision they think is proper and in accordance with the language of the relevant documents, but the fact that they followed this decision, if they did, would not mean that they were doing something outside their jurisdiction. It would merely mean, if the view of counsel for the employers of the meaning of the national agreement is right, that they were deciding wrongly. I cannot understand how that situation can afford any support for the suggestion that they would be acting outside their jurisdiction if they entertained the reference. It seems to me it is based on a confusion between two conceptions, (i) the rightness or wrongness of a decision, and (ii) the jurisdiction to make that decision. These are two different things.

Counsel for the employers also argued that, if the tribunal has jurisdiction on the language of the Order of 1940 to treat this present controversy as a trade dispute within their competence, then it would follow that the Order, in so far as it gives them that jurisdiction, must be ultra vires the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 58AA. I cannot find that counsel gave any reason for such a submission, which seems to me, with all respect to him, to be perfectly hopeless. It is clear, first that the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940, on its true construction, gives ample jurisdiction to deal with this dispute, which is a trade dispute within the meaning of the Order, and that the Order, in so far as it does so, is competently made under reg. 58AA. I have done no more than express the conclusions to which the Divisional Court came. I should have been satisfied to accept what they have said without adding anything of my own, but the point is, possibly of general interest, and I thought it desirable, as it had been fully presented to us by counsel for the employers, to say in my own words why I agree with the conclusion of the Divisional Court. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MORTON, L.J.: I agree. In the present case there is a dispute as to the meaning and effect of the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944. In my judgment, that is plainly a trade dispute within the definition contained in the Conditions of Employment and National Arbitration Order, 1940. The argument of counsel for the employers really amounts to this: "The construction which my clients seek to place on the agreement of Aug. 9, 1944, is clearly right. If the National Arbitration Tribunal decides against my clients, it will be deciding wrongly. On Feb. 28, 1945, in a similar case, the National Arbitration Tribunal did decide wrongly, and I am apprehensive that they will do the same again." That is not an objection to jurisdiction. It is merely a suggestion that the tribunal has misconstrued the agreement once and will misconstrue it again. It is not for this court to form any view about the meaning of the agreement. That is entirely a matter for the tribunal, and I, of course, have formed no view one way or the other. I see no reason to doubt that, if counsel for the employers convinces the tribunal either that this is a different case from the one which they decided on Feb. 28, 1945, or that their decision on the construction of the agreement on that occasion was wrong, the tribunal will give effect to his argument. The matter is entirely one for them, and I can see no ground on which the objection to jurisdiction can be sustained. I agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree completely with the two judgments which have been delivered and with the analysis given as to the particular dispute in this case, but as it seems to me—and I am sure this is not inconsistent with anything that has been said by my brethren—counsel for the employers fails in limine for grounds which are very shortly stated by LORD GODDARD, C.J. He said this:

It is abundantly clear here that a trade dispute has arisen. Therefore, the National Arbitration Tribunal has got jurisdiction at once. The Minister refers the matter to them to decide that trade dispute. How they decide that trade dispute is not a matter with which this court has any concern, because these matters are in effect removed from the jurisdiction of the court.

That seems to me the short and the first answer to the submission of counsel for the employers. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Powell, Skues & Graham Smith (for the appellants); Solicitor for the Ministry of Labour and National Service (for the Minister of Labour and National Service); Russell Jones & Co. (for the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

IN Re KINSETH

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), December 20, 1946.]

Infants—Custody—Maintenance—Maintenance order granted to wife under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5—Wife's subsequent application to justices for custody of children and weekly sum for their maintenance under Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (2)—Competence.

A A wife applied to justices under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5 (c), for a maintenance order on the ground that her husband had deserted her, and he was ordered to pay to her £2 a week. The wife did not apply under s. 5 (b) of the Act for an order for the custody of the children of the marriage, or for an order for their maintenance under the Married Women's (Maintenance) Act, 1920, s. 1, under which the court has power to direct payment by a husband of a sum for the maintenance of a child not exceeding 10s. a week, but she took out a summons under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, s. 5 (as amended by s. 7 (1) of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925), asking that the custody of the infant be committed to her and that her husband be asked to pay to her a weekly sum for the infant's maintenance. Under s. 7 (1) (c) of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, a court of summary jurisdiction may award a sum not exceeding 20s. a week for an infant's maintenance. The justices refused to make any order on the second application, on the ground that, an order having been made in favour of the wife under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, it would be an evasion of the law for her to be allowed to avail herself of both that Act and the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, and they dismissed the application.

D HELD: the justices were wrong, for the wife was entitled to have the benefit of both statutes.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. This case is important, in that it decides that a practice, which has been followed in the Metropolitan Magistrates Courts, has no foundation in law.

E AS TO CUSTODY AND GUARDIANSHIP OF INFANTS GENERALLY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 663-665, para. 1381 and 28 DIGEST, pp. 256-294, 1118-1507; AS TO JURISDICTION OF MAGISTRATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 834-848, paras. 1336-1354 and 27 DIGEST, pp. 558, 559, 6133-6151; for STATUTES, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 9, pp. 405, 413, 414, 787, 820.]

APPEAL from refusal of Stratford justices to grant an order under the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 to 1925. The facts appear in the headnote.

H. B. Grant for the wife.

The husband did not appear.

F VAISEY, J.: In this case the magistrates have refused, on the ground of lack of jurisdiction, an order committing the custody of two children to the mother and an order giving that mother some sum for maintenance.

The point appears to involve a supposed overlapping of statutory provisions which arises in this way. By the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, a right is given to married women who have grounds of complaint against their husbands to apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for relief.

G Section 5 of that Act provides:

The court of summary jurisdiction to which any application under this Act is made may make an order or orders containing all or any of the provisions following, viz. . . .

H (b) A provision that the legal custody of any children of the marriage between the applicant and her husband, while under the age of sixteen years, be committed to the applicant. (c) A provision that the husband shall pay to the applicant personally, or for her use, to any officer of the court or third person on her behalf, such weekly sum not exceeding £2 as the court shall, having regard to the means both of the husband and wife, consider reasonable.

That Act of 1895, although it enables the legal custody of the children to be given to the mother, does not include any specific provision for the payment to her by her husband of money for the children's maintenance, but by an amending Act of 1920, called the Married Women's (Maintenance Act), it is enacted that such an order as I have mentioned as being made under the Act of 1895 may include a provision that the husband should pay to the applicant, or to any officer of the court, and so forth,

... a weekly sum not exceeding 10s. for the maintenance of each such child until such child attains the age of sixteen years. [s. 1 (1)].

Therefore under those two Acts, which are, undoubtedly, still on the statute book, a wife situated as the applicant in the present case is, having been deserted by her husband, may obtain an order for the legal custody of her infant children, payment of the sum of £2 a week for herself, and a payment of 10s. for the maintenance of each of her infant children.

In the present case the wife, under advice, obtained an order for payment to her of £2 a week under the Act of 1895, but refrained from asking for the custody of the children under that Act because she was advised that another Act, which was more beneficial to her in this regard, enabled her to get better provision for her children, that is to say, the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925. Under that Act, a court making an order for the custody of an infant is entitled to order the payment by the father to the mother towards the maintenance of the infant of such weekly or other periodical sum as the court, having regard to the means of the father, may think reasonable, with the restrictive provision that a court of summary jurisdiction may not award a sum to be paid to a mother for the maintenance of her infant child exceeding 20s. a week.

The matter, therefore, stood thus. If the wife made the whole of her application under the Acts of 1895 and 1920 she was limited to 10s. per child, whereas under the Guardianship of Infants Act she was entitled to get £1 per child per week. This alternative method of approach seems to have caused some trouble to the magistrates, not only in this case, but, I understand, in other cases.

The magistrates, under the advice of their clerk, decided that they had no jurisdiction to make an order under the Act of 1925 because the mother had already obtained some relief under the Act of 1895, despite the fact that both the father and the mother were represented before the magistrates and a solicitor representing the husband, who attended the court and agreed to the proposed order, which was to hand the custody of the two children, one aged nearly 16 and another aged nearly 13, to the mother, and to allow her £1 a week for each child, or, at any rate, for the younger child, as, indeed, was reasonable. The wife's evidence not being contradicted, the evidence before the magistrates was that the husband was making something in the neighbourhood of £20 a week. He held a responsible position as secretary of a company and, having gone to live with some other woman, he did not think it unreasonable that his wife should have her own £2 a week and £1 a week for each of the children. In spite of that, and in spite of the submission that there was no objection to the jurisdiction, the clerk to the justices has certified their reasons for rejecting the mother's application in these words :

Since the complainant already has an order made in her favour under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, 1895 and 1925, it would be an evasion of the law to use both these statutes and the Guardianship of Infants Act at one and the same time, and, therefore, the justices hold that they have no jurisdiction to make a further order under the latter Act.

If one Act gives the mother the right to get 10s. a week from the magistrates for her infant child and another Act says she can get £1 a week, I cannot see why she should not elect to go under the latter. I gather that the magistrates would have made this order if they had not been troubled about the question of jurisdiction. As the father attended by his solicitor and raised no objection to what was proposed, it seems to me that the proper course for me to take is to say that the magistrates, under the guidance of their clerk or otherwise, took a wrong view. I cannot see the slightest reason for supposing that these Acts on the statute book are not available to be used by those who have occasion to use them. In my opinion, the proper course is for me to say that the appeal is allowed, award the mother the custody of the younger child until it attains the age of 16 years, and make an order for the payment of £1 per week in the case of the younger child, I having been informed that as the older child is now earning some money no order is sought in regard to her.

I am told that in the courts of summary jurisdiction in the metropolis it is a matter of routine or practice not to allow summonses under both Acts to proceed or be taken out. I do not propose at the moment to lay down any pronouncement on the subject, but, having dealt with this appeal, I myself can see no possible ground why women who have been deserted by their husbands should not be entitled to have the benefit of both these sets of statutes and the rule or practice that they may not proceed under more than one of the two appears, in my judgment, as at present advised, to be misconceived.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitor : Peter Stainsby (for the wife).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A Distinguished. REED v. GRAY.
[1952] 1 All E.R. 241.

GOODWIN AND ANOTHER v. STORRAR

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), December 19, 1946.]

Practice—Costs—Taxation—“Taxation as between solicitor and client”—R.S.C. Ord. 22, r. 14 (11).

B In R.S.C. Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), taxation “as between solicitor and client” means an inquiry as to the costs which a client ought properly to pay to his own solicitor as distinct from taxation as between party and party, and not an inquiry as to the costs to be paid to the solicitor out of a common fund in which the client and others are interested.

C A settlement falling within R.S.C. Ord. 22, r. 14, was embodied in a consent order approved by the court and the order contained a provision for the defendant to pay to the plaintiffs' solicitors the cost of the action “as between solicitor and client to be taxed.”

HELD : taxation “as between solicitor and client” in the consent order had the same meaning as in R.S.C. Ord. 22, r. 14 (11).

Giles v. Randall (1) questioned.

D [For R.S.C., ORD. 22, r. 14 (11), see YEARLY PRACTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT, 1940, p. 387.]

Case referred to :

(1) Giles v. Randall, [1915] 1 K.B. 290 ; 84 L.J.K.B. 786 ; 112 L.T. 271 ; Digest, Practice 948, 4881.

E APPLICATION by the defendant for an order to review the taxation in an action which was settled, the settlement falling within R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14. The question to be determined was the meaning of taxation “as between solicitor and client” in R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), and in the consent order approved by the court. The application was heard in chambers, but was adjourned into open court for judgment. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. E. Moore (of Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co.) for the plaintiffs.

H. L. Parker for the defendant.

F DENNING, J. : This case raised a question of taxation of costs of general application, so I decided to give my reasons in open court.

Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin were killed in an explosion at a munitions works. Their two children were unhurt, as they were at school at the time. The personal representatives of the deceased brought an action against the defendant, which was settled on the terms that £250 was to be paid under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, in respect of Mr. Goodwin, £250 under that Act in respect of Mrs. Goodwin, and a sum of £1,750 under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, for the benefit of the children.

The settlement fell within R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14, and it was only valid if approved by the court. The money had to be paid as the court directed, and, with regard to the costs, R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), provides :

I The costs of the plaintiff . . . shall be taxed by the taxing master, or, if such cause or matter is proceeding in a district registry by the district registrar, as between party and party and as between solicitor and client, and the taxing master or district registrar shall certify the respective amounts of the party and party and solicitor and client costs, and the difference (if any) and the proportion of such difference (if any) payable respectively by any adult party to the cause or matter and by or out of the moneys of any party who is an infant or person of unsound mind, and no costs other than those so certified shall be payable to the solicitor for any plaintiff in the cause or matter.

In pursuance of that sub-rule, the settlement was embodied in a consent order approved by the court, which contained this provision as to costs :

The defendant pays to the plaintiffs' solicitors the costs of this action as between solicitor and client to be taxed such costs to include the costs properly incurred before the issue of the writ and in relation to the subject-matter of the action.

The words "taxation as between solicitor and client" have two meanings. One meaning, which I will refer to as meaning (A), is an inquiry as to the costs which a client ought properly to pay to his own solicitor, as distinct from "taxation as between party and party," which is an inquiry as to the costs which he should recover from the opposite side. The distinction is based on common sense, for if a client authorises his solicitor to incur an unusual or unnecessary expense, it is only right that the client should reimburse his own solicitor for it, but it does not follow that he should be able to recover it from the opposite side. The other meaning of "taxation as between solicitor and client," which I will refer to as meaning (B), is an inquiry as to the costs to be paid to the solicitor out of a common fund in which the client and others are interested, and is substantially a taxation as between party and party, but on a more generous scale. When meaning (B) is used a different form of words is needed to describe an inquiry as to the costs which a client ought properly to pay his own solicitor, and that is then described as a "taxation as between solicitor and own client."

The plaintiffs' solicitors say that in R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), and the order as to costs, the words are used in meaning (A), and they cite the notes to the rule in the ANNUAL PRACTICE, and rely also on the practice of the taxing office. The defendant says that the meaning is meaning (B), and he cites Giles v. Randall (1). The practical difference is pointedly illustrated by the fees of leading counsel in this case. The plaintiffs' solicitors consulted one leading counsel, who advised a settlement at £1,900. The fee of that counsel was £13 2s. The plaintiffs were not satisfied and instructed their solicitors to consult another leading counsel. He advised a settlement at £2,500, and his fee was £11. Armed with the second opinion, a settlement was reached at the sum of £2,250. On a taxation according to meaning (A), the fees of both leading counsel would be allowed, but on a taxation on meaning (B) the fee of one leading counsel only would be allowed, because the fee of a second leading counsel would be an unusual expense.

In my opinion, in R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (11), the words are used in meaning (A). The rule is designed to protect widows and children in accident cases by disentitling solicitors from deducting from the compensation a lump sum for their costs and by subjecting their claim for costs to taxation, i.e., to an inquiry in every case as to the costs properly payable to them. If meaning (A) is given, that result is achieved, but, if meaning (B) is given, the effect of the sub-rule, especially the concluding words thereof, would mean that the solicitor would be deprived of costs properly payable to him. In the present case, for instance, the solicitors would have to pay the fee of £11 for the second leading counsel out of their own pockets although the expenditure had been authorised by the plaintiffs and proved, in fact, greatly to the benefit of the estate and the children. I reject an interpretation of the sub-rule which leads to such a result.

If I am right in thinking that in the sub-rule the words are used in meaning (A), it shows that it is a valid meaning to be attached to them in any legal document, and this enables me to distinguish Giles v. Randall (1). The court in that case recognised that meaning (A) was the ordinary meaning, but felt compelled to give the words the meaning (B) because that was the technical meaning, and where words in a legal document have a technical meaning, it is the technical meaning that should be received. Now that a rule of the Supreme Court has been made, in which are used the words in meaning (A), it follows that meaning, (A) at the present day is, not only the ordinary meaning, but also a valid technical meaning, and that there is no reason why, in construing a legal document, that meaning should not ordinarily be given. In the order as to costs in this case, therefore, there is no reason why I should not adopt meaning (A) when that appears to be the meaning intended by the parties, as I think it is. In view of this development, it may be that Giles v. Randall (1) would be decided differently at the present day.

At the instance of the parties and with their consent, I have seen the senior taxing master, and he tells me that the practice in cases under R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14, is to tax according to meaning (A), i.e., to ascertain the costs properly payable by the client to the solicitor. In Giles v. Randall (1), it is to be noticed that the Court of Appeal were much influenced by the practice of the taxing office. I would hesitate long before I disturbed the present practice. I decline to do so. I hold that the taxation of this bill by the senior taxing master of this court was on the correct principles, and I do not interfere with it. The result is, therefore, that the present taxation stands.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Treasury Solicitor (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WICKS v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Thankerton, Lord Macmillan, Lord Wright, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds and Lord du Pareq), December, 12, 1946.]

Criminal Law—Offences under temporary statute—Offence committed during currency of statute—Prosecution and conviction after expiry—Effect of expiry on operation “as respects things previously done”—Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 11 (3).

Statutes—Operation—Temporary statute—Expiry—Effect of expiry on operation “as respects things previously done.”

The appellant was convicted on an indictment which charged him with doing acts likely to assist the enemy with intent to assist the enemy, contrary to the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 2A, made under the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 1 (1). The acts with which the indictment charged the appellant were all committed between April, 1943, and January, 1944, and the trial took place on May 27 and 28, 1946. The Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, after numerous extensions, expired on Feb. 24, 1946. Section 11 (3) of the Act provided: “The expiry of this Act shall not affect the operation thereof as respects things previously done or omitted to be done.” The question for decision, which turned entirely on the construction which ought to be placed on that subsection, was whether the subsection authorised the conviction of the appellant notwithstanding the previous expiry of the Act:—

HELD: giving the words of s. 11 (3) their natural meaning, it was clear that Parliament did not intend the subsection to expire with the rest of the Act and that its presence in the Act preserved the right to prosecute after the date of expiry.

Per cur.: when a statute enables an authority to make regulations, a regulation which is validly made under the Act, i.e., which is intra vires of the regulation-making authority, should be regarded as though it were itself an enactment: Willingdale v. Norris (1) approved.

Decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal, [1946] 2 All E.R. 529, affirmed

[AS TO OPERATION OF TEMPORARY STATUTES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 511-513, paras. 664-668; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 714, 715, Nos. 1335-1344.]

Case referred to:

(1) Willingdale v. Norris, [1909] 1 K.B. 57; 78 L.J.K.B. 69; 99 L.T. 830; 72 J.P. 495; 14 Digest 203, 1826.

APPEAL from a decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal (LORD GODDARD, C.J., SINGLETON, DENNING, LYNSKEY and SELLARS, JJ.), reported sub. nom. R. v. Wicks, [1946] 2 All E.R. 529, dismissing an appeal against a conviction of the appellant before CROOM-JOHNSON, J., at the Central Criminal Court of doing acts likely to assist the enemy with intent to assist the enemy, contrary to the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 2A, and the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 3 (1) (b). The facts appear in the headnote and in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON.

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Sir John Cameron for the appellant.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.), Gerald Howard and J. S. Bass for the Crown.

VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, the Solicitor-General, in the exercise of the discretion which is vested in him under the Law Officers Act, 1944, when the Attorney-General is not available, has certified that the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal, dated Nov. 4, 1946, in this matter involves a point of law of exceptional public importance, and that, in his opinion, it is desirable in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought. Accordingly, the House is called on to deal with the appeal.

Having heard the arguments for the appellant, my Lords, I have formed the clear conclusion that the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal is right and that the appeal should be dismissed. The point involved can be stated in very few words. The appellant, who is a British subject, was convicted at the Central Criminal Court before CROOM-JOHNSON, J., sitting with a jury on an indictment containing a number of counts charging him with doing acts (such as entering the service of an enemy broadcasting station and preparing propaganda for enemy broadcasts) on various dates between April, 1943, and January, 1944—acts which were “likely to assist the enemy” and were done “with intent to assist the enemy,” contrary to reg. 2A of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, as applied to British subjects abroad by s. 3 (1) (b) of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939.

There is, of course, no doubt that, when a statute like the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, enables an authority to make regulations, a regulation which is validly made under the Act, i.e., which is intra vires of the regulation-making authority, should be regarded as though it were itself an enactment. As the Court of Criminal Appeal has pointed out in its judgment, that was decided by the Divisional Court in Willingdale v. Norris (1), and it appears to me that that decision is perfectly correct. Consequently, the charge against the appellant here was, in effect, that he had committed crimes defined or contained in the Act of Parliament.

At the date when these acts were committed, the regulation to which I have referred was in force, and if the appellant had been prosecuted immediately afterwards—he may not have been in England at that time, but if he had been prosecuted immediately afterwards—then the validity of his conviction could not be open to any challenge at all. But the Act of 1939 was a temporary Act, and after various extensions it expired on Feb. 24, 1946. The trial of the appellant, however, only took place in May, 1946, and he was convicted and sentenced to 4 years’ penal servitude on May 28.

The question raised by this appeal, therefore, is simply this. Is a man entitled to be acquitted when he is proved to have broken a defence regulation at a time when that regulation was in operation because his trial and conviction take place after the regulation has expired? As was pointed out in the course of the argument, very strange results would follow if that were so. Supposing the case were one in which a man broke the regulation a week or two before it expired, then, on the argument of the appellant, as those appearing for him have frankly admitted, he could never be punished, unless, indeed, the trial was carried to the point of conviction before the regulation itself expired. One could put a more extreme case. The authorities may have been so prompt as to start the prosecution before the regulation had expired, but, if the trial were not over, then at the very moment when the regulation expired the trial would necessarily cease and the man would go free. In so far as one is entitled to consider the reasonableness of the contentions put forward by the appellant, obviously those results would be far from reasonable, but, of course, the question is not or, at any rate, not mainly, whether such a result would be reasonable or such as one should expect. The question is a pure question of the interpretation of sub-s. (3) of s. 11 of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939.

It is pointed out that s. 38 (2) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, does not apply to the case of a statute or a regulation which has the power of a statute when it expires by effluxion of time. The sub-section is addressed to Acts which have been repealed, and not to Acts which expire owing to their purely temporary validity. It is, I apprehend, with this distinction in mind, which is certainly well-known to the authorities who frame statutes, that the draughtsman inserted the words used in s. 11 of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939. Section 11 begins with the words “Subject to the provisions of this section,” which warn anybody that the provisions which follow are not absolute, but are subject to qualification. It is, therefore, not the case that, at the date chosen, the Act expires in every sense. There is a qualification. Without discussing whether the intermediate words are qualifications, sub-s. (3), in my opinion, is plainly a qualification. It begins with the phrase "The expiry of this Act"—a noun which corresponds with the verb "expire"—"shall not affect the operation thereof as respects things previously done or omitted to be done." Counsel for the appellant have, therefore, been driven to argue ingeniously, but to admit candidly, that the contention which they are putting forward is that the phrase "thing previously done" does not cover offences previously committed. In my opinion, that view cannot be correct. It is clear that Parliament did not intend sub-s. (3) to expire with the rest of the Act, and that its presence in the statute preserves the right to prosecute after the date of expiry. This destroys the validity of the appellant's argument altogether.

The Court of Criminal Appeal, after a most careful examination of the whole matter, came to this conclusion—and I am now quoting the words of LORD GODDARD, C.J. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 529, at p. 534):

In our opinion, giving the words of the subsection their natural meaning, there is neither doubt nor ambiguity, and the result would appear to be both just and reasonable.

I think your Lordships unanimously agree with the conclusion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, and I, therefore, move the House that this appeal be dismissed.

LORD THANKERTON: My Lords, I concur in the speech which has just been delivered by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack. I would like to add that the intention of Parliament is not to be judged by what is in its mind, but by its expression of that mind in the statute itself. The question here arises on the construction of s. 11 (3) of the Act of 1939. As regards the proper construction of that statutory provision I have found no difficulty, and I will only add that I agree with the words of LORD GODDARD, C.J., which have been quoted by my noble and learned friend, VISCOUNT SIMON.

LORD MACMILLAN: My Lords, I also agree.

LORD WRIGHT: My Lords, I also agree, and have nothing to add.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, I concur.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, I also concur.

LORD DU PARCQ: My Lords, I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Ludlow & Co. (for the appellant); Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DOUGHTY, BURRIDGE AND ANOTHER v. DOUGHTY AND OTHERS

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), December 12, 13, 1946.]

Settlement—Tenant for life and remaindermen—Capital or income—Dividends of company paid out of capital profits.

Wills—Settlement—Tenant for life and remaindermen—Capital or income—Trust funds including shares in company—Dividends paid out of capital profits.

By his will the testator (who died on Mar. 7, 1941) settled his residuary estate which included shares in a company. Under its articles the company had power to "pass a resolution . . . that any surplus capital moneys or capital profits . . . shall be divided amongst the members of the company by way of capital distribution." In Feb., 1946, the company passed a resolution declaring "out of realised capital profits . . . an additional dividend or distribution" for the year ended Dec. 31, 1945. As a result of this resolution, dividends were sent to the executors of the will with a notice stating: "As this is a distribution out of capital profits no income tax is deducted and it is not liable to be included in the taxation returns of the recipients."

HELD: on their true construction, the words "any surplus capital moneys or capital profits . . . shall be divided amongst the members of the company by way of capital distribution," merely authorised distribution of capital profits in such a way as not to attract income tax and did not affect the character of the sums received between tenant for life and remainderman, and, as between the persons entitled thereto the sums were income, and not capital, and were payable to the tenant for life.

Re Bates, Mountain v. Bates (2) approved.

Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co., of New South Wales (4) applied.

Re Ward's Will Trusts (1) doubted and distinguished.

Decision of ROXBURGH, J. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 341) reversed.

[AS TO CAPITAL AND INCOME, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 647-650, paras. 929, 930; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 662-666, Nos. 1999-2042, and Supplement.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Ward's Will Trusts, Ringland v. Ward, [1936] 2 All E.R. 773; [1936] Ch. 704; 105 L.J.Ch. 315; 155 L.T. 346; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Bates, Mountain v. Bates, [1928] Ch. 682; 97 L.J.Ch. 240; 139 L.T. 162; Digest Supp.
- (3) Bouch v. Sproule (1887), 12 App. Cas. 385; 56 L.J.Ch. 1037; 57 L.T. 345; 40 Digest 665, 2035.
- (4) Hill (R.A.) v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 720; 144 L.T. 65; sub nom. Re Hill (Richard), Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, 99 L.J.P.C. 191.

APPEAL FROM ROXBURGH, J., reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 341.

The residuary estate of a testator, which had been settled by his will, included shares in a certain company. The testator died on Mar. 7, 1941, and in 1946 the company declared and distributed "an additional dividend or distribution" out of capital profits in respect of the year ended Dec. 31, 1945. The resolution declaring this additional dividend was stated to be made pursuant to an article of the company which enabled the company to divide among its members "by way of capital distribution any surplus capital moneys or capital profits." ROXBURGH, J., held that the company had purported, by the resolution in question, to make a capital distribution out of realised profits, and that the additional dividends were accretions to the capital of the trust funds. The tenant for life (the testators' widow) appealed. The facts appear in the judgment of COHEN, L.J.

J. Neville Gray, K.C., and A. C. Nesbitt for the tenant for life.

H. O. Danckwerts for infant remaindermen.

Harman, K.C., and Wilfrid Hunt for persons entitled in remainder.

Cecil Turner for the trustees.

COHEN, L.J.: The question raised by this summons is whether certain moneys received by the executors in respect of shares in Consolidated Fisheries, Ltd., which form part of the testator's estate, were payable to the tenant for life under the will of the testator or must be retained by the executors as part of the capital of the estate. The tenant for life is tenant for life of the income of the residuary estate and after her death, in the events which have happened, the trustees will hold the residuary estate as to one-fourth part thereof upon trust to divide the income thereof among the defendants for whom Mr. Danckwerts appears, during their respective lives in equal shares, and, after the death of each of such defendants, to divide among his issue the capital of the share, the income of which had been given to him during his life. The testator made two codicils to his will, the second codicil after the adoption of art. 104A of the articles of association of the company to which I shall refer hereafter. By each of these codicils he confirmed his will except as in the codicil mentioned. He died on Mar. 7, 1941.

Under art. 41 of the articles of association the company had power to increase its capital. By art. 101 there were the usual powers to the directors before recommending dividend to create reserve funds. Art. 102 is in the following terms:

The company shall in respect of the calendar year 1937 and in respect of each subsequent calendar year pay out of the profits of the company or out of moneys standing to the credit of any reserve fund or funds available for the purpose: (a) To the management shareholders by way of a non-cumulative dividend or distribution for such year in priority to any payment to the ordinary shareholders such sum or sums as after the appropriate deduction of income tax (if any) at the standard rate current at the time of payment will leave or amount to £14,865 per annum such payment to be divided rateably in proportion to the management shares held by such shareholders respectively. (b) Subject as aforesaid: To the ordinary shareholders by way of a non-cumulative dividend or distribution for such year such sum or sums as after the appropriate deduction of income tax (if any) at the like standard rate will leave or amount to £4,955 per annum such sum to be paid at such time or times as the directors may determine and to be divided rateably in proportion to the ordinary shares held by such ordinary shareholders respectively.

It is to be observed that the sum distributable among the management shareholders is three times that distributable among the ordinary shareholders. The article goes on:

Subject as aforesaid any further profits which shall hereafter be determined to be distributed shall be divisible as to three-fourths thereof among the management shareholders rateably in proportion to the management shares held by them respectively and as to one fourth thereof among the ordinary shareholders rateably in proportion to the number of ordinary shares held by them respectively.

Article 104 contains directions that "no larger dividend... shall be declared or made than is recommended by the directors" and:

... no dividend or distribution shall be payable except out of the profits of the company whenever earned whether standing to the credit of the profit and loss account or any reserve funds available for the purposes of such dividend or distribution.

Then comes art. 104A, on which was based most of the argument addressed to us. The first paragraph of art. 104A provides for dividends in specie and, in particular, for dividends by way of capitalisation of profits, i.e., by the distribution of paid-up shares, debentures or debenture stock of the company. The second paragraph, which is the paragraph under which the distributions now in question were made, is in the following terms:

The company in general meeting or the directors for the purpose of carrying out the obligations of the company under art. 102 may from time to time and at any time pass a resolution to the effect that any surplus capital moneys or capital profits in the hands of the company whether arising from the realisation of capital assets of the company or received in respect of any capital assets or represented by shares or other property received as consideration or part consideration for the sale or realisation of any capital assets of the company or any investments representing any such surplus moneys as aforesaid shall be divided amongst the members of the company by way of capital distribution in proportion to their rights and interests in the distributable profits of the company and any such resolution shall be effective and shall be carried into effect by the directors accordingly.

Acting on the powers conferred by that paragraph of the article, the company in general meeting on February 26, 1946, passed a resolution in the following terms:

That pursuant to cll. 102 and 104A of the company's articles of association, there be and there is hereby declared out of realised capital profits for payment forthwith and to be divided amongst the members in proportion to their rights and interests in the distributable profits of the company, an additional dividend or distribution to management and ordinary shareholders of £99,100 in respect of the year ended Dec. 31, 1945.

The company acted on that resolution and dividends were sent to the executors in whose names the shares in question were registered notifying them of the amount that they were entitled to receive. I will read one of the notices which relates to the 1,000 ordinary shares registered in the name of the plaintiff, Mr. Burridge.:

I have to inform you that at the annual general meeting of the company held this day, an additional dividend or distribution in respect of the year ended Dec. 31, 1945, was declared out of the realised capital profits of the company, payable forthwith, the sum so payable to the ordinary shareholders being £24,775. The amount payable to you in respect of the 1,000 ordinary shares registered in your name is £250 a cheque for which amount is inclosed herewith. As this is a distribution out of capital profits no income tax is deducted and it is not liable to be included in the taxation returns of the recipients.

Similar amounts were received in respect of the other holdings forming part of the estate, £3,159 being received in respect of the 12,636 ordinary shares and £12,222 6s. 8d. in respect of the 148 management shares.

Having received these sums the executors issued the summons in this matter to determine whether the sums in question should be treated as income of the residuary trust fund or as an accretion to the capital of the residuary trust fund. That summons came before ROXBURGH, J., and on July 11, 1946, he came to the conclusion that the whole of the amounts in question ought to be treated as capital. He arrived, I think, at that conclusion mainly as a result of the construction he placed on the second paragraph of art. 104A of the articles of association of the company. He construed it in the same sense as an article which fell to be considered by CLAUSON, J., in Re Ward's Will Trusts (1). ROXBURGH, J., considered himself bound to follow the decision of CLAUSON, J., in that case.

Before I turn to the authorities it will, I think, be convenient to consider how I should construe this article apart from authority, bearing in mind certain general principles and, in particular, the principle that a company, while a going concern, cannot distribute capital among its shareholders except by way of return of capital with the sanction required by the law. It can, of course, distribute capital profits, which is quite a different matter, but it cannot return any paid-up capital to its shareholders except by sanction of the court or in some other way expressly authorised by the Act. With that preliminary observation, I revert to the paragraph which authorises the company to :

... pass a resolution... that any surplus capital moneys or capital profits... arising [as therein mentioned] shall be divided amongst the members of the company by way of capital distribution.

Those are the key words on which Mr. Harman fastened in the course of his argument. He said that, on their true construction, those words had exactly the same effect as if they read "shall be divided amongst the members of the company so as to be received by them as capital," but it seems to me that that is not their natural meaning. In my view, they were merely a repetition, ex abundanti cautela, of the direction that the distribution was to be made out of capital moneys or capital profits.

Adopting this construction, the case before us is, in my view, indistinguishable in principle from Re Bates, Mountain v. Bates (2), a decision of EVE, J. In that case there were no special provisions such as are found in the articles we have to consider, but an article in its amended form provided that no dividends should be paid except out of the profits of the company as shown by the balance sheet. That article did not refer in terms to capital profits, but it was, in my view in wide enough terms to enable the company to distribute capital profits and the directors distributed a bonus which they described in these terms :

It must be clearly understood that this is neither a dividend nor a bonus, but is a capital distribution and therefore not liable to income tax or super tax.

The circumstances were very similar to those in the case before us, since the sum distributed represented the profits on the sale of certain steam trawlers which had previously been owned and operated by the company. EVE J., held that, the amount in question not having been capitalised by the issue of bonus shares increasing the total capital, the payments were income receivable by the tenant for life during her life. The nature of the fund was referred to by EVE, J. ([1928] Ch. 682, at pp. 687, 688) :

In this state of affairs it was a fund which the company could treat as available for dividend and could distribute as profits, or having regard to its power to increase capital could apply to that purpose by, for example, increasing the capital, declaring a bonus and at the same time allotting to each shareholder shares in the capital of the company paid up to an amount equivalent to his proportion of the bonus so declared. Unless and until the fund was in fact capitalised it retained its characteristics of a distributable profit, and on the authority of the passages which have been read from LORD HERSCHELL's speech in Bouch v. Sproule (3), the only method by which a company with power to increase its capital can capitalise such a fund is to increase its capital by an amount equivalent to the sum sought to be capitalised.

Re Bates (2) was considered by the Privy Council in R. A. Hill and Others v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales (4) judgment in which was delivered by LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN. In that case trustees had received a sum of 9s. 6d. in respect of each fully-paid share. These sums were described by the company in the circular letter with which they were distributed as follows. The secretary said ([1930] A.C. 720, at p. 727) :

I have been instructed by the directors to advise that at a meeting held on the 11th instant it was decided to pay out of the profits of the company a cash dividend of 9s. 6d. in respect of each fully-paid share in the company... I have also been instructed to state that the dividend is being paid out of the profits arising from the sale of breeding stock, being assets of the company not required for purposes of resale at a profit, and that it is free of income tax.

It was held that the dividend must be treated as income of the trust fund.

A In the course of his judgment LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN laid down five principles which I read as intended to be statements of general principles and not confined to that particular case. They are as follows ([1930] A.C. 720 at pp. 730-732):

B (1) A limited company when it parts with moneys available for distribution among its shareholders is not concerned with the fate of those moneys in the hands of any shareholder. The company does not know and does not care whether a shareholder is a trustee of his shares or not. It is of no concern to a company which is parting with moneys to a shareholder whether that shareholder (if he be a trustee) will hold them as trustee for A. absolutely or as trustee for A. for life only. (2) A limited company not in liquidation can make no payment by way of return of capital to its shareholders except as a step in an authorised reduction of capital. Any other payment made by it by means of which it parts with moneys to its shareholders must and can only be made by way of dividing profits. Whether the payment is called "dividend" or "bonus," or any other name, it still must remain a payment on division of profits.

C (3) Moneys so paid to a shareholder will (if he be a trustee) prima facie belong to the person beneficially entitled to the income of the trust estate. If such moneys or any part thereof are to be treated as part of the corpus of the trust estate there must be some provision in the trust deed which brings about that result. No statement by the company or its officers that moneys which are being paid away to shareholders out of profits are capital, or are to be treated as capital, can have any effect upon the rights of the beneficiaries under a trust instrument which comprises shares in the company.

D I pause there to say that if Re Ward's Will Trusts (1) can be taken out of that statement of principle it must be on the ground that there was in that case a provision in the articles of the company and not merely a statement by the company or its officers. LORD RUSSELL went on:

E (4) Other considerations arise when a limited company with power to increase its capital and possessing a fund of undivided profits, so deals with it that no part of it leaves the possession of the company, but the whole is applied in paying up new shares which are issued and allotted proportionately to the shareholders, who would have been entitled to receive the fund had it been, in fact, divided and paid away as dividend.

F (5) The result of such a dealing is obviously wholly different from the result of paying away the profits to the shareholders. In the latter case the amount of cash distributed disappears on both sides of the company's balance sheet. It is lost to the company. The fund of undistributed profits which has been divided ceases to figure among the company's liabilities; the cash necessary to provide the dividend is raised and paid away, the company's assets being reduced by that amount. In the former case the assets of the company remain undiminished...

LORD RUSSELL then expressly approved the decision in Re Bates (2). With these statements and this approval I respectfully agree.

G It seems to me that on its true construction the article we have to consider and the resolution passed thereunder merely authorise distribution of capital profits in such a way that they cannot attract income tax, and do not purport to deal with the question of their character as between tenant for life and remainderman. The moneys were clearly not capitalised under the first paragraph of art. 104A and I can find nothing in the will directing that they are to be treated as part of the corpus of the estate. Accordingly, they must be treated as income and are payable to the tenant for life.

H I turn now to Re Ward's Trust (1). The relevant article in that case was in the following terms ([1936] 2 All E.R. 773, at p. 774):

The company in general meeting may from time to time and at any time resolve that any surplus moneys in the hands of the company representing the moneys received or recovered in respect of or arising from the realisation of any capital assets of the company or any investments... representing the same instead of being applied in the purchase of other capital assets or for other capital purposes be distributed amongst the members on the footing that they receive the same as capital and in the shares and proportions in which they would have been entitled to receive the same if it had been distributed by way of dividend.

The will directed payment to the tenant for life of the "dividends, interest and annual income" from the shares in question, and CLAUSON, J. basing himself on the provision in the article that the moneys distributed thereunder were to be received by the shareholders as capital, came to the conclusion that they could not be "dividends, interest, or annual income" within the meaning of the will ([1936] 2 All E.R. 773 at pp. 778-779). I feel great doubt whether the wording of the article can do more than make it clear that any amount distributed thereunder was free of tax or whether it was intended to have any bearing on the ultimate destination in the hands of trustees of the moneys distributed pursuant thereto. I do not think, therefore, that the article justified the conclusion which the judge reached, but, in any event, it is distinguishable from the article before us. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed.

MORTON L.J. : I agree. The sums in question must be either part of "the residuary trust fund" within the meaning of the will, or part of "the income therefrom" within the meaning of that document. I propose to consider : (i) Are these sums income in the ordinary meaning of that word, or are they capital ? (ii) Is there any reason why the court should give a special meaning to the word "income" in the will ?

These sums were dividends. They were distributions of profits, although it is true they were distributions of profits sometimes described as capital profits, i.e. profits resulting from realisation of capital assets. As EVE J. said ([1928] 1 Ch. 682 at p. 687) in Re Bates (2) :

... the mere impressing of these distributions with the appellation of "capital distributions" cannot in my opinion determine their true character. One must inquire a little closer for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were in fact distributions of capital or distributions of something which, although in one sense capital, in that it originated by the realisation of assets and not from the ordinary income of the company's business, could not properly be regarded as capital for all purposes.

It seems to me that from Re Bates (2) and from Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales Ltd. (4) one must reach the conclusion that these payments are not capital but income, as between the persons entitled thereto, unless the testator has used the word "income" in some special sense in his will. In my view, we cannot find that he has done so. I am not going to assume that in 1940, when the testator confirmed his will, he had in mind the precise terms of art. 104A and the fact that there might be payments to the trustee described as being "by way of capital distribution." Further, I think that, if the testator had thought of this article and had intended that such payments should be treated as capital of his estate and not as income, he would have inserted a special provision in the codicil to that effect.

With regard to Re Ward's Will Trusts (1), I do not think the decision in that case was justified, although the wording of the relevant art. 67 (A) was not identical with the wording of art. 104A in the present case. In my view, the sum in question in Ward's case (1) came within the words "dividends, interest and annual income to arise therefrom" in the ordinary meaning of those words, and I do not think that the circumstances justified the judge in giving them another meaning. It is likely that the testator in that case had not art. 67 (A) in his mind when he made his will. However that may be, I agree that the present appeal should be allowed.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : Before the decisions which have been cited in this case, it seems to me, a strong argument could have been put forward for the view that, when you find the word "income" in a will, it would not, prima facie, extend to sums which were not income under income tax law, but that principle was negatived in Re Bates (2) which has been approved by the decision of the Privy Council in Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales (4). In the light of those authorities, the position can be stated quite shortly. Leaving aside Re Ward's Will Trusts (1), the position to be gathered from those cases is that where capital profits are distributed by a company during the life of the tenant for life, they fall under the word "income" or similar words in the will in question although they are not subject to income tax in the hands of the recipient. I find great difficulty in reconciling Re Ward's Will Trusts (1) with that principle. The fact that there is an article providing a special procedure when capital profits are to be distributed does not seem to me to affect the principles as laid down in the cases cited. I am not, of course, dealing with the issue of shares or securities on a capitalisation of profits, but with distributions of the same general character as that in question here. It may be that Re Ward's Will Trusts (1) can be distinguished, but I find great difficulty in reconciling it with the principles which have been laid down. I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard (for the appellant); Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Ponsonby, Carlile & Booths, Oldham (for the respondents).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

APLEY ESTATES CO. AND OTHERS v. DE BERNALES AND OTHERS

B [COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), November 29, 1946.]

Torts—Liability—Joint tortfeasors—Agreement not to sue one joint tortfeasor—operation as discharge of other tortfeasors.

C The plaintiffs brought an action against 35 defendants for conspiracy and certain joint torts alleged to have been committed in pursuance of that conspiracy. The plaintiffs came to a settlement with one of the defendants, the G.B. company, and an order was made by EVERSHERD, J., staying the proceedings and stating that the parties had agreed that, in consideration of a payment by the company to the plaintiffs of £25,000, "the plaintiffs . . . will not . . . sue or continue to sue the said defendants in respect of any of the matters the subject-matter of the said action . . . but this agreement shall not be construed or operate as a release of any cause of action of the plaintiffs or any of them against the defendants or any of them in the said action . . . and shall not prejudice or affect the rights of the plaintiffs therein to proceed with their claims therein against the defendants other than" the G.B. company.

D HELD: a covenant not to sue one of two or more joint tortfeasors does not operate as a release of the other joint tortfeasors, and, therefore, one of the other 34 defendants was not released from liability to the plaintiffs in respect of the torts in which he was alleged to be a joint tortfeasor with the G.B. company.

E Duck v. Mayeu (1) applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. It is worthy of note that the Court of Appeal proceeds on the basis that the Law Reform (Married Women & Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, has no retrospective effect, as, indeed, is clear from its terms. The question is left open whether, if the torts in question here had been committed after the Act had come into force, (i.e., after Nov. 1, 1935: see S. R. & O., 1935, No. 1016/L.13), the decision would have been different in any respect. In considering that question it would seem advisable to bear in mind the terms of s. 6 (1) (a) of the Act, which provides that a "judgment recovered against any tortfeasor liable in respect of . . . damage [suffered by any person as a result of a tort] shall not be a bar to an action against any other person who would, if sued, have been liable as a joint tortfeasor in respect of the same damage."

G AS TO LIABILITY OF JOINT TORTFEASORS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 187-191, paras. 280-284, and Vol. 7, pp. 251, 252, paras. 345, 346; and AS TO CASES, see 42 DIGEST, p. 978, 89-94, and 12 DIGEST, pp. 510, 511, 4200-4220.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Duck v. Mayeu, [1892] 2 Q.B. 511; 62 L.J.Q.B. 69; 67 L.T. 547; 57 J.P. 23; 12 Digest, 510, 4206.
- (2) Cocke v. Jennor (1614), Hob. 66; 80 E.R. 214; 43 Digest 375, 32.
- (3) Hutton v. Eyre (1815), 6 Taunt. 289; 1 Marsh 603; 16 R.R. 619; 128 E.R. 1046; 12 Digest, 511, 4218.
- (4) Lacy v. Kinnaston (1701) 3 Salk. 298; Holt, K.B. 178; 90 E.R. 996; 12 Mod. Rep. 548; 1 Ld. Raym. 688; 12 Digest, p. 498; 4076.

H APPEAL from a decision of EVERSHERD, J. The facts are set out in the judgment of MORTON, L.J.

G. O. Slade, K.C. and B. MacKenna for Mr. de Bernales and others.

D. L. Jenkins, K.C. and J. F. Bowyer for the Apley Estates Co. and others.

MORTON, L.J. : The plaintiffs, who number 309, sued Mr. Albo de Bernales and 34 other defendants, alleging that the defendants had conspired together and had committed certain joint torts in pursuance of that conspiracy. One of the defendants is a company called the Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd. The plaintiffs arrived at terms of settlement with that company, and, on Jan. 16, 1946, an order was made by EVERSHED, J., which, omitting the formal part, was in the following terms :

"... the plaintiffs and the said defendants [the Great Boulder Co.] by their counsel stating that they have agreed to the terms set forth in the schedule hereto and consenting to this order, this court doth order that all further proceedings in this action against the said defendants, the Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd, be stayed except for the purpose of carrying the said terms into effect for which purpose the parties are to be at liberty to apply.

The terms set out are :

(1) In consideration of the payment of £25,000 by the defendants, the great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd., to Messrs Nordon & Co., the solicitors for the plaintiffs, for and on behalf of the plaintiffs in the above-mentioned action, the receipt whereof Messrs. Nordon & Co. hereby acknowledge, the plaintiffs in the said action will not nor will any of them sue or continue to sue the said defendants in respect of any of the matters the subject-matter of the said action... or in respect of their respective claims in respect of such matters or any of them, but this agreement shall not be construed or operate as a release of any cause of action of the plaintiffs or any of them against the defendants or any of them in the said action... and shall not prejudice or affect the rights of the plaintiffs therein to proceed with their claims therein against the defendants other than the defendants, the Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd. (2) The plaintiffs and the defendants, the Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd., hereby consent to the making of an order in the said action whereby all further proceedings therein against the said defendants be stayed upon the above terms, each party bearing his or her or their own costs.

So far as the wording of those terms of settlement is concerned, it is plain that the intention of the parties was that they should not operate as a release or extinguishment of the cause of action against the defendants, the Great Boulder Co., but that they should operate merely as an agreement not to sue Great Boulder. No doubt, the agreement was put in that form so that the other persons who are alleged to be joint tortfeasors should not be released from their liability to the plaintiffs. However, the defendant, Mr. de Bernales, in certain proceedings which I need not describe in detail contends that, whatever may have been the intention of the parties to that agreement, the effect of it in law is that he is released from any liability to the plaintiffs in respect of the alleged torts in which he was said to be a joint tortfeasor with the Great Boulder Co. The matter came before EVERSHED, J. who rejected that contention, and the defendant, Mr. de Bernales, appeals.

I find myself entirely in agreement both with the decision of EVERSHED, J. and with the reasons on which that decision was based. The law applicable here was stated by A. L. SMITH, L.J., in Duck v. Mayeu (1) ([1892] 2 Q.B. 511, at p. 513). In my view, it is unnecessary to go back to the earlier cases to which our attention was directed. He said :

It is, we think, clear law, that a release granted to one joint tortfeasor, or to one joint debtor, operates as a discharge of the other joint tortfeasor, or the other joint debtor, the reason being that the cause of action, which is one and indivisible, having been released, all persons otherwise liable thereto are consequently released. The case of Cocke v. Jennor (2) is distinct upon the point, and there are many subsequent cases to the same effect. It has also been held that a covenant not to sue one of two joint debtors does not operate as a release to the other joint debtor, Hutton v. Eyre (3), the reason being that the joint action is still alive. We have found no case in which it has been held that a covenant not to sue releases a joint tortfeasor; and in our judgment the principle upon which it has been held that such a covenant does not release a joint debtor applies to the case of a joint tortfeasor.

It is admitted that a mere agreement not to sue the Great Boulder Co. could not operate as a release to the defendant, Mr. de Bernales, but it is said that the true test is whether the plaintiffs could, after the order to which I have referred, recover judgment against the Great Boulder Co. and that, if they could not, that operates as a release to Mr. de Bernales. I do not take that view. The reason why a release granted to one joint tortfeasor releases other joint tortfeasors is, as A. L. SMITH, L.J. said, that the cause of action is one and indivisible and it must necessarily follow that a release of that cause of action against one is a release of that cause of action against all. That is a rule which, in my judgment, should not be extended beyond the limits within which it has hitherto been confined. It is a rule which has often operated to work hardship and I, for one, am certainly not prepared to extend it in any way.

A The only ground on which counsel for Mr. de Bernales can rely is that the proceedings were stayed by the order to which I have referred. Owing to certain procedural difficulties it may be that the plaintiffs, after that order, could not successfully sue the Great Boulder Co., but, in my judgment, the imposition of that stay does not have the effect of extinguishing the cause of action against Great Boulder. Having regard to the reasons on which the rule is founded, I do not accept the argument that by reason of that order the cause of action against Mr. de Bernales is extinguished. Such a result would be entirely contrary to the intention of the parties to the agreement embodied in the order, but, if that were the result of the order as a matter of law, we should be bound to allow this appeal. In my judgment, however, that is not the result as a matter of law. Inability to recover judgment against one of two tortfeasors may be due to the fact that the cause of action against that tortfeasor is extinguished, but it may be also due to other reasons. It is a non sequitur to say: "A. cannot recover judgment against one joint tortfeasor, and, therefore, the cause of action is extinguished against all the joint tortfeasors." In my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed.

D SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree. It may be worth mentioning at the outset that the joint torts relied on in the statement of claim occurred before 1935 and, therefore, the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, does not in any way come into the argument. I am not saying, nor, indeed, is it suggested, that that Act does affect the issues. It may or may not, but it seemed desirable to make clear that the torts complained of were committed before that alteration in the law was made.

E Counsel for Mr. de Bernales agreed that in the settlement which was come to between the plaintiffs and the Great Boulder Co., the plaintiffs had done their best to keep their rights against the other defendants alive. He submitted, however, that effect could not be given to that intention if, in the events which have happened, the defendants have precluded themselves from obtaining judgment against the defendants. He submitted as a proposition that an act discharges a tortfeasor from liability if it precludes the plaintiff from recovering judgment, but that is putting the issue the wrong way round. The question which has to be considered is: Under the terms of the agreement, or having regard to any act which may have been done—for instance, taking out money which has been paid into court—has the plaintiff discharged the cause of action which he previously possessed, bearing in mind, of course, the principle, which has been already stated by Morton, L.J., that the cause of action against joint tortfeasors is one and indivisible? For that proposition counsel for Mr. de Bernales relied on a statement which is in a note to Lacy v. Kinnaston (4) (see 3 Salkeld's Reports 298). In that note it is said that where there are two joint tortfeasors and one of them has entered into a covenant with the plaintiff under which the plaintiff covenants never to sue him, that covenant could not be pleaded in bar if the plaintiff sought to take proceedings against both tortfeasors. The only course would be for the action to proceed and for the covenantee, either in that action or, possibly, and, I think, more probably, by bringing an action subsequently, to sue on the covenant for damages. I do not think it follows that under the procedure in force at present it might not be a possible view that the covenantee could obtain an injunction against the plaintiff. I express no opinion on that, because it seems to me that this question cannot fall to be determined according to whether, under the rules of procedure which may from time to time be in force, and according also to what may have happened between the parties, a plaintiff has put himself in a position in which the courts would not allow him to proceed to judgment. In my opinion, the court must direct its mind to what has taken place with regard to the tortfeasor with whom the covenant has been made. Doing that in the present case, it seems to me clear that under the agreement made with the Great Boulder Co. the plaintiffs have released their cause of action. They have not in the technical sense discharged the Great Boulder Co., and, therefore, they are free to proceed with their cause of action against the other defendants. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree so entirely with what has been said by my brethren and by the learned judge in the court below that I do not desire to add any observations of my own.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Birkbeck, Julius, Edwards & Coburn (for the defendants); A Nordon & Co. (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SMITH v. POULTER

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), November 25, 1946.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Recovery of possession—Procedure—County court to be preferred to High Court—Landlord electing to proceed in High Court—Need for court to be informed of facts—Rent in arrear—Reasonableness of order for possession—Duty of Court—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3.

The provision in the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 that, even though some rent is in arrear and unpaid, the court has no power to make an order for possession of a dwelling-house unless the court considers it reasonable to do so, limits the jurisdiction of the court, with the result that, in any case where there is reason to think the house is within the Rent Restrictions Acts, it is the duty of the court to see whether the conditions required by the Acts are satisfied, even though not pleaded or raised by the tenant.

In the case of houses within the Rent Restrictions Acts, the procedure in the county court is better suited to carry out the intention of the legislature than the procedure in the High Court. If a landlord chooses to proceed in the High Court, notwithstanding the fact that the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 17, discourages such a course by disentitling him to any costs, the High Court should be informed of the facts so that it may be able to act accordingly. It is desirable, therefore, that in actions for possession of a dwelling-house the endorsement of the writ should state, either the reason why the house is not within the Rent Restrictions Acts, or, if it is within the Acts, what is the ground on which possession is sought.

[AS TO JURISDICTION IN ACTIONS FOR RECOVERY OF POSSESSION OF RENT CONTROLLED PREMISES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 335, para. 402; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 584, 585, Nos. 7331-7348.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Barton v. Finchman, [1921] 2 K.B. 291; 90 L.J.K.B. 451; 124 L.T. 495; 85 J.P. 145; 31 Digest 579, 7280.
- (2) Salter v. Lask, [1924] 1 K.B. 754; 93 L.J.K.B. 685; 130 L.T. 323; 31 Digest 577, 7263.
- (3) Davies v. Warwick, [1943] 1 All E.R. 309; [1943] 1 K.B. 329; 112 L.J.K.B. 245; 169 L.T. 130; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from the refusal of a master to set aside a judgment by default in favour of the landlord for possession, arrears of rent and mesne profits. The facts appear in the judgment.

Claude Duveen for the landlord.

The tenant appeared in person.

DENNING, J. : The defendant, who was the tenant of an unfurnished house protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts, paid no rent to the landlord after Apr. 22, 1946, giving as his reason that, as the landlord did not pay the tax on the house, the Inland Revenue demanded payment from him, which meant that he had to save up his rent weekly to pay the Inland Revenue the sum due. The landlord said that he did not pay the tax because the tenant did not pay the rent.

I will not stay to consider the merits of that dispute. I am only concerned at present with what took place in consequence of it. The landlord served notice to quit, claiming possession, arrears of rent, and mesne profits. As the tenant did not formally "enter an appearance"—he has said that he did not understand what was meant by "entering an appearance"—the landlord signed judgment for possession, arrears of rent and mesne profits, and costs, and then took out a summons under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act for leave to proceed.

A That summons was served on the tenant. An application on behalf of the tenant was made to the master to set aside the judgment, and an affidavit was filed claiming the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. That application was refused. The landlord, having been given leave to proceed, gave notice of the proceedings to the tenant, and applied for, and was given, leave to enforce the judgment by writ of possession. The tenant appealed against the refusal of the master to set aside that judgment.

B In my opinion, the judgment was wrong for two reasons: (i) When a house is one to which the Rent Restrictions Acts apply, then under s. 3 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, even though some rent is in arrear and unpaid, the court has no power to make an order or judgment for possession "unless the court considers it reasonable" to do so. That provision limits the jurisdiction of the court, with the result that in any case where there is reason to think that the house is within the Acts, it is the duty of the court to see

C whether the conditions required by the Act are satisfied, even though not pleaded or raised by the tenant: Barton v. Fincham (1), Salter v. Lask (2) and Davies v. Warwick (3). That was not done in this case before judgment was signed. The subsequent applications under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act and R.S.C. Ord. 47, r. 1, do not touch the point, because they proceed on the assumption that the judgment was valid. (ii) Under s. 17 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, if a person takes proceedings under the D Rent Restriction Acts in the High Court which could have been taken in the county court, he is not entitled to any costs. Notwithstanding that enactment, the judgment ordered the tenant to pay costs.

In these circumstances I allow the appeal and set the judgment aside. No costs will be awarded to the landlord.

E I desire to draw attention to the following points: (i) In the case of houses within the Rent Restrictions Acts, the procedure in the county court is better suited to carry out the intention of the legislature than the procedure in the High Court. In the county court the tenant receives a summons to appear at the court on a named day, and on that day the judge inquires into the case to see whether the conditions of the Act are satisfied before he makes an order for possession. In the High Court the tenant receives a writ commanding him to

F "enter an appearance." If he fails to do so, as he may for a number of reasons, then judgment is entered against him automatically without any inquiry whether the conditions of the Act are satisfied, and it may be a judgment which the court has no jurisdiction to give, either in respect of possession or costs. (ii) In cases under the Rent Restrictions Acts the legislature has sought to discourage proceedings in the High Court by disentitling the plaintiff to any costs. If a plaintiff chooses to proceed in the High Court notwithstanding the discouragement, the High Court should be informed of the facts so that it may be able to act accordingly. It is desirable, therefore, that, in actions for possession of a dwelling-house, the endorsement of the writ should state either the reason why the house is not within the Rent Restrictions Acts or, if it is within the Rent Restrictions Acts, what is the ground on which possession is sought.

G
Appeal allowed. Case remitted to Watford County Court.

H Solicitors: Dixon, Hunt & Tayler (for the landlord).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME CORPORATION v. WOLSTANTON LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), December 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 1946, January 21, 1947.]

Gas—Local authority owning gas pipes laid under public highways by virtue of statutory powers—Right to subjacent support—Damage to pipes from subsidence of surface land caused by mining operations—Right of authority to damages—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 15), s. 6—Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883 (c. 37), s. 4.

Newcastle-under-Lyme corporation were the gas undertakers for the area covered by their borough, and their gas mains had been laid pursuant to successive local Acts embodying s. 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, which provides: "The undertakers . . . may open and break up the soil and pavement of the several streets and bridges within the limits of the special Act . . . and lay down and place within the same limits, pipes, conduits, service pipes, and other works . . . and they may . . . do all other acts which the undertakers shall from time to time deem necessary for supplying gas to the inhabitants of the district included within the said limits . . ." The defendant company mined certain seams of iron and coal and in the course of their workings let down the surface of the soil and damaged some of the corporation's gas mains. In an action by the corporation against the defendant company for damages in respect of the said damage:—

HELD: (i) Section 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, did not confer on the corporation any legal or equitable right in the soil which surrounded the gas mains, but only a right to possession of the gas mains and the cavity filled by them.

(ii) the corporation never acquired any right of support against the defendant company except the implied right arising from the exercise of the corporation's statutory privilege and founded on the principle that when the legislature gives power to do something the execution of which requires subjacent support from land the persons who do the act acquire such a right to support as against the landowner: see Normanton Gas Co. v. Pope & Pearson, Ltd. (3); but that implied right was swept away by s. 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, and the corporation had no right to support for their gas mains whether laid before or after 1883.

(iii) the corporation had failed to prove that, at the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, no compensation was recoverable in respect of the right to support of pipes laid before 1883, and so had not satisfied the condition for the preservation of such right in the second part of s. 5 of the Act.

(iv) there was nothing in s. 4 of the Act of 1883 which limited the operation of that section to land within 40 yards from the gas mains, and, therefore, there would be an implied right to support as regards land outside that limit.

Decision of EVERSHED, J., ([1946] 2 All E.R. 447), reversed.

[AS TO SUPPORT OF GAS MAINS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, pp. 36 to 40, paras. 69 to 77; FOR CASES, see 41 DIGEST, 36, 263 to 266; and FOR STATUTES see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 8 (Gas), p. 1215, Vol. 13 (Public Health), p. 798, and Vol. 20 (Waterworks), p. 186].

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hilton v. Granville (Lord) (1844), 5 Q.B. 701; 1 Dav. & Mer. 614; 13 L.J.Q.B. 193; 2 L.T.O.S. 419; 114 E.R. 1414; 34 Digest 703, 923.
- (2) Wolstanton, Ltd. v. A.-G. of Duchy of Lancaster & Newcastle-under-Lyme Corpn., [1940] 3 All E.R. 101; [1940] A.C. 860.
- (3) Normanton Gas Co. v. Pope & Pearson, Ltd. (1883), 52 L.J.Q.B. 629; 49 L.T. 798; 32 W.R. 134; 11 Digest 154, 359.
- (4) New Moss Colliery v. Manchester Corporation (1908), A.C. 117; 77 L.J.Ch. 392; 98 L.T. 467; 72 J.P. 169; 11 Digest 154, 356.
- (5) R. v. Chelsea Waterworks Co. (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 156; 2 Nev. & M.K.B. 767; 2 Nev. & M.M.C. 13; 2 L.J.M.C. 98; 110 E.R. 750; 38 Digest 451, 183.

- (6) Holywell Union and Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co., [1895] A.C. 117; 64 L.J.M.C. 113; 71 L.T. 818; 59 J.P. 566; 38 Digest 424, 7.
- (7) R. v. West Middlesex Waterworks (1859), 1 E. & E. 716; 28 L.J.M.C. 135; 32 L.T.O.S. 388; 23 J.P. 164; 120 E.R. 1078; 38 Digest 450, 171.
- (8) Dalton v. Angus, [1881] 6 A.C. 740; 19 Digest 7, 4; sub nom. Public Works Commissioners v. Angus & Co., Dalton v. Angus & Co., 50 L.J.Q.B. 689; 44 L.T. 844.
- (9) L.N.E.R. v. B.A. Collieries, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 51; [1945] A.C. 143; 114 L.J.Ch. 23; 172 L.T. 50; Digest Supp.
- (10) Stroyan v. Knowles, Hamer & Same (1861), 6 H. & N. 454; 30 L.J. Ex. 102; 3 L.T. 746; 19 Digest 170, 1187.
- (11) R. v. Mersey & Irwell Navigation Co. (of Proprietors) (1829), 9 B. & C. 95; 4 Man. & Ry. K.B. 84; 2 Man. & Ry. M.C. 106; 7 L.J.O.S.M.C. 70; 109 E.R. 36; 38 Digest 469, 308.
- (12) Dudley Corporation v. Dudley's (Earl) Settled Estates Trustees, 45 L.T. 733; 46 J.P. 340; sub nom. Re Dudley Corporation (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 86; 51 L.J.Q.B. 121; 41 Digest 36, 264.
- (13) Howley Park Coal & Cannell Co. v. L.N.W.R. Co., [1913] A.C. 11; sub nom. L.N.W.R. Co. v. Howley Park Coal & Cannell Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 97; 80 L.J.Ch. 537; 104 L.T. 546; 11 Digest 152, 345, 153, 353.
- (14) Wath-upon-Deerne U.D.C. v. John Brown & Co., Ltd., [1936] Ch. 172; 105 L.J. Ch. 81; 154 L.T. 295; 51 T.L.R. 353; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant company from a decision of EVERSHED, J. (reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 447), who held that the corporation had, by force of s. 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, the exclusive right to occupy as licensees the space in the soil taken by the pipes and that subterranean part of the soil on which the pipes rested and so were entitled to recover damages as for a nuisance. The company appealed. The facts appear fully in the judgment of MORTON, L.J.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., Andrew Clark, K.C., and J. B. Herbert for the company.

Harman, K.C., and Wilfrid Hunt for the corporation.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 21, 1947. The following judgments were read.

MORTON, L.J.: In this action the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of the borough of Newcastle-under-Lyme claimed against Wolstanton, Ltd., a declaration that the company was not and is not entitled to mine or otherwise work any coal, ironstone, or other minerals under or near to the plaintiffs' gas mains laid within the township of Wolstanton or elsewhere in the borough of Newcastle-under-Lyme in such manner as to let down, destroy, or injure any of such gas mains, an appropriate injunction, and damages. In the circumstances presently mentioned the claim resolved itself into one for damages only. EVERSHED, J., awarded the corporation £4,500 damages, and the company appeals.

The corporation sued as the gas undertakers in respect of a considerable area of the township of Wolstanton, the damages claimed being in respect of the gas pipes laid under the streets and pavements in that area. The corporation became the gas undertakers for this area by virtue of the Newcastle-under-Lyme Extension Order, 1931 (made pursuant to s. 46 of the Local Government Act, 1929) which had the effect of abolishing the Wolstanton United Urban District Council and vesting in the corporation all the property of that council and all its powers, duties and liabilities as gas undertakers: see ss. 28 and 30. The Wolstanton United Urban District Council itself became the undertakers for the relevant area by virtue of the Wolstanton United Urban District Council Gas Act, 1906. Briefly, the effect of that Act, which incorporated (subject to immaterial exceptions) the Gas Works Clauses Acts of 1847 and 1871, was that the Wolstanton Council became the compulsory purchasers of the gas works, mains, pipes and other the gas undertaking (so far as related to that area) of the Newcastle-under-Lyme Corporation and of the Burslem Corporation (see ss. 9 and 10), with power to continue and maintain in the area the gas works and gas undertakings of the two corporations mentioned. By other provisions of the Act the Wolstanton Council acquired the undertaking of another body known as the Chesterton Gas Light Co., Ltd., which had certain gas generating plant in the village of Chesterton and also supplied gas in that village. The two local authorities whose gas undertakings within the Wolstanton district were acquired by the Act of 1906 had in turn derived their power from two Acts passed in 1877, namely, the Newcastle-under-Lyme Corporation Act and the Burslem Local Board Gas Act. These two Acts are (as would be expected from their respective titles) somewhat dissimilar in form, but nothing turns on the dissimilarity. In each case the local authority acquired the gas undertaking previously carried on by the local gas company known (in the one case) as the Newcastle-under-Lyme Gas Light Co., and (in the other) as the Burslem and Tunstall Gas Co. In each case (with immaterial exceptions) the Gas Works Clauses Acts of 1847 and 1871 applied. In each case certain powers to acquire easements by agreement were conferred. In each case the township of Wolstanton was included in the area covered. To complete the history, it is sufficient to refer to the Newcastle-under-Lyme Gas Light Act, 1855, and to the Burslem and Tunstall Gas Company's Act, 1857, as amended by a further Act in 1868, which Acts incorporated and regulated the gas companies respectively taken over by the Acts of 1877 above mentioned. The township of Wolstanton was within the limits of both companies. The Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847, applied to both. Both were empowered to maintain, and repair, etc., the then existing works and were placed under an obligation, if required by the relevant local board so to do, to light streets as therein respectively mentioned.

It is unnecessary to refer in any greater detail to the special statutory provisions affecting the present matter, but I must now read ss. 6 and 7 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847. Section 6 is headed: "Power to break up streets, &c., under superintendence, and to open drains . . ." and it provides:

The undertakers, under such superintendence as is hereafter specified, may open and break up the soil and pavement of the several streets and bridges within the limits of the special Act, and may open and break up any sewers, drains, or tunnels within or under such streets and bridges, and lay down and place within the same limits, pipes, conduits, service pipes, and other works, and from time to time repair, alter, or remove the same, and also make any sewers that may be necessary for carrying off the washings and waste liquids which may arise in the making of the gas, and for the purposes aforesaid may remove and use all earth and materials in and under such streets and bridges, and they may in such streets erect any pillars, lamps and other works, and do all other acts which the undertakers shall from time to time deem necessary for supplying gas to the inhabitants of the district included within the said limits, doing as little damage as may be in the execution of the powers hereby or by the special Act granted, and making compensation for any damage which may be done in the execution of such powers.

Section 7 is headed "[Undertakers] not to enter on private land without consent" and enacts:

Provided always, that nothing herein shall authorise or empower the undertakers to lay down or place any pipe or other works into, through, or against any building or in any land not dedicated to public use, without the consent of the owners and occupiers thereof; except that the undertakers may at any time enter upon and lay or place any new pipe in the place of an existing pipe in any land wherein any pipe hath been already lawfully laid down or placed in pursuance of this or the special Act or any other Act of Parliament, and may repair or alter any pipe so laid down.

It is clear, in the circumstances of the present case (1) that all the pipes with which this action is concerned were laid under public highways, including footpaths, (2) that until recent years the gas supplied in the town of Wolstanton was derived from Burslem or (to some extent) from Chesterton and not from Newcastle-under-Lyme, (3) that all the relevant pipes were laid in exercise of the general power contained in s. 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, or in pursuance of the provisions of corresponding clauses in one or other of the private Acts cited, there being no evidence of any exercise for the purpose of any powers to acquire easements or other proprietary interests by agreement. Although, as I have already stated, certain gas appears to have been supplied from the Chesterton works, nothing turns on this fact, and it has been unnecessary to refer to any powers under which the Chesterton Gas Co. in fact laid its pipes and supplied gas.

Wolstanton, Ltd., the defendant company, was incorporated in 1928 and acquired the residue of a lease of certain seams of ironstone and coal granted in 1917 to their predecessors by the Crown in the right of the Duchy of Lancaster. Two only of these seams are material for present purposes, namely, the Red Shagg ironstone seam at a depth of approximately 490 yards at the shaft and the Great Row coal seam at a depth of about 170 yards below that of the Red Shagg ironstone. Shortly after its incorporation the company began to work the two seams and it has continued since so to do. No trouble arose between the corporation and the company until 1934, but from that year up to the date of the issue of the writ substantial damage was admittedly done to the plaintiff corporation's gas pipes as a result of the movement of the surface land attributable to the defendant company's mining operations.

- A was effected very many years ago, long before any of the gas works or pipes here in question were made or laid. Both surface and minerals appear originally to have been part of the copyhold land of the manor of Newcastle-under-Lyme. After this severance, the Crown, in the right of the Duchy, claimed that they and those entitled through them to work the mines enjoyed the benefit of a customary right to extract the minerals so as to let down the surface without any obligation to pay compensation for surface damage. This assertion was
- B successfully challenged by a surface proprietor as long ago as 1845 in Hilton v. Earl Granville (1), but the Duchy and those interested in the minerals through the Duchy appear to have been undeterred by this reverse, and continued to assert the right to let down the surface land without payment of compensation until the corporation, acting as owners of a fire station, again challenged the validity of the alleged custom. On this occasion the litigation
- C proceeded to the House of Lords: see Wolstanton, Ltd. and A.G. of Duchy of Lancaster v. Newcastle-under-Lyme Corporation (2). The House affirmed the view of the Court of Queen's Bench that the alleged custom was unreasonable and finally negatived its existence.

- This decision having established that the mineral owners and those claiming through them had no right so to work the minerals as to let down or injure the surface land, and, accordingly, that the owners of the surface in which the
- D pipes here in question were laid have and always have had an unqualified right to the support of the land in its natural state, the defendant company, in order to carry on its undertaking, applied to the Railway and Canal Commission Court. Certain orders have been made by that tribunal, the first on Dec. 17, 1943, empowering the company to work the minerals on terms of payment of compensation for damage caused. Under these orders the company is now admittedly entitled to work the mines so as to let down the surface, but on terms
- E (so far as concerns the corporation as gas undertakers) of being liable to pay compensation to them for any damage done to their gas works and pipes. By reason of these orders the corporation no longer asks for the declaration or the injunction mentioned in the writ, but has confined itself to a claim for damages. The writ was issued on May 11, 1942, and since the corporation concedes that the company can invoke the Limitation Act, 1939, to limit its
- F liability, the claim of the plaintiff corporation is now confined to the damage proved to have been occasioned by the defendant company during the period of six years immediately prior to May 11, 1942. Particulars of the damage alleged were given and are bound with the pleadings in the action. These particulars fall under three heads, namely, (1) damage, equivalent to the cost of repairing a large number of breaks in the gas pipes or mains; (2) damage, equivalent to the cost of replacing cast iron pipes with spun steel pipes where
- G the breaks were such as to render it economically not possible to repair the pipes, or where the risk of further damage was so great as to make it impracticable to maintain iron pipes; (3) damage for gas lost. It is not necessary for this court to consider the quantum of the damage suffered, as it was agreed at the trial that the company, by its workings, caused damage amounting to £4,500 to the corporation's apparatus during the relevant period. EVERSHER, J. found as a fact that the damage suffered could not be limited or qualified by
- H reference to such mining operations as took place within 40 yards of the places where the damage occurred. He also found (1) that the company had not failed to work "in a reasonable and proper manner" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883; (2) that some of the damaged pipes were laid prior to Aug. 25, 1883, that being the date of the passing of the Act of 1883. I should add that no suggestion was made by the company that the movement of the surface land, which caused the damage suffered by the corporation, was in any way caused or aggravated by the presence of the corporation's pipes or mains therein. EVERSHER, J.

decided in favour of the corporation and, as I have said, he awarded £4,500 damages. He decided in favour of the company on two subordinate issues which I shall mention in a moment.

From that judgment the company appeals, and the corporation served a notice on Oct. 10, 1946, in the following terms:

Take notice that upon the hearing of the defendants' appeal from the judgment made in this action and dated July 25, 1946, the plaintiffs [the corporation] intend to contend that, if the appeal succeeds, in any case the plaintiffs [the corporation] are entitled to damages in respect of damage (a) to any gas mains laid prior to the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, and also (b) to any gas mains so far as the damage was due to workings of minerals beyond a distance of 40 yards and that all necessary or proper enquiries may be ordered and directions given with a view to the ascertainment of such damages in default of the same being agreed.

This notice raises before the court the two subordinate issues which I have just mentioned, and it will be convenient if I now read ss. 4 and 5 of the Act of 1883. Section 4 is headed "Limitation of right to support for sanitary works over mines," and provides:

Except as in this Act provided, a local authority shall not by reason only of anything contained in the Sanitary Act under the authority of which a sanitary work has been or is constructed or maintained be deemed to have acquired or to be entitled to or to be bound to acquire or to make compensation for any right of support for such sanitary work as against any person owning or working or being lessee or occupier of or entitled to work or otherwise interested in any mine; and nothing in such Sanitary Act shall be deemed to have subjected or to subject any such person to any liability to the local authority in respect of damage to a sanitary work caused in or consequent upon the working of any mines in a reasonable and proper manner.

Section 5 is headed "Savings" and reads:

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to repeal, invalidate, or affect any express enactment in a Sanitary or other Act with respect to rights of support for sanitary works, or any agreement made before the passing of this Act with respect to such rights, or to affect any action, arbitration, or other legal proceeding concluded before or pending at the passing of this Act. Where any right of support has been acquired before the passing of this Act by a local authority in respect of any sanitary work, and no compensation is at the passing of this Act recoverable in respect of such right, nothing in this Act shall be construed to apply to the work in respect of which such right has been acquired, or operate to deprive the local authority of such right or to entitle any person to any compensation in respect thereof, to which such person would not have been entitled if this Act had not been passed.

The main question on the appeal is one of some difficulty, and the court has had every possible assistance from the interesting arguments of counsel on both sides. I think that the contentions before us may be summarised as follows. The company's contentions are:

(i) The corporation can make no claim against the company under any of the provisions of the Act of 1883, or of the so-called mining code incorporated therewith by s. 3 thereof, because the corporation and its predecessors have failed to comply with s. 19 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as modified by s. 3 (3) of the Act of 1883. (ii) The corporation could only obtain a right of support against the company under the principle laid down in Normanton Gas Co. v. Pope & Pearson, Ltd. (3), where BRETT, M.R. said (49 L.T. 798 at p. 801):

... when the legislature has given power to do something, the execution of which requires subjacent support from the land, I think it follows that the persons who have to do the act in question get a right to subjacent support as against the landowner. This implied grant of a right to support, says the company, arose "by reason only" of the corporation's Sanitary Act within s. 4 of the Act of 1883, and, therefore, it was swept away, as against the mineowners, by that section. (iii) The corporation had no other right of support. Therefore, this action must fail.

The corporation admits contention (i), but seeks to meet contentions (ii) and (iii) by the following line of argument:—(a) On laying its pipes in the soil the corporation or its predecessor in title became the occupier, not only of the cavity occupied by those pipes, but also of the contiguous soil which surrounded those pipes. (b) The owners of that soil had a right of support at common law as against the company : see Hilton v. Earl Granville (1) ; and the corporation' as occupier of that portion of the soil which was contiguous to its pipes, was entitled to that natural right of support. (c) Being entitled to that natural right of support, the corporation never required or acquired any implied statutory right of support against the company under the principle of the Normanton Case (3). (d) The right mentioned under (b) above was unaffected by s. 4 of the Act of 1883, because it was not a right arising by reason only of anything contained in the corporation's "Sanitary Act," within the meaning of s. 4 of the Act of 1883.

The line of argument expresses, in substance, the view which was taken by EVERSHED, J., and, as I am in agreement with his reasoning up to a certain point, it will be convenient to set it out in his own words. He referred to ss. 6 and 7 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, and continued ([1946] 2 All E.R. 447, at p. 453) :

To the contrast with s. 6 of the 1847 Act provided by s. 7 must be added the further contrast provided by s. 10 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, giving power to the undertakers as therein provided to acquire easements by agreement ; and the latter contrast is reflected in the express powers to be found, for example, in the Burslem Local Board Gas Act, 1877, and the Newcastle-under-Lyme Corporation Act, 1877, to acquire easements by agreement and also (subject to the strict limits imposed) to acquire land. (See e.g., ss. 10 and 11 of the Burslem Act, and ss. 48 and 49 of the Newcastle Act). I add that the exercise of all the powers to which I have referred must plainly be limited by reference to the purpose of the gas undertakers, i.e., the supply of gas, and would, therefore, come to an end if the undertakers ceased to carry on such undertaking. In these circumstances, and bearing in mind the general rule that no greater rights or interests should be treated as conferred upon the undertakers than are necessary for the fulfilment of the object of the statute, it seems to me reasonably clear, as a matter of the construction of s. 6 of the 1847 Act, that the terms of the section are not intended to confer, and are not apt to confer, upon the undertakers any right of ownership or proprietorship of the land affected. Equally, in my judgment, is the language of the section inappropriate to create in favour of the undertakers any tenancy or any easement or interest analogous to an easement. It is true that the rights of the undertakers are the creatures of statute, and that it is within the competence of Parliament to confer or create interests without regard to those incidents which are regarded as requisite to an agreement inter partes. Thus Parliament may create an easement in gross as it may, I assume, create a tenancy without provision for the payment of rent and notwithstanding the absence of any term certain. But the absence of the incidents ordinarily appropriate to the existence of a tenancy or an easement is, at the least, an important consideration for the determination of the question whether, upon the true construction of the statute, the creation of any such interest was intended. It is, indeed, somewhat tempting to conclude that some right in the nature of an easement ought to be inferred ; and I have in mind the reference to a wayleave in the speech of LORD ATKINSON in New Moss Colliery, Ltd. v. Manchester Corporation, [1908] A.C. 117, at p. 124. But, in my judgment, these considerations are insufficient to give to the language of s. 6 of the Act of 1847 a meaning and intent which that language—particularly in the light of the contrasts to which I have already referred—cannot naturally or properly bear.

I agree with the passage just quoted. Later, EVERSHED, J., expressed the view (with which again, I agree) that the corporation had no title, legal or equitable, in the land itself.

EVERSHED, J., then referred to a number of decided cases and continued (ibid., p. 455) :

I have dealt at some length with this aspect of the matter, since there appears to be in the books no authoritative pronouncement upon the true nature of the interest in, or relating to, the land of persons or corporations authorised by statute in the terms of s. 6 of the 1847 Act, or of other comparable statutes, to lay pipes or cables under highways. I venture to state my conclusion upon the position of the plaintiff corporation as follows. They have by force of the statute the exclusive right to occupy for the purposes of their statutory undertaking the space in the soil taken by the pipes and that (subterranean) part of the soil on which the pipes rest ; but that exclusive right of occupation, which continues so long as the corporation carry on their undertaking, does not depend upon or involve the vesting in the plaintiff corporation of any legal or equitable estate in the land. If the language in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, Hailsham edn., Vol. 27, p. 355, para. 786, note (a), is to be taken to imply that persons or corporations who have laid pipes or cables under statutory powers, similar to those applicable to the plaintiff corporation and their predecessors in the present case, have an interest in the land of the nature of an easement and that the rating decisions proceed from such a view, I do not think such a conclusion is justified and I find myself unable to accept it.

I accept the whole of this reasoning with the vital exception that I do not accept the judge's reference to "that (subterranean) part of the soil on which the pipes rest." This is, in my view, the crucial point at which the corporation's line of argument breaks down. I do not think that the corporation has the exclusive right to occupy anything except the space which is filled by its pipes. To test this, let me assume that some person, not authorised by the corporation, removed all the soil round a portion of the corporation's pipe, being careful to do no damage to the surface of the pipe and providing sufficient support to prevent any damage by subsidence. Could it be said that that person had committed a trespass against the corporation? In my judgment, no. If this is so, it seems to follow that the corporation has not the exclusive right to occupy any part of the soil by which its pipes are surrounded. I may add that if the corporation are the occupiers of a "cylinder" of soil round their pipes, I can find no satisfactory answer to the question: "How thick is that cylinder?" EVERSLED, J., went on to say:

It follows that the plaintiff corporation cannot, in my judgment, say that... they are (as counsel on their behalf put it) the inheritors of the right of support admittedly vested in the owners of the surface land.

I have omitted a few words which I find difficult to understand, but they do not, I think, affect the sense of the observation just quoted, with which I entirely agree.

To sum up, accepting as I do the reasoning of EVERSLED, J., with the one vital exception which I have mentioned, we agree: (a) That the corporation has no right of ownership or proprietorship of the soil in which its pipes are laid; (b) that it is not the tenant of any part of that soil; (c) that no easement is vested in the corporation; (d) that the corporation has no title, legal or equitable, in that soil; (e) that the corporation is not the inheritor of the right to support admittedly vested in the owners of the surface land. Further, in my view, and here I differ from the judge, the corporation has not the exclusive right to occupy any portion of that soil, as distinct from the space or cavity occupied by its pipes.

To what conclusion do these findings lead? They lead me to the conclusion that the corporation never acquired any right of support against the defendant company except the implied right arising from the exercise of the corporation's statutory powers, as explained in the Normanton case (3). I think that EVERSLED, J., might have arrived at the same conclusion if he had thought, as I do, that the corporation is not in exclusive occupation of any part of that soil in respect of which there exists a natural right of support as against the company. As I have said, all that the corporation has the right to occupy, and does occupy, is a cavity in the ground, which is entirely filled by the pipes in question. A cavity cannot have attached to it a natural right to support; it is merely an empty space. Nor can a gas pipe, although a right to have it supported may be acquired in other ways, e.g., by statute or by prescription. I should add that it was not contended on behalf of the corporation that any prescriptive right to support had arisen in the present case. If I am right so far, it follows that the corporation's line of argument breaks down at an early stage. In my judgment, the only right to support, as against the company, which the corporation possessed up to 1883, was the implied right to support under the principle in the Normanton case (3), and that right was swept away by s. 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883. It was a right which the corporation was deemed to have acquired or be entitled to by reason only of the provisions of the Sanitary Act under the authority of which the corporation's sanitary works were constructed. It is true that s. 4 did not affect any right to support which the corporation acquired, under the principle in the Normanton case (3), as against the owners of the soil lying over the mines since that section only deals with rights of support as against persons working mines, but that fact does not assist the corporation in the present action. In my view, the action should have been dismissed on the ground that the corporation had failed to establish any existing right to support as against the defendant company.

EVERSHED, J., in a closely-reasoned judgment, arrived at a conclusion in favour of the corporation. I think the basis for his decision was that the corporation had possession of some part of a stratum of soil which enjoyed a natural right to support. That right was, he thought, enough to entitle the corporation to maintain an action for damage to the pipes suffered as a result of the company's interference with "the natural right of support attaching to the surface land." With respect, I cannot accept his premise, and his conclusion seems to me inconsistent with his view that the corporation was not the "inheritor" of that natural right of support. I think that he was influenced in forming his view as to the company's rights to possession of part of the surface land by certain cases regarding the liability of gas undertakers for rates. For my part, I find nothing in these cases which leads me to doubt the correctness of the view which I have just expressed.

- A
- B When it was said by DENMAN, C.J., in R. v. Chelsea Waterworks Co. (5) (5 B. and A. 156, at p. 169) that they, the undertakers "have the exclusive right in a portion of the soil," he was not referring to anything more than the space occupied by the pipes, and the pipes themselves. In the same passage he remarked :

... the company are, on the authority of the decided cases, the occupiers of the land filled by the pipes.

- C Again, in Holywell Union and Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co. (6) LORD DAVEY said ([1895] A.C. 117, at p. 133) :

The real question is ... whether the company is de facto in occupation of some portion of the soil ... I cannot doubt that the company occupy, with their tunnel, the portion of ground in which the tunnel is constructed, and also those portions which are enclosed within the tunnel, and used by the company for the purpose of their undertaking.

- D LORD DAVEY quoted with approval the statement of the law by WIGHTMAN, J. in R. v. West Middlesex Waterworks (7) (1 E. and E. 716, at p. 720) :

In this case the first question is, whether the company are rateable for their mains which are laid under the surface of the highway, without any freehold or leasehold interest in the soil thereof being vested in the company. We think they are. These mains are fixed capital, vested in land. The company is in possession of the mains buried in the soil, and so is, de facto, in possession of that space in the soil which the mains fill, for a purpose beneficial to itself. The decisions are uniform in holding gas companies to be rateable in respect of their mains, although the occupation of such mains may be de facto merely, and without any legal or equitable estate in the land where the mains lie, by force of some statute.

- E
- F I do not think that any one of the cases cited before us bears out the proposition that the corporation has the exclusive right to possession of the soil surrounding the pipes, as distinct from the pipes themselves and the cavity which is filled by the pipes. Further, it does not appear that the proposition was put forward in any of the cases in which undertakers were claiming a right to support. I would add this. Even if I had agreed with the view of EVERSHED, J., that the corporation had possession of some part of the soil, as distinct from the cavity occupied by its pipes and the pipes themselves, I should still have felt some doubt as to the correctness of his conclusion. I was impressed
- G by the final argument of counsel for the company that the applicability of s. 4 of the 1883 Act cannot depend on whether owners of the soil in which the pipes are laid did or did not possess a right of support, in respect of that soil, as against the owners of subjacent mines. He pointed out that when a long stretch of pipe is laid, portions of it might be in soil which could not be let down and other portions might be in soil which could be let down, and he suggested that it would be an artificial construction of s. 4 to regard it as having
- H had effect in the case of the latter portions but not in the case of the former portions. I think, also, that there is much to be said for the argument that, even if the corporation had such a right of support as the judge held to exist, that right of support existed by reason only of the provisions in its Sanitary Act under the authority of which its pipes were laid. It seems to me a somewhat narrow distinction to say : " True, our right to lay and maintain these pipes arose by virtue of the Sanitary Act, and we could not have obtained our right to support at common law unless we had first been empowered to lay and maintain our pipes in this piece of land. Still, our right to support does not arise by reason only of anything contained in that Act." This distinction may, however, be justified by the word "only" which appears in s. 4. It is not necessary for me to arrive at a final conclusion on the arguments just mentioned, as I have already arrived at the conclusion that the corporation never had any right of support except the implied right which arose under the Normanton case (3).

I cannot feel that the conclusion at which I have arrived involves any injustice. The corporation would have had the extensive protection afforded by ss. 18 to 27 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, if the provisions of s. 19 of that Act (as modified by s. 3 (3) of the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883), had been carried out. Moreover, neither the corporation nor its predecessors in title ever went to the expense of acquiring a grant of the portion of the land in which their pipes are situate or of an easement of support for those pipes. The view which I have formed seems to me to agree well with the scheme embodied in the Act of 1883. I think the legislature had in mind the object of substituting the protection of the "Mining Code" for the kind of right to support which had previously been enjoyed by the corporation in the present case.

I must now consider the two subordinate issues which I have already mentioned, and I can deal with them shortly, as I find myself in agreement with the views of EVERSHED, J., on these points.

The first of these issues is whether the corporation, if it fails on the main issue in the action, is entitled to damages in respect of damage to any pipes laid before the passing of the Act of 1883. Counsel for the corporation relied on the judge's finding that some, at least, of its damaged pipes were laid before the passing of the 1883 Act. He argued that no compensation was or could ever have been payable in the circumstances in respect of these pipe-laying operations, and, accordingly, that the following portion of s. 5 of that Act applied to the pipes so laid :

Where any right of support has been acquired before the passing of this Act by any local authority in respect of any sanitary work, and no compensation is at the passing of this Act recoverable in respect of such right, nothing in this Act shall be construed to apply to the work in respect of which such right has been acquired.

I agree with the judge's reasons for rejecting that argument and I do not desire to add to those reasons. In brief, he did not accept the proposition that no compensation was, or would ever be, payable in respect of the laying of pipes during the pre-Act period.

The second of those issues is whether the corporation, assuming that it is prevented by s. 4 of the Act of 1883 from recovering damages for any damage to its pipes occasioned by the workings of minerals within the distance of 40 yards, could still recover damages in so far as the damage was occasioned by workings of minerals outside a distance of 40 yards. It was contended that, on the true construction of s. 4, its operation did not extend to land more than 40 yards from the sanitary work in question, and that the corporation still retained its right to support under the principle in the Normanton case (3) as against any person working mines outside the 40 yards limit. I cannot accept this argument. It seems to me there is nothing in s. 4 which would justify the court in limiting its operation in the manner suggested. The words are "any right to support for such sanitary work as against any person owning or working or being lessee or occupier of or entitled to work or otherwise interested in any mine." The italics are mine, and these words seem to me as wide as they could well be. With regard to the opening words "Except as in this Act provided," I can find nothing in the provisions of the Act outside s. 4 which supports the argument.

The result is that, in my view, this appeal succeeds, and judgment ought to have been entered in the action for the company. I would add that COHEN, L.J., has read the judgment which I have just delivered and has asked me to say that he agrees with it.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I will not recapitulate in full the facts and history of this appeal, which have been fully stated by MORTON, L.J. To decide whether the corporation has, as against the company, the right of support on which their claim for damages is based, it is necessary to consider their rights apart from the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, and then to consider whether the necessary right remains in them, having regard to the provisions of that Act.

A It is, I think, important to bear in mind, in the first place, that the natural right of support, as known to the law, is a right of support for land in its natural condition. LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Dalton v. Angus (8) (6 App. Cas. 740, at p. 791-2), said that the "doctrine laid down" (i.e., with regard to the natural right of support) "must, in my opinion, be understood of land, without reference to buildings." VISCOUNT MAUGHAM, in the L.N.E.R. Co. v. B.A. Collieries, Ltd (9) said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 51, at p. 53):

The common law right is to have support to the land in its natural state, which is not an easement, but an incident to the land itself.

B He then referred to LORD SELBORNE's judgment in the case which I have cited (Dalton v. Angus (8)). If there are buildings which do not contribute to the subsidence, damages for injury to them can be recovered as part of the damage flowing from the defendants' wrongful act in causing the ground on which they stood to subside: Stroyan v. Knowles (10) (6 H. & N. 454, at p. 465). If, therefore, as it seems to me, the corporation seek to rely on a natural right of support, they must establish a sufficient right in respect of the land on which their mains rest. A right of support for buildings or works can be acquired by grant, C prescription, or statute. It is conceded that no claim based on prescription can be put forward in respect of these mains, and that there was no grant except such as can be implied by reason of the provisions of the Act under which the mains were laid.

D In considering the position apart from statute, the corporation rely on the fact that the mineral owners, the company's lessors, the Crown, in the right of the Duchy of Lancaster, had no right so to work their minerals as to let down or injure the surface land. No such right, therefore, it is argued, could be conferred on the company. The owners of the land in which these mains were laid have, and always had, the natural right of support as known to the law as against the mine owners. The corporation and their predecessors did not purchase any land or any interest in land from the owners of the land in which the mains are. Nothing in the nature of a proprietary interest in the E land was vested in them. The mains were laid under successive local Acts, which embodied s. 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, which has already been set out.

The first question, therefore, in my opinion is: "What right would the corporation obtain in relation to the land in which their mains were laid?" The rating cases which were cited to us lay down that undertakers with similar powers and duties to those possessed by the corporation have an exclusive F right to occupy and enjoy a portion of the soil. The question is: "What portion?" LORD DAVEY in Holywell Union & Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co. (6) says ([1895] A.C. 117, at p. 132):

The law was thus stated by WIGHTMAN, J., in R. v. West Middlesex Waterworks (7) (1 E. & E. 716, at p. 720): "In this case," says the learned judge, "the first question is whether the company are rateable for their mains, which are laid under the surface of the highway, without any freehold or leasehold interest in the soil thereof being vested G in the company. We think they are. These mains are fixed capital vested in land. The company is in possession of the mains buried in the soil, and so is de facto in possession of that space in the soil which the mains fill, for a purpose beneficial to itself."

In R. v. Mersey Irwell Navigation Co. (11) PARKE, J., in referring to gas companies, said (9 B. & C. 95, at p. 112):

H they have the exclusive right of occupying by means of these pipes that portion of the soil in which the main is.

Other statements could be cited. It is submitted for the corporation that they are, through their mains, also in occupation of the land on which the mains rest and of the other land surrounding them.

A question arose in the course of the argument whether the mains remain vested in the corporation as alleged in the statement of claim and admitted in the defence, or whether, as indicated in the passage cited from LORD DAVEY's speech and in other cases dealing with rating, they become part and parcel of the freehold. Counsel for the company was prepared to take the statement of claim as covering, both as to liability and damages, the claim as based on the latter view if it affected our decision. I was, at one time, inclined to think that it might, but I have come to the conclusion that this issue is immaterial. Whichever view is taken, the question remains, as it seems to me: "Do the corporation occupy any land except that which their mains fill?" And, in particular, "Do they occupy the land on which the mains rest?" The cases cited, and there are others, suggest the answer "No," and, although the matter may not have been of crucial importance in these cases, the principle seems fairly clearly laid down. There are, in any event, to my mind, difficulties about the submission on behalf of the corporation. How far does the occupation go? Could the gas undertakers maintain an action of trespass if someone interfered with the soil within six inches or one inch of their main, or only if he disturbed the soil actually touching the surface of the main? I am assuming that no damage is done to the main. The reality of the matter, as it seems to me, is that what the undertaker, operating under s. 6, wants is, not the occupation of some surrounding undefined area of soil, but a right of support for his mains. Such a right per se cannot be claimed under the natural right of support unless the corporation can establish rights in respect of the ground on which they rest. If they could establish this latter right, it is conceded that the mains did not contribute to the subsidence, and this damage to the mains could be claimed as resulting from this letting down of this land on which they rest. On the authorities, and for the reasons which I have given, I do not think they can establish any such right.

Neither the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, nor the Public Health Act, 1875, dealing with sewers, gave, in terms, any right of support for the gas mains or sewers laid under the provisions contained in them. The question came before the courts first in Dudley Corporation v. Dudley Trustees (12). In that case the owner of the land in which the sewer was laid had no right of support as against the mine owner, as the surface and the minerals were both in the ownership of the defendants. The argument of counsel for the corporation was not, therefore, possible. The decision proceeded on the basis that the purpose of the statute would be defeated if there was no right of support. Both BRETT, L.J., and LINDLEY, L.J., speak of the right of support for a sewer, not for the land on which it rests. The consequent interference with the mineral owner's rights was, it was held, covered by the words of the statute providing for compensation. The court, therefore, held that the Dudley Corporation had, under the provisions in the relevant statute, similar to those in s. 6 with which this appeal is concerned, an implied grant of a right of support for their sewers, coupled with a liability to compensate the mineral owners for the damage done to their property. This implied right differed, as it seems to me, in three respects from the natural right of support. It involved a liability to pay compensation, it was in respect of works and not of land, and it existed although the weight of the works themselves should contribute to the subsidence. The case does not, of course, cover the argument of counsel for the corporation, but counsel for the company relied on the general reasons and on the fact that no reference is made to the land having itself no right of support as being more consistent with his argument than with that of counsel for the corporation. He re-enforced this line of argument by reference to the Normanton Gas Co. v. Pope and Pearson (3), where a similar point came before the courts. The actual point decided there is immaterial to the present issue. It was emphasised that the gas mains in question were laid below a highway which had a right of support as against the mineral owners and this was clearly before the courts. It may well be that the mains must have been in a stratum below the highway, and this stratum, being in the ownership of the mineral owners, had no right of support for the same reason as existed in the Dudley Corporation case (12). It is, however, of some importance that no one sought to distinguish the stratum in which the pipes were from the highway, nor was the fact that the highway had its right of support regarded as affecting the matter.

It has also been submitted by counsel for the corporation that it is, in effect, impossible to apply the Dudley Corporation (12) principle to a case like the present where the mine-owner cannot let down the surface. Everything, he says, can be sensibly dealt with if the corporation enjoy the natural right of support enjoyed by the owners of the land in which the mains are. If you seek to apply the Dudley Corporation (12) principle, there is nothing, he submits, for which the mineral owner can claim compensation as he is already bound to support all the land. All that has happened is that another person has appeared who has the same right as everyone else to be supported. The surface owners could sub-divide their property and make grants carrying with them the natural right of support. On the view which I have taken, the corporation need the Dudley Corporation (12) principle to claim damages if their mains are, in fact,

- A let down, and there would be no necessary absurdity if they were able to show that their advent had caused no greater interference than that which the mine-owner already had to bear. I am not, however, clear that the mine-owner might not be able to show some damage. Although a mine-owner may have no right to let down the surface, it may be in the general interest of the inhabitants of the area that the mines should be worked although such working may involve some subsidence. It may be neither difficult nor onerous for him to arrange
- B so that injunctions are not sought against him. The advent of an undertaker with works protected by the Dudley Corporation (12) principle may introduce an obstacle to the working of the mines which, on evidence, might support a claim for compensation. Neither the decisions nor the reasoning in these cases are, in my view, conclusive of the present appeal, but, on the whole, they appear to me to fit in with the company's arguments better than with those of the corporation.

- C My conclusions can be summed up in three propositions: (1) The corporation occupy, and occupy only, the space in which the mains are. (2) The only right that they can put forward is a right of support for their mains. (3) The natural right of support possessed by the surface owners is a right of support to the land in its natural state, and the corporation cannot claim this right because their occupation is restricted to their mains. It follows, therefore,
- D that before 1883, and apart from the new protection afforded by that Act, the corporation had no right of support except that which is implied by reason of their powers and duties under the Dudley Corporation (12) principle.

- This brings me to the Act of 1883. That Act applied what is usually called the "Mining Code" of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, with modifications to (inter alia) local authorities carrying on gas undertakings. Counsel stated, I have no doubt correctly, that local authorities objected to that part of the
- E Dudley Corporation principle which made compensation immediately payable when the works were constructed irrespective of whether the mine-owner was at the time about to work seams which would, or might, damage the local authorities' works. The "Mining Code," the general provisions of which are familiar, postpones the question of payment of compensation until the mine owner is about to work within 40 yards or some other prescribed distance of the mains. The general scheme of the Act is clear. It provides a new mode of
- F protection, a new system of compensation, and, subject to certain savings, takes away, by s. 4, the right implied under the relevant local authority statute as laid down in the Dudley Corporation case (12). In order, however, to obtain the new protection, the local authority must make and deposit maps as laid down in ss. 19-21 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. The corporation in this case did not make and deposit maps, and, therefore, admittedly cannot claim the
- G benefits of this part of the code. The relevant words of s. 4 have already been quoted. The corporation have to show that their works are entitled to protection otherwise "than by reason only of anything contained" in s. 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847. The judge decided that they could show such a right. He based it on the view that they have, by force of statute, "the exclusive right to the possession of so much of the surface land as is occupied by their pipes and on which the pipes rest." I think the last words are crucial
- H and it is on this point that I come to a different conclusion from the judge, with most of whose judgment I entirely agree. I have already stated my reasons for holding that the corporation have not an exclusive right to possession of the surface land on which these pipes rest. This may seem, and perhaps is, a somewhat technical point, but the conclusion is, I think, in accordance with principle and authority. If it is said that this is a very fortunate result for the mine-owner, it is, as I see it, due to the fact that the local authority did not choose to fulfil the conditions necessary for obtaining the protection which the Acts of Parliament entitled them to claim.

A
A further point was taken. Assuming the judge was right and the corporation were entitled to claim the right of support as it exists in this area by virtue of their occupation, nevertheless that also is a right which arises only by reason of s. 6, that being the sole instrument by virtue of which the corporation and the company are brought into relation with each other. Although it is not, on the view I take, necessary to decide this question, I doubt myself the validity of this submission. If, by virtue of their right of occupation under their Act, the corporation were entitled to claim a right of support under what was described as the local law in this particular area, I should have thought myself that their right did not arise by reason only of the provisions of s. 6.

Before going on to the other points, I should, perhaps, say that, on the basis of the judge's conclusion as set out above, I agree with what he says as to the corporation's right to sustain an action of nuisance.

B
C
D
E
F
On the first of the other points relating to pipes laid before 1883, I do not desire to add anything to what has been said by MORTON, L.J. The second point on the cross-appeal may, I think, be formulated as follows. The "Mining Code," as brought in by the 1883 Act, extends to mining 40 yards on each side of the works in question. Section 4, therefore, ought to be construed as only taking away the Dudley Corporation (12) right within the area protected by the new code. We were referred to cases such as the Howley Park Coal & Cannell Co. v. L.N.W.R. Co. (13), Wath-upon-Deerne U.D.C. v. John Brown & Co., Ltd. (14), and the New Moss Colliery, Ltd. v. Manchester Corporation (4), as showing, broadly, that outside the 40 yards limit as prescribed by the code, common law rights continue to exist. These cases do not seem to me really to deal with the question which arises here, which turns on the construction of s. 4 of the 1883 Act. I appreciate, considered generally, the force of an argument that words in a statute taking away a right may be impliedly limited in their scope by the new right which, reading the Act as a whole, is intended to be substituted for what is taken away. I myself doubt whether, in the present case, the necessary basis for any such argument exists. Section 3 (2) of the Act of 1883 modifies the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, by conferring, or, at any rate, intending to confer, a power on the local authority to protect itself beyond the distance of 40 yards. It was said that this sub-section was unworkable in that it appeared to be based on the existence of a notice to be given under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, for which that Act did not provide. Whether this is so or not, it seems to me clear that the legislature intended to give the local authority power to take whatever protection it thought it required beyond the 40 yards limit, and, if that is so, the basis on which counsel for the corporation seeks to limit the general words of s. 4 disappears. Apart, however, from this sub-section, I think that the argument would fail. I think the natural construction of the Act is that the legislature, rightly or wrongly, regarded the new protection as fully adequate, and, therefore, by using the general words of s. 4, intended to take away, as against mine-owners, though not others, all the rights which could be based on the Dudley Corporation (12) principle. In the result, I agree that this appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed with costs.

G
Solicitors : Routh, Stacey, Hancock & Willis, agents for Ellis & Ellis, Burslem (for the company); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for J. Griffith, Town Clerk, Newcastle-under-Lyme (for the corporation).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Barrister-at-Law.]

JORDAN v. MAY AND ANOTHER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 14, 1947.]

Emergency Legislation—Requisition of land—Damage to land—Protection against breach of covenant to repair—"Land"—Electric plant—Storage battery—Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944, (c. 5), s. 1 (1).

The plaintiff demised to the defendants certain premises which included a shed containing an electricity generating plant. The plant consisted of an engine which was sunk in concrete and batteries which were set out on a table in the shed and connected by wires to the engine and the circuit. The lease included a repairing covenant in respect of the premises and plant. In 1943 part of the premises, with the "brick and corrugated iron engine shed" which housed the plant in question, were requisitioned under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939. The plaintiff claimed damages for breach of covenant to repair in respect of the plant. On behalf of the defendants it was contended that the plant was a "fixture," and, therefore, "land" within the meaning of the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944, s. 1 (1), and he claimed the protection of that sub-section. The county court judge decided that the engine was a fixture, and, therefore, part of the land for the purposes of s. 1 (1), but that the batteries were not fixtures, and he awarded damages in respect of the disrepair of the batteries. On appeal:—

HELD: there was evidence before the judge that the batteries were not an essential and integral part of the electricity generating plant and the judge was entitled to find that they were not fixtures.

[AS TO FIXTURES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 96-104, paras. 106-111; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 181-196, Nos. 3161-3325.]

D Cases referred to:

- (1) Pole-Carew v. Western Counties and General Manure Co., [1920] 2 Ch. 97; 89 L.J. Ch. 559; 123 L.T. 12; 31 Digest 196, 3325.
- (2) Holland v. Hodgson (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 328; 41 L.J.C.P. 146; 26 L.T. 709; 31 Digest 188, 3225.
- (3) Northern Press and Engineering Co. v. Shepherd (1908), 52 Sol. Jo. 715; 31 Digest 190, 3247.
- (4) Hulme v. Brigham, [1943] 1 All E.R. 204; [1943] 1 K.B. 152; 112 L.J.K.B. 267; 168 L.T. 7; Digest Supp.
- (5) British Economical Lamp Co., Ltd. v. Empire, Mile End, Ltd. (1913), 29 T.L.R. 386; 31 Digest 186, 3205.

APPEAL by defendants from Basingstoke County Court.

The plaintiff was the landlord and the defendants were the tenants of certain premises which had been requisitioned under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939. The plaintiff claimed damages for breach of a covenant to repair an electricity generating plant situated on the premises, and the question to be decided was whether this plant was "land" for the purposes of the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944, s. 1 (1), so that the defendants could claim the protection of that sub-section. Section 1 (1) of the Act provides:

Where in the exercise of emergency powers, possession of any land comprised in a lease is taken on behalf of His Majesty, then, during the period while possession so taken is retained, no remedy for breach of any repairing covenant contained in the lease shall be enforced, whether by action or otherwise, in respect of any damage to the land occurring during that period; and if the lease determines while possession of the land is so retained, or if upon possession of the land being given up, compensation in respect of the taking of possession thereof becomes payable for any such damage to the person entitled to the benefit of the covenant, no remedy for breach of the covenant shall at any time be enforced as aforesaid in respect of that damage.

The county court judge decided in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

G. G. Baker and H. B. Grant for the defendants.

L. A. Blundell and D. J. Hyamson for the plaintiff.

MORTON, L.J.: I do not think this is at all an easy case, but in the end it comes down to quite a short point. The landlord claimed that he was entitled to possession of property known as the Bridge Garage and Cafe, Winchester Road, Basingstoke, in the county of Hants, which was let by him to the tenants by a lease dated July 17, 1937, for the term of 7 years from Sept. 29, 1937. The defendants, who are husband and wife, concede that any tenancy which they had of these premises has come to an end and that they are only statutory tenants. On the other hand, it is conceded that the premises come within the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The plaintiff then claims mesne profits and arrears of rent. I need not go into these claims. Lastly, the plaintiff claims £220 damages :

... for breach of the covenant on the part of the defendants contained in the said lease to keep the said premises and the fixtures thereon and the gardens of the same in such repair and condition as therein mentioned. A

There are set out under headings (a) to (j) inclusive particulars of the alleged damage. As regards all of those particulars except (h) and (j) it is only necessary to say that the county court judge, after hearing evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to £29 10s. in respect of those minor items. Heading (h) is as follows: "Wiring up and re-setting electric light plant, £23." The judge held, for reasons which will appear later, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover that item but intimated that, if he had found the plaintiff entitled to recover, he would have awarded £30. Heading (j) is: "Repairs to electric light plant, batteries, and accessories." Under that head the judge found the plaintiff entitled to recover £110 damages. He, therefore, gave judgment for the plaintiff for £139 10s. with costs on scale C, and judgment for £90 19s. for the defendant on his counterclaim, that counterclaim being a claim for rent overpaid. He refused possession. B

By the lease of July 17, 1937, the plaintiff demised to the defendants :

All that piece or parcel of land comprising in area five acres or thereabouts situate in and fronting Winchester Road Basingstoke in the county of Hants together with the cafe shop and living accommodation erected thereover four garages (three being lock-up garages) brick built shed with a Crossley 110 volt generating plant therein brick built building with a two horse-power Lester engine for pumping water therein and three Bowser petrol pumps tennis court gardens orchard and grounds belonging thereto or erected thereon or on some part thereof. C

The habendum is to the defendants from Sept. 29, 1937, for a term of 7 years. The only other part of the lease which I need read is the covenant by the tenants n. cl. 2 (4) :

To keep the said Crossley 110 volt generating plant Lester water pump and three Bowser petrol pumps and other apparatus (hereinafter collectively referred to as "the said equipment") for the time being in lease in good working order and condition (fair and reasonable wear and tear and damage caused by latent defects thereof and accident by fire or tempest excepted) and to replace by suitable articles of similar kind and equal value all such parts thereof as shall become broken lost or worn out and to take upon themselves and bear the entire responsibility of the care control and management of the said equipment. D

On the same day there was executed an assignment of the goodwill of the business carried on upon the premises, that assignment being in favour of the female defendant, but on the view I take of the case nothing turns upon that. E

On Apr. 2, 1943, there was served on the plaintiff and also on the male defendant a requisitioning notice by the Hampshire War Agricultural Executive Committee in the following terms :

You are hereby notified that in exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the Cultivation of Lands Orders, 1939, the Hampshire War Agricultural Executive Committee, with the consent of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, will forthwith take possession of the land described in the schedule hereto under the provisions of reg. 51 of the Defence Regulations, 1939, and the committee hereby direct you to give up possession on April 4, 1943. F

The schedule is as follows :

In the municipal borough of Basingstoke, being part of the premises known as the Bridge Garage, Winchester Road, and comprising corrugated iron and timber framed garage, brick and corrugated iron engine shed, range of 2 lock up garages, 2 petrol pumps, and former tennis court, yard space and drive in, as coloured pink on the plan attached hereto. G

The dispute turns on the question whether there was included, under the words "brick and corrugated iron engine shed," the plant and batteries in respect of which £110 damages were awarded for want of repair. If these batteries were included in the requisition, and if possession was taken of them, the defendants would H be protected from any claim for damages by reason of the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944. The Act is headed :

An Act to regulate the rights of the parties to leases of requisitioned land with respect to the making good of damage occurring during the requisition, and for purposes connected therewith.

Section 1 (1) is as follows :

- A Where, in the exercise of emergency powers, possession of any land comprised in a lease is taken on behalf of His Majesty, then, during the period while possession so taken is retained, no remedy for breach of any repairing covenant contained in the lease shall be enforced, whether by action or otherwise, in respect of any damage to the land occurring during that period ; and if the lease determines while possession of the land is so retained, or if upon possession of the land being given up, compensation in respect of the taking of possession thereof becomes payable for any such damage to the person entitled to the benefit of the covenant, no remedy for breach of the
- B covenant shall at any time be enforced as aforesaid in respect of that damage.

Section 5 of the Act defines " damage " as follows :

" Damage " includes dilapidations, but does not include war damage within the meaning of the War Damage Act, 1943.

" Repairing covenant " is defined as follows :

- C " Repairing covenant " means a covenant, whether express or implied, and whether general or specific, to keep in repair any premises comprised in a lease, or to leave or put any such premises in repair, or to pay a sum of money in lieu of leaving or putting the premises in repair, at the termination of the lease, but does not include a covenant to lay out in the reinstatement of any such premises money received under a policy of insurance.

- D I think it is plain that the word " land " when used in s. 1 (1) of the Act would include buildings and any machinery so affixed to the freehold as to become part of it.

On Nov. 4, 1943, a letter was written to the male defendant. Headed " The War Agricultural Executive Committee, County of Southampton, The Castle, Winchester, it was as follows :

- E Dear Sir, The Bridge Garage, Winchester. Further to our interview this morning, will you take this as an authorization, subject to Mr. Murray's [manager of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries' local machinery depot], agreement, to dismantle the electric light plant and store it. This should, of course, be done carefully, and the committee must hold you responsible for seeing that all the parts are there so that if necessary the plant may be re-erected again at the expiration of the requisition.

The judge, in dealing with the claim for damages relating to the engine and the batteries, said :

- F The electric light plant was in one of the sheds requisitioned by the War Agricultural Committee. It was, as I find, a fixture, being attached to the concrete. From what follows it is plain that when the judge says that the plant was a fixture, he is referring to the engine, that being the part of the plant which was attached to the concrete. He goes on :

- G Plaintiff contends that damage to the electric plant was not damage to the land within the meaning of s. 1 (1), but in my view at common law fixtures are part of the land, and by s. 5 " damage " includes " dilapidations " which seems to refer to buildings, and, in my view, would include fixtures attached to the buildings, and " repairing covenant " means a covenant to keep in repair " any premises comprised in a lease." Here again the word " premises " is, in my view, used in the popular sense and would include buildings and fixtures which are part of the buildings. In my view, therefore, plaintiff cannot, at present at any rate, claim damages for the deterioration of and damage to the fixed plant attached to the sheds which were and still are requisitioned. Neither of the parties before us has any quarrel with that portion of the judge's
- H judgment, which covers para. (h) of the particulars of damage. The judge continues :

... but the batteries were not, in my view, fixtures and were not part of the land of which possession was taken by the War Agricultural Committee.

Counsel for the plaintiff has invited us to treat that as two findings of fact which we cannot disturb—(1) a finding that the batteries were not fixtures, and (2) a finding that they were not part of the land of which possession was taken by the War Agricultural Executive Committee. I cannot so read the passage. I think the judge is expressing his view on the question whether, having regard to the evidence before him and on the true construction of s. 1 of the Act of 1944, the batteries were "land" of which possession was taken on behalf of His Majesty. I do, however, attach great importance to that passage in the judgment because the judge, after hearing all the evidence that was given in regard to this generating plant, has formed the view which I have already quoted. There was, in my view, evidence on which he could fairly draw a distinction between these batteries and the engine which supplied power to them.

The plaintiff's wife, Mrs. May Jordan, said: "The electric light plant was all new. I used to run it. Tungsten batteries, Crossley engine, set out on a table in engine shed, and instrument board." That, I think, means that the batteries were set out on a table in the engine shed. In cross-examination, she said: "Engine was in engine shed, was on a concrete base, bolted to concrete." The defendant said: "Batteries were taken off the stands and laid on one side of the wall." To determine whether the batteries were requisitioned the relevant question is: What was the state of affairs at the time when the requisitioning took place, but it would appear that the batteries were at some time on stands. A surveyor, giving evidence, said: "Electricity plant is in the shed. Dilapidated. Generating motor is rusty, cooling system drained, storage batteries are on the floor and several are broken. General air of neglect and dilapidation. Floor of shed is concrete and motor is bolted in. I would regard it as a fixture." We were invited to treat that statement as an expression of opinion that the whole of the plant, including the batteries, was properly described as a fixture. I do not so read it. The most natural construction of it is that he would regard as a fixture the motor which was bolted in. I think there was evidence on which the judge could form that conclusion.

In one of the cases cited to us, Pole-Carew v. Western Counties & General Manure Co. (1), LORD STERNDAL, M.R., said ([1920] 2 Ch. at p. 116):

Many cases were cited to us, and it is not from any disrespect to the authorities, or to the arguments of counsel, that I refrain from examining them in detail, but because I agree with the statement in FOA ON LANDLORD AND TENANT, 5th ed., at p. 680, that "inasmuch as the whole question is in each case one of fact depending on its own circumstances, the decision in one case can seldom be a guide to a solution in another."

I respectfully accept and adopt that statement for the purposes of the present case. Our attention was called to a passage from the judgment of BLACKBURN, J., delivering the judgment of the court in Holland v. Hodgson (2), ([1872] L.R. 7 C.P. at p. 335):

Perhaps the true rule is, that articles not otherwise attached to the land than by their own weight are not to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as to show that they were intended to be part of the land, the onus of showing that they were so intended lying on those who assert that they have ceased to be chattels, and that, on the contrary, an article which is affixed to the land even slightly is to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as to show that it was intended all along to continue a chattel, the onus lying on those who contend that it is a chattel.

Counsel for the defendants submitted that in the present case there was evidence from which the court should infer that at the time of the requisitioning these batteries were connected in some way with the engine which supplied the power, and, that being so, the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the batteries were "intended all along to continue a chattel." I think that may well be a fair inference to draw from the evidence, and I am prepared to decide the case on the footing that the onus was on the plaintiff to establish that the batteries were chattels. Even so, it seems to me that the judge plainly thought that onus was discharged, and after careful consideration of the whole matter I am not satisfied that he was wrong in his conclusion, on the facts of this particular case. So far as the county court judge awarded the plaintiff the sum of £110 in respect of damage to these batteries, I think his decision must stand.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree. Having regard to the very careful, and, indeed, persuasive argument put forward by counsel on behalf of the defendants, I will add a few words to indicate my reasons for coming to that conclusion. It seems to me that the crucial question for this court to decide is whether the storage batteries were part of the "brick and corrugated iron shed" requisitioned by the government on Apr. 2, 1943. The batteries were part of the shed if they were fixtures. The case before the judge was argued by the plaintiff's counsel to the effect that the whole electrical plant in the shed was not a "fixture." The defendants argued that the whole of the plant was a fixture. The judge took the view, after hearing all the evidence, that he could divide the electric plant into two categories; that the machine, which was bolted down to a concrete bed, could properly be described as a "fixture"; and that the batteries were not "fixtures." One may point out that this was reserved and a written judgment, and we are told by counsel that in the course of the trial the judge specifically directed his mind to the question what was the legal character of the batteries, whether they were fixtures or not. Unfortunately there is very little evidence on the note about the precise location of these batteries in the shed. They certainly were not attached to the ground in any way. It is not suggested that they were, directly, but it is said they were attached by wires to the engine which was itself attached to the ground and which the judge held to be a fixture. I suppose that in that case this court is entitled to take some judicial notice of the function of these batteries. They are described as "storage batteries," and they must have been attached to the engine by wires and attached by other wires to the wiring which led to the house and so to the electric light points.

- A
- B
- C
- D
- E
- It seems to me that the question which we have to decide is: Were these batteries an essential part of the engine, which was a fixture? Were they a necessary and integral part of the engine, to quote the language of the Lords Justices in Pole-Carew v. Western Counties & General Manure Co. (1) to which my Lord has referred. The judge has said in effect that they were not, and I myself do not see how this court can say, on the evidence, that he was wrong.
- It seems to me that this plant would have worked just as well if the batteries had been housed in another shed and attached by wires to the engine. It is true that they were part of the plant, and were, no doubt, necessary to make the electric light effective, but so also was the oil which drove the engine which worked the dynamo which created the current. They were not in any way necessary to make the engine work. They were merely necessary as part of the whole scheme.
- For these reasons I do not see how it is possible to say that this finding of the judge that the batteries were not fixtures (which seems to me to be largely a question of fact) is wrong, and, therefore, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I also agree. Many authorities have been cited to us which purport to lay down criteria for determining what is and what is not a "fixture."

- F
- G
- H
- Those criteria are not always easy to harmonise, but what practically all the cases emphasise is that each case ought to be decided with a close regard to its own facts. The facts were far more fully available to the county court judge than they were to us, and this should make us slow to disturb his conclusion, unless he obviously applied a wrong principle of law. As regards the law, a criterion laid down in some recent cases which seems to have been accepted by both parties to the argument is that the test is whether the article in question is an integral or essential part of a machine which is itself admittedly a fixture. To me, these batteries seem not so much an essential or integral part of the engine, or, indeed, a part of it at all, as a convenient accessory, a receptacle attached to the engine which supplies current in which that current is stored and through which it is transmitted to the wiring system of the house. If so, the case seems, on the facts, though not exactly on all fours with any that have been cited, more nearly analogous to Northern Press & Engineering Co. v. Shepherd (3), Hulme v. Brigham (4), and British Economical Lamp Co., Ltd. v. Empire, Mile End, Ltd. (5), than to any of the cases cited by counsel for the defendants. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Doyle Devonshire & Co. agents for Dennis Berry & Co., Reading, for the defendants; Simon, Haynes, Barlas & Cassels for the plaintiff.

[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

FURBY v. HOEY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
January 15, 21, 1947.]

Intoxicating Liquors—Offences—Sale of liquor by retail without licence—Place of sale—Order at licensed premises—Delivery postponed pending instructions—Liquor collected and delivered to and paid for at unlicensed club after permitted hours—Appropriation—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 50 (3).

The respondent, an excise officer, filled in and sent to the appellant at his licensed premises a form of order purporting to order a variety of liquors, stating that delivery instructions would follow. Subsequently, after licensing hours and at an unlicensed club, the respondent filled up a form of delivery for one bottle of gin, which was taken by a messenger to the appellant's premises, and the gin was brought back to and paid for by the respondent at the club. The appellant was convicted at quarter sessions of selling by retail a bottle of gin at the club without having taken out a licence, contrary to s. 50 (3) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910.

HELD: appropriation, which completed the contract, took place at the licensed premises of the appellant and not at the club, and, accordingly, though guilty of the offence of selling liquor out of permitted hours, the appellant was not guilty of selling liquor on unlicensed premises as charged.

Mizen v. Old Florida, Ltd. (2) followed.

[AS TO PLACE OF SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 19, p. 126, para. 297; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, pp. 78-81, Nos. 617-627.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co., [1912] A.C. 716; 81 L.J.K.B. 1140; 107 L.T. 531; 34 Digest 129, 991.
- (2) Mizen v. Old Florida, Ltd., Egan v. Mizen (1934), 50 T.L.R. 349; 78 Sol. Jo. 298; Digest Supp.
- (3) Pletts v. Beattie, [1896] 1 B.Q. 519; 65 L.J.M.C. 86; 74 L.T. 148; 60 J.P. 185; 30 Digest 79, 618.
- (4) Pasquier v. Neale, [1902] 2 K.B. 287; 71 L.J.K.B. 835; 87 L.T. 230; 67 J.P. 49; 30 Digest 80, 626.
- (5) Fitzpatrick v. Bate, Mitchell v. Page (1934), 151 L.T. 17; 98 J.P. 215; Digest Supp.
- (6) Hotel Regina (Torquay), Ltd. v. Moon, [1940] 2 All E.R. 495; [1940] 2 K.B. 69; 109 L.J.K.B. 582; 162 L.T. 359; 104 J.P. 275; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by London Quarter Sessions.

The appellant was a wine merchant carrying on business as Hoey & Co., at 9, Warwick Street, London, W., and another address. He held excise licences in respect of each of these premises authorising the sale of spirits or wine by retail for consumption off the premises. On Apr. 12, 1944, the respondent, an excise officer, filled in and signed in the name of Brockbank a form of order addressed to the appellant. The order read: "Please sell me the undermentioned goods. I will give delivery instructions at a later date." It also provided that the appellant should have a lien on the goods until payment was made for them and was entitled to re-sell them if the payment was not made within a limited time. A variety of liquors were then set out. The order was posted to the appellant and was received by him. Shortly after 11 p.m., on May 2, 1944, the respondent called at the "New Paradise" Club, 189, Regent Street, London, W., and after admission told the head waiter that he had a wine order with the appellant and asked him to obtain a bottle of gin. At the request of the waiter the respondent signed a form which read: "Delivery Instructions. To Hoey, Ltd. Please deliver to me at (blank) the undermentioned goods being part of the order you hold on my behalf:—one gin." The waiter said the price was £3 10s., which the respondent paid. A messenger took the delivery instructions from the "New Paradise" to the appellant's premises at Warwick Street, and returned with a bottle of gin which he handed to the respondent at about 12.55 p.m. On May 18, 1944, the respondent called at the "New Paradise" club about 11.20 p.m., and ordered and paid for a bottle of gin, virtually the same procedure being followed. It was the practice of the appellant or his servants, on receiving an order form, to allocate to it two bottles of whisky and two bottles of gin by attaching to them labels bearing the name of the customer. This was usually done on the day of receiving the printed order, but the practice was not universally followed. Neither the appellant nor his servants could recollect that this practice was carried out in respect of the respondent's order and there was no evidence of any allocation of gin to the respondent made before the messenger arrived from the "New Paradise" with delivery instructions other than the evidence of such practice. The appellant was charged before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate at Bow Street Police Court with selling by retail a bottle of gin on the two occasions mentioned without taking out a licence, contrary to s. 50 (3) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, it being contended that the sale took place at the premises of the club, which were not licensed. The charge was dismissed, and the respondent appealed to the County of London Sessions who allowed the appeal and convicted the appellant, fining him £50 on each information. The appellant now appealed from the decision of quarter sessions.

A G. O. Slade, K.C., and Colin Duncan for the appellant.

B Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and C. N. Shawcross for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 21. The following judgment of the court was read by LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This case has had a remarkably chequered career. The chief magistrate having dismissed the charges out of which it arises, the excise authorities, who were prosecutors, gave notice of appeal to the London Sessions. That led to proceedings before this court on the present appellant's contention that no appeal lay ([1945] 2 All E.R. 298). It having been decided that an appeal did lie, the appellant appealed against that decision to the Court of Appeal, and was again unsuccessful ([1946] 1 All E.R. 129). Then the appeal came on at the sessions where the magistrate's order was reversed and the appellant to that court was fined £50, subject to a Case being stated. A so-called Case was then stated by the sessions, which consisted of nothing except the shorthand notes of the hearing and the decision of that court. It was sent back with a direction to state the Case properly, i.e., to state the facts which the sessions found were proved. The Case has now been restated, but is still far from satisfactory. We do not stay to inquire whose fault it is, though it is difficult to believe that no more than the very meagre facts which it contains emerged at the hearing, but we are reluctant to send the Case back for further statements, for it is high time it was disposed of. Moreover, neither side asked at the outset for the Case to be remitted, so they must, we think, be taken to have considered that enough is found to enable them to raise their respective contentions. We should, however, like the London Sessions Appeal Committee and their chairman to understand that a minimum of information is likely to cause a maximum amount of trouble.

What does appear from the Case is that the appellant, Hoey, carries on business as a retail wine and spirit merchant at Warwick Street, London, W. The other person charged with him, but who does not appeal, conducts that undesirable class of business known as a bottle party at premises in Regent Street, London, W., known, however inappropriately, as "New Paradise." As is common knowledge, the object of these parties is to enable alcoholics and others to continue drinking after licensing hours, and the way it is done, or supposed to be done, is that orders are placed with a wine and spirit shop during the day and the shopkeeper is supposed to sell there and then and appropriate a bottle or bottles of drink to the particular customer, but postpones delivery till it is asked for, then, when the public houses are closed, the purchaser calls or more probably sends for the whole or a part of his purchase which he then consumes on unlicensed premises. So long as the sale takes place at the shop and not at the bottle party there is no breach of the law, unless, indeed, as in this case actually happened, the sale and delivery at the shop took place out of permitted hours.

In the present case the respondent, an excise officer, filled in a form of order purporting to order a variety of liquors from Hoey, who paid just as much attention to it as one would expect, which was none. Counsel for the appellant has told us that the sessions found that the document constituting the order was colourable only, which in plain language means that the whole process of getting an order in advance and pretending to appropriate goods to it was pure humbug, so that it is clear that in the events which happened Hoey sold liquor about 12.30 a.m. and, had he been prosecuted for that, he would not have had a shadow of defence. The events which did happen were that at something after 11 p.m. on May 2 the respondent entered the gates of "New Paradise," told the waiter that he had an order with Hoey, and asked him to get a bottle of gin. The waiter thereupon produced a bit of paper dignified by the title of "delivery instructions" and asked the officer to sign it after he, the waiter, had filled in Hoey's name and the liquor required. So it read: "To Hoey, Ltd. Please deliver to me at " (blank) "the undermentioned goods being part of the order you hold on my behalf:—one gin." The waiter told him the price would be £3 10s. 0d., which he paid. This order was taken by a messenger to Hoey's place of business and he brought back the gin about 1 a.m., when it was given to and accepted by the officer.

We have no doubt, and it is conceded by counsel for the appellant, that, though the place of delivery was left blank, it was intended by all parties that the gin should be brought or sent to "New Paradise." We are not told whether the messenger was a servant of Hoey or of the proprietor of the party, nor do we know what became of the money, whether it was sent by the messenger or whether, as we confess we think is far more probable, it was accounted for to Hoey at some later date, but we do not know that the place or time of payment is very material. A similar performance was gone through a fortnight or so later, and these two transactions led to the appellant being summoned for the retail selling of intoxicating liquor for which he was required to take out a licence without having taken out such a licence contrary to the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, s. 50 (3).

It is thus apparent, and, indeed, we think both parties agree, that the only question for decision was: Where did the sale take place? Was the sale at Hoey's shop or was there no sale till the bottle was handed to the officer at the "New Paradise"? The sessions find as a fact that the true nature of what was done was that both appropriation and delivery took place at the "New Paradise" and that the sale took place there, and this court has now to determine whether, on the facts stated, it was open to the sessions to come to that conclusion. Let us say at once that we are not surprised that they took a view unfavourable to the appellant. Apart from the fact that all this bottle party nonsense, is an attempt, albeit it may be a successful attempt, to evade the licensing laws, Hoey, by pretending, as we are told he did, that there had been a bona fide sale earlier in the day to the officer, and by relying on the order form, did everything he could to put the court against him. The one and only object of the order form is to make it appear that there had been a bona fide sale during permitted hours, and if there be such a thing as a strictly conducted bottle party, and it is possible there is, the order form might record an actual and blameless sale, but as Parliament has not seen fit to legislate against these parties and has left these affairs to be decided on nice points under the Sale of Goods Act as to the passing of property, the court cannot allow itself to be influenced by any considerations other than the dry legal topic: When did the property pass? We must look at it in exactly the same way as a judge taking the Commercial List would, were he trying a case relating to 1,000 gallons of gin, remembering that the same principles may well apply to a single bottle sold to an excise officer at a bottle party.

In our opinion, the sessions did not sufficiently distinguish between appropriation and delivery. Property in unascertained goods passes to the buyer when there is an appropriation of goods to a contract—which need not be a pre-existing contract—by the buyer with the assent, express or implied, of the seller, or by the seller with the assent of the buyer. The appropriation may be, and often is, quite distinct from delivery. If a man enters a shop and, seeing a bottle of gin, points to it and says: "Please sell me that bottle," and the shopman gives it to him, there is then a sale of a specific chattel. If he says—the gin being under the counter, or elsewhere—"Please let me have a bottle," and the shopman takes one out and hands it to him, and he accepts it, there is an appropriation from his stock with the buyer's express consent. If the buyer writes or telephones or sends his servant and says: "Please send me or let me have a bottle," he is leaving it to the shopman to appropriate a bottle out of his stock to the customer, and as soon as the shopman does so the sale is complete. The customer has, by his conduct, impliedly assented to the appropriation.

Counsel for the respondent argued that until the bottle was actually handed to the purchaser at the club there was no acceptance of the order communicated to the purchaser. An offer can be accepted by conduct, and what does it matter to a purchaser who asks for delivery at a club or elsewhere how the seller sends it to him? The excise officer in this case knew quite well that when he asked for a bottle of gin it was going to be obtained from Hoey and brought or sent to the club. His order had to be taken to Hoey's place of business.

- A It mattered not to the officer whether one bottle rather than another was sent so long as it was gin. He left it to Hoey to select a bottle, and to choose how it was sent, and as soon as Hoey handed it to the messenger it became the property of the officer. He impliedly assented to the appropriation. On the facts stated by the sessions we can see no difference whatever between this case and one in which a man dining at an unlicensed restaurant gives the waiter money and asks him to send out to a neighbouring public house and get him a bottle of beer. Counsel for the respondent concedes that that is a perfectly lawful transaction. What difference can it make that the so-called delivery order in this case calls for delivery at the club? In the illustration we have given, the buyer certainly calls for delivery at the restaurant and the publican, who will probably be quite well acquainted with the messenger, knows that is what is expected. If the messenger should unhappily yield to temptation and drink the beer en route, the loss will not fall on the publican.
- C The customer will have a right of action against the restaurant proprietor, because his servant, acting in the scope of his employment, has converted the customer's beer, and, if this resulted in a county court action, no doubt LORD MACNAGHTEN'S judgment in Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (1) would be cited by an industrious advocate. Were we to give effect to the argument of the respondent, it would follow that, whenever a customer wrote or telephoned to the stores or his wine merchant for a bottle of liquor and it was delivered by the seller's own servant, then, unless the seller had previously in some way communicated with his customer and told him he was accepting the order, an offence was committed, because it would follow that the sale took place at the customer's premises.

- D On the facts stated we have no doubt but that the bottle of gin was sold at Warwick Street and this is in accordance with the decision of this court in Mizen v. Old Florida (2), which, on this point, is, in our opinion, indistinguishable from the present case. Hoey committed an offence against the licensing laws, but not the offence with which he was charged, and the result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed and the conviction is quashed, with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Philip Conway, Thomas & Co. (for the appellant); Solicitor of Customs and Excise (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Chief. FIRST NATIONAL HOUSING
ST. LTD. v. CHESTERFIELD R.D.C.
[3] 2 All E.R. 658.

CROYDON CORPORATION v. THOMAS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), January 17, 1947.]

- G Public Health—Dustbin—Provision—Owner of building required by local authority to provide—Right of appeal to justices—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 75.

The owner of a building may appeal against a requirement of a local authority that he shall provide a dustbin under s. 75 of the Public Health Act, 1936, on the ground that the burden of providing the dustbin should be thrown on the tenant and not on the owner, and the justices have an unrestricted discretion in dealing with such an appeal.

- H [FOR THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT, 1936, s. 75, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, p. 384.]

SPECIAL CASE stated for the opinion of the King's Bench Division of the High Court by the justices of the county borough of Croydon on an appeal against a requirement of the Croydon County Borough Council that the appellant, the owner of a building in the county borough of Croydon, should provide a dustbin for the premises under s. 75 of the Public Health Act, 1936. The facts appear sufficiently from the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice.

Michael E. Rowe, K.C., and G. D. Squibb for the appellants.

G. H. Crispin and M. Flitt for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a case stated by Croydon justices which raises a point which is not free from difficulty, but, in my opinion, the justices came to a correct decision.

Section 75 of the Public Health Act, 1936, provides :

A local authority who, as respects their district or any part thereof, have undertaken the removal of house refuse may by notice require the owner or occupier of any building within the district, or, as the case may be, within that part of the district, to provide such number of covered dustbins for the reception of house refuse of such material, size and construction as the authority may approve. Provided that this sub-section shall not entitle an authority to require the replacement of any dustbin in use at the commencement of this Act so long as it is of suitable material, size and construction and properly covered and in proper condition.

I leave out the next part of the sub-section for the moment, although it contains the words on which the whole question depends. Sub-section 2 in substance, provides that, if a person fails to comply with the notice, the authority may provide the dustbin and recover the cost from the person in default, and the person who fails to comply becomes liable to a penalty. I do not think sub-s. 3 is of assistance. It provides that the authority may, in lieu of requiring the owner or occupier to provide the dustbin, provide one themselves and put an addition on the rates for having done so.

The words which we have to construe in this case are to be found in sub-s. 1. That provides :

Any person aggrieved by a requirement of the local authority under this sub-section may appeal to a court of summary jurisdiction.

If you take the first part of sub-s. 1 alone, it appears to put the widest possible discretion into the hands of the local authority. It appears to enable them by administrative action to require either the owner or the occupier to provide the dustbin. Accordingly, if the section remained without the addition of the words to which I have referred about an appeal, it would seem reasonably clear that that was an administrative discretion given to an elected body, the local authority with which no one could interfere—not a discretion which requires to be exercised judicially, but an administrative discretion. When, however, you find that any person aggrieved by a requirement of the local authority may appeal to a court of summary jurisdiction, it is obvious that Parliament intends the discretion which has been exercised by the local authority to be subject to an appeal, and the final determination, if a person does appeal, is left to the justices and not to the local authority.

The facts in the present case are that the owner of certain premises brought an appeal before the local authority, in the first place, under another section of the Act, namely, s. 290 (3). It is largely the provisions of that section and the machinery which is provided under it which form the substance of the argument of counsel for the appellants that the justices had no jurisdiction to hear the complaint on the only ground which was submitted, namely, that it was not right that the burden of providing this dustbin should be thrown on the owner and not on the tenant. Section 290 applies only to matters which are contained in part XII of the Public Health Act, except that there are certain sections in other parts of the Act (and s. 75 is not one of those) to which the provisions of s. 290 are specifically applied. Section 290 provides that a person served with a notice under that part of the Act "may appeal to a court of summary jurisdiction on any of the following grounds," and then it sets out the grounds on which he can appeal. One of the grounds on which he can appeal is :

(e) that the notice might lawfully have been served on the occupier of the premises in question instead of on the owner, or on the owner instead of on the occupier, and that it would have been equitable for it to have been so served.

There you get a section which says that where a notice under one part of the Act may be served either on an owner or occupier, either the owner or the occupier, according to which is served, can go to the court and say: "I ought not to have been served. It ought to have been served on the other person." If the owner goes, he or she can say the notice should be served on the occupier, and, on the other hand, the occupier can say it should be served on the owner. Because Parliament probably recognised in passing that section that that would involve the respective rights of owner and occupier, provision is made in the section for bringing in the other person who might be affected thereby, that is to say, if the owner says the notice ought to have been served on the occupier, provision is made for bringing the occupier before the court, and then the justices who form the court of appeal can decide as between the owner and the occupier which is the proper person to serve. It is to be remarked that in s. 45 which is also in part II of the Act, and deals with a matter somewhat akin to that with which s. 75 is concerned—s. 75 deals with dustbins and s. 45 with defective closets—there is a provision that, in considering whether an owner or an occupier is to be required to repair a defective closet, the provisions of part XII, which includes s. 290, are to be applied. Therefore, if the question arises under s. 45 whether it is the owner or the occupier who should be served, the justices can decide the matter. One would rather expect that some sort of similar provision would have been put in s. 75, but it has not been.

Counsel for the appellants has argued forcibly that that shows that in a case under s. 75 the question who is to be served is to be left entirely to the local authority and it is not a question which the justices have power to decide. The only thing the justices can decide, it is said, is whether or not a dustbin is required and whether or not the dimensions of the dustbin which one or other of these persons is required to provide is larger than is needed. There is a great deal to be said for the fact that, unless Parliament meant that, one would have expected to find similar provisions to s. 290 incorporated in s. 75. We have, however, to read the section as it stands, and, as it stands, it is clear that it gives an unrestricted right of appeal. It provides that any person aggrieved by a requirement of a local authority may appeal to a court of summary jurisdiction. The principal way in which a person can be aggrieved is by being called on to provide this receptacle, and if an owner is called on to do it and thinks that, for instance, under the terms of the lease between himself and the occupier, the burden is thrown on the occupier, one cannot imagine any greater grievance.

One thing which appeals to one is that the section does not purport in any way to vary the terms of the contract of tenancy between the landlord and the tenant, and yet, if the local authority can, at their discretion, throw the burden on one or the other without regard to anything more than the fact that they think it better to put it on one rather than on the other, they may be very materially interfering with the contract of tenancy. If, under the contract of tenancy there was an obligation to keep a dustbin in repair (because it need not be a movable dustbin; it could be a receptacle which is part of the outside structure of the house), and if it were found to be out of repair, the burden would fall on the tenant.

My reason for coming to the conclusion to which I have come is that a right of appeal in terms entirely unrestricted is given. It is given to "any person aggrieved," and any person is aggrieved if he is ordered to do some work or provide some receptacle which ought to be done or supplied by another. The justices set out their reasons in the Case. Having read the facts they find, I am satisfied that, if it was open to the justices to come to this conclusion, no possible fault could be found with their decision. They have given as one of their reasons that they were not satisfied that there had been a proper exercise by the local authority of the discretion imposed by s. 75. I do not think we need go into the question whether, if the local authority give a general direction, that is either necessarily a proper or necessarily an improper exercise of discretion. As they are given a discretion under the Act to impose this burden on the owner or occupier, and as in accordance with what we are now holding there is a right of appeal given to the occupier against the order, it follows that the justices can certainly differ from the discretion which is given to the local authority. The whole argument of counsel for the appellants was that that part of the decision could not be considered by the justices. I have come to the conclusion that the words of the statute are too wide for that contention to prevail.

Accordingly, I think it was open to the justices to come to the conclusion they did. What the possible consequences of that decision may be and how it will work out in the end is something with which we are not concerned. In the circumstances this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion, the justices state that the ground on which they allowed the appeal was that the appellant was justly aggrieved by the requirement of the local authority. Looking at the appeal section, as my Lord has said, it is about as wide and general as an appeal section can possibly be. There is no restriction of any sort to prevent the appeal court from considering this question : Was the requirement of the local authority a proper one in the circumstances ? In my view, they may consider any matter which is relevant which will enable them to decide that question. Obviously, one of the matters, probably the only matter, which resulted in the appeal, was that the appellant was saying that he ought not to have been required to provide the dustbin. I cannot see that there could have been any argument addressed to the court limiting the discretion of the appellate court except that in certain other matters the Act has provided in terms that the justices shall consider such questions and shall bring or may bring before them, or before the court of appeal, the other party. I do not think that is strong enough to prevent this court holding—and in this I agree with my Lord—that here is a case of a wide and unfettered discretion, and, in my opinion, the appeal court was authorized to consider, and was only doing its duty in considering, whether the right person had been required to provide the dustbin. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

LEWIS, J. : I agree with the decision arrived at by the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and HUMPHREYS, J., and for the reasons given by them.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for the Town Clerk of Croydon (for the appellants) ; A. Rawlence (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CLARK AND WIFE v. BRIMS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.) October 21, 22, 23, 1946, January 17, 1947.]

Negligence—Breach of statutory duty—Duty imposed under sanction of penalty—Failure to carry rear light on car during hours of darkness—Whether separate remedy available to person aggrieved—Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927 (c. 37), ss. 1, 10.

A car, driven at night by the plaintiff, ran into the back of the defendant's car, which was stationary and without a rear light at and immediately before the moment of impact. The question for decision, inter alia, was whether the plaintiff, who was injured in the collision, could recover damages on the ground that there was a breach by the defendant of his statutory obligations under the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, s. 1, to carry, during the hours of darkness, one lamp showing to the rear a red light visible from a reasonable distance, the penalty for breach of which, by way of a fine, was provided by s. 10 of the Act :—

HELD : the imposed duties were public duties only and did not impose duties enforceable by any individuals aggrieved, and, consequently, the plaintiff could not found a cause of action against the defendant on the ground of breach of his statutory obligation.

[AS TO NEGLIGENCE OR NEGLIGENCE IN PERFORMING STATUTORY DUTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 651-655, paras. 917-924 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 749-753, Nos. 1734-1772 ; and FOR THE ROAD TRANSPORT LIGHTING ACT, 1927, ss. 1, 10, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 19, pp. 100-104.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Maitland v. Raisbeck & Hewitt (R.T. & J.), Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 272 ; [1944] 1 K.B. 689 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 549 ; 171 L.T. 118 ; Digest Supp.
- (2) Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co., Ltd., [1923] 2 K.B. 832 ; 93 L.J.K.B. 5 ; 129 L.T. 777 ; 42 Digest 870, 197.
- (3) Dawson & Co. v. Bingley Urban Council, [1911] 2 K.B. 149 ; 80 L.J.K.B. 842 ; 104 L.T. 659 ; 75 J.P. 289 ; 42 Digest, 753, 1772.

- (4) Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, [1898] A.C. 387; 67 L.J.Q.B. 635; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 42 Digest 752, 1758; H.L. affg. S.C. sub nom. Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council, [1897] 1 Q.B. 625, C.A.
- (5) Doe d. Rochester (Bp.) v. Bridges (1831), 1 B. and Ad. 847; 9 L.J.O.S.K.B. 113; 42 Digest 750, 1737.
- (6) Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 67 L.J.Q.B. 862; 79 L.T. 284; 42 Digest 760, 1858.
- (7) Britannic Merthyr Coal Co. v. David, [1910] A.C. 74; 79 L.J.K.B. 153; 101 L.T. 833; 34 Digest 740, 1168; H.L. affg. S.C. sub nom. David v. Britannic Merthyr Coal Co., [1909] 2 K.B. 146, C.A.
- (8) Monk v. Warbey, [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; Digest Supp.
- (9) Badham v. Lambs, Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 295; [1946] 1 K.B. 45; 115 L.J.K.B. 180; 173 L.T. 139.
- (10) Goldsmith v. Deacon (1933), 150 L.T. 157; 98 J.P. 4; Digest Supp.
- (11) McLeod (or Houston) v. Buchanan, [1940] 2 All E.R. 179; Digest Supp.

ACTION to recover damages for injuries sustained in a collision with a car which, contrary to the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, s. 1, did not carry, during the hours of darkness, a lamp showing to the rear a red light visible from a reasonable distance. The facts appear in the judgment.

N. R. Fox-Andrews, K.C., and G. R. Mitchison, K.C. for the plaintiffs.

B. L. A. O'Malley for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 17. MORRIS, J. read the following judgment: On the night of Oct. 14, 1944, the first-named plaintiff was driving his motor car along the Colnbrook bye-pass when he ran into the back of the defendant's car, which was stationary by the side of the road, and he and his wife, the second plaintiff, and also the defendant suffered personal injury. Immediately before the impact, the defendant, who was returning to London from Reading, was stooping in front of the near side front wheel of his car, being engaged in changing that wheel in consequence of tyre trouble. His car was caused to lurch forward so that it knocked him over and pushed him to some extent along the ground. The occurrence took place at about 9.30 p.m. It was a very dark night, black-out restrictions were in operation and the surface of the road was wet. The plaintiffs assert that the defendant had no light of any kind at the rear of his stationary car, and maintain that this brought about the accident. They allege that the defendant was negligent in failing to have a rear light. They also allege that the defendant was in breach of his statutory obligations under the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, in circumstances enabling and entitling the plaintiffs to found a cause of action against him. The defendant insists that his car was appropriately lighted at the rear, and maintains that, in any event the blame for the collision must lie with the first-named plaintiff.

One of the chief issues of fact is whether or not at and immediately before the moment of the impact the defendant's car was lighted at the rear. [His Lordship reviewed the evidence and continued:] I accept the evidence of the plaintiffs that at the time immediately before the impact the rear lights of the defendant's car were not lit. I consider, however, that the defendant believed that they were lit and was not unreasonably of that belief. It follows that the fact that the rear lights were not lit cannot be imputed to the defendant as negligence, nor do the facts warrant any conclusion that the defendant is liable on the basis of causing a nuisance: see Maitland v. Raisbeck & R.T. & J. Hewitt, Ltd. (1).

The next matter to be considered is whether the first plaintiff was guilty of negligence in running into the rear of the defendant's car, and I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not negligent in his driving and that his speed need not be regarded as having been excessive.

Apart from the issue which I now have to consider, the consequence of the conclusions which I have stated would be that the claims of the plaintiffs and the counterclaim of the defendant would fail.

The plaintiffs put forward two submissions which become applicable if it is found that at the material moment the defendant had no rear light. They point to the provisions of the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, and claim that the defendant is liable in damages to the plaintiffs because, they say, he was guilty of a breach of statutory duty. They further submit that, if the defendant was in breach of a statutory duty, then a prima facie case of negligence is raised against him, and they submit that the burden of proof shifts so as to require the defendant to show that he was not negligent. They submit that the defendant should be regarded as having failed so to do.

In regard to this last-mentioned submission, it is doubtless correct to say that a breach of a statutory obligation may, in some circumstances, be relied on as forming evidence of negligence, but questions as to the onus of proof are not of equal consequence in cases where both sides have given and called evidence as in cases where evidence has only been forthcoming from one side. In the present case, both the plaintiffs and the defendant gave evidence, and I am of opinion, on the evidence in this case, that the absence of a rear light ought not to be regarded as amounting to negligence in the defendant. If it is necessary so to state the matter, I consider that the defendant has by his evidence displaced any prima facie case of negligence which the prior evidence in the action may have raised. This is apart from the question which I now pass to consider—whether the plaintiffs can recover damages if the defendant were in breach of a statutory obligation.

The Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, s. 1 (1), provides as follows :

Subject to the provisions of this Act and of any regulations made thereunder by the Minister of Transport (in this Act referred to as "the Minister"), every vehicle on any road shall during the hours of darkness carry—(a) two lamps, each showing to the front a white light visible from a reasonable distance ; (b) one lamp showing to the rear a red light visible from a reasonable distance ; and every such lamp shall, while the vehicle is on any road during such hours as aforesaid, be kept properly trimmed, lighted, and in efficient condition, and shall be attached to the vehicle in such position and manner as the Minister may by regulations prescribe. It shall be the duty of any person who causes or permits a vehicle to be on any road during the hours of darkness to provide the vehicle with lamps in accordance with the requirements of this Act and of any regulations made thereunder.

I do not think it necessary for the purpose of this judgment to refer to the regulations relating to war-time lighting restrictions and specifying the amount of light that might be emitted. Section 2 of the Act deals with the restriction on the number and nature of lamps to be carried. Succeeding sections deal with the following topics ; s. 3 deals with conditions regulating the use of lamps on vehicles ; s. 4 with restrictions on the movement of lamps ; in s. 5 there are special provisions as to bicycles and triicycles ; s. 6 deals with horse-drawn vehicles ; s. 7 is concerned with vehicles carrying overhanging or projecting loads ; s. 8 contains special provisions as to vehicles towing and being towed ; and s. 9 deals with reflectors. Section 10, dealing with penalties, is as follows :

If any person causes or permits any vehicle to be on any road in contravention of any of the provisions of this Act or of regulations made thereunder, or otherwise fails to comply with any such provisions, he shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction for each such offence to a fine not exceeding five pounds, or in the case of a second or subsequent offence to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds : Provided that, if a person driving or being in charge of a vehicle is charged with such an offence, he shall not be convicted thereof if he proves to the satisfaction of the court that such offence arose through the negligence or default of some other person whose duty it was to provide the vehicle with a lamp or lamps.

Counsel appearing before me were not aware of any case in which a claim for damages based on a breach of duty under this statute had been advanced. In Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co., Ltd. (2), it was held that it was not intended by the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, that everyone injured through a breach of an Order made under the Act should have a right of action for damages, but that the duty imposed by the Order was a public duty, only to be enforced by the penalty imposed for a breach of it and not otherwise. The particular clause in issue of the Order in question provided for a motor car being in such a condition as not to cause or to be likely to cause danger to any person in the motor car or on any highway. In his judgment BANKES, L.J., said ([1923] 2 K.B. 832, at pp. 837, 838) :

The only point of substance argued for the appellant was that the Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, conferred on him a statutory right of action for breach of its conditions. Two well known rules relate to this question ; the first is stated by KENNEDY, L.J., in Dawson & Co. v. Bingley Urban Council (3) in these words: "Now, the general law as to the remedy of a person who has been injured by the infringement of a statutory right or the breach of a statutory obligation for his benefit is clear. Where the statute has not in express terms given a remedy, the remedy which by law is properly applicable to the right or the obligation follows as an incident. The law is, I think, correctly stated in Addison on Torts, 8th ed., p. 104, referring to Comyn's Digest: 'In every case where a statute enacts or prohibits a thing for the benefit of a person, he shall have a remedy upon the same statute for the thing enacted for his advantage, or for the recompense of a wrong done to him contrary to the said law' . . . Accordingly, where the statute is silent as to the remedy, the legislature is to be taken as intending the ordinary result; and the proper remedy for breach of the statute is an action for damages and, in a proper case, for an injunction."

That is the end of the Lord Justice's quotation from KENNEDY, L.J., and the Lord Justice continues:

- B In these cases it may be material to consider whether the right conferred or the act prohibited is for the benefit of a particular class of persons or of the public generally. The second rule is thus stated by LORD HALSBURY in Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council (4): "The principle that where a specific remedy is given by a statute, it thereby deprives the person who insists upon a remedy of any other form of remedy than that given by the statute, is one which is very familiar and which runs through the law. I think LORD TENTERDEN accurately states that principle in the case of Doe v. Bridges (5). He says: 'Where an Act creates an obligation, and enforces the performance in a specified manner, we take it to be a general rule that performance cannot be enforced in any other manner.'"

The observations of BANKES, L.J., at the foot of p. 839 and at the top of p. 840 are partly directed to a submission then made to the court that a mere breach of statutory duty would give rise to a claim even though the breach had in no way been responsible for the injury suffered, but, in dealing with this matter, the Lord Justice appears to be classing a provision in regard to exhibiting a rear light as one passed for the benefit of the public generally. In his judgment in the same case, ATKIN, L.J., at pp. 840, 841, said this:

- E In my opinion, when an Act imposes a duty of commission or omission, the question whether a person aggrieved by a breach of the duty has a right of action depends on the intention of the Act. Was it intended to make the duty one which was owed to the party aggrieved as well as to the State, or was it a public duty only? That depends on the construction of the Act and the circumstances in which it was made and to which it relates. One question to be considered is, does the Act contain reference to a remedy for breach of it? Prima facie if it does that is the only remedy. But that is not conclusive. The intention as disclosed by its scope and wording must still be regarded, and it may still be that, though the statute creates the duty and provides a penalty, the duty is nevertheless owed to individuals. Instances of this are Groves v. Lord Wimborne (6) and Britannic Merthyr Coal Co. v. David (7).
- F There is one further passage in the judgment of ATKIN, L.J., which is very material in regard to the general principle, and that is at p. 842 where he said:

- G Therefore the question is whether these regulations, viewed in the circumstances in which they were made and to which they relate, were intended to impose a duty which is a public duty only or whether they were intended, in addition to the public duty, to impose a duty enforceable by an individual aggrieved. I have come to the conclusion that the duty they were intended to impose was not a duty enforceable by individuals injured, but a public duty only, the sole remedy for which is the remedy provided by way of a fine. They impose obligations of various kinds, some are concerned more with the maintenance of the highway than with the safety of passengers; and they are of varying degrees of importance; yet for breach of any regulation a fine not exceeding £10 is the penalty. It is not likely that the legislature, in empowering a department to make regulations for the use and construction of motor cars, permitted the department to impose new duties in favour of individuals and new causes of action for breach of them in addition to the obligations already well provided for and regulated by the common law of those who bring vehicles upon highways. In particular it is not likely that the legislature intended by these means to impose on the owners of vehicles an absolute obligation to have them roadworthy in all events even in the absence of negligence.

The test is, therefore, whether the intention of the Act was to make the duty a public duty only, or whether the intention was to make the duty one owed as well to the party aggrieved. As this is so largely a question of construction and of the circumstances concerning the making of the Act and of the circumstances to which it relates, it follows that authorities concerning different Acts can only assist in so far as guidance on principle is given. In Monk v. Warbey (8), it was held that the object and purview of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, showed that the penalties prescribed by s. 35 were not intended to be the sole remedy where an owner of a car, in breach of statutory duty, permitted his car to be used by a person who was not insured against third party risks. The principles laid down by this and other cases are conveniently summarized by PROFESSOR WINFIELD ON THE LAW OF TORTS, 2nd ed., pp. 170-175. In Badham v. Lambs, Ltd. (9), [1946] 1 K.B., 45, the headnote is as follows: A

By s. 8, sub-s. (1), of the Road Traffic Act, 1934, it is unlawful to sell a motor vehicle for delivery in such condition that its use on a road in that condition would be unlawful, and a penalty is imposed for breach of the sub-section. The defendants sold a car to the plaintiff which was in such condition, by reason of having defective brakes. The plaintiff brought an action for damages, based on the above breach of statutory duty:—Held, that the main object of the legislature was the punishment of offenders and there was nothing in the Act of 1934 to show that it was the intention of Parliament to protect the purchaser and to give him a right of action. B

DU PARCQ, L.J., there held that no right of action was given to a purchaser who became involved in an accident which resulted from a defect in the braking system of the car which he bought.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is that this Act imposes duties which were public duties only and did not in addition impose duties enforceable by any individuals aggrieved. The duties seem to be similar to and comparable with those which were under consideration in Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co., Ltd. (2) and in Badham v. Lambs, Ltd. (9). Furthermore, this Act contains reference to a remedy for certain breaches of it. I have referred already to s. 10 of the Act. Submissions were made to me in regard to the construction of that section. C

The question presents itself on the facts as I have found them: Could it really be said that the defendant had caused or permitted his vehicle to be on the road in contravention of the provisions of the Act? In this connection, the observations of LAWRENCE, J., in Goldsmith v. Deakin (10), (150 L.T. 157, at p. 158), and of LORD WRIGHT in his speech in the House of Lords in McLeod v. Buchanan (11) ([1940] 2 All E.R., 179, at pp. 187 and 188), are very material. I do not, however, think it necessary that I should decide this matter. The question is not whether this defendant would be liable under the penalty section of the Act of 1927, but, on the assumption that he was in breach of an obligation laid down by that Act, whether he becomes liable to be sued at the instance of any persons aggrieved or consequentially injured. Applying the tests which have been laid down, my view is that the Act imposes public duties only. For the reasons which I have given, it follows that the claims of the plaintiffs and the counterclaim of the defendant fail, and I make no order as to costs. D

Claim and counterclaim dismissed.

Solicitors: A. F. & R. W. Tweedie (for the plaintiffs); William Easton & Sons (for the defendant). E

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] F

W. DAVIS (SPITALFIELDS), LTD v. HUNTLEY AND OTHERS
[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Henn Collins, J.), January 13, 1947.] G

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Date from which notice runs—Lease determinable by 3 months' notice at any time—No date for possession specified in notice.

Landlord and Tenant—Right to new lease—Claim by tenant seeking new lease that old lease still subsisting—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1) (i), 5 (1). H

A lease was determinable by three calendar months' notice at any time, and the landlords gave the tenants a notice to quit in the following form: "We must give three months' notice to terminate the lease," without specifying the date on which possession is to be given.

HELD: (i) the notice to quit was valid and the period of three months commenced to run from the date of its receipt by the tenants.

(ii) A tenant who asks for a new tenancy under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), cannot be heard to say that the old tenancy is still subsisting, even if he fails to obtain a new tenancy and eventually claims compensation.

Semble : A tenant when claiming compensation only, under s. 4 (1) (i) of the Act of 1927, is not bound to affirm that the notice to quit determining the tenancy is valid.

- A [AS TO FORM OF NOTICE TO QUIT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp 135-137, para. 145; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 445-448, Nos. 5919-5948.

AS TO COMPENSATION FOR GOODWILL AND RIGHT TO A NEW LEASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 294-301, paras. 333-345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supplement, Landlord and Tenant, Nos. 2306a-2306u.]

Cases referred to :

- B (1) Cooper v. Jax Stores, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 502; [1941] 1 K.B. 577; 110 L.J.K.B. 416; 165 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.
 (2) Goode v. Howells (1838), 4 M. & W. 198; 1 Horn. & H. 199; 7 L.J.Ex. 312; 3 J.P. 513; 31 Digest 447, 5943.
 (3) Davies v. Bristow, Penrhos College v. Butler, [1920] 3 K.B. 428; 90 L.J.K.B. 164; 123 L.T. 655; 31 Digest 459, 6065.
 (4) Maconochie Bros., Ltd. v. Brand, [1946] 2 All E.R. 778.

- C ACTION for possession of a foundry.

A lease made on May 14, 1935, was determinable by 3 calendar months' notice at any time. By a written notice, dated Apr. 21, 1945, and delivered by post on Apr. 23, 1945, the landlords gave to the tenants 3 months' notice terminating the lease, but without specifying the date on which possession was to be given. The tenants served a notice on the landlords under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), requiring a new lease of the premises in lieu of compensation. At the same time they claimed that the notice to quit was not a valid notice and that the lease of 1935 was still subsisting.

Sydney Pocock and G. D. Squibb for the landlords (the plaintiffs).

Ronald Hopkins for the tenants (the defendants).

- E HENN COLLINS, J. : The question is, first, whether a lease made on May 14, 1935, still subsists. If it does subsist, it can be terminated by three calendar months' notice at any time, and, therefore, if appropriate steps are taken, in another three months the plaintiffs, in any event, would be entitled to possession.

This first question in its turn, depends on whether a notice given by the plaintiffs to the defendants which was posted by registered post and dated Apr. 21, 1945, was a sufficient notice to terminate the tenancy.

The notice is in these terms :

- F With reference to our meeting with Mr. W. H. Huntley on Apr. 11, we regret that we must give you 3 months' notice to terminate the lease dated May 14, 1935. Under the conditions set out therein, you are entitled to receive a sum of £25 when vacant possession is given.

- G It is said that that is a bad notice according to the terms of the lease because it does not specify the date on which possession is to be given in that it does not state the date from which the three months are to run. Suppose that a notice is served by hand, undated, on a tenant : "I, so-and-so, the landlord, hereby give you three months' notice in accordance with the tenancy to deliver up possession" or "to terminate the lease." Does not the tenant know perfectly well when that notice expires, namely, in three months from the moment that it meets his eye ? Assuming that the landlord is in a position to prove on what date that was, there is no uncertainty about the matter at all. So here, H one would assume, that this notice was received in the course of post—I have heard nothing to the contrary—and, therefore, would operate at the expiration of three months from the defendants' sight of the notice on Apr. 23—Apr. 21, when it was posted, being a Saturday.

If, however, that is not the right view in law, one has to consider the contention of the tenants that under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), though they can claim compensation for their goodwill, that would be no recompense and they are entitled to a new lease. It has been said, with some force on behalf of the defendants that, if a tenant is desirous of getting compensation, it is extremely hard to require him, within a month of receiving a notice purporting to terminate the tenancy and during its currency, to bring his proceedings under the Act if thereby he necessarily affirms the validity of the notice. I think there is some force in the argument of counsel for the defendants that s. 4 (1) (i) of the Act of 1927, when it uses the phrase "terminated by notice", means "terminable by notice," and that where a tenant is asking for compensation, it is not necessary for him to affirm at that stage that the notice is a good notice. Where, however, the tenant is asking for a new tenancy (under s. 5 (1) of the Act), the matter is completely different. He cannot have both the old tenancy and a new one. If he affirms the position that he wants a new tenancy, he can only do so on the footing that the old one is at an end. If and in so far as the tenant claims a new tenancy, he is not thereafter entitled to say that the old one is still subsisting, and he certainly is not entitled to do so any the more if he fails to obtain the new tenancy and eventually claims compensation. In my judgment, that is enough to dispose of the case, and there must be judgment for the plaintiffs for possession.

Judgment for the landlords for possession and mesne profits, with costs.

Solicitors: Lucien A. Isaacs (for the plaintiffs); James H. Fellowes (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WEST MONMOUTHSHIRE OMNIBUS BOARD

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, J.), December 4, 5, 20, 1946.]

Street and Aerial Traffic—Omnibus undertaking—Local authority operating omnibus undertaking under local Act—Revenue to be applied "in maintaining" omnibuses, garages, etc.—New omnibuses required for replacement or as additions—Purchase out of capital or revenue—Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council Act, 1926 (c. lxxv), ss. 90, 91.

An omnibus board was established under the Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council Act, 1926, to provide, maintain and run omnibuses on routes within certain specified areas, and by virtue of agreements confirmed by the Act, acquired certain omnibus undertakings which had been operating in the areas concerned. It was provided by s. 91 of the Act that the board should apply "all money from time to time received by them in respect of their undertaking except money received on capital account," inter alia, "in maintaining the omnibuses garages and other buildings and plant and appliances belonging to or leased by the board." :—

HELD: the word "maintaining," when used in relation to a fleet of omnibuses, means maintaining not merely in quality or efficiency but in numbers, but it did not include the conception of increase and extend to additions to the fleet. Accordingly the board might properly apply the revenue of its undertaking in maintaining and replacing its existing omnibuses, garages and other buildings and plant, but it had no power to apply the revenue to adding to the numbers of its omnibuses or in purchasing garages and other buildings or plant rendered necessary by the acquisition of such additional omnibuses.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. This is a decision on a private Act, but a large number of other local statutes are in the same terms as the one which is here under discussion, and this decision, therefore, is likely to affect the conduct of omnibus undertakings by a large number of local authorities.]

AS TO EXPENSES OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES OPERATING PUBLIC SERVICE VEHICLES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, p. 760, para. 1177.]

ACTION by the Attorney-General for a declaration that the defendants had acted in breach of their statutory duty in paying for capital assets out of revenue.

Sutton, K.C., and D. L. Powell for the plaintiff.

Willink, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. ROMER, J., read the following judgment. The defendant board was brought into being by the Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council Act, 1926, s. 22. Their function in general, by virtue of the Act, was, and is, to provide and maintain omnibuses and run them on routes within certain specified areas, and the powers and duties of the board are provided for and laid down in detail in the sequence of sections which constitutes pt. VIII of the Act. By virtue of two separate agreements which are set out in sched. II to the Act, and which the Act, by s. 81, confirmed, the board (which consists of representatives of the Bedwellty Council and the Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council) acquired certain omnibus undertakings which had been operating in the areas concerned. Among the assets of those undertakings were 19 omnibuses, of which, I was told in evidence, 6 had to be immediately scrapped as unserviceable. The board then purchased 8 second-hand omnibuses, and this, by 1927, brought their efficient fleet up to 21. Between 1927 and 1938 the number of omnibuses fluctuated, and in 1938 or 1939 the board owned 20. The original omnibuses, garages and necessary equipment were paid for by moneys raised on loan, and it was the policy of the board between 1926 and 1938 to pay also for all new omnibuses required for purposes of replacement out of borrowed moneys and not out of revenue. From 1938 onwards it has been the policy of the board to pay for all replacement omnibuses, as well as new additional omnibuses which, in their judgment, the good management of their undertaking has required, from revenue without resort to borrowing. It is this more recent policy which is impeached in the present action, the plaintiff contending that new omnibuses, whether required for replacement or as additions to the fleet, are capital assets and cannot properly be purchased by the board out of the revenue of the undertaking.

Mr. R. T. Brown, who, except for two years with the Ministry of Transport, has been associated with the board from the time when it was formed, told me in evidence that the number of omnibuses owned by the board at the end of 1945 was 28. The increase on those which the board had in 1939 was due to the retention, when new omnibuses were purchased, of old omnibuses (which would in the normal course have been scrapped) in order to meet the special war-time requirements of the Ministry of Transport. But, in addition, at least two new omnibuses, which could not, I understand, in any sense be regarded as replacements, but which were in the strict sense additional omnibuses, were also acquired by the board. Mr. Brown also told me that the board were advised some years ago by the Ministry of Transport that they should purchase all replacement omnibuses out of revenue so soon as they were in a position to do so. In cross-examination Mr. Brown said that there is a definite rate of replacement of a fleet of omnibuses, and stated the policy of the board by saying that the board would endeavour, as far as possible, to keep the replacements going out of revenue and maintain the fleet at the number required to carry on the undertaking. He agreed that (apart from the two new omnibuses to which I have already referred) some additional, as distinct from replacement, vehicles had been acquired by the board, but said that the position was due to the fact that it had not been possible to shed the old vehicles owing to war pressure.

Mr. Arthur Collins, who has had a long and extensive experience as a financial adviser to local authorities and public utility undertakings, also gave evidence. He told me that the distinguishing feature between an omnibus undertaking and the ordinary range of activities of a local authority lies in the fact that probably the shortest lived asset for which borrowing powers are provided by statute is an omnibus which has a life of only 8 years. Its economic life, he said, is exhausted at the end of that time. He was asked to consider whether, as a matter of prudent management, it is preferable to borrow money for the purpose of acquiring replacement buses than to pay for them out of revenue, and his answer was: "There can be no doubt about it, and I think it is simple arithmetic that, if you are to borrow instead of paying cash at once out of your revenue, all that you are doing is to add the cost of the interest to the burden either on the consumer or the travelling public, or, in the ultimate result, the ratepayers." From the point of view of good management, he would apply the same principle also to the acquisition of new omnibuses, as distinct from replacement omnibuses, if it becomes reasonably necessary to add to the fleet for the purpose of maintaining an adequate and satisfactory service. In Mr. Collins' view the borrowing powers conferred by Acts, such as the Act of 1926, are in general regarded by local authorities as being discretionary, the authorities exercising such discretion in the light of prudent business management and experience. He deprecated, however, the application of revenue to the acquisition of any capital asset in a year in which it becomes necessary to levy a precept. No attack is made in these proceedings on the bona fides of the board, and, in the light of Mr. Collins' evidence, the policy which they have adopted since 1938 obviously has much to commend it. The board, however, are a statutory undertaking with powers defined and circumscribed by the Act of 1926, and the question for me is not so much whether their policy (which they propose to continue in the future if they properly can) is to be recommended from the view of prudent management, but whether it is to any extent ultra vires.

I must, accordingly, refer now to the relevant provisions of the Act of 1926. The preamble recited, among other things :

And whereas it is expedient to constitute and incorporate a board as by this Act provided representing the council and the Bedwellty Urban District Council and to authorise the board to provide and run omnibuses and exercise the other powers by this Act conferred on them : And whereas estimates have been prepared by the council and the Bedwellty Urban District Council for the purposes hereinafter mentioned and such estimates are as follows : For the provision and equipment of omnibuses, £20,000; for the purchase of lands for the purpose of the said board's undertaking, £1,000 ; for laying out those lands for garages and buildings, £1,000 ; for the provision of garages and buildings, £2,500 ; And whereas the several works included in those estimates are permanent works and it is expedient that the cost thereof should be spread over a term of years . . .

The first section in pt. VIII of the Act to which I need refer is s. 61, which is the definition section. It defines "constituent authority" as meaning "a local authority for the time being authorised to appoint a member or members of the board." It then defines "statutory borrowing power." It defines the "revenues of the board" as including "the revenues of the board from time to time arising from their undertaking or from any land or other property for the time being belonging to the board and the money receivable by them from the constituent authorities under the provisions of this part of this Act."

By s. 62 (1) :

A board (to be called "the West Monmouthshire Omnibus Board") shall be established for the purpose of providing and running omnibuses and of exercising and enjoying and carrying into execution the rights powers authorities and privileges conferred on the board by this part of this Act.

Section 64 :

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act the board may provide and maintain (but shall not manufacture) and may run omnibuses (a) within the districts of the constituent authorities of the board and (b) with the consent of the Minister of Transport and of the local authority of the district along any road . . . (3) The board may purchase by agreement take on lease and hold lands and buildings (including an office) and may erect on any lands acquired by them omnibus carriage and motor houses buildings and sheds and may provide such plant appliances and conveniences as may be requisite or expedient for the establishment running equipment maintenance and repair of omnibuses but the board shall not create or permit any nuisance on any lands upon which they erect any such houses buildings or sheds.

Section 67 :

(1) The board and any local authority empowered to run omnibuses in any district adjacent to the Mynyddislwyn Urban District or in the Caerphilly Urban District or in the Rhymney Urban District may enter into and carry into effect agreements for the working user management and maintenance of all or any of the omnibus services which the contracting parties are empowered to provide subject to the provisions of the respective Acts under which such omnibus services are authorised. (2) The board and any company body or person may enter into and carry into effect agreements for the working user management and maintenance subject to the provisions of this Act of any omnibus services which the board are for the time being empowered to provide. (3) The board and any such local authority company body or person as aforesaid may also enter into and carry into effect agreements for all or any of the following purposes (that is to say) : (a) The working user management and maintenance of any omnibuses lands depots buildings sheds and property provided in connection with any such omnibus services as aforesaid by either of the contracting parties and the right to provide and use the same and to demand and take the fares and charges authorised in respect of such services . . .

Section 82 :

(1) The board may from time to time borrow at interest for the purposes mentioned in the first column of the following table the respective sums mentioned in the second column thereof and they shall pay off all moneys so borrowed within the respective periods mentioned in the third column of the said table . . .

A and then follows a repetition, in effect, of the part of the preamble which I have read, but it also lays down the period within which the respective sums so to be borrowed are to be repaid. There are two additional items inserted, namely: "For the provision of working capital for the purpose of the board's undertaking, £1,000," and the period for repayment is 10 years from the date or dates of borrowing and "For paying the costs charges and expenses payable by the board under the final section of this Act the sum requisite" and the period of repayments is 5 years from the passing of the Act. The section then goes on:

B (2) (a) The board may also with the consent of the Minister of Transport borrow such further money as may be necessary for any of the purposes of this part of this Act including any of the purposes of the agreements set forth in the second schedule to this Act. (b) Any moneys borrowed under this subsection shall be repaid within such period as may be authorised by the Minister of Transport. (3) In order to secure the repayment of moneys borrowed or re-borrowed under this part of this Act and the payment of the interest thereon the board may mortgage or charge the revenues of the board.

Section 87 :

All moneys borrowed by the board under the powers of this part of this Act shall be applied only to the purposes for which they are authorised to be borrowed and (except in the case of money borrowed for working capital) to which capital is properly applicable.

D Section 90 :

All expenses incurred by the board in carrying into execution the provisions of this part of this Act except such of those expenses as are to be paid out of borrowed moneys or are otherwise provided for shall be paid out of the revenues of the board.

Section 91 :

E The board shall apply all money from time to time received by them in respect of their undertaking except money received on capital account as follows (that is to say) : Firstly, in maintaining the omnibuses garages and other buildings and plant and appliances belonging to or leased by the board : Secondly, in paying all working and other expenses properly chargeable to revenue : Thirdly, in paying the interest on moneys borrowed and applied by the board for the purposes of or connected with their undertaking : Fourthly, in making the requisite appropriations instalments or sinking fund payments in respect of moneys borrowed and applied for the purposes of their undertaking : Fifthly, in providing a reserve fund (if they think fit) by setting aside such money as they from time to time think reasonable and investing the same and the resulting income thereof in statutory securities and accumulating the same at compound interest until the fund so formed amounts to two thousand pounds which fund shall be applicable from time to time to meet any deficiency at any time happening in the income of the board from their undertaking or any extraordinary claim or demand at any time arising against the board and so that if that fund is at any time reduced it may thereafter be again restored to the sum of two thousand pounds and so from time to time as often as such reduction happens : Lastly, the surplus (if any) including the interest on the reserve fund when such fund amounts to two thousand pounds shall (subject to the provisions of the section of this part of this Act of which the marginal note is "Quinquennial adjustments of profits and losses") from time to time be apportioned between and paid to the constituent authorities in proportion to the respective rateable values of their respective districts and any money so paid to a constituent authority shall be carried by them to the credit of the district fund of their district Provided that the board may retain at the close of any financial year so much of the surplus as they think necessary for the purpose of carrying on their undertaking and paying the current expenses connected therewith.

Section 92 :

H (1) If in any year the revenue of the board (exclusive of moneys receivable from the constituent authorities under this and the next succeeding section of this Act) shall be insufficient to meet the charges set out under the headings Firstly Secondly Thirdly and Fourthly in the immediately preceding section of this Act the board are hereby authorised and required forthwith to ascertain and determine the amount of such deficiency and to apportion the same (subject to the provisions of the next succeeding section of this Act) between the constituent authorities in proportion to the respective rateable values of their respective districts except in so far as such deficiency may be met from the reserve fund authorised by this part of this Act. (2) The board shall issue precepts to the constituent authorities for the amounts so respectively apportioned and the constituent authorities shall within the time limited in the precepts pay to the board the amounts apportioned as aforesaid respectively.

I do not think that for present purposes I need read any more of s. 92.

The application of the revenues of the board is provided for by ss. 90 and 91 which (subject to an immaterial exception in s. 97 (2)) appear to be exhaustive of the matter. The board are bound to apply their revenue to the objects defined by those sections and cannot apply it in any other manner. Accordingly, expenditure out of revenue of the character which is challenged in this action can only be justified if it falls, expressly or by reasonable implication, within one or more of the objects designated by ss. 90 or 91. The respective provisions of these two sections make it difficult, I think, to arrive at the conclusion that the expenditure in question can properly be regarded as forming part of the expenses of the board incurred in carrying into execution the provisions of pt. VIII of the Act. Section 90 is rather directed, in my view, to expenses of a preliminary and administrative character. It is necessary, therefore, I think to look principally, if not exclusively, to the provisions of s. 91. As already indicated, two classes of omnibuses fall, for immediate purposes, to be considered. The first class consists of omnibuses which are purchased in the place of those which, through accident or old age, are no longer serviceable. The second class consists of omnibuses which cannot be regarded as substituted or replacement omnibuses, but which are purchased as additions to the existing fleet in order to extend the scope of the board's operations. I will refer to the second category as "additional omnibuses" and will consider their case first.

The question then which falls for decision is this: Are the board authorised by s. 91 of this Act to apply revenue of the undertaking in the purchase of additional omnibuses? Counsel for the board contend that the word "maintaining" in the sub-head "Firstly" should be construed in a broad sense. The word, they say, must be related to the statutory duty of the board to provide an efficient service, and, if the acquisition of additional omnibuses is reasonably necessary for the adequate carrying on of the undertaking, then that acquisition is in effect maintenance, and, as such, authorised by the sub-head. In support of this contention they point to the sub-head "Secondly," which is directed to ordinary working expenses, and they invite the inference that "Firstly" must be regarded as directed to expenditure of a different and more important character. In further support they refer to the proviso to the sub-head "Lastly" as constituting a sort of interpretation clause. By the words "for the purpose of carrying on their undertaking," the legislature, according to the argument, is summarising what is meant by "Firstly," while "Secondly" is echoed by the words "paying the current expenses connected therewith."

I am unable to accept the view that s. 91 empowers the board to purchase additional omnibuses out of the revenue of the undertaking. To add to the fleet of omnibuses owned by the board seems to me to be a very different thing from maintaining the omnibuses owned by the board, even assuming that "maintaining" can be related to numbers and is not to be confined in its application to the field of repairs and operating efficiency. A hire company which owned, say, 10 cars, 5 years ago and still owns 10 (either the same or of a similar character) may be said to have maintained its fleet of cars, but if it now owns 20 cars, while it would certainly be true to say that it had maintained its fleet, it had plainly done something else as well, namely, it had added to the fleet. In my judgment, by no reasonable interpretation of the word "maintain," when used in relation to omnibuses, can it include the conception of increase. No sufficient context for such an artificial construction is afforded, in my opinion, either by a comparison between "Firstly" and "Secondly" in s. 91, nor in the language of the proviso or the sub-head "Lastly." As to the latter, it is in any case to be observed that the words used are "for the purpose of carrying on their undertaking," not "carrying on or extending." Even had the Act contained any provisions enabling the board to obtain funds for the purchase of additional omnibuses, I doubt whether the suggested violence to the language of s. 91, as I construe it, would have been justified, but such, of course, is not the case. Resort may be had in a proper case to the borrowing powers conferred by s. 82.

A The next question is whether the board may apply revenue of the undertaking to the purchase of the first of the two classes of omnibuses to which I have referred, and which I will call "replacement omnibuses." Counsel for the plaintiff contends that this matter is comprehensively covered by the B borrowing provisions of s. 82, and that the board have no power to apply revenue to the purpose which I am now considering. The words "from time to time" in sub-s. (1), read in conjunction with the rest of s. 82, show, he says, that the board may, in their discretion, borrow any sums not exceeding at any one time £20,000 for the provision and equipment of omnibuses. So long as not more than £20,000 is at any one time outstanding on loan the board may C borrow for this purpose on their own authority. If they wish to exceed this amount, then the consent of the Minister is required, but whether on their own authority, or with the Minister's consent, the only source of money for the purchase and equipment of replacement omnibuses is loan, and revenue is not, under s. 91, available for the purpose. I rather doubt myself whether the true reading of s. 82 is that it establishes what, according to counsel's argument, is a kind of revolving credit. I think on the whole that sub-s. (1) is providing for the initial expenditure which had to be incurred at the outset D of the enterprise, and that the words "from time to time" merely mean that the board need not raise the whole of the scheduled amounts at one and the same time. Inasmuch, however, as the section is not directory but permissive ("the board may borrow"), it is difficult to see why they should be compelled to resort to borrowing if they in fact have power to resort to revenue instead and good management suggests the adoption of that course.

D It is again necessary, therefore, to enquire into their powers under s. 91 to ascertain whether the purchase of replacement buses is among the objects of revenue expenditure thereby authorised. The question is, I think, one of some difficulty. I have been unable to accept the defendants' arguments to the extent of holding that the language of s. 91 is wide enough to enable the board to purchase additional omnibuses out of revenue. The board's conten-
E tions (to which I need not refer again in detail) do, however, in my judgment, justify the reading of the word "maintaining" in sub-head "Firstly" to s. 91 in a somewhat wider sense than that which it would normally bear. It does not, I think, merely mean keeping the omnibuses in good running order and in an efficient state of repair, for expenditure under such headings as these would appear to be included in the sub-head "Secondly." It seems to me that the word "maintaining," when used in relation to a fleet of omnibuses, well F may mean, and does mean in sub-head "Firstly," maintaining, not merely in quality or efficiency, but also maintaining in numbers. The result of so construing the word would be that the board are authorised and, indeed, bound to apply revenue to the purpose of replacing omnibuses which, by reason of old age or accident, ceased to be available for efficient service. If this result is justified by the language of the Act (as, in my judgment, it is) it certainly does not clash with ordinary ideas of good management, for in an omnibus under-G taking of a purely commercial nature no prudent managers would distribute profits without providing for the replacement in due course of the short-lived capital assets which earned them.

I have arrived at the conclusion, accordingly, that the board has no power to apply the revenue of its undertaking to adding to the number of its omnibuses or (for analogous reasoning applies) in purchasing garages and other buildings or plant rendered necessary by the acquisition of such additional H omnibuses, but that it properly may apply its revenue in maintaining and replacing its existing omnibuses, garages or other buildings and plant.

There should, I think, be no difficulty in applying these principles so far as the future is concerned. It may not, however, be easy to apply them to the expenditure which was incurred during the war years to meet the very special requirements which then arose. Some of the omnibuses then purchased were acknowledgedly additional vehicles, and those, in my view, ought to have been bought out of moneys obtained by borrowing. For the rest, I have not sufficient material to enable me to deal with the transactions in detail, and, as the case was rightly argued on broad lines and a decision on principle sought. I do not gather that I am asked to do so. If necessary there will be liberty to apply as to the various individual transactions involved.

A further point was raised in these proceedings with regard to the board's obligation to apportion quinquennially the profits or deficiencies of the undertaking between the constituent authorities. That obligation is imposed by s. 93 of the Act which is as follows :

(1) As soon as practicable after March 31, 1931, and in every subsequent fifth year a calculation shall be made of (i) the total amount of the revenue and the total amount of the expenditure of the board on revenue account during the preceding five years ; and (ii) the average rateable values of the respective districts of the constituent authorities during the same five years : and the difference (whether a surplus or deficit) between such total amounts shall be apportioned between the constituent authorities in proportion to such average rateable values. (2) On the making of any apportionment in respect of the first or any subsequent quinquennial period under subsection (1) of this section there shall then be taken into account with respect to each constituent authority (a) the payments (if any) made by or due from that constituent authority to the board in respect of each of the first four years of the same quinquennial period under the section of this Act of which the marginal note is " Deficiency in revenue of board to be made good by the constituent authorities " and (b) the payments made by the board to the same constituent authority in respect of each of the said four years under the final paragraph of the section of this Act of which the marginal note is " Application of revenue of board " and the net sum thus ascertained shall be payable to or due from the constituent authority (as the case may require) the intention being that the constituent authorities shall be entitled or required to share in the net surplus or deficit on revenue account of the board's undertaking in respect of every quinquennial period in proportion to the average rateable value of their respective districts during the quinquennial period instead of sharing in the surplus or deficit on revenue account of the board's undertaking in each separate year of the period in proportion to the respective rateable values of the districts of the constituent authorities during such year. (3) If the net sum ascertained with respect to any constituent authority under subsection (2) of this section is an amount due to the board from the constituent authority the board shall issue a precept therefor and the provisions of the said section of this Act of which the marginal note is " Deficiency in revenue of board to be made good by the constituent authorities " shall apply to such sum.

The plaintiff says, and it is the fact, that since Mar. 31, 1936, no quinquennial valuation has been made, or, if made, no net profits have been calculated and apportioned between the constituent authorities in accordance with s. 93. In the district auditor's report to the board dated June 27, 1941, he said :

Replacement of buses is behind the peace-time schedule programme of the management, and heavy commitments on this purpose must be anticipated in the future for which provision should prudently be arranged now from present resources. In particular the liability to excess profits tax, not yet finally settled, is likely to be very heavy, and it is expected to be not less than £3,000 for the year 1940-41. Satisfactory as the position is, therefore, the need for conserving the resources of the undertaking in the light of future requirements is not to be lightly disregarded. Quinquennial adjustment : Mar. 31, 1941, marks the end of one of the periods of quinquennial adjustment to which reference is made in ss. 91 and 93 of the Mynyddislwyn Urban District Council Act, 1926. In view of the considerations outlined above the board may consider that there is not any surplus available for distribution over and above that which is necessary for the working expenses of the undertaking.

Mr. R. T. Brown told me in his evidence that he discussed this report with the district auditor, who advised him that the board could not do anything at that stage. Mr. Brown then informed me that the board will be in a position in the course of this year to deal with the 1941 and the 1946 quinquennial valuations. Mr. Collins told me that in his view, which he supported with considered reasons, the policy which the board adopted in this matter was prudent. As, therefore, the board does not dispute its obligations under s. 93 of the Act, and is intending shortly to perform them, I do not propose to make the declarations on this matter which the plaintiff originally sought, and counsel did not press me to do so. It may be—and the possibility was indicated in argument—that certain questions may arise when the board has made its calculations under s. 93, but, as they have not arisen yet and are not in issue in these proceedings, I will say no more about them. I think the most convenient form of order to make would be to declare that the board are entitled under the Act to provide out of the revenue of their omnibus undertaking (a) the expenses of maintaining and replacing their existing omnibuses, garages and other buildings and plant, but not (b) the expenses of adding thereto.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Norman Morgan & Davies, Cardiff (for the plaintiff). Gibson & Weldon, agents for Trevor C. Griffiths, Blackwood (for the defendants).

[Reported by B. ASHKENAZI, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MAIN (deceased), OFFICIAL SOLICITOR v. MAIN

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 15, 1947.]

Wills—Construction—Gift dependant on one of two events—Express mention of only one event—Effect given to testator's intention.

Testator, by a will dated Feb. 2, 1904, directed his trustees to pay the income of his residuary trust property to his wife during her widowhood, and after her remarriage or death (subject to a discretionary power as to the upkeep of the estate as a home) to pay the income towards the maintenance, education, and necessary expenses of such of his children as being a son or sons should be under 21 years old or being a daughter or daughters should for the time being be a spinster or spinsters, and “after the death or marriage of the last surviving daughter” on trust to pay and divide the trust property unto and equally between all or any of his children living at the death of such last surviving daughter and the children then living of any then deceased child of the testator who being a son attained 21 years of age or being a daughter attained that age or married in equal shares per stirpes. Testator, who died on April 7, 1904, left him surviving his widow, one son, T., and two daughters, D., and L. No question arose regarding T., who attained 21 years of age and still survived. D., died a spinster on Sept. 15, 1927. L., married on Apr. 19, 1928. On Jan. 31, 1945, the testator's widow died. When L., the last surviving daughter, married on Apr. 19, 1928, the estate was not then distributable as the widow was still alive, and on the death of the widow on Jan. 31, 1945, L.'s marriage had already taken place. The gift, however, to the children was to children who were “living at the death of such last surviving daughter,” and L., being still alive, the question arose whether a gift could be implied to those children not only if they were living at the death but also at the marriage of the last surviving daughter.

Held: the express mention in relation to the gift of only one of the two relevant events being due to slovenliness or carelessness and it being possible to spell out of the express gift a corresponding gift in the other event and effectuated by way of implication, effect would be given to the clearly indicated, though not precisely expressed, intention of the testator, and the children living at the time of the marriage of the last surviving daughter took under the will.

Re Warner, Walter v. Silvey (1) applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] Here the court was faced with an ambiguity. In the will the trustees were directed, after the death or marriage of the testator's last surviving daughter, to divide the residuary estate among children or grandchildren living at the death of the last surviving daughter. The testator's last surviving daughter married on April 19, 1928, but she still survives. The judge expresses no doubt that the testator intended both the time at which the division was to take place and the ascertainment of the individuals among whom it was to take place to relate to the death or marriage of the last surviving daughter, although in the will only death is mentioned with regard to the ascertainment of the beneficiaries. Holding that the inconsistency in the will is due to “slovenliness or carelessness” in drafting, he gives effect to the testator's intention.

AS TO GIFT OVER ON MARRIAGE OR DEATH INTERCHANGEABLY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 384, para. 428; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 783, 784, Nos. 6409-6413.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Warner, Watts v. Silvey, [1918] 1 Ch. 368 ; 87 L.J.Ch. 234 ; 118 L.T. 353 44 Digest 784, 6413.
- (2) Bainbridge v. Cream (1852), 16 Beav. 25 ; 44 Digest 783, 6409.
- (3) Stanford v. Stanford (1886), 34 Ch.D. 362 ; 44 Digest 1174, 10160.
- (3) In re Tucker, Bowchier v. Gordon (1887), 56 L.J.Ch. 449 ; 56 L.T. 118 ; 44 Digest 784, 6411.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of a will and in the event which had happened, the residuary estate became distributable on the death of the widow of the testator or at the date of the death of the last surviving daughter of the testator. The facts are set out in the judgment.

W. F. Waite for Official Solicitor.

G. M. Parbury for daughter and son of testator.

R. W. Goff for infant children.

ROXBURGH, J. : This testator, John Main, made his will on Feb. 2, 1904, and died on Apr. 7, 1904. He left surviving him his widow, who died on Jan. 31, 1945, a son, and two daughters. The son is the defendant, Thomas Main ; one of the daughters is Mrs. Lear, the second defendant who married on Apr. 19, 1928 ; the other daughter, Dorothy Main, died on Sept. 15, 1927. The defendant, John Charles Main, an infant, is the only child of the son, Thomas Main, and the defendant, Arthur John Corry Lear, an infant, is the only child of Mrs. Lear. Miss Main died a spinster.

By his will the testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust for sale and to stand possessed of the net proceeds of sale on trust to pay the income to his wife during her widowhood with certain obligations, and, on his wife marrying again or on her decease, the testator directed his trustees :

To stand possessed of my said residuary trust property upon trust to pay and apply the income arising therefrom in or towards the upkeep and maintenance of my said trust property for such period as in the exercise of the discretionary power in that behalf hereinbefore given to my trustees they shall decide to keep up and maintain the same as hereinbefore mentioned and in providing for the maintenance education and necessary expenses of such of my said children as being a son or sons shall be under the age of 21 years or being a daughter or daughters shall for the time being be a spinster or spinsters and in the event of my trustees determining (under the discretionary power in that behalf so vested in them as aforesaid) that it is unnecessary and inadvisable to keep up and maintain my said trust property as a home for my said children as aforesaid I hereby declare that my trustees shall stand possessed of the income arising from my said residuary trust property upon trust to pay and apply the same in or towards the maintenance education and necessary expenses of such of my children as being a son or sons shall be under the age of 21 years or being a daughter or daughters shall for the time being be a spinster or spinsters and after the death or marriage of the last surviving daughter of mine I direct my trustees to stand possessed of my said residuary trust property upon trust (both as regards capital and income and any accumulations or apportionments of income) to pay and divide the same unto and equally between all or any of my children or child living at the death of such last surviving daughter of mine and the children or child then living of any then deceased child of mine who being a son or sons attain the age of 21 years or being a daughter or daughters attain that age or marry if more than one in equal shares but so that the children of any deceased child of mine shall take equally between them only the share which their parent would have taken had he or she survived me and attained a vested interest provided always that if any daughter of mine shall marry after my decease without having first obtained the consent in writing of my trustees then and in such case I authorise and direct my trustees (if in their absolute discretion they shall think fit) to settle the share to which any such daughter shall then be entitled whether in possession reversion remainder or expectancy upon such trusts as my trustees in their absolute discretion shall think fit for the benefit of such daughter.

Mr. Thomas Main has attained 21 and is alive and, therefore, no question arises as regards him. When Miss Main died on Sept. 15, 1927, Mrs. Lear was still a spinster—she did not marry until Apr. 19, 1928—and, accordingly, the event indicated, that is, the death or marriage of the last surviving daughter, took place on Apr. 19, 1928, though the estate was not then distributable because the widow was still alive. When the widow died on Jan. 31, 1945, the death or marriage of the testator's last surviving daughter had already taken place. On the other hand, the gift which the testator has in terms indicated to take effect in that event is a gift to all or any of his children or child living at the death of such last surviving daughter of his and that event has not taken place. Mrs. Lear is alive. Accordingly, unless I can apply some principle to remedy the situation, there is a plain gap or hiatus in the will and the law of intestacy will have to be invoked to fill the gap.

Before I look at authority, which seems to me to be important in this matter, I must observe that I feel no doubt what the testator intended in the event which happened of his only son attaining 21. I have no doubt that he intended that, when the widow had died and his last surviving daughter had married, his estate should be distributable. The question is whether I can imply a gift to the beneficiaries named not only if they are living at the death of his last surviving daughter, but also if they are living at the marriage of the last surviving daughter.

Counsel for the children has referred me to Re Warner, Watts v. Silvey (1), He practically conceded, and I agree with him, that that case does not cover the present case, but he submitted, and I agree with him in that submission, that it does supply me with both assistance and warning. The head-note in that case is as follows :

Testator gave property to trustees in trust to pay the income to his wife during her widowhood, and, after her "death or remarriage," to hold the property in trust "for all or any my children or child living at the decease of the survivor of myself and my said wife and the children then living of any deceased child of mine," who were to take the parent's share. At the date of the widow's remarriage all the testator's children were living, but in her lifetime one child died leaving children, and there were children of one of the surviving children of the testator :—HELD, following Bainbridge v. Cream (2), Stanford v. Stanford (3), and In re Tucker (4), that the children living at the date of the remarriage then took immediate vested interests to the exclusion of all grand-children.

SARGANT, J., after dealing with In re Tucker (4), Bainbridge v. Cream (2), and Stanford v. Stanford (3), said this ([1918] 1 Ch. 368, at p. 371) :

In each class of case the court seems to have treated the express mention of one only of the two relevant events as due to slovenliness or carelessness, and to have succeeded in spelling out of the express gift, and effectuating by way of implication, a corresponding gift in the other corresponding event. I think that the courts have gone to the extreme limit in so giving effect to testators' intentions, but, in accordance with the decision of STIRLING, J.—one of the most careful judges who have ever sat in these courts—I decide that the cases relied on in In re Tucker (4) govern the present case, and I give effect to the sufficiently indicated intention, if not the precise words of the testator, by holding that the persons to take were the children of the testator living at the time of his widow's remarriage.

In the present case, I have no doubt that the express mention of only one of the two relevant events was due to slovenliness or carelessness, and if I am entitled to spell out of the express gift a corresponding gift in the other event and effectuated it by way of implication, I have no doubt that I ought to do so. Counsel for the infant children has contended with some force that, if I had had to consider the minority of the son, I should have been hard put to it to say what the testator intended and I agree with him that it might well have been impossible, but I do not think that I am precluded from giving effect to an intention which seems to me to be perfectly plain in the events which have happened because I might not have been able to say what the intention was in a certain event which did not happen and cannot now happen.

I do not think I should be going beyond the extreme limit in applying the principle referred to in Re Warner (1) so as to give effect to what seems to me clearly the testator's intention in the present case. On the contrary, I think that, if I hold, as I am about to hold, that the persons to take are the children of the testator living at the time of the marriage of the last surviving daughter, I shall give effect to an intention which is clearly indicated though not precisely expressed.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : Official Solicitor ; Robin Hamp & Green, agents for Searle & Burge, Newport, Mon. (for defendants).

[Reported by G. H. D. OSBORNE, Barrister-at-Law.]

WILKIE v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 21, 22, 1947].

Street and Aerial Traffic—Public service vehicle—Negligence of transport board—Limitation of liability—“Contract for conveyance of passenger”—Free travelling pass granted to employee of board—Condition excluding liability for damage by negligence—Employee injured while boarding omnibus—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 97.

The plaintiff was an employee of the defendant board and as such held a pass enabling him to travel free on the board's omnibuses. By cl. 6 of the pass, the pass was stated to be issued and accepted “on condition that neither the [board] nor their servants are to be liable to the holder . . . for loss of life, injury or delay . . . however caused.” Owing to the negligence of the conductress, a servant of the board, the plaintiff was thrown off and injured while attempting to board an omnibus. In an action brought by the plaintiff against the board for negligence, it was argued on his behalf that in the circumstances this condition had no application, and that, in any case, it was excluded by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 97, which provides: “Any contract for the conveyance of a passenger in a public service vehicle shall, so far as it purports to negative or to restrict the liability of any person in respect of any claim which may be made against that person in respect of the death of, or bodily injury to, the passenger while being carried in, entering or alighting from the vehicle . . . be void.”

HELD: (i) the plaintiff, when the injury occurred, was acting in a way which the pass entitled him to and was taking the benefit of a right which the pass gave him, and, therefore, the condition in cl. 6 operated.

(ii) the pass was a mere licence and not a “contract for the conveyance of a passenger” within s. 97, and, therefore, the provisions of that section did not apply.

Decision of LORD GODDARD, C.J. ([1946] 1 All E.R. 650; 110 J.P. 215), affirmed.

[AS TO SPECIAL TERMS EXCLUDING LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE, see HALSBURY' Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 71-74, paras. 108-110; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST' Vol. 8, pp. 102, 105, Nos. 680-682, 696, 697.]

APPEAL of the plaintiff from a judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J., without a jury, dated Mar. 26, 1946. The facts are summarised in the headnote and appear in more detail in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Fox-Andrews, K.C., and Edgedale for the plaintiff.

Beney, K.C., and Monier-Williams for the defendants.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: The plaintiff was the holder of a free pass issued to him as an employee of the defendants, the London Passenger Transport Board. He was thrown off an omnibus which he was attempting to enter because of the negligence of the woman conductor who sounded the bell and thereby gave notice to the driver to proceed without taking due care to see that every intending passenger was safely on the bus. The plaintiff had got hold of the rail and had one foot on the bus, and when it started he was carried along with one foot on the vehicle and one foot in the air. He tried to pull himself on to the platform, but was unable to do so and, eventually, owing to a swerve of the bus, he was thrown off and suffered injury.

Two points have been raised in argument. LORD GODDARD, C.J., decided both against the plaintiff. The first point depended upon the true meaning and effect of the pass itself, and the extent to which, on the facts of the case, a condition freeing the board from liability for injury applied. The pass is described as “A free pass available only on central buses, country buses, trams and trolley buses,” and it remained in force for a year subject to the right of the board at any moment to cancel it if they thought fit. It had not, in fact, been cancelled, and the plaintiff, in attempting to get on this bus, was admittedly intending to use the benefit of the pass. The pass contained the following condition:

No. 6: It is issued and accepted on condition that neither the London Passenger Transport Board nor their servants are to be liable to the holder or his or her representative for loss of life, injury or delay or other loss of or damage to property however caused.

It is not suggested that that language does not cover a case of negligence by one of the board's servants, but it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the condition only comes into operation when the holder of the pass is really enjoying the benefits which the pass purports to confer on him, namely, the right of free conveyance, which means conveyance in the ordinary manner in which passengers are conveyed, either sitting or standing as the case may be, and it was said that, owing to the negligence of the board's servant, the plaintiff was never in a position to obtain those benefits because it was made impossible for him to put himself in a position on the bus in which he could obtain them. The argument on the other side was that he had put himself in a position where he was, in fact, obtaining these benefits, because it was said that he was, at the time when he suffered the injury, "bus-borne," a word with which junior counsel for the board thought it convenient or desirable to enrich the English language. The judge, I think, dealt with this point on that basis, because he laid stress on the fact that the plaintiff, when he suffered the injury, was carried entirely by the bus and was not in contact with the ground.

In my opinion, neither of those two views really provides the real test. It seems to me that cl. 6 of the pass comes into operation at the moment when the holder of the pass begins to enjoy any of the benefits which the pass confers on him. The pass confers on him, no doubt, the benefit of sitting or standing in an appropriate place on the bus and travelling free, but it does more than that. It gives him the right to get on the bus without being a trespasser. At the moment that he begins to get on to the bus with the intention of using his pass, he cannot be regarded as a trespasser because he is doing something which the board tells him impliedly he may do for the purpose of using his pass and getting the full benefit of it. It is only by virtue of his holding of the pass that he is entitled to put his foot on the platform at all. In the case of an ordinary passenger intending to pay his fare, the bus company is clearly inviting him to put himself in a position where the contract of carriage would be made, and nobody, I think, suggests that the contract of carriage in the case of an ordinary passenger is made the moment the passenger puts his foot on the bus.

It is made when he, by conduct, accepts the offer of carriage, and I should agree that this does not take place until he puts himself either on the platform or inside the bus. But, whichever be the true view as to the precise moment when the contract is made in the case of the ordinary fare-paying passenger, there is clearly a certain amount of time and action which takes place before a contract is made. The mere taking hold of the rail and putting his foot on the bus is a thing which the fare-paying passenger does, not by virtue of a contract, because at that moment the contract under which he is carried has not come into existence, but by virtue of the implied licence given by the bus company to the intending fare-paying passenger to get to the position where he will make the contract, just in the same way as a railway company impliedly licenses an intending passenger to walk through the company's premises to the booking office to make a contract of carriage. In the case of a pass-holder, however, the pass entitles him, not merely to enjoy the benefit of free carriage in the ordinary way while seated or standing, as the case may be, but also to take such steps in relation to the bus as will enable him to obtain these benefits, and one of the steps which he has to take to get his free conveyance is to get on the bus, and it is as a pass-holder that he does get on the bus.

In the present case, the plaintiff's intention was to use his pass. That was his justification for attempting to get on to the bus. If he had, to take an absurd case, been sued for damages for trespass for putting his foot on the bus, his defence would have been: "I put my foot on the bus because, as a pass-holder, I intended to use my pass, and, as such, I was by my pass entitled to do what I did." It seems to me, therefore, that, without considering the refinements as to when exactly the benefit of the free travel may be regarded as operating, the true answer to the question: When did the benefit of the pass begin to operate? is that it began the moment he made use of the permission which the pass gave him, namely, to place his foot on the bus. The fact that he did not enjoy the full benefit of the pass because, before he could take his seat and obtain his free conveyance, he was thrown off the bus by negligence, does not seem to me to alter the fact that, by getting his foot on the bus, he was using the pass and taking the benefit of a right which the pass gave him. That is rather different from the view which, I think, the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE took as to the rights of the parties under this condition, but the result is the same, namely, that the plaintiff was using the pass when he attempted to get on to the bus and put his foot on the bus as a pass-holder, and the condition applied to the whole time during which he enjoyed some right which the pass gave him. Various questions were raised as to what might happen in the case of a pass-holder who had not made up his mind whether he was going to use his pass or not, and a pass-holder who at one moment intended to use his pass and the next moment changed his mind and decided to pay his fare, and things of that kind. I do not find that examination of those hypothetical cases assists me. What we have to deal with is the position of this particular passenger in these particular circumstances, and it seems to me that, on the facts, he was using the pass and claiming and enjoying part of the benefits which the pass conferred on him, and the condition covers that case.

The other point arises under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 97, which provides :

Any contract for the conveyance of a passenger in a public service vehicle shall, so far as it purports to negative or to restrict the liability of any person in respect of any claim which may be made against that person in respect of the death of, or bodily injury to, the passenger while being carried in, entering or alighting from the vehicle, or purports to impose any conditions with respect to the enforcement of any such liability, be void.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE dealt quite shortly with the argument that that section applied. He said that there was no contract for the conveyance of the plaintiff, but that he was a mere licensee. I agree that the giving or receiving of this pass cannot be regarded as a contract for the conveyance of a passenger. It was said that the contract for conveyance is to be found in the giving and receiving of the pass, the contract being of this nature: "We, the London Passenger Transport Board, agree to carry you free on our buses on the terms that you agree to give up what would otherwise have been your common law rights." I think the short answer to that is that the question depends on the true construction of the pass and to regard it as having any contractual force is entirely to misinterpret it. There is no contractual animus to be found in relation to it. It is clearly nothing but a licence subject to conditions, a very common form of licence, e.g., a licence to a neighbour to walk over a field, providing he does not go with a dog. You cannot spell such a thing as that as being a contract: "I will let you go across my field in consideration of you, as a contracting party, agreeing not to take your dog." In other words, looking at this document shortly and sensibly, it contains no intention to contract. It is the mere grant of a revocable licence subject to a condition that, while the licence is being enjoyed, certain consequences shall follow. That is not contractual, but is a term or condition of the licence, and if anyone makes use of the licence he can only do so by being bound by the condition. That seems to me to be the short answer to the argument on s. 97. In the result, the appeal, in my opinion, fails, and must be dismissed, with costs.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. The question seems to me to turn mainly on the construction of cl. 6 of the free pass issued by the London Passenger Transport Board to the plaintiff. It is phrased in the widest possible terms and covers all loss of life, injury, or delay or loss or damage to property however caused. There must, I think, obviously, be some limitation placed on that clause, and the interpretation which I think is reasonable is that it should only apply when the pass-holder is using the pass. That view seems to be supported by the last part of the clause, which says that the exemption from liability shall not apply in the case of an employee while using the pass in the course of his or her employment. It is a valuable privilege as it entitles the pass-holder to travel on any central bus, country bus, tram or trolley bus belonging to the board. I see no reason why it should not be interpreted in a liberal way so far as the defendants are concerned. The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE took the view that the plaintiff accepted the invitation to travel on the bus by starting to board it, and that he did so, not as a fare-paying passenger, but as the holder of a pass, and then he went on to say :

As a matter of common sense, it seems to me that the plaintiff was using his pass when this accident happened, and I must hold that the condition applies.

- A The only other interpretation to be placed on cl. 6 which recommends itself to me is that the clause should come into operation when the pass-holder produces his pass which, I suppose, strictly speaking, he ought to do as soon as he sees the bus conductor, and thereby indicates his intention to travel without paying any fare. That view, I think, on reflection, would lead to great difficulty because it would mean that for part of the journey he was travelling as an ordinary passenger with an ordinary passenger's rights and then, and for the rest of the journey, he would be travelling free and subject to cl. 6.
- B On the whole, I do not think that that is the right way to interpret this clause. The other alternative is the view which the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE has taken, and which I think, is the right view. On the first point, I agree with what my Lord has said.

- C ASQUITH, L.J. : I also agree, though at times I felt some hesitation on the question when the plaintiff began to use his pass. At first it seemed to me somewhat artificial to answer this question by reference to the position of the plaintiff's body at a split second of time forming part of a continuous process. It seemed a more natural approach to ask, looking at the sequence of events as a whole and viewing them broadly, whether the plaintiff ever obtained the effective enjoyment of the benefits conferred by his pass, or whether the negligent act of the conductress in abruptly causing the bus to move on prevented him from doing so. In other words, it might be said in ordinary parlance that he was at no time a passenger travelling on the bus in the manner envisaged by the pass. After, however, listening to the judgment of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS I have come to the conclusion that the interpretation which he propounds is the logical one and I respectfully accept it. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.
- D

Appeal dismissed with costs.

- E Solicitors : W. C. Crocker (for the plaintiff) ; A. H. Grainger (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LEAN v. ALSTON

- F [COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Morton and Somervell, L.JJ.), January 20, 21, 1947.]

Practice—Third-party procedure—Joint tortfeasors—Contribution—No representative of deceased joint tortfeasor's estate—Power of court or judge to appoint representative—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 46.

- G A motor car and a motor cycle collided, the driver of the motor cycle being killed and his pillion passenger being injured. The pillion passenger began an action for damages for negligence against the owner of the car. The driver of the motor cycle had died intestate and there was no representative of his estate. The car owner sought to make the estate of the dead driver liable to contribute under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6, and he applied under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 46, for the appointment of a representative of the estate who could be made
- H a third party in the action :—

HELD : the court or judge had power to make such an appointment and that it should be made, and the person appointed was liable to third party procedure, although the deceased person whose estate he represented had not been concerned in the original action between the pillion passenger and the motor car owner.

[AS TO ADMINISTRATION AD LITEM AND REPRESENTATION OF DECEASED PARTIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, p. 18, para. 14 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 209-215, Nos. 2484-2555.]

Cases referred to :—

- (1) Watts v. The Official Solicitor, [1936] 1 All E.R. 249; Digest Supp.
- (2) Pratt v. L.P.T.B., and Green v. Vandekar, [1937] 1 All E.R. 473; 156 L.T. 265; Digest Supp. (1941).
- (3) Joint Stock Discount Co. v. Brown (1869), L.R. 8 Eq. 376; sub nom. London Joint Stock Discount Co., Ltd. v. Brown, 20 L.T. 844.

INTERLOCUTORY appeal from DENNING, J., who, in confirming the order of the District Registrar, Norwich, refused to appoint a representative on a summons under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 46.

Montague Berryman, K.C., and Geoffrey Lawrence for the defendant motor-car owner.

R. Cope-Morgan, K.C., and Robert Ives for the plaintiff pillion passenger.

SCOTT, L.J. : This is an appeal from an order of DENNING, J., in an action brought by the plaintiff who was riding on a motor bicycle on the pillion seat behind the driver. A collision occurred between the motor bicycle and a motor car, the plaintiff being injured and the driver of the motor bicycle being killed. Thereupon an action was started by the plaintiff against the owner of the motor car. The question of the negligence of the deceased driver of the motor bicycle was thus not in issue, but the defendant desired to be in a position to make the estate of the driver of the bicycle liable under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, s. 1 (1) of which provides that an action of tort survives against the estate of the tortfeasor. To establish the right of contribution, which the defendant had under s. 6 of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, from the estate of the deceased driver of the motor bicycle, he desired to serve a third-party notice bringing in the representative of the estate, but he was faced with the position that the deceased had left no will and his widow, when asked if she would take out letters of administration, decided that she did not wish to do so. She was, however, thus given an opportunity of becoming the administratrix and representing the interests of the estate which she had inherited from her husband.

In those circumstances the defendant desired to get somebody appointed by the court to represent the estate of the deceased and be the person against whom an order might be made for contribution. Order 16, r. 46, is expressed to be limited to a cause or matter proceeding in the court. The provision there is :

If, in any cause, matter, or other proceeding it shall appear to the court or a judge that any deceased person who was interested in the matter in question has no legal personal representative, the court or judge may proceed in the absence of any person representing the estate of the deceased person, or may appoint some person to represent his estate for all the purposes of the cause, matter, or other proceeding.

It was contended for the plaintiff that the rule does not apply to the present case because as between the defendant and the widow or the estate of the deceased driver of the motor cycle there was no cause or matter pending, but counsel for the defendant has pointed out that that rule is only one application of an inherent power of the court exercised by the Court of Chancery and expressed in s. 44 of the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852, by which the Court of Chancery and its successor the Chancery Division have always had the power to appoint a person to represent any particular interest in any proceeding where it was thought right to make the appointment.

The question was considered by the Court of Appeal in 1936 in Watts v. Official Solicitor (1). I will read the headnote, correcting a slight inaccuracy in it as suggested by MORTON, L.J. :

The Official Solicitor, on appointment to represent the deceased's estate in an action in place of a deceased defendant, gave notice of change of solicitors and substituted his name for that of the solicitors on the record as acting for the deceased defendant, who were also the solicitors of the deceased's insurance company. On a summons for directions issued by the plaintiff, counsel for the solicitors moved the learned judge to order that the Official Solicitor should leave the control of the defence in the hands of the said solicitors, and that they should remain on the record, and that the notice of change of solicitors should be removed from the file. The learned judge accordingly varied in this sense his original order appointing the Official Solicitor to represent the deceased defendant. The Official Solicitor appealed :—HELD : as the Official Solicitor had the same right as any other litigant to choose who should be his solicitor, and was entitled to act for himself, he was entitled to control the defence of himself as representative of the deceased defendant and the change of solicitor on the record was properly made, and the learned judge had no jurisdiction to make the variation complained of.

I have quoted the headnote at length because it shows that the case is a precedent for an appointment comparable to that in the present case made under r. 46. EVE, J., said ([1936] 1 All E.R. 249, at p. 254) :

A The application of this rule is of very frequent occurrence in the other division of this court, and I have never heard before that it is not open to the party who is appointed to represent the estate to select in all respects the persons to act as solicitors.

In 1937 there were two other cases, Pratt v. London Passenger Transport Board, and Green v. Vandekar (2). The headnote says :

B In the first case the defendants in an action for personal injuries attributed the blame to a third person, who had since died. He left no estate, but he had been insured against such claims for negligence by an insurance company. The plaintiff applied under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 46, for an order that the Official Solicitor should represent the deceased's estate and be added to the record as a defendant. The order asked was made without the consent of the Official Solicitor. In the second case, the facts were similar, except that the deceased was one of the defendants in the action, and that the order was made without the knowledge of the Official Solicitor. The Official Solicitor appealed in both cases.

C It was held that there was no power to appoint a representative without his consent, but the power of the court to appoint was there recognised in a case similar in its circumstances to the present action.

The old practice in the Court of Chancery is illustrated in Joint Stock Discount Co. v. Brown (3), the headnote of which says (L.R. 8 Eq. 376) :

D Where a defendant to a bill which prayed relief against all the defendants jointly in respect of an alleged breach of trust as directors, died abroad, and the evidence shewed that he was believed to have left a will, and to have named his widow executrix, but that she had not seen the will, and did not know its contents, and that his solicitors on the record had not been instructed since his death :—The court, on the application of the plaintiffs, made an order for the appointment of a person named by the plaintiffs, and consenting to act, to represent the deceased defendant for the purposes of the suit, There the court made an appointment, and, although it said that it could not appoint a person who was unwilling to act, the appointment was good if the person was willing so to act.

E In the present case there is no question that the widow herself has been given an opportunity to appear and has elected not to appear, and a person was appointed by the Master, but DENNING, J., thought either that there was no power or that in his discretion he ought not to make the appointment. I am satisfied that there was power and that the appointment ought to be made because under the statute the defendant may have a right of contribution against the estate of the deceased driver of the motor cycle on the ground of his having been negligent. The plaintiff has no interest in putting a third party on the record as a defendant, and, no doubt, decided not to sue that third party and make him a co-defendant with the owner of the motor car because he thought the estate was small and that, so long as he proved some act of negligence on the part of the servant of the defendant, he was sure to get his judgment.

G My own view is that it was obviously right to make the order, and for this very simple reason. If the case is decided with the representative of the estate of the deceased bicycle driver present as a third party, the question of contribution will be decided by the judge after hearing evidence in the action and at the minimum of expense to the two parties concerned in the question of contribution. If he did not hear it with the representative of the deceased bicycle driver present, the right of the defendant to bring an action for contribution afterwards would not be barred, but it would be an obvious waste of money to have a second trial and it might be very unfair to the defendant because a material witness might in the interval have died. On the ground of discretion alone, it seems to me obviously right that an order should be made. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs and the appointment of the representative of the third-party confirmed in order that the third-party notice may be duly served.

H MORTON, L.J. : I agree, and I only wish to add a few observations on two arguments presented to us. It was first submitted that Ord. 16, r. 46, only applied in a case where a person already a party to proceedings had died and there was no legal personal representative of such party. In my view, that argument cannot be accepted. In the first place, it seems to me that the wording of the rule is clearly against it. The rule says :

If in any cause, matter, or other proceeding it shall appear to the court or to a judge that any deceased person who was interested in the matter in question has no legal personal representative . . .

I can see no ground for confining those words to deceased persons who have been parties to the proceedings. In the second place, I think there is direct authority which shows that that is not the proper interpretation of the rule. I refer to the case already mentioned by my Lord, Pratt v. London Passenger Transport Board (2). As I read the facts in that case, the person whose estate the Official Solicitor was appointed to represent was not a party to the litigation. The facts were very like the facts in the present case. It is true that in Pratt's case (2) the question was whether the Official Solicitor's consent was necessary, but nobody suggested that the Official Solicitor could not be appointed because the dead man was not a party to the litigation. Finally, within my own experience, although no case was cited to us on the point, it is very common in the Chancery Division for a person to be appointed to represent the estate of a deceased person under this rule when the deceased person has never been a party to the litigation. One of the most common cases is where there is a doubt about the true construction of a will. The trustees of the will take out an originating summons and it is their duty to make parties to that originating summons the persons who are interested in putting before the court various different constructions of the will. It often happens that some person who, if alive, would have a very direct interest in putting an argument before the court is dead, and has no legal personal representative. In these circumstances, it is the usual practice for the Chancery Division to appoint a person to represent the estate of the deceased person under this rule. I have never heard it suggested until today that that could not be done unless the deceased person had been a party to the litigation at some stage.

The other argument on which I desire to make a few observations is this. It was pointed out that this is a matter for the discretion of the judge and that this court would not interfere with the exercise of a judge's discretion unless satisfied he had acted on some wrong principle. We were also informed that the judge refused to make the appointment because he did not think that the widow of the deceased motor cyclist, being a person beneficially interested in his estate, should have this representation "imposed on her." If that is what influenced the judge's mind, I think he did exercise his discretion on a wrong principle. The widow was invited to represent her husband's estate and she declined to do so, it may be for very good reasons not unconnected with the question of costs. For all we know, the widow may be glad that another person (who is, we understand, to be indemnified in respect of his costs by the defendant) should represent her husband's estate, and it may well be that in the long run it will save that estate the expense of a subsequent trial and possibly of an application to the Probate Division to appoint a personal representative. I agree that this is a case in which the court has jurisdiction to make the order and that in all the circumstances the order should be made.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

Solicitors : Berrymans (for the defendant); Butt & Bowyer, agents for Daynes, Keefe & Durrant, Norwich (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THOMPSON v. McCULLOUGH

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Bucknill and Asquith, L.J.J.), January 14, 15, 1947.]

Deed—Escrow—Conveyance executed, but purchase money not paid in full.

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Validity—Notice given by purchaser after execution of conveyance, but before payment of purchase money in full.

A Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Validity—Weekly tenancy—Month's notice given to quit on May 4—Subsequent week's notice to quit on April 20.

In Sept., 1942, K., the owner of a freehold dwelling-house, granted a weekly tenancy thereof, unfurnished, to the defendant. In Feb., 1945, the defendant sub-let the house furnished to the plaintiff on a weekly tenancy. On Apr. 1, 1946, the plaintiff verbally agreed with K. to purchase the fee simple of the house, for £110, and he paid £5 as a deposit. On B Apr. 5, 1946, the defendant gave the plaintiff notice to quit expiring on May 4. On Apr. 10 the defendant sent a further notice to the plaintiff to quit the premises on Apr. 20, and on the same day K. executed a conveyance to the plaintiff who paid a further £29 on account of the purchase money. On Apr. 12 the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit. The balance of the purchase money was not paid to K. by the plaintiff until June 21.

C HELD : (i) the conveyance of April 10, 1946, was an escrow until payment of the balance of the purchase money on June 21.

(ii) the subsequent fulfilment of the condition on which the deed was to operate, namely, the payment of the balance of the purchase price, did not relate back to the date of the conveyance (Apr. 10) so as to have the effect of validating the notice to quit given by the plaintiff on D Apr. 12, when the fee simple was not vested in him.

(iii) up to May 4 the plaintiff's tenancy was still in existence as a weekly tenancy and it was still open to the defendant to give the plaintiff a notice appropriate to determine such a tenancy, and, therefore, the second notice to quit given by the defendant was valid.

E [EDITORIAL NOTE.] The reasoning on the third point must be distinguished from that underlying the decision in Loewenthal v. Vanhoute (ante p. 116). There a notice to quit had been given to expire on a certain date, it had been ignored, and later a further notice to quit had been given, and it was held that the subsequent notice to quit was of no effect unless it could be inferred from the circumstances that a new tenancy had been created after the expiration of the first notice. Here the notice to quit was given and expired during the subsistence of the tenancy.

F As to DELIVERY AS AN ESCROW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 199-203, paras. 243-245; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 17, pp. 212-213, Nos. 245-251, and AS TO NOTICE TO QUIT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 145, para. 157; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 434, 435, 438, 439, Nos. 5792-5798, 5837-5845.]

Cases referred to :

- G (1) Bowker v. Burdekin, (1843), 11 M. & W. 128; 12 L.J.Ex. 329; 152 E.R. 744; 17 Digest 211, 231.
(2) Foundling Hospital (Governors and Guardians) v. Crane, [1911] 2 K.B. 367; 80 L.J.K.B. 853; 105 L.T. 187, C.A.; 17 Digest 205, 166.

APPEAL of plaintiff from an order of JUDGE ALLSEBROOK at Whitehaven and Millom County Court, by which possession of a dwelling-house was granted to the defendant. The facts appear in the judgment of MORTON, L.J.

G. Heilpern for the plaintiff.

J. V. Nesbitt for the defendant.

H MORTON, L.J. : In this case the county court judge refused an order for possession to the plaintiff, but granted an order for possession to the defendant, of the house known as No. 21, Springfield Road, Bigrigg. The action was a curious one in that the plaintiff, who claimed possession of the house, was in possession of it when the action started and is still in possession of it. The question we have to decide is : Who is entitled to possession of this house, the plaintiff or the defendant ?

The original owner in fee simple of the house was a Mr. Joseph Thompson Kirkbride, and the original tenant of Mr. Kirkbride was the mother of the defendant. In September, 1942, the defendant's mother died, and the defendant, who was then in the army, was granted a weekly tenancy by Mr. Kirkbride of the house unfurnished at a rent of 7s. a week. In November, 1942, the defendant, still being in the army, sub-let the house to certain parties furnished at a rent of 14s. a week, and those parties left in January, 1945. In February, 1945, the defendant sub-let the house furnished to the plaintiff at a rent of 14s. a week under a verbal agreement. In 1946 Mr. Kirkbride was minded to sell the fee simple of the house, and on Apr. 1, 1946, the plaintiff, who was still the tenant of the house furnished, verbally agreed to buy the house from Mr. Kirkbride for the sum of £110, and he paid £5 by way of deposit. The same solicitor, Mr. Lawton, acted for both the plaintiff and Mr. Kirkbride on that occasion. On Apr. 5, 1946, the defendant, having heard that the plaintiff was trying to acquire the property and being himself desirous of occupying it, gave the plaintiff notice to determine the plaintiff's furnished tenancy, that notice purporting to expire on May 4, 1946. On Apr. 10, 1946, the defendant, apparently thinking that he had given too long a notice—he had given almost a month whereas the tenancy was a weekly one—sent a further notice to the plaintiff to quit the premises on Apr. 20. On April 10, Mr. Kirkbride executed a conveyance to the plaintiff. That conveyance was made between Mr. Kirkbride (thereinafter called the vendor), of the one part, and the plaintiff (thereinafter called the purchaser), of the other part. The seisin of the vendor was recited, and the operative part, so far as it is material, is as follows :

In consideration of one hundred and ten pounds paid by the purchaser to the vendor (the receipt whereof the vendor hereby acknowledges) the vendor as beneficial owner hereby conveys unto the purchaser . . .

and then follows a description of the house in question. The witnessing part is in the usual form :

In witness whereof the said parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first before written. Signed sealed and delivered by the said Joseph Thompson Kirkbride in the presence of and then follows the name of the witness. On the same day the plaintiff paid a further sum of £29 on account of the purchase money. Thus, the position on Apr. 10 was that Mr. Kirkbride had executed that conveyance and had received a total of £34 out of the purchase price of £110. On Apr. 12, 1946, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit on Apr. 20. There were then in existence, therefore, the first notice to quit given by the defendant to the plaintiff, the second notice to quit given by the defendant to the plaintiff, and a notice to quit from the plaintiff to the defendant. The last two notices both expired on Apr. 20. The present proceedings were begun on May 29, 1946, at a time when the balance of the purchase money had not yet been paid. On June 21, 1946, the balance of the purchase money, plus a sum by way of interest, was paid by the plaintiff to Mr. Kirkbride.

The matter came before the county court judge on July 10, and he decided the issues as follows. He held (1) that the conveyance which was executed by Mr. Kirkbride on Apr. 10, 1946, was then delivered only as an escrow, and that it remained an escrow and nothing but an escrow until the plaintiff paid the balance of the purchase price on June 21 ; (2) that on Apr. 12, by reason of the fact that the conveyance had only been delivered as an escrow, the plaintiff had not got the legal estate to entitle him to give a valid notice to the defendant determining the defendant's tenancy on Apr. 20 ; (3) that the sub-tenancy of the furnished premises which had been held by the plaintiff had been validly determined by the second notice given by the defendant to the plaintiff. On these findings he refused possession to the plaintiff and gave possession to the defendant. If the findings were right that conclusion, was, no doubt, right, because the defendant's contractual tenancy of the house unfurnished had never been lawfully determined and the defendant had lawfully determined the furnished tenancy of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed from that decision, and before us his counsel put forward the following four contentions. (1) that there was no evidence on which the county court judge could find that the conveyance dated Apr. 10, 1946, was delivered only as an escrow on that date ; (2) that, even if he were wrong on that point, when the balance of the purchase price was paid on June 21, the delivery of the conveyance dated back to Apr. 10, and thus the notice to quit which was given by the plaintiff on Apr. 12 was validated; (3) that, although the premises admittedly come within the Rent Restriction Acts, the plaintiff was entitled to possession because the defendant would not be protected by those Acts, and he relied on the fact that the plaintiff and not the defendant was in possession of the house when the notice to quit given by the plaintiff terminated; (4) that, in any event, the defendant's notice to quit given on Apr. 10 could not be a valid notice because the defendant had already given a notice to quit delivered on Apr. 5 and expiring on May 4. On the pleadings the only notice relied upon by the defendant is the second notice which he gave on Apr. 10 and was due to expire on Apr. 20.

As to the first contention, it is clear that the burden was originally on the plaintiff to prove that the conveyance was effectively delivered on Apr. 10. His attention had been brought pointedly to that question by an attempt on the part of the defendant to deliver interrogatories. The question whether a document is delivered as an escrow or as a deed is in general one of fact, and I think that the following passage from NORTON ON DEEDS, 2nd ed., p. 20, accurately states the law:

Whether the document was delivered as an escrow or as a deed is a question of what the parties intended, and that intention may appear either from their statements or the circumstances.

The author then quotes an observation of PARKE, B. in Bowker v. Burdekin (1) (11 M. & W. 128 at p. 147) as follows:

'You are to look at all the facts attending the execution, to all that took place at the time, and to the result of the transaction, and therefore, though it is in form an absolute delivery, if it can reasonably be inferred that it was delivered not to take effect as a deed till a certain condition was performed, it will nevertheless operate as an escrow'

... Thus the delivery of a transfer of mortgage was held to be an escrow until the mortgage money had been paid ...; and of a conveyance until the purchase money had been paid ... The circumstances relied upon to show delivery as an escrow must be prior to or contemporaneous with, not subsequent to, the delivery ... Evidence is, of course, admissible as to what were the circumstances attending the delivery; ... and the question is in general one of fact for the jury ...

What was the evidence before the county court judge on the question whether or not the deed was delivered as an escrow? The plaintiff produced the conveyance to which I have referred, and that conveyance contains the statement that it was "signed sealed and delivered by the said Joseph Thompson Kirkbride." It also contains the statement, "This conveyance is made the tenth day of April One thousand nine hundred and forty six, [and the statement which I have already read]: In witness whereof the said parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first before written." The production of the conveyance was supplemented by the oral evidence of the plaintiff, and, according to the judge's note, he said: "On April 10, 1946, I purchased from Kirkbride." He was then cross-examined, and said: "I first agreed to purchase from Mr. Kirkbride on April 1, 1946. A verbal agreement. I paid a deposit and obtained a receipt from a clerk in Mr. Lawton's office. Mr. Lawton was then acting for both of us." Mr. Sumner, who is the solicitor for the plaintiff in these proceedings said: "Deposit of £5 paid on Apr. 1. Further payment on Apr. 10, £29, and on June 21 balance £79 10s. 0d., which last sum was balance plus interest, the interest being approximately equivalent to the rental. The evidence thus stands in this way. On the one hand there is the conveyance and the evidence of the plaintiff; on the other hand, there is uncontradicted evidence that the same solicitor, a Mr. Lawton, acted for both parties and that at the date which the conveyance bears only

£34 had been paid out of the purchase price of £110. From the latter evidence, it seems to me the natural inference would be that, if the deed was delivered at all on Apr. 10, it was delivered as an escrow. It would have been a most remarkable thing if Mr. Kirkbride had effectively delivered to the purchaser a conveyance at a time when only £34 out of the purchase price of £110 had been paid. The purchaser could then have sold or mortgaged the property or dealt with it in any way he wished. The normal thing would have been for Mr. Lawton, acting for both parties, to retain the deed until the balance of the purchase price was paid, and for the deed to have been effectively delivered, so as to pass the property to the purchaser, when that happened. As to the other evidence, the purchaser, the plaintiff, having been previously forewarned of this point about delivery, said nothing more than this: "On April 10, 1946, I purchased from Kirkbride." That may mean nothing more than that Mr. Kirkbride executed a conveyance on that date. The evidence that the whole of the purchase price had not been paid on April 10 seems to me to lead to the inference that the document was not effectively delivered on Apr. 10. That being the position on the evidence, I think it was open to the county court judge to find, as he did find, that on April 10 the conveyance was delivered only as an escrow and that the condition, the fulfilment of which would make the delivery effective, was payment by the plaintiff of the balance of the purchase money. The result is that, as regards the first point, I see no reason for disturbing the finding of the county court judge that this document was an escrow and nothing but an escrow until June 21, 1946.

I turn to the second point in the argument of counsel for the plaintiff that, even if that is so, the delivery relates back so as to make his notice to quit given on Apr. 12 an effective notice. Apart from authority that would seem to me a very startling proposition. It involves this, that a man can effectively give a notice as landlord to a tenant at a time when it is uncertain whether he will ever be the landlord in fact. On Apr. 12 it was uncertain whether the plaintiff would ever pay the balance of the purchase money. He did not pay the balance of the purchase money until long after the notice to quit had expired. If relation back is to have such an effect as this, it seems to me to render the position of a tenant intolerable. On Apr. 20, if plaintiff's counsel is right, the defendant would not know whether or not the notice which he had received was a valid notice to quit. Apart from authority, I should have thought that the ultimate payment of the purchase money could not have the effect of validating a notice given at a time when the fee simple was not effectively vested in the giver of the notice. The only authority to which we were referred is Foundling Hospital (Governors and Guardians) v. Crane (2). The facts of that case do not matter for the present purpose, but counsel for the plaintiff relied on a passage in the judgment of FARWELL, L.J. ([1911] 2 K.B. 367 at p. 377) as follows:

The rules relating to escrows are thus stated by PRESTON in his book on Abstracts, 2nd ed., vol. 3, p. 65 . . . "(3) On the second delivery of the writing [that is the effective delivery] it will have relation, for the purposes of title, and not for the purpose of giving a right to intermediate rents, etc., from the delivery; (4) So as the conditions be performed, and the deed delivered a second time, the deed will be good, notwithstanding the death of both or either of the parties before the second delivery"; and SHEPARD'S TOUCHSTONE, 8th ed., pp. 58-60, is to the same effect.

It seems to me that that passage does not establish counsel's proposition. The relation back does not have the effect of giving "a right to intermediate rents, etc." from the time of the original delivery, and, if that be so, I can see no good reason why it should have the effect of validating a notice to quit given at a time when the fee simple was not vested in the plaintiff. The result is that my view as to the true position is not shaken by any authority which has been quoted to us. I add this, in case it may be material, that when these proceedings began the document was still an escrow and the plaintiff was not the owner of the property. The result is that the notice to quit given by the plaintiff to the defendant was not effective, and the contractual tenancy of the defendant at a rental of 7s. a week is still subsisting. Thus, the question under the Rent Restriction Acts, which is the subject of the third argument of counsel for the plaintiff, does not arise.

It is still necessary to determine the fourth point, which is whether the defendant has given an effective notice to determine the furnished tenancy of the plaintiff. This point seems to be entirely devoid of authority one way or the other, but it seems to me that the answer must be "Yes." When the defendant gave his first notice on Apr. 5 expiring on May 4 the position was that, if nothing further had been done, the tenancy would have expired on May 4. In the meantime, up to May 4, the tenancy was still in existence as a weekly tenancy. That being so, in the absence of authority to the contrary, I think it was still open to the defendant to give to his sub-tenant a notice appropriate to the determination of a weekly tenancy, and that he did by giving a notice on

Apr. 12 expiring on Apr. 20. The result is that, in my opinion, the furnished tenancy of the plaintiff was validly determined.

Thus, the defendant is entitled to the possession of these premises as a contractual tenant at the rental of 7s. a week. The order made by the county court judge was right and this appeal must be dismissed.

A BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree that the appeal should be dismissed and I will only say a very few words on the crucial question in the case, that is, whether the plaintiff on Apr. 12 had a legal right to give the defendant notice to quit expiring on Apr. 20. The judge in his judgment said this :

B Also it is said that the deed, that is, the deed of conveyance giving the legal estate to the plaintiff, was not delivered until June 21, and, too, that the tenant has a right to know when he receives notice to quit that the person giving it has a right or title to give it, and, therefore, this is an exception to the rule that the title relates back. These submissions are, I think, right, and I find that on the date this notice to quit was given the plaintiff was not in a position to give it and the notice was invalid.

C That seems to me to be a finding of fact. The evidence about the transfer of title from Kirkbride to the plaintiff seems to me to be most unsatisfactory. and the judge had to rely very largely on the probabilities of the case. In my view, the overwhelming probabilities in a case of this kind are that the vendor did not pass the property in the premises to the purchaser until he had received the purchase price, and the bulk of the purchase price here was not paid until June 21. I think the judge came to a right conclusion on this point, and on the rest of the case I only say that I agree with what my Lord has said and have nothing to add.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

D Solicitors : William Charles Crocker, agent for W. C. Sumner, Whitehaven (for the plaintiff) ; Broughton & Co., agents for Milburn & Co., Workington (for the defendant).

[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRIERLEY v. PHILIPS AND ANOTHER

E [KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., and Humphreys, J.), January 22, 1947.]

Emergency Legislation—Maximum prices—Sale of eggs for purposes of hatching—Whether purchaser a “consumer”—Eggs (Control and Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 880), art. 7 (1) (c) ; sched. II, part II (f).

F A person who buys eggs for the purposes of hatching is not a “consumer” within the meaning of the Eggs (Control and Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1946, sched. II, pt. II, para. (f), and, consequently, neither the buyer nor the seller of eggs sold for that purpose at a price exceeding that laid down by that paragraph is guilty of an offence under art. 7 (1) (c) of the Order.

[FOR THE EGGS (CONTROL AND PRICES) (GREAT BRITAIN) ORDER, 1946, see BUTTERWORTH'S EMERGENCY LEGISLATION, title Supply [1].]

G CASES STATED by Skipton (Yorkshire) Justices,

The respondents were charged before the Skipton (Yorkshire) justices, with buying and selling eggs at a price exceeding the maximum price specified in the Eggs (Control and Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1946, sched. II, pt. II (f) as amended, contrary to art. 7 (1) (c) of the Order. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

H H. L. Parker for the appellants.

Maurice Ahern for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : These two Cases Stated, which arise out of a sale of eggs, raise the same point. The seller is charged with selling above the maximum price, and the buyer is charged with buying above the maximum price. It is necessary to look with some care at the offence which is charged. The offence charged in the first case is that the respondent, Philips, “did sell eggs to one Richard Campbell Brear at a price exceeding the appropriate maximum price specified in pt. II of sched. II to the said Order contrary to art. 7 as amended . . . ; and in the other case, that the respondent Brear "did buy from a producer . . . at a price exceeding the appropriate maximum price." In each case the producer, i.e., the person who owns the hens who lay the eggs, is a person who has the "care, control or management of 25 head of poultry or less." In other words, he is one of those small producers of eggs who keeps domestic fowls and sells the eggs.

So far as these small producers are concerned, the Order is one which one would hope could be understood by the class of person against whom its provisions are directed. It seems, however, to be an Order which provides argument for junior counsel for the Treasury and another learned counsel, and certainly is not very clear to two judges of the High Court who are sitting to try these two cases, and yet it is an Order which is creating a criminal offence. If Orders are made to create criminal offences, it is surely desirable that they should be stated in language which the persons who may commit the offences—in this case, as I say, humble people like cottagers—can understand. It is a very serious thing to produce Orders or regulations, whether under Defence Regulations or anything else, creating offences which can be dealt with as very serious matters, if they are couched in language which does not make clear whether a person is committing an offence or not. I am certainly not prepared ever to support Orders and to find people guilty of criminal offences when the Orders which they are charged with violating are couched in language which is open to all sorts of meanings and causes all sorts of difficulties, so that the unfortunate people cannot know whether they are acting legally or not, unless possibly they get counsel's opinion, or at any rate a solicitor's advice.

In this case it is said that the respondents have committed an offence by selling and buying above the maximum price contained in pt. II of sched. II. What is said to have been done is that a producer owning 25 head of poultry or less has sold eggs to a consumer, and the price in sched. II is 2s. a dozen. These eggs, which were sold for hatching, were sold at 10s. a dozen.

First of all, has there been a sale by a producer owning 25 head of poultry or less to a consumer? What does "consumer" mean? If I were asked what "consumer" meant in an Order or a statute, the first thing I would direct myself to do would be to give to the word "consumer" the ordinary meaning which the English language attaches to that word. The ordinary meaning which the English language would attach to that word in relation to an egg is a person who is going to eat the egg or to use the egg in the process of cooking in his own house. That is consuming an egg, and I should have thought there was not much doubt about that. If I buy an egg to put one of my hens on it to hatch it I do not consume that egg. I should not have thought anybody could by any possibility have said that a person who buys an egg for the purpose of hatching it is a consumer of an egg.

The matter is, it seems to me, reinforced when one looks at art. 3 of this Order which refers to a producer having under his care, control or management more than 25 head of poultry, and provides that he shall not sell or dispose of the eggs except to a licensed buyer or packer, but that prohibition is not to "prohibit the use of fresh eggs by the producer thereof for consumption in his own household or by persons resident in an institution carried on by him." There is no doubt what the word "consumption" means there, and consumption is what a consumer does. Then we find what a producer having under his care, control or management 25 head of poultry or less may do. He may not dispose of his eggs to any person for the purposes of a catering establishment carried on by him or to a manufacturer for the purposes of his manufacturing business, and no person shall buy or obtain any such eggs from that producer for resale or for the purpose of any catering establishment or manufacturing business carried on by him, provided that the restrictions imposed by this paragraph shall not prohibit the sale of such eggs to a licensed buyer or licensed packer. In the next paragraph it is provided:

(5) No person shall dispose of or sell or supply any home produced preserved eggs or use any such eggs for the purposes of a catering establishment or manufacturing business, provided that—(a) the restrictions imposed by this paragraph shall not prohibit the use of such eggs by the person who preserved them, for consumption in his own household . . .

Here again "consumption" clearly means eating or using in the process of cooking.

Therefore, it seems to me that that reinforces the meaning to be attached to the word "consumer" in pt. II of sched. II where it says that on a sale by a producer owning 25 head of poultry or less to a consumer the price of eggs is to be 2s. a dozen. It would have been perfectly easy, if it were meant to apply the maximum price of 2s. a dozen to any sale by a producer, to have said: "On a sale by a producer to a purchaser," but that is not what the draftsman has said. He has said, "to a consumer." Therefore, as far as I can see, there is no maximum price fixed here for the sale by a producer owning 25 head of poultry or less to a person for the purpose of hatching, and I am certainly not prepared to give to the word "consumer" a meaning other than the ordinary meaning which the English language has attached to it. What the draftsman intended, I do not know, but if he intended to prevent a producer selling any eggs to anyone he has used a most unhappy expression, and he could have used another word which everybody would have understood. He chooses to use the word "consumer," and he must give the ordinary meaning to it.

In my opinion, therefore, the offence which was charged in this case was not committed, and, accordingly, I uphold the decision of the justices and dismiss both these appeals with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I am of the same opinion. It is to be observed that in preparing the form of summons in this case the prosecution were careful not to charge the offence, which is the only offence appropriate to the facts of this case, and that is a sale to a consumer. In the case of the seller, the charge is that he, being a producer, sold to a person whose name is given, and that is all, but that is not an offence at all, and, if objection had been taken, the information would have had to have been amended by adding the words, "to a consumer, to wit, one Richard Campbell Brear." In the same way, in the other case, which is an information against Brear, the only charge is that he did buy from a producer, but it is no offence for him to buy unless he himself is a consumer, and the same observations apply. Whether the omission of the word "consumer" was deliberate I do not know, but, if it was, I think it fails in its object, because I cannot see any offence of the nature that is charged in these two cases other than the offence of selling by a producer to a consumer, and for the reasons which my Lord has given, with which I entirely agree, I think it is absurd to say that the person who buys eggs for hatching is buying them to consume them, and is, therefore, a consumer of those eggs. I also desire to associate myself in full with the observations made by my Lord as to the necessity for clarity in these Orders which create criminal offences.

Appeal dismissed with costs.
Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor (for the appellants); Walker, Charlesworth & Jefferson (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D. P. MACDONALD & SONS, LTD. v. SHARPE

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), January 16, 1947.]

Emergency Legislation—Sale of food—False labelling—Conspiracy—Proceedings begun more than six months from date of commission of offence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended), regs. 90 (1), 93 (2)—Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 1553), regs. 1 (1); 4.

As the provisions of pt. V of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, which includes regs. 90 and 93, are applied by the Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943, reg. 4, to the latter regulations, a conspiracy to contravene reg. 1 (1) of the latter regulations is an offence against reg. 90 of the General Regulations, a prosecution for which may, under reg. 93 (2) of the General Regulations, be begun within 12 months of the commission of the offence.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (SALE OF FOOD) REGULATIONS, 1943, regs. 1 (1) and 4, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, pp. 126, 128; and FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, regs. 90, 93 and sched. II, see ibid., pp. 722, 723, 736.]

CASE STATED by Chipping Wycombe justices.

The appellants and one other person were convicted before justices for the Borough of Chipping Wycombe of conspiring together to contravene reg. 1 (1) of the Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943, by procuring the offer for sale of a food under the label "Finest British Wine. Port Style," falsely describing that food. The information was preferred by the respondent, who was at all material times the chief sanitary inspector and sampling officer for the borough of Chipping Wycombe, more than six months after the commission of the alleged offence.

Slade, K.C., and Colin Duncan for the appellants.

Sebag Shaw for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : In the proceedings on which this Case is stated the appellants were charged under the Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943, reg. 1 (1), and the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 90, with having conspired together with certain other persons and with persons unknown to contravene reg. 1 (1) of the Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943. I need not read out the whole of the charge, but it had to do with offering a concoction described as "Finest British Wine. Port Style." The point has been taken that the justices had no jurisdiction to go into the matter, or that, if they had, no offence was disclosed.

The point in the case is clear. Regulation 90 of the Defence (General) Regulations provides that any person who conspires with another person to commit an offence against any of the regulations shall be guilty of an offence against that regulation punishable in like manner as the said offence. In other words, if two people conspire to commit an offence, but have not got so far as committing it, they can receive the same punishment as if they had committed it. Regulation 93 (2) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, provides that any proceedings under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts which may be taken against a person for any offence specified in sched. II to the regulations, may, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in those Acts, be commenced at any time not later than twelve months from the date of the commission of the offence. One of the matters contained in sched. II to the regulations is "an offence against any of these regulations," and, as a conspiracy to contravene the regulations has been made an offence, it is an offence against the regulations and can be prosecuted within twelve months.

The appellant company was prosecuted for an offence against the Defence (Sale of Food) Regulations, 1943. Regulation 4 of the Sale of Food Regulations, provides :

Part V of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, shall apply for the purpose of these regulations as if in the said part V any reference to those regulations included a reference to these regulations.

In other words, any provision of pt. V of the General Regulations (which contains regs. 90 and 93), is to be treated as applicable to the Sale of Food Regulations, and the Sale of Food Regulations are to be read as though pt. V had been expressly incorporated in them. From this it seems to follow that a conspiracy to contravene one of the Sale of Food Regulations is punishable under reg. 90 of the General Regulations, and, it being punishable under reg. 90 of these regulations, it is an offence against the regulations, and can be prosecuted within twelve months. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

LEWIS, J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Philip Conway, Thomas & Co. (for the appellants) ; Town Clerk, High Wycombe (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CHESTERTON R.D.C. v. RALPH THOMPSON, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), December 16, 1946,]

Public Health—Drainage—New building—Satisfactory provision for drainage of building—Drains of particular building—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 37 (1).

A Section 37 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936, provides: "Where plans of a building . . . are . . . deposited with a local authority, the authority shall reject the plans unless . . . the plans show that satisfactory provision will be made for the drainage of the building . . ."

B The words "drainage of the building" in the sub-section refer to the drains of the individual building or buildings the plans of which are deposited, and not to the system of drainage for that building or buildings and other buildings. Consequently, if the plans of a building show that satisfactory provision will be made for the drainage of that particular building, the local authority are not entitled to reject them on the ground that the sewer designed to take that drainage leads to an inefficient septic tank with the result that a nuisance may be caused by the failure of the tank adequately to deal with the sewage.

C [FOR THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT, 1936, s. 37, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 29, p. 352.]

CASE STATED by Cambridgeshire Quarter Sessions.

D The appellant local authority appealed from a decision of the quarter sessions that the plans of a building showed that satisfactory provision would be made for the drainage of the building and should not have been rejected by the local authority. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Garth Moore for the appellant council.

Ryder Richardson and Squibb for the respondent company (who had submitted the plans).

E LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by the court of quarter sessions for the county of Cambridge. The appellant council found that the plans of some buildings did not show satisfactory provision for the drainage of the buildings and rejected them under the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 37 (1). On appeal under s. 37 (2) of the Act to a court of summary jurisdiction that court held that the provision for drainage proposed to be provided ought to be accepted by the council as satisfactory, and an appeal by the council to quarter sessions was dismissed.

F The plans were deposited some years ago. Under s. 66 (1) of the Act, where the work to which plans relate has not been begun within three years of the deposit of the plans the local authority can recall their consent to the work, and that is what they did in this case. From the facts stated in the Case it appears that there is a private sewer down the roadway where these proposed houses were to be built, and that sewer, which is designed to take the drainage of the houses to be built in the road, leads to a septic tank or chamber which has an overflow into a stream. It seems to be a singularly inefficient septic tank, and I cannot help suspecting that the real question between the parties is how to make that septic tank satisfactory, as to which I express no opinion at all. The whole object of a septic tank is to treat the sewage in such a way that the effluent will be inoffensive and pure and cause no nuisance. Another septic tank, constructed for the drainage of neighbouring houses on the same estate, has turned out to be so ineffective that serious nuisance is caused by the discharge of foul, evil-smelling effluent. The local authority have refused to pass these plans admittedly on the ground that they think that, with the addition of a large number of houses, this sewer as it exists will either cause or increase a nuisance due to the fouling of the stream into which both these septic tanks drain. Therefore, they have rejected the plans as not making satisfactory provision for the drainage of the buildings, and the real question in this case is whether or not the expression in s. 37 (1), "satisfactory provision . . . for the drainage of the building," refers to the drains of the individual building or whether it refers to the system of drainage for the building or buildings.

By s. 37 (1) :

Where plans of a building . . . are . . . deposited with a local authority, the authority shall reject the plans unless . . . the plans show that satisfactory provision will be made for the drainage of the building . . .

It is further enacted by s. 37 (3) that :

A proposed drain shall not be deemed to be a satisfactory drain for the purposes of this section unless it is proposed to be made, as the local authority, or on appeal a court of summary jurisdiction, may require, either to connect with a sewer, or to discharge into a cesspool or into some other place . . .

I agree that the mere fact that the drain is shown to connect with a sewer, as it must if it is not to drain into a cesspool or other drain, does not mean of necessity that it is satisfactory. On the other hand, counsel for the respondent company contends that provided the plans show that the drain, i.e., the single private drain, to use a common expression, of the house, is a satisfactory drain, and both petty sessions and quarter sessions have held that this drain is, the local authority are not entitled to reject the plans under s. 37 (1) because something outside that drain itself, viz., the sewer, is not satisfactory. That is a matter on which my mind has fluctuated more than once in the course of the argument.

I think it is rather a difficult case. One thing I bear in mind, sitting in this court, as in other courts of appeal, is that one ought not to interfere with the decision of the court below unless one is satisfied that its decision was wrong, and I am not satisfied that the decisions of the court of quarter sessions and the court of petty sessions were wrong. I think the wording of s. 37 (1) indicates that all one ought to consider is the drainage of the particular building, and it is abundantly clear from other sections to which our attention has been called that, if the sewage from these various houses is not satisfactorily disposed of, if the sewer and the cesspool are not satisfactory, there is ample provision in the Public Health Act by which the local authority can see that that is remedied. I do not think, especially having regard to the words "of the building," that one can read the word "drainage" in s. 37 (1) as meaning a system of drainage. At one time I thought one might be able to, by reason of the interpretation in s. 343 :

"Sewer" does not include a drain as defined in this section but, save as aforesaid, includes all sewers and drains used for the drainage of buildings . . .

A drain is only for the drainage of one building. If there were any reference in s. 37 (1) to sewers, I think one would have been able then to read the word "drainage" as meaning a combination of sewers and drains, but I do not think there are any words in s. 37 (1) which make it admissible to read it in that way, and I should find it very difficult, if we did read it in that way, to reject the argument of counsel for the company that, if we are to read "drainage" as meaning a system of drainage, it would enable the local authority to reject plans on the ground that the proposed drains led into a sewer connected with sewage disposal works some miles away which, on account of the growth of the neighbourhood or some other reason, were not satisfactory for the disposal of the sewage which might be conveyed there. It is true that counsel for the appellant council argued that we ought to assume the local authority would act reasonably, but the argument of counsel for the company shows that, if one brings in considerations with regard to the sewers into which the drains are to drain, a variety of complications might arise which do not seem to be contemplated by the section.

I think, therefore, that quarter sessions were right in coming to the conclusion that the only matter they had to consider was the suitability of the particular drain which connects with the sewer and they were not concerned with what happens to the drainage of the houses once it passes into the sewer or whether the sewer itself is satisfactory. If the sewer or parts of the sewer are not satisfactory, there are other means by which it can be dealt with. The appeal should be dismissed.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree. The matter is not easy, the question being whether the words in s. 37 (1), "satisfactory provision will be made for the drainage of the building," include satisfactory provision for the drainage of that and other houses—what may be described as the system of drainage. I was very much impressed by the argument of counsel for the company that this

A section must be looked at on the assumption that (as will happen in a great many cases, if not in the majority of cases) the person who puts forward plans of a building, including the proposed drainage of that building, will be a different person from the person who owns the sewer with which that drainage will connect. It would be difficult for this court to hold that a person could not be said to have provided a satisfactory drainage of the house to which alone the plans related, because the owner of a sewer, with which he was not concerned and over which he had no control, had allowed that sewer to get into an improper state. As I read s. 37, the only requirement with regard to the connection between the private drain of a house and a sewer is to be found in sub-s. (3), which merely requires that the drains of the house must connect with a sewer or discharge into a cesspool or some other place. I also think it is worth remembering that by approving the plans of these houses the local authority are not debarring themselves from taking any steps they think right to prevent a nuisance. My judgment is confined to the decision that s. 37 is not the section under which the very laudable desires of the local authority should be carried out. I have no doubt that if and when approval is given to the plans of these houses on the ground that the drainage of each house is in itself a satisfactory drainage, the local authority will still retain the powers which they possess—and, in passing, I would refer to ss. 39 and 50 of the Act, and, perhaps to bye-laws made under s. 61 of the Act—to prevent anything in the nature of a nuisance or anything which they think undesirable. So I come back to the narrow construction of s. 37 itself, being of opinion that where plans of a building are deposited the authorities shall reject the plans unless (and, I take it, should not reject the plans if) the plans show that satisfactory provision will be made for the drainage of that building. I use the word “that” instead of the word “the”, which is to be found in the section. For these reasons I agree with the judgment of my Lord.

D LEWIS, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Waterhouse & Co., agents for Few & Kester, Cambridge (for appellant council); Blyth, Dutton & Co., agents for W. J. & J. G. Taylor, Newmarket (for respondent company).

E [Reported by C. St.J. Nicholson, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HENRY RICHARDSON, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS

F [KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkinson, J.), January 16, 22, 1947.]

Revenue—Excess profits tax—“Directors’ remuneration”—Secretary of company also a director—Salary received as secretary and fees as director—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 33 (5).

G C. was the secretary and a director of the appellant company. For the years ending Mar., 1943, and Mar., 1944, her salary as secretary was £450 and £750 respectively. As a director she also received fees for these two periods, together with certain bonuses. In assessing the company to excess profits tax for those years the Inland Revenue Commissioners refused to allow C.’s salary as secretary as an expense on the ground that it was caught by the meaning of “directors’ remuneration” in s. 33 (5) of the Finance Act, 1940.

H HELD: C.’s salary as a secretary was not part of her remuneration as a director; “directors’ remuneration” was remuneration received for services as a director; therefore C.’s salary as a secretary was allowable in the assessment of the company to excess profits tax.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. It is to be observed that there was no finding of fact in this case which justified the view that the secretary was “a manager of the company or otherwise concerned in the management of the trade or business” (within the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, r. 13 (b) (i)). In a case in which that rule applied, the decision here reported would not be in point (see per ATKINSON, J., in I.R.C. v. Rustproof Metal Window Co., Ltd., June 27, 1946 (202 L.T.Jo. 118)).

AS TO INTERPRETATION OF TAXING ACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 29 to 31, paras. 46-51; FOR EXCESS PROFITS TAX, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., 1946 Supplement, p. 1310, para. 1041A; and FOR the FINANCE ACT, 1940, s. 33 (5), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 33, p. 186.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, [1921] 2 K.B. 403; 90 L.J.K.B. 461; 125 L.T. 108; 12 Tax Cases 258.

APPEAL from the Special Commissioners of Income Tax. The relevant facts as found in the Case Stated by the Commissioners are set out in the judgment.

Donovan, K.C., and Victor Coen for the company.

D. L. Jenkins, K.C., and Reginald P. Hills for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

ATKINSON, J.: The question in this appeal turns on the meaning of the expression "directors' remuneration" in s. 33 (5) of the Finance Act, 1940. In the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, it is provided in sched. VII, para. 10:

(1) In the case of a trade or business carried on in any accounting period which constitutes or includes a chargeable accounting period by a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein—(a) if the standard profits of the company are computed by reference to the profits of a standard period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of directors' remuneration in excess of the amount paid for directors' remuneration in respect of the standard period . . . (2) In this paragraph the expression "directors' remuneration" does not include the remuneration of any director who is required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company in a managerial or technical capacity, and is not the beneficial owner of, or able . . . to control, more than five per cent of the ordinary share capital of the company.

That section was displaced by s. 33 of the Finance Act, 1940, and the language somewhat varied. By s. 33 (5) it is provided:

The following paragraph shall be substituted for para. 10 of part I of the said sched. VII . . . 10 (1) In the case of a trade or business carried on, in any accounting period . . . (a) in computing the profits for that accounting period; and (b) if the standard profits of the trade or business are computed by reference to the profits of a standard period . . . no deduction shall be made in respect of directors' remuneration.

Then came the same proviso as that in para. 10 (2) of sched. VII to the 1939 Act regarding the meaning of "directors' remuneration." I read the earlier provision because of the presence of the words "remuneration in excess of the amount paid for directors' remuneration," which I think are worth observing. The difference between the two enactments is that under sched. VII, para 10 (2), any excess over what had been paid in the standard period was disallowed as an expense, whereas in the 1940 Act the whole of the remuneration was left out of both computations. The definition of "director" is to be found in the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, s. 22 (c), which provides that the expression "director" has the same meaning as it has "for the purposes of sched. IV to the Finance Act, 1937." Sched. IV, para. 13 (b), to the Act of 1937 provides:

The expression "director" has the same meaning as in s. 144 of the Companies Act, 1929, except that it includes any person who—(i) is a manager of the company or otherwise concerned in the management of the trade or business; and (ii) is remunerated out of the funds of the trade or business; and (iii) is the beneficial owner of not less than 20 per cent. of the ordinary share capital of the company.

The company concerned was incorporated on June 24, 1918, to acquire the business of printer, stationer and binder carried on by a Mrs. Richardson. The Case states:

The present issued share capital is £3,100 divided into 1,000 6 per cent. cumulative preference shares of £1 each fully paid, and 2,100 ordinary shares of £1 each fully paid . . . Since the formation of the company Mrs. Winifred Cozens has been a director of the company and since 1927, following the death of Mrs. Richardson, has been the chairman of the directors.

Mrs. Cozens is a daughter of Mrs. Richardson and at all material times from the formation of the company—that is, probably since her mother's death—she has been the holder of all the issued preference shares, and of 1,450 ordinary shares of the company. There is, therefore, no question about the company being a director-controlled company. The Case proceeds:

Since the formation of the company, Mrs. Cozens has been the secretary and as such she has admittedly carried out the usual duties of the secretary of a limited company. Her duties as secretary were separate from her duties as director and chairman of the board.

Her salary in 1918 was fixed by art. 33 at £10 per annum. Later, by resolution, it was raised to £15 per annum. During the years 1927 to 1942 and 1944 and 1945, her salary has been raised very substantially. From Apr. 1, 1927, to Mar., 1942, it was £250. For the year ending Mar. 31, 1943, her salary was £450, and for the year ending Mar. 31, 1944, her salary was £750. I think the directors' fees were something like £250 a year, and they had bonuses allotted to them about which there is no question.

The only question which arises is whether, in assessing the business for excess profits tax for the years ending Mar., 1943 and 1944, the secretary's salary has to be disallowed as an expense. The only ground on which it could be disallowed in toto would be that the salary was "directors' remuneration."

It is contended for the Crown that "directors' remuneration" means all remuneration paid to a director in whatever capacity the money may be earned. The commissioners acceded to that argument. The contention of the company, on the other hand, is that "directors' remuneration" means what it says—the remuneration paid to a director for services rendered as a director. Counsel for the Crown argued that the intendment of these provisions was to put a company in the same position as a partnership. There is a very strong argument against that. In the Finance Act, 1916, s. 49 (1), there was a provision dealing with directors' remuneration, and the last few lines of the sub-section are as follows :

... for the purpose of the determination and computation of profits under pt. I of sched. IV to the principal Act, a company [may be treated] as if it were a firm and not a company . . . and the directors or any of them as if they were partners in the firm.

If it had been the intention of Parliament in framing the Finance Acts during the recent war to bring about that situation, it could have adopted the language of the Act of 1916. The fact that Parliament has deliberately refrained from using the same clear language as that used in the Act of 1916 seems to me to make it difficult to say that the court ought to interpret the new language as meaning the same thing.

There is another difficulty about it. In Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1), ROWLATT, J., said (12 Tax Cases 358, at p. 366) :

Now, of course, it is said and urged by Sir William Finlay that in a taxing Act clear words are necessary to tax the subject. But it is often endeavoured to give to that maxim a wide and fanciful construction. It does not mean that words are to be unduly restricted against the Crown or that there is to be any discrimination against the Crown in such Acts. It means this, I think, it means that in taxation you have to look simply at what is clearly said. There is no room for any intendment ; there is no equity about a tax ; there is no presumption as to a tax ; you read nothing in ; you imply nothing, but you look fairly at what is said and at what is said clearly and that is the tax.

There has never been any quarrel with that as an accurate statement of the law. "There is no room for any intendment," ROWLATT, J., said, "and I find it difficult to yield to the argument that I must interpret the statutory provisions with which we are concerned here on the basis of an intention to equate companies to partnerships."

There is one other argument of counsel for the Crown which I should mention. If one gives the expression "directors' remuneration" its strict meaning—he calls it its narrow meaning—that is, the remuneration paid to a director as such—he says you are opening the door to an indirect raising of directors' remuneration and so to a cutting down of the fair taxation companies ought to pay, but I cannot think that there is anything in that point because there are three provisions at least which enable the revenue to deal with matters of that kind. Section 32 of the Act of 1940, provides :

(1) In computing the profits of any trade or business for any accounting period, no deduction shall be allowed in respect of expenses in excess of the amount which the commissioners consider reasonable and necessary, having regard to the requirements of the trade or business, and, in the case of directors' fees, or other payments for services, to the actual services rendered by the person concerned.

If the commissioners thought that the secretary's salary was unreasonable, there is a section which enables the commissioners to deal with it. Then there is para. 9 of sched. VII to the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 :

No deduction shall be made in respect of any transaction or operation of any nature if and so far as it appears that the transaction or operation has artificially reduced or would artificially reduce the profits.

If a director were suddenly appointed secretary during the war and given a salary as secretary, but was doing no more than he had done before, there is that section for the revenue to resort to. Then s. 35 of the Finance Act, 1941, gives the Crown a power of revision. So it is difficult to urge that there is any necessity, from the Crown's point of view, for an extended definition of "directors' remuneration."

I was struck by the argument of counsel for the company that you might just as well speak of the director's remuneration which Mrs. Cozens got as secretary's remuneration. She was the secretary, and she was a director. You might just as well call everything she received "secretary's remuneration" as "director's remuneration." If she ceased to be a director, the post of secretary would remain, and her salary as secretary would remain. Again, I feel great difficulty in seeing why what may equally be regarded as secretary's remuneration should be all regarded as "director's remuneration."

The matter, I think, would have been unarguable if it were not for the proviso, and counsel for the Crown really based his argument on that. He said that the words about not including in the definition of "directors' remuneration" the remuneration of a director who is required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company destroyed the narrow interpretation. The guiding rule in interpreting statutes is to interpret the language used giving it its ordinary meaning unless there is some context which indicates that the ordinary meaning is to be departed from. Directors are of two kinds. There are directors who merely attend directors' meetings and get directors' fees, but there are also working directors who give all their time to carrying on the business of the company. A managing director is a good illustration. I suppose that in most private companies and in many small companies the directors are working directors. The articles may fix their remuneration, or it may be fixed by resolution from time to time.

Let me give a simple illustration of what I mean. A, B and C are carrying on business in partnership. A is the senior partner and is getting half the profits. B is the next partner, and he gets two-sixths of the profits, and C, the junior partner, gets one-sixth. They determine to turn the company into a limited company. They get further capital from their friends and relations and others. All three are to be directors and are to continue giving their time to the service of the company. There is an article saying that A's remuneration shall be £1,500 a year, B's remuneration £1,000 a year, and C's remuneration £500 a year. That is a typical example of the remuneration of a director who is required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company. The remuneration of such a director can be debited as an expense if he does not control more than 5 per cent. of the capital. That is what that part of the section is aimed at. So far from extending the previous provision, it is taking out of it the case of working directors who do not own or control more than 5 per cent. of the capital.

Let me take another example, the case of a hotel company with half a dozen hotels. A is the manager of one of the hotels with a working agreement for 10 years at £1,000 a year. The board make him a director, and he goes on the board with a director's fee of £150 a year, but continues as manager of his particular hotel. The Crown would say that his director's remuneration is £1,150, and that the £1,000, which had always been allowed as an expense, must no longer be allowed as an expense. To my mind, that is, I will not say an absurdity, but a wholly impossible argument. The £1,000 remains payable to him under his 10 years' agreement. If, in the following year, he ceased to be a director, his £1,000 would still remain. In no sense is that "director's remuneration"; it is his remuneration for managing the hotel. See how unfairly the contention might operate (and I gather would operate in this case) by taking this example. Suppose, before the war, when the secretary's salary was low, the secretary had the assistance of a couple of girl shorthand typists, and, it may be, an assistant secretary, so that the secretary really had not very much to do. The salaries of the girls and the assistant are all deducted as expenses in the standard period. The war comes, and they are called up in one capacity or another. The secretary cannot get any help, and has to do all the work which previously had been done in the main by these various assistants. The board might fairly say: "You must be remunerated for this," and raise her remuneration. Then the Crown can step in, according to the argument here, and say: "In the standard period these expenses clearly would be debited thereby lowering the standard, but we object to the salary which the secretary is now getting for doing the work these three people did before the war, and we say that must be deemed to be 'director's remuneration.'" It would be a grossly unfair result if that were the interpretation of the section. In my judgment, "director's remuneration" means what it says—

A the remuneration of a director for services rendered as a director, and therefore, the appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Goulden, Mesquita & Co. (for the company); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for Commissioners of Inland Revenue).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re C. W. DIXON, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.) January 20, 1947.]

Companies—Dissolution—Avoidance—Form of order—Effect on property vested before date of order—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), ss. 294 (1), 296.

On an application under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 294 (1), for a declaration that the dissolution of a company was void:—

HELD: the form of the order, following the words of the subsection, should be to declare "the dissolution to have been void," and its effect was that the dissolution was void ab initio, all the consequences under the statute or otherwise which followed from it being arrested and avoided, with the result that any property which was purported to have been vested in the Crown under s. 296 never so vested. No order for the re-vesting of such property in the company was necessary.

[AS TO POWER TO DECLARE VOID THE DISSOLUTION OF A COMPANY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 5, pp. 755, 756, para. 1282; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, p. 1034, Nos. 7174-7177.]

Case referred to:

(1) Morris v. Harris, [1927] A.C. 252; 96 L.J.Ch. 253; 136 L.T. 587; [1927] B. & C. R. 65, H.L.; Digest Supp.

MOTION, on behalf of the liquidator and contributories, for an order under Companies Act, 1929, s. 294, declaring that the dissolution of C. W. Dixon, Ltd., was void.

The company was incorporated as a private company under the Companies Acts, 1908-1917. C. W. Dixon was the principal shareholder, the other shareholders being his daughters and his manager. The chief assets of the company consisted of freehold and leasehold property. On Aug. 8, 1940, C. W. Dixon died. By his will he expressed the desire that the company should be wound up and that his trustees and the remaining shareholders should take over the freehold and leasehold properties in satisfaction of their interest therein. Accordingly, on June 12, 1941, a special resolution was passed at an extraordinary meeting to wind up the company voluntarily and a liquidator was appointed. Various properties were valued, and it was agreed how they were to be divided between the shareholders. As from 1943 the shareholders had taken the rents and profits from the properties allocated to them, but no conveyances or assignments vesting the property in the shareholders had ever been made. On Jan. 28, 1945, the company was finally dissolved under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 236 (4). Sometime towards the end of 1946 one of the original shareholders wished to sell the property which had been allocated to him, and conveyancing difficulties arose as to how the property which still remained in the name of the company should be made over. It was thus necessary that the dissolution of the company should be annulled, and the court was moved to make an order that the dissolution of the company was void and an order as to vesting of the property.

Oliver Smith for the applicants (the liquidator and contributories).

H. O. Danckwerts for the respondent (the Attorney-General).

VAISEY, J. : This motion asks that a company called C. W. Dixon, Ltd., should be revived. At present it is not in existence, owing to the fact that the voluntary liquidation in which it was placed on July 12, 1941, resulted in a final dissolution of the company on Jan. 28, 1945, under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 236 (4). It now appears that there was an arrangement that certain freehold and leasehold properties should be divided among or allocated to the shareholders or some of them in specie, and by inadvertence that allocation was never carried out, with the result that the company disappeared and ceased to exist, leaving these properties to go where the law indicated in the circumstances they should go. It is now desired to restore the company's existence under s. 294 (1) of the Companies Act, 1929, which provides :

Where a company has been dissolved, the court may at any time within two years of the date of the dissolution, on an application being made for the purpose by the liquidator of the company or by any other person who appears to the court to be interested, make an order, upon such terms as the court thinks fit, declaring the dissolution to have been void, and thereupon such proceedings may be taken as might have been taken if the company had not been dissolved.

The form of that section is in somewhat striking contrast to s. 295 (6) which envisages the case of the resuscitation of a company which has not been dissolved but has been struck off the register, and says that the court on an application made by the appropriate person

. . . may, if satisfied that the company was at the time of striking off carrying on business . . . order the name of the company to be restored to the register, and upon an office copy of the order being delivered to the registrar for registration, the company shall be deemed to have continued in existence as if its name had not been struck off, . . .

The differences between those two sections were elaborately considered by the House of Lords in Morris v. Harris (1). The headnote to that case ([1927] A.C. 252) is :

An order of the court made under [the section in the Companies Act, 1908, corresponding to s. 294 of the Act of 1929] declaring the dissolution of a company to have been void does not affect the validity of proceedings taken during the interval between the dissolution and its avoidance.

That was the conclusion reached by the majority of the House of Lords consisting of Viscount Dunedin, Lord Sumner and Lord Blanesburgh, (Lord Shaw of Dunfermline and Lord Wrenbury dissenting). The facts are very different, and, perhaps, the case itself is not a very good guide, but there is a passage in the speech of Lord Blanesburgh ([1927] A.C. 252, at p. 268), which seems to be of some assistance to me on this occasion. Lord Blanesburgh, after quoting the appropriate words from the section, says :

It is true that a declaratory order under the section unqualified in terms does, and it was in my judgment essential, if many difficulties which readily occur to the mind were to be avoided, that such an order should have the effect of restoring to the revived company its corporate existence as from the very moment of the dissolution thereby declared "to have been void." But the expository words which follow carefully and, as I think, advisedly refrain from adding that such an order is to have the effect of restoring to the company from the same moment, not its corporate existence only, but its corporate activity also. On the contrary, these expository words import, as I think, that it is only after the order has been made—it is "thereupon" but not before—that any active consequences are to ensue.

His Lordship considered the effect of that on the facts of that particular case and used this rather illuminating metaphor ([1927] A.C. 252, at p. 269) :

The company is restored to life as from the moment of dissolution but, continuing a convenient metaphor, it remains buried, unconscious, asleep and powerless until the order is made which declares the dissolution to have been void. Then, and only then, is the company restored to activity.

The trouble which is contemplated as possibly arising in the present case is due to the terms of s. 296 of the 1929 Act which says :

Where a company is dissolved, all property and rights whatsoever vested in or held on trust for the company immediately before its dissolution (including leasehold property but not including property held by the company on trust for any other person) shall, subject and without prejudice to any order which may at any time be made by the court under the two last foregoing sections of this Act [i.e., ss. 294 and 295 (6)], be deemed to be bona vacantia and shall accordingly belong to the Crown, or to the Duchy of Lancaster or to the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, as the case may be

I am informed by counsel for the Attorney-General that in order to avoid any possible suggestion being made that the effect of an order under s. 294 is not sufficient to re-vest for all purposes any property which came within the ambit of s. 296, at any rate, in one case a vesting order as to such property in favour of the restored, revived or resuscitated company was made, but I understand the making of such a vesting order is by no means frequent, and although it may have been done in one case ex abundanti cautela I think it would not be right for me to make such an order as though it were the necessary or common thing to do.

Therefore, I propose to indicate shortly what, in my view, is the effect of s. 294 on any property which, but for my order, might have been affected, or which, until my order takes effect, has been affected by s. 296. In my judgment, I must read the words that the court had power to declare "the dissolution to have been void" as enacting that the court is given power effectively to declare the dissolution to have been void. Anyone can declare a dissolution to be void as a mere matter of utterance, but when the court is given power to declare that something has happened, I apprehend that the legislature must inevitably intend to give the court power to make a declaration which is effective. In other words, if the court makes a declaration to the effect that the dissolution is void, the declaration is not that the dissolution is void at the date of the order, or that it is to be deemed to be so void, or that it is to become void, or anything of that kind. The declaration is that the dissolution was void at the time when the company was supposed to have been dissolved. In my judgment, if I declare, as I intend to declare, the dissolution of C. W. Dixon, Ltd., which was effected on Jan. 28, 1945, to have been void, the result is that it was void ab initio, and all the consequences under the statute or otherwise which flow from that arrest themselves and are avoided.

I propose, therefore, following the words of the section, to make an order declaring the dissolution to have been void, and, in doing so, I express the view that any property which has vested in the Crown under s. 296, either in fact or in so far as it must be assumed to have vested, did not so vest, the vesting being avoided by my order. I think the vesting is "subject and without prejudice to any order which may at any time be made by the court" (see s. 296), and I express the view that, by making the order in the terms which I do, nothing remains in the Crown, if anything was ever vested in the Crown or in the Royal Duchies, in the shape of interest in this freehold or leasehold property. The difference of expression between s. 294 and s. 295 (6) is curious, and though for some purposes, no doubt difference in language may be significant, it is not so for this purpose. In my view, the avoidance of dissolution has the effect which one would have expected, and I propose, therefore, to give the applicants no more than an order following the precise words of the relevant section. There will be an order to tax the costs of the Attorney-General, and those costs will have to be paid by the applicants.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Grange & Wintringham, Grimsby (for the liquidator and contributories) ; Treasury Solicitor (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

CALVERT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WAINWRIGHT

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkinson, J.), January 15, 1947.]

Income Tax—Assessment—Tips given to taxicab-driver—Income Tax Act, 1918, (c. 40,) sched. E, r. 1.

Sched. E., r. 1, to the Income Tax Act, 1918, provides: "Tax . . . shall be annually charged on every person having or exercising an office or employment of profit . . . in respect of all salaries, fees, wages, perquisites or profits whatsoever therefrom . . ."

W. was employed by R. T., Ltd., as a taxicab driver. He received a definite wage but "tips" given to him by passengers were no part of the bargain between himself and the company. In the course of his daily journeys he received a number of tips.

HELD: such tips were assessable to tax under sched. E., r. 1, since these arose out of his employment as a taxicab driver and were given as a reward for services.

[As to TAXATION UNDER SCHED. E, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 211-217, paras. 429-438; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 85-88, Nos. 490-507.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Strong (1878), 1 Tax Cases 207; 15 Sc.L.R. 704; 28 Digest 85, h.
- (2) Herbert v. McQuade (1902), 4 Tax Cases 489; [1902] 2 K.B. 631; 71 L.J.K.B. 884; 87 L.T. 349; 66 J.P. 692; 28 Digest 86, 492.
- (3) Blakiston v. Cooper, [1909] A.C. 104; 78 L.J.K.B. 135; 100 L.T. 51; sub nom. Cooper v. Blakiston, 5 Tax Cases 347; 28 Digest 86, 495.
- (4) Seymour v. Reed, [1927] A.C. 554; 96 L.J.K.B. 839; 137 L.T. 312; 11 Tax Cas. 625; revsg., S.C. sub nom. Reed v. Seymour, [1927] 1 K.B. 90; Digest Supp.
- (5) Beynon v. Thorpe (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 705; sub nom. Beynon v. Thorpe, 14 Tax Cas. 1; Digest Supp.
- (6) Henry v. Foster (A.), Henry v. Foster (J.), Hunter v. Dewhurst (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 605; sub nom. Dewhurst v. Hunter, 146 L.T. 510; Digest Supp.

APPEAL under s. 149 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, from the decision of the Commissioners of Income Tax for the division of Upper Strathforth and Tickhill, Yorkshire, dated Jan. 4, 1946. The facts appear in the headnote and the judgment of ATKINSON, J.

D. L. Jenkins, K.C. and Reginald P. Hills for the Inspector of Taxes.
J. Senter for the taxpayer.

ATKINSON, J.: This case raises the comparatively simple point: Are tips which are received by taxicab-drivers in the ordinary way assessable to income tax? The commissioners state that the taxpayer appealed against an assessment of £75 made on him for the year beginning April 6, 1944, under the provisions of sched. E to the Income Tax Act, 1918, in respect of tips received by him from passengers in his capacity as a taxicab-driver in the employment of Reuben Thompson, Ltd. There was no suggestion that his position differed from that of any other taxicab-driver. It was particularly stated that the taxi-men received a definite wage "and that tips were no part of the bargain." The commissioners discharged the assessment, they being of opinion that the tips given to the taxpayer were not profits or gains of his employment, but were gifts given to him personally, and were, therefore, not assessable. In my view, the finding by the commissioners that the tips were gifts given to the taxpayer personally, and, therefore, not assessable, they showed that they had completely misunderstood the law. The principle which the authorities establish, if I understand them correctly, is this. Tips received by a man as a reward for services rendered, although voluntary gifts made by people other than his employers, are assessable to tax as part of the profits arising out of his employment if they are given in the ordinary way as a reward for services, but, on the other hand, personal gifts, which means gifts to a man on personal grounds irrespective of and without regard to the question whether services have been rendered or not, are not assessable. The commissioners have obviously misunderstood what is meant by a personal gift. They have not found that the tips were personal gifts, but they have found that they were gifts given to the taxpayer personally, which is a totally different thing. Of course, every tip is given to a man personally, but that merely means that it is given to him for his own benefit and not for that of his employers. Having considered the authorities, the commissioners thought that the words "personal gift" meant something given to a man personally, whereas it is clear from the cases that what is meant by "personal gift" is a condensation of the full sentence, "gift given on personal grounds other than for services rendered." On the evidence set out in the Case, it is impossible, as a matter of law, to come to a decision other than that these tips were assessable to income tax.

A I will just run through the cases. In Re Strong (1) the headnote is :

A gift of money, raised by voluntary subscription, and made annually to a minister of religion by his congregation is assessable.

The matter was put, in the judgment in these words (1 Tax Cas. at p. 208) :

B It is with some reluctance that I have formed the opinion that the commissioners are wrong, and that the appellant is liable for income tax on the £100 mentioned in the Case. It is true that it is a voluntary contribution by the parishioners, one which they are under no obligation to make, and which they may withdraw at any time. But still it is a payment made to the appellant as their clergyman, and is received by the appellant in respect of the discharge of his duties of that office, which is one of public employment in the sense of the statutes.

C The point there was : Was the money received in respect of the discharge of the duties of his office ? The mere fact that a payment is voluntary does not prevent the payment being assessable.

The next case is Herbert v. McQuade (2) in which it was decided that grants made in augmentation of the income of a benefice were assessable. COLLINS, M.R., said (4 Tax Cas., 489 at p. 493) :

D Now, undoubtedly those facts give rise to very nice considerations ; and the question is : which side of the line does this particular augmentation fall ? If, as was contended by the incumbent, it was in fact a gift personal to himself, why then I do not think it would come within the provisions of the Income Tax [Act]. If, on the other hand, it does accrue to him by reason of his office as incumbent, then I do not think it would be disputed by the incumbent that income tax is payable.

The sums accrued to him by reason of his employment.

E Cooper v. Blakiston (3) was the Easter offerings case. There the principle was stated by LORD LOREBURN, L.C., thus (5 Tax Cas., 347 at p. 355) :

F In my opinion, where a sum of money is given to an incumbent substantially in respect of his services as incumbent, it accrues to him by reason of his office. Here the sum of money was given in respect of those services. Had it been a gift of an exceptional kind, such as a testimonial, or a contribution for a specific purpose, or to provide for a holiday, or a subscription peculiarly due to the personal qualities of the particular clergyman, it might not have been a voluntary payment for services, but a mere present.

G To my mind, that puts the principle very clearly. The distinction would apply to a taxicab-driver in this way, if I may give an illustration. Some people have the same taxicab every morning to take them to their work. The cab calls in the morning as a matter of course and takes the passenger home at night. The ordinary tip given, in those circumstances, would be something which would be assessable, but supposing at Christmas, or when the driver is going for a holiday, the hirer says : " You have been very attentive to me, here is a £10 note," he would be making a present, and I should say it would not be assessable since it has been given to the man because of his qualities, his faithfulness, and the way he has studied the passenger's interests and has always been available. In those circumstances, it would be a payment of an exceptional kind, but a tip given in the ordinary way as remuneration for services rendered is well within the principles there defined.

H One comes a little more closely to tips in Reed v. Seymour (4). It was the case of a benefit match, and there the House of Lords took the view, differing from the majority in the Court of Appeal, that the proceeds of the match were not assessable. VISCOUNT CAVE said (11 Tax Cas. 625 at p. 646) :

... it must now (I think) be taken as settled that they [the taxable profits] include all payments made to the holder of an office or employment as such—that is to say, by way of remuneration for his services, even though such payments may be voluntary—but that they do not include a mere gift or present (such as a testimonial) which is made to him on personal grounds and not by way of payment for his services.

I cannot conceive of any more apt words than "by way of remuneration for his services, even though such payments may be voluntary." Could one describe the payments made to a taxi-driver in more apt language than that? I doubt it.

In Beynon v. Thorpe (5), ROWLATT, J., dealt with the case of a pension. In that case the taxpayer had resigned his position as managing director of a limited company on account of ill health and had been voted a pension. I need not trouble with the facts, but I shall go to the following passage (14 Tax Cases 1 at p. 13):

The best known instances are of course the offerings made voluntarily to ministers of religion which give rise to many cases, that is they become profits or gains of an office, because although they are voluntary it is by the office which is the source of the minister's taxable income that he has been given them. So also voluntary payments made to persons exercising employments; gratuities to servants and so on, are, undoubtedly, because they are servants—I do not mean to say from master to servants but to people like waiters, to put a concrete example—gratuities to people of that kind, which they get because they are carrying on a particular employment; although they have no right to ask for them, when they do get them they get them as profits or gains in their employment and therefore they are profits or gains which are taxable. But a mere gift is not a profit or gain at all.

Again, if that is the law, there can be no doubt about this case.

The last case cited was Hunter v. Dewhurst (6), in which LORD ATKIN referred to tips in this way (16 Tax Cases, 605 at p. 644):

But the circumstances in which the first payment was made seem to me to negative the proposition that the payment was received "from" the office. Rule 1 (of sched. E) appears to me to indicate emoluments either received from the employer or from some third party (such as tips, permitted commission and the like) as a reward for services rendered in the course of the employment.

In my opinion, the matter is really beyond argument. Applying the principle laid down to the tips of taxicab drivers, I cannot see that there can be any doubt whatever but that these tips are assessable, and I so hold.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Inspector of Taxes); Pattinson & Brewer (for the taxpayer).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SPENCER TRADING CO., LTD. v. DEVON (FIXOL AND STICKPHAST, LTD., THIRD PARTIES)

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), January 15, 1947.]

Sale of Goods—Implied condition—Fitness—"Goods of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply"—Goods within general description, though taking special form or designed for special use—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 14 (1).

In 1944 manufacturers and suppliers of adhesive substances and gums supplied to the defendant on a special order an adhesive substance, of which the basis was a gum resin and which was invoiced as a fly gum, for making fly papers for catching flies. They had not previously (or only once a long time before) supplied a similar commodity. In 1945 the defendant ordered a further supply for the same purpose from the manufacturers, who this time used synthetic raw materials in place of the natural materials previously employed, as a consequence of which the fly gum was unsatisfactory for its purpose. The manufacturers were joined as third parties to an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant in which damages were claimed for supplying goods not reasonably fit for the purpose for which they were ordered under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 14 (1).

HELD: goods are "of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply" if they fall within the general description of the goods supplied by the seller, although in a particular instance they take a special form or are designed for a special use, and, therefore, the manufacturers were liable to the defendant under s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, for the breach of an implied condition that the goods were fit for the purpose for which they were required.

[AS TO IMPLIED TERMS AS TO QUALITY OR FITNESS FOR PARTICULAR PURPOSE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 63-66, paras. 72-73; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 440-446, 448-449, Nos. 693-746, 763, 764.

FOR THE SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1893, s. 14 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 17, p. 618.]

A Cases referred to :

- (1) Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 1 R. 585.
- (2) Hall v. Burke (1886), 3 T.L.R. 165, C.A.; 39 Digest 442, 709.
- (3) Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. v. Manganese Bronze & Brass Co., Ltd., [1934] A.C. 402; 103 L.J.K.B. 289; 151 L.T. 142; 50 T.L.R. 350; 39 Com. Cas., 194 H.L.; Digest Supp.

B

- (4) Manchester Liners, Ltd. v. Rea, Ltd., [1922] 2 A.C. 74; 91 L.J.K.B. 504; 127 L.T. 405; 38 T.L.R. 526; 66 Sol. Jo. 421; 27 Com. Cas. 274, H.L.; 39 Digest 445, 744.

C

- (5) Jones v. Just (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 197; 9 B. & S. 141; 37 L.J.Q.B. 89; 18 L.T. 208; 16 W.R. 643; 39 Digest 434, 632.
- (6) Canada Atlantic Grain Export Co. (Inc.) v. Eilers (1929), 35 Com. Cas. 90; Digest Supp.

- (7) Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills, Ltd., [1936] A.C. 85; 105 L.J.P.C. 6; 154 L.T. 18; 52 T.L.R. 38; 79 Sol. Jo. 815, P.C.; Digest Supp.

- (8) Thornett & Fehr v. Beers & Son, [1919] 1 K.B. 486; 88 L.J.K.B. 684; 120 L.T. 570; 24 Com. Cas. 133; 39 Digest 451, 783.

- (9) Varley v. Whipp, [1900] 1 Q.B. 513; 69 L.J.Q.B. 333; 48 W.R. 363; 44 Sol. Jo. 263; 39 Digest 432, 616.

- (10) Bristol Tramways, Etc., Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., [1910] 2 K.B. 831; 79 L.J.K.B. 1107; 103 L.T. 443; 26 T.L.R. 629, C.A.; 39 Digest 445, 743.

- (11) Baldry v. Marshall, [1925] 1 K.B. 260; 94 L.J.K.B. 208; 132 L.T. 326, C.A.; 39 Digest 448, 762.

D

- (12) Harris & Sons v. Plymouth Varnish & Colour Co., Ltd. (1933), 49 T.L.R. 521; 38 Com. Cas. 316; Digest Supp.

ACTION for damages for breach of implied condition in a contract that goods sold for a purpose disclosed to the supplier should be reasonably fit for such purpose under s. 14 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. The defendant satisfied the claim of the plaintiff and the claim by the defendant against the third parties now came for trial. The facts are set out in the judgment.

E

C. L. Hawser for the defendant.

H. H. Maddocks for the third parties.

HILBERY, J. : The defendant describes himself as a manufacturing chemist. In 1944, among other household things which would normally be of every day use, but which could not then be procured anywhere, were fly papers. The defendant was minded, if he could get the necessary material, to make some and put them on the market. He did not know where to procure a suitable substance to put on the paper to make it sticky and at the same time attractive to flies until he discovered the existence of the third parties, Fixol & Stickphast, Ltd., who hold themselves out, according to the heading on their notepaper, as being persons who supply gold glues, gum, size, dextrine and vegetable adhesives in liquid and powder form. He got into communication with the managing director, Mr. Burton, whom he told expressly that he wanted a sticky material, a gum, suitable for putting on fly papers for catching flies. There is a conflict between them in the matter of recollection whether at that time Mr. Burton said he had never provided such a thing before or whether he said he had provided such a thing, but it was only once before and a long time ago. At any rate, he made it clear at that stage that it was an example of the sort of goods that he supplied and which he had been in the habit of making, that is, it was not outside the general course of the company's business, but it was something new as a particular transaction. He held himself out to supply gum, and it was gum for fly papers that the defendant expressly asked for. Mr. Burton sent him a sample, and the defendant tested it and ordered a quantity of gum on the strength of the sample. The article was invoiced to him as fly gum, it proved satisfactory, and the defendant sold his papers made with it satisfactorily. So the defendant paid for his consignments of the gum and the business was satisfactorily concluded on both sides.

H

In 1945 the defendant went to Mr. Burton with an enquiry for a further supply. Here there comes a conflict of evidence again. Mr. Burton says that he told the defendant that he could not give him the same thing as the previous year, and the defendant denies that. I am sure that neither the defendant nor Mr. Burton would say anything which he did not believe to be true, but, having regard to certain other matters, I think that the defendant is probably right, and I am prepared to hold that his is the right version, namely, that the first mention of materials not being the same came after he had had some complaints. No sample was sent, and, if Mr. Burton had had the least fear that the fly gum made up with the new raw materials was likely to be, or might be, ineffective as a fly gum, I am certain he would have sent a fresh sample. When the matter of making up a fly gum was, so far as Mr. Burton was concerned, experimental in March, 1944, he sent for testing what he made up as an experiment. When, in 1945, with the aid of his chemists, he had to substitute, and believed he had satisfactorily substituted, certain other raw materials, synthetic as opposed to natural materials, he believed that he had an article which would be every bit as effective for its purpose, and there was, therefore, no need to send any fresh sample. That is, in my view, why no fresh sample was sent.

In those circumstances, the defendant ordered his 1945 supply under the description of fly gum, a description which had been given in 1944 by the third parties to the article. He ordered it as fly gum and in circumstances, which, I think, clearly show that he was relying on the third parties to make up a substance under the description of fly gum which was suitable for catching flies on fly papers, the purpose which he had made known to Mr. Burton.

The next question is: Were the goods of a description which it was in the course of the business of the third parties' business to supply? They hold themselves out as persons who traffic in adhesive substances and gums. This was a transaction in a sticky substance, and a sticky substance the basis of which was a gum, resin, and, although it is true that the third parties were not making up gum for this particular purpose every day in the course of their business, it was none the less an article of a description which it was in the course of their business to supply. The words of the section are important. To attract an implied condition as to their fitness, the goods must be "of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply," but goods can belong to that description, although they take a special form in a particular instance. The form may be particular but none the less the goods can belong to the description. In my view, this was an adhesive substance and a gum substance, and prima facie it fell into the category of goods which it was in the course of the third parties' business to supply. Furthermore by 1945 the third parties had already a season's experience in dealing in this article, and it was already developing as a trade with them. The defendant was not the only customer. They had two other customers to whom they were supplying fly gum for fly paper making and fly catching. In the circumstances, I think the defendant succeeds against the third parties.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors: Manches & Co. (for the defendant); Slaughter & May (for the third parties).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SALES AFFILIATES, LTD. v. LE JEAN, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Evershed, J.), January 22, 23, 24, 28, 1947.]

Trade Marks and Trade Names—Passing off—Knowingly purporting to give named process using other than branded articles—Misrepresentation analogous to passing off.

A The plaintiffs were the owners of registered trade marks relating to “Jamal” lotion and “Vapet” sachets, both materials used in waving hair. Both lotion and sachets contained a secret chemical composition and the distinctive feature of the plaintiffs’ process lay in the composition of the lotion and the Vapet. The articles were marketed by the plaintiffs, but they were manufactured by a firm who made them exclusively for the plaintiffs and treated the composition as secret. The defendants were hairdressers who professed to do Jamal hairwaving and exhibited at their establishment a showcard of the plaintiffs’ on which was depicted a photograph of a young woman with a style of hair wave on which the word “Jamal” was clearly printed. On two occasions when customers asked for a Jamal hair wave, the defendants used sachets other than the plaintiffs’ Vapets. In the hairdressing trade “Jamal hair waving” or a “Jamal hair wave” had a well understood and accepted significance, meaning a wave performed by a particular method in which it was essential that the “Jamal” lotion and “Vapet sachet” should be used, and not merely a particular style of coiffure. In an action framed as a simple action for passing off the plaintiffs claimed, inter alia, an injunction to restrain the defendants from using any process of hair waving not of the plaintiffs’ design and manufacture as and for the process of the plaintiffs and from using the word “Jamal” in connection with any process of hair waving other than the process of the plaintiffs, evidence was given to establish trade notoriety, but none was produced to establish public notoriety :—

HELD : (i) that form of injunction and that formulation of the cause of action was inappropriate, because the plaintiffs were not designers or manufacturers of any process and, apart from patented or secret processes, a business or person could not be the proprietor of a process.

E (ii) where a brand name or fancy name was applied to some service or process, in circumstances in which it was well understood by the trade that when that process was carried out it should be carried out only with the branded articles, a trader knowingly carrying out what was supposed to be that process with articles other than the branded articles was guilty of a form of misrepresentation analogous to passing off.

F (iii) in this case an injunction should not be granted, but a declaration should be made that the defendants were not entitled to give to a customer asking for a Jamal hair wave a permanent hair wave purporting to be a Jamal hair wave unless the defendants used exclusively as the lotion and heating media for such process the plaintiffs’ products, Jamal lotion and vapets respectively.

G Semble, when it was shown that over a period of years there was a course of trading whereby a trader bought a particular article from one who was marketing it, for use in the course of a particular service or process, a term might be implied in the contract that, when that process was asked for those goods and those goods only would be used.

Qu : whether some evidence from members of the public should be had in cases of this nature to prove public notoriety as apart from trade notoriety.

H [AS TO TRADE NAMES AND PASSING OFF, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 614-651, paras. 920-959; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 264-336, Nos. 1017-1583.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Harrods, Ltd. v. Harrod (R.), Ltd. (1923), 40 T.L.R. 195; 41 R.P.C. 74; C.A. 43 Digest 294, 1205.
- (2) Havana Cigar & Tobacco Factories, Ltd. v. Oddenino, [1924] 1 Ch. 179; 93 L.J.Ch. 81; 130 L.T. 428; 40 T.L.R. 102; 68 Sci. Jo. 164; 41 R.P.C. 47, C.A.; 43 Digest 279, 1106.
- (3) Delavelle (G.B.), Ltd. v. Stanley (1946), 63 R.P.C. 103.

ACTION framed as a simple action for "passing off," claiming an injunction, amongst other things, to restrain the defendants from passing off as the Jamal hair waving process, any processes of hair waving not of the plaintiffs' design or manufacture. The facts appear in the judgment.

S. Pascoe Hayward, K.C., and D. McIntyre for the plaintiffs.

Harold Lightman for the defendants.

EVERSHED, J.: In this action the plaintiffs seek an injunction to restrain the infringement by the defendants of what they allege to be their rights in relation to the use of the word "Jamal" in its application to permanent hair waving. I put the matter in those general terms because I shall have to consider presently the form of the pleadings in the action and the precise character of the cause of action which the plaintiffs have sought to litigate and are entitled to litigate, but I think it will be convenient for me first to deal with the facts and express my findings on the facts of the case as proved before me.

The plaintiffs, who were incorporated in the year 1939, among other activities market a lotion and certain sachets which are made for them, and in connection with that lotion and those sachets they are the registered proprietors of trade marks, namely, in the first case "Jamal," and in the second case "Vapet." As I have stated, the plaintiffs themselves do not manufacture, and never have manufactured any of those articles, nor, as I understand the evidence, are they the inventors of the prescriptions which are used in the making up of the lotion or the sachets. Both the lotion and the sachets are in fact manufactured by another company, called Evans Chemicals, Ltd., a representative of which company, Mr. Bell, gave evidence before me. I understand that the composition of those products is locked in the bosoms of the persons concerned in Evans Chemicals, Ltd., and in so far as it is a secret, it is presumably the secret of that company. It is noteworthy that there is no agreement in any formal shape whereby Evans Chemicals, Ltd., manufacture these articles according to any particular specification, or for the exclusive marketing by the plaintiffs. Mr. Bell told me that in fact they are manufactured according to specifications which are uniform, and that they are supplied only to the plaintiffs under what he called a gentleman's agreement, and I have no reason to doubt that they are not supplied by the manufacturing company to anybody except the plaintiffs. The marketing consists in their sale by the plaintiffs to hairdressers and similar trading establishments for use by them in the process of permanent waving. In addition to those marketing operations it is proved that since 1939 the plaintiffs have expended a considerable sum of money, to wit £109,000 or thereabouts, in the advertising of the system of hair waving which they have associated with the name "Jamal." I have not seen more than two examples at most of the advertising matter. One of them is in the form of a showcard to be exhibited (as it was, in fact, exhibited by the defendants) in the windows of the hairdressers' establishments, and it consists of a photograph of a young woman of markedly attractive features and the word "Jamal" printed plainly on it, together with the words: "The Freedom Wave. No wires, no electricity, no machinery." Another advertisement was put in which states on the face of it: "Jamal Machineless Permanent Waving," and it answers the question which it poses: "What is Jamal?" as follows: "The Jamal method of permanent waving is entirely machineless. It does away with heaters, wires, electricity and cumbersome appliances. The Featherweight Jamal Vapet replaces all machinery and gently steams the hair at 100 degrees centigrade moist heat. No chemical action on the hair. The blended and graded lotions ensure individual treatment for all textures and types of hair. The Jamal wave gives perfect results with complete comfort and absolute freedom."

I cannot pretend, notwithstanding the assistance I have had from witnesses, to be expert in the art of permanent hair waving. Substantially, as I follow it, it consists first of treatment of the hair by washing, then of its separation into what have been called strands or sections, the hair so separated, or the separated strands, being then placed on hair curlers and clamped into position. As I understand it, it is a particular characteristic and an essential feature of what has been called the Jamal system that the Jamal lotion is applied to the hair before the placing of the hair in the curlers. When the hair has been placed in the curlers heat is then applied to it. In some systems this is done by some form of machine or by electrical devices, but in the case of Jamal hair waving the heat is generated in these sachets or Vapets placed on and clamped into the curlers. The chemical contents of the sachet react to the application of either a saline solution or plain water and give off heat which is communicated to the hair with which it is in contact. The result, after a proper interval of time, is that the hair is given a wave which, at any rate, has a degree of permanence.

A It is plain from the evidence that the formula or phrase "Jamal Hair Waving" has, to the trade, that is to say, to all persons concerned in hairdressing, a well understood and accepted significance. It means a system of waving hair in which, essentially, the products to which I have referred, the lotion and the Vapets, are used as part of the process, and (as regards the Vapets) to provide the necessary heat at the appropriate stage. The question whether, in addition to notoriety in the trade, the formula "Jamal Hair Waving" has equally an acceptance in the minds of the public, I will turn to presently.

B About the middle of 1945, the plaintiffs became suspicious that the defendants were infringing the proper professional practice by using products other than the products of the plaintiffs, i.e., other than the products which they market, when giving Jamal waves to customers who requested to have a Jamal wave. The plaintiffs thereupon set about to try to ascertain the truth by means of two "trap orders," as they are called. In August, September and October, 1945, they commissioned two women to go to the premises of the defendants and ask for a Jamal wave, and take careful note of the products which were used in the process. Following on what was then discovered, the writ in the action was issued in January, 1946.

C One of the issues in the action has been whether the evidence of the facts of what occurred when those two women attended at the premises of the defendants should be accepted by the court. [His LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence and continued:] In my judgment, on those occasions, when, plainly and to the knowledge of all concerned on the defendants' premises, a Jamal hair wave was asked for, a hair wave was given which was not in accordance with proper trade or professional practice in that sachets were used which, either exclusively or substantially, were other than the plaintiffs' vapets.

D The matter therefore stands thus. Assuming that there is any right in the plaintiffs when a member of the public asks for a Jamal hair wave to have that wave performed exclusively with the material of the plaintiffs' marketing, it is established that on two occasions that right was infringed. That has given rise to the point which I have thought to be of some difficulty, and, perhaps, of some public interest, namely, the consideration of the nature of the right, if any, which a plaintiff such as these plaintiffs has in a subject-matter of this kind. The action is framed as a simple action for what is called "passing off," so closely following the more normal formulae as to ask for an injunction, among other things, to restrain the defendants from passing off, as Jamal hair waves, processes of hair waving not of the plaintiffs' design or manufacture. Counsel for the plaintiffs has readily conceded that that form of injunction, and that formulation of the cause of action, will not do, because, if for no other reason, clearly the plaintiffs are not designers or manufacturers of any process, nor, to my way of thinking, can it be said, apart from patented processes or secret processes, that a business or a person can say that it is or he is the proprietor of a process. Certainly it cannot be logically or intelligibly asserted in this case that the plaintiffs are the proprietors of a process. On the other hand, it is clear that, if a business markets certain goods for use in a process or in rendering some service, and if the buyers of those goods, namely, other traders, are entitled, when asked for the named process or service, to use any other material, a great hardship and a great injustice may be done to the business marketing the product, who might have, ultimately, no means of securing any sale for their products, and it would seem indeed pitiable if in a proper case the arm of the law were too short to protect a reputable business which had expended capital, energy and labour in building up a reputation and a goodwill, only to be defeated by an inability to formulate any well-recognised cause of action.

H In this connection the question necessarily arises: To what extent is it necessary, in such a case as the present, to lead evidence directly from members of the public? It has been laid down many times that in the case of a passing-off action in respect of goods in the ordinary way it must be proved not only that the reputation alleged for the goods, or for the connection between the goods and the plaintiff, is well known in the trade, but also that it is well known to the public, and where the subject-matter of the action is the sale of an article ultimately reaching the public, one can see well enough the necessity for establishing the requisite knowledge in the public. Passing off, as has been said many times, is a form of misrepresentation not necessarily fraudulent. On the other hand, it is plain also that passing off, properly so called, is not confined to cases of the sale of goods. A form of action which restrains a man from trading under a particular name is called "passing off," though the defendant trader is not selling goods. He may be trading under a name which causes the public to suppose that he is connected with some other business. The well-known case of Harrods, Ltd. v. Harrod (R.) Ltd. (1) comes to mind as an example. There the defendant, if my recollection is right, was attempting to carry on under the name of "Harrod" a banking business, and the plaintiffs, the well-known company in Knightsbridge, raised the objection that the public would suppose that the business that the defendant was proposing to carry on was in some way connected with their well-established Knightsbridge business.

In the present case, the subject-matter is the rendering of a service, namely, the permanent waving of the hair, and it caused me surprise and dismay to learn that the hair so waved is not necessarily female. The service involves no sale of any article to any member of the public; the articles in question are used in the process. An illustration which was discussed in the course of the argument was a system of cleaning either carpets or clothing. It would not be difficult to imagine a case in which a person or company might establish a high reputation in connection with a system of cleaning (let us say) men's clothes. For that purpose the trader would market certain articles, whether mechanical, chemical, or otherwise, to be used in the cleaning process, and they would sell those articles to the cleaners. The member of the public, relying on the reputation that the trader had obtained, would send his clothing to the cleaners to be cleaned according to the named process. The member of the public in such a case would not, and prima facie could not, know, and certainly would not be concerned to know, the actual process to which the clothing was subjected. He would be content to rely on the reputation which the name, when applied to clothes cleaning, had obtained. There is some parallel between that case and the present, although, indeed, it may be said that one is simply illustrating one obscure matter by another equally obscure. But I give that instance because in the case of clothes cleaning, assuming that the reputation had been acquired, it is impossible to suppose that the member of the public could, by the phrase "I wish my clothes X cleaned" understand anything other than a system or method of cleaning the clothes. In the present case I do not think such an assumption is so certain. To many the alternatives may seem absurd. To anyone, male or female, who has had the experience of having his or her hair permanently waved, it may be axiomatic that the named hair wave refers to the method and the system and not to the particular style which is reproduced or illustrated in the photograph in the advertisement. But I am not entirely clear that the court ought to assume that, when a member of the public speaks of a "Jamal hair wave," he or she is referring to the system and not to the particular style or configuration of the curls which is the end of the hair-waving operation. If there is that doubt, the problem of deception obviously becomes more debatable, and if there is a debatable point, then, in accordance with more normal practice, prima facie, at any rate, it would be essential that some evidence of some members of the public should be given to prove that by "Jamal hair waving" a particular system or method is understood and not a particular style.

Assuming, therefore, that that burden did lie on the plaintiffs, have they discharged it? That is, of course, a matter of the proper inferences to be drawn from the evidence as given, and I confess that I have felt considerable doubt on this matter. In the view that I take, I am by no means certain that such evidence is necessary in a case of this character, but assuming that it is, on the whole (although I think it is exceedingly near the line), I have come to the conclusion that the court can and should in this case draw the necessary inference, namely, that a member of the public asking for a "Jamal hair wave" would mean, and intend to get, a wave performed by a particular method and not merely a particular style of coiffure. I draw that inference, first, from the fact that the showcard advertisement and also the brochure makes it plain to anybody who reads them that a Jamal hair wave is a method and not a style. Further, counsel for the plaintiffs, in his reply, has drawn my attention to the evidence given by the hairdressers. I think it is established that evidence by a retailer of what members of the public ask for and what inference is proper to be drawn from those requests is properly admissible evidence. That, I think, emerges from the judgment of LORD RUSSELL in the Havana Cigar case (2) and was applied by myself in the Delavelle blue orchid case (3). Without elaborating it further, I think that if one reads, sensibly and reasonably, the evidence about the requests made by the public, bearing in mind what is done when those requests are made and that members of the public, apparently, are satisfied with that which is done, the inference seems to be that the public ask for a particular method of waving. Putting the whole matter together, I think that on the whole the inference in this case may properly be drawn, but I say so with some diffidence, because I am sure that in cases of this sort where it is necessary to prove public notoriety, as apart from trade notoriety, some evidence from members of the public should be given. I, therefore, conclude that there is sufficient, if it be necessary, to establish a degree of public notoriety, and certainly no evidence was given to suggest the contrary. At the same time, as I indicated a short time ago, I am not wholly clear that in a case of a service of this kind evidence of public notoriety is necessary.

The question then arises what is the right, if any, which the plaintiffs have, and whether it is infringed. It would be far too wide, plainly, to suggest merely that the plaintiffs have a goodwill or similar right in the name, so that any injury to the goodwill is a tortious act. Many ordinary acts of competition are designed to injure another man's goodwill, but in no possible sense could they be tortious. On the other hand, where a brand name or a fancy name is applied to some service or process in circumstances in which it is well understood by the trade that when that process is carried out it should be carried out only with the branded articles, such articles not being re-sold to the public but consumed in the process, then it seems to me that, if a trader knowingly carries out what is supposed to be that process with articles other than the branded articles, he is doing something which is wrongful, would damage the business from which the branded articles originated and would entitle the injured plaintiff to his remedy. I think it is, or may be, as counsel for the plaintiff put it, a form of misrepresentation, which is analogous to passing-off, that the trader is purporting to give, in answer to a request to him, a particular named process, when to his knowledge he is not giving any such process at all. He is, in other words, misrepresenting the process he is giving as being that which is associated with the name and the goodwill of the plaintiffs. I am inclined to think that the matter may also be put on a contractual basis. If it is shown that over a period of years there is a course of trading whereby a trader buys a particular article from one who is marketing it, for use in the course of a particular service or process, there may well be, I think, a term implied in the contract that, when that process is asked for, those goods and those goods only will be used. However, I need not pursue that further, because certainly the plaintiffs have not framed their pleading on any such implied contract. They have, as I say, framed the proceedings as a passing-off action, but it has to be conceded that that formulation in the pleadings is not, as I think, really in accordance with the rights which the plaintiffs could allege and should allege when they are properly analysed. Certainly the form of injunction sought in the first part of the prayer : "An injunction to restrain the defendant company its directors servants and agents from advertising or using in the course of their said business any process of hair waving not of the plaintiff company's design and manufacture as and for the said process of the plaintiff company," seems to me, if counsel for the plaintiffs will forgive the expression, to have no real relation whatever to the facts proved. The prayer, however, goes on : "and from using the word 'Jamal' in connection with any process of hair waving other than the process of the plaintiff company." That I think is more near to it. On the other hand, as counsel for the plaintiff justly points out, the material facts on which the whole action has rested are pleaded clearly in the particulars which consisted of certain affidavits filed on the motion. It is a somewhat unusual form of particulars, but it did put plainly before the defendants the facts on which the plaintiffs were going to rely for alleging wrongful interference with their rights, contractual or otherwise.

In my opinion, in trying to do justice between the two parties, it would be lamentable to be debarred from giving effect to what a judge felt that justice demanded simply by some aberration on the part of counsel in the form of a pleading. If the facts are fairly put forward it is not the function of the pleading to formulate the result. That, however, must not make one forget that the defendant is entitled to address himself to the case which is being made against him, and he is not bound to assume that the judge will remake the plaintiff's case so as to subject him to injunctions or claims or penalties which were not provided for in any original pleading. I have tried to bear all those matters in mind, and I have reached a conclusion as to what to do which I hope will do justice between the parties. I think that, in all the circumstances and having regard to the pleadings and other matters, this is not a case in which I ought to grant any injunction which would impose on the defendants the severe criminal liability which an injunction would impose, but, on the other hand, I think it would be right if I made a declaration of what I conceive to be the rights which the plaintiffs are entitled to have and which the defendants must not infringe. The declaration is: "The defendants are not entitled to give to a customer asking for a Jamal hair wave a permanent wave purporting to be a Jamal hair wave unless the defendants use exclusively as the lotion and heating media for such process the plaintiffs' products, the Jamal lotion and the Vapets respectively."

I do not propose to grant any injunction, but I propose to give liberty to apply. I propose to award the sum of 40s. 0d. as damages, and I propose to direct, in all the circumstances, that the defendants pay half of the plaintiffs' costs.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Griffinkoofe & Brewster (for the plaintiffs); S. Myers & Son (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. W. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

GUGENHEIM v. LADBROKE & CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lawrence, Tucker and Cohen, L.J.J.), February 4, 1947.]

Practice—Striking out action—Frivolous and vexatious—Account stated arising out of betting transactions—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4.

In 1946 the plaintiff made bets in England with the defendants, who were bookmakers, and he claimed to have won from them £8,784. The defendants refused to pay this sum to the plaintiff because they understood that he had been reported to the stewards of the Jockey Club as a defaulter on bets and had been warned off the course in England. The defendants having proposed to hold the plaintiff's account in abeyance until he had settled certain alleged liabilities, the parties entered into negotiations as the result of which the plaintiff claimed that the defendants had agreed that a final balance of £7,256 was due to him from them and he began proceedings against the defendants, founding his action on an account stated:—

HELD: the action should not be struck out under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, as being frivolous and vexatious, but should go to trial.

[FOR OBJECTIONS TO PLEADINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., pp. 252 to 256, paras. 418 to 420; and DIGEST, Pleading, pp. 71 to 92, 623 to 777.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Kershaw v. Sievier (1904), 21 T.L.R. 40; 25 Digest 409, 128.
- (2) Siqueira v. Noronha, [1934] A.C. 332; 103 L.J.P.C. 63; 151 L.T. 6; Digest Supp.
- (3) Cocking v. Ward (1845), 1 C.B. 858; 15 L.J.C.P. 245; 135 E.R. 781; 12 Digest 165, 1200.
- (4) Evans Joseph & Co., Ltd. v. Heathcote, [1918] 1 K.B. 418; 87 L.J.K.B. 593; 118 L.T. 556; 12 Digest 289, 2375; 583, 4868.

- (5) In re Home and Colonial Insurance Co., Ltd., [1930] 1 Ch. 102; sub nom., Re Home & Colonial Insurance Co., May v. Barham, 99 L.J.Ch. 113; 142 L.T. 207; Digest Supp.
- (6) Dyson v. Attorney-General, [1911] 1 K.B. 410; 80 L.J.K.B. 531; 103 L.T. 707; 27 T.L.R. 143.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the defendant company from an order of DENNING, J., reversing an order of MASTER MOSELEY striking out the plaintiff's action as A frivolous and vexatious under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4. The facts are set out in the judgment of LAWRENCE, L.J.

Beyfus, K.C., and Gerald Gardiner for the defendant company.
Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and Eric Myers for the plaintiff.

LAWRENCE, L.J. : This is an interlocutory appeal from an order of DENNING, B J., allowing an appeal from MASTER MOSELEY who had struck out the action as being frivolous and vexatious. The action arises out of gambling transactions at Ascot in June, 1946. The plaintiff made various bets with the defendants, who are a well known company of bookmakers. The bets were made on credit. After the meeting on July 1, 1946, the plaintiff put forward a claim to a sum of £8,784, which he said was due to him on the bets that he had made. On July C 11 the defendants wrote to the plaintiff saying that they understood that he had been reported to the stewards of the Jockey Club as a defaulter on bets and warned off the course in England, and that in those circumstances they proposed to hold his account in abeyance until he had settled certain alleged liabilities, and that they differed in the figures which were put forward, but that that could be adjusted when he had done as they suggested. He denied what they had alleged, and the matter comes before us on an affidavit which, as counsel D for the defendants agrees, must be taken as being true for the purposes of this appeal. In that affidavit, which was not actually sworn, but was put in before MASTER MOSELEY, the plaintiff alleged and subsequently swore that on July 27, 1946, his son and another man had an interview with the representatives of the defendants and it was agreed that the lesser items in the account which the plaintiff put forward should be deemed paid and that, after cancelling out the cross-claims, a final balance was due to him of £7,256. In arriving at this E figure the plaintiff's son on his behalf agreed to forego the difference between it and the claim for £8,784 as a further consideration for the compromise. The writ was issued on Sept. 24, 1946, and by it the plaintiff claimed £7,256 from the defendants on an account stated.

In those circumstances MASTER MOSELEY struck out the statement of claim. On an appeal DENNING, J., reversed that order and the statement of claim F was subsequently amended so as to read :

The account was stated and agreed by and between the plaintiff and the defendant company in letters from the plaintiff to the defendant company dated June 22 and 25, and July 1, 1946, and letters from the defendant company to the plaintiff dated June 28 and July 11, 1946, respectively. Further, or in the alternative, the account was stated and agreed by and between one Jacques Gugenheim, acting for and on behalf of the plaintiff, of the one part, and one H. Green and one T. Kilbey, acting for and on behalf of the defendant company, of the other part, at the defendant company's G offices, on or about July 27, 1946. The said account stated was a settled account respecting cross-claims.

Counsel for the defendants has submitted to us that the action ought to be struck out as being frivolous and vexatious, and he drew our attention to a considerable number of cases, in the first place, to Kershaw v. Sievier (1), as showing that this jurisdiction was proper to be resorted to in betting cases, H and then to Siqueira v. Noronha (2), Cocking v. Ward (3), Evans & Co., Ltd. v. Heathcote (4), and Re Home & Colonial Insurance, Co. Ltd. (5). On those authorities he submitted that an action on an account stated which was an account of cross-claims in respect of gambling debts is so obviously and incontestably an account which cannot be sued on in a court of law that the action ought to be struck out as frivolous and vexatious. In Cocking v. Ward (3) TINDAL, C.J., had expressed himself with some doubt on the point, although he had said (1 C.B. 858, at p. 870) :

The principle may not, perhaps, be applicable to cases where it can be shown the original debt is absolutely void from any illegal or immoral consideration, or where it is made void by any statute, as, by those against usury or gaming : but we think it applies to cases where the only objection is, that the original debt might not have been recoverable, from the deficiency of legal evidence to support it.

On the other hand, counsel for the plaintiff contended that there were two points which he wished to argue. The first was that this was a real account stated, and that there were items on both sides, and that the putting forward of those items on both sides and a promise to pay the balance was an agreement that was enforceable at law. Secondly, he said that the facts stated in the affidavit, if substantiated, created a compromise which was a good compromise enforceable in law. It does not appear to me that the pleading as drawn at present raises the second point which was raised by counsel for the plaintiff.

The real question which the court has to decide is whether the rule as to striking out actions which are frivolous and vexatious ought to be applied in this case, and, in my opinion, having regard to the numerous cases which have been decided on betting transactions and agreements which are alleged to have been made and to be legal arising out of betting transactions, this is not the class of case which ought to be struck out as being frivolous and vexatious. In all the circumstances of this case I think it ought to be allowed to go to trial, and, therefore, I am of opinion that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

TUCKER, L.J. . This is an action brought by a foreign plaintiff against a company trading in this country. DENNING, J., and LAWRENCE, L.J., both think that he should not be driven from the judgment seat before his case has been heard. I make no secret of the fact that I should have come to a different conclusion, but as I think it is most undesirable with that amount of judicial difference of opinion that a plaintiff, especially a foreign plaintiff, should not be allowed to bring his case to trial, I am not prepared to dissent from the order suggested by LAWRENCE, L.J.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree, and mainly for the reasons given by TUCKER, L.J. I would add that as the decision in the Home & Colonial (5) case was only a decision of a court of first instance, there may be a question of law which requires to be decided, though, as at present advised, I see no reason to dissent from it. As was said by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Dyson v. Attorney-General (6) ([1911] 1 K.B. 410, at p. 419) :

Differences of law, just as differences of fact, are normally to be decided by trial after hearing in court, and not to be refused a hearing in court by an order of the judge in chambers.

The alternative claim suggested by SIR VALENTINE HOLMES may, if the pleadings are amended, raise an issue of fact, though even if the facts are founded in his favour, it is not clear that the plaintiff can in law succeed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Herbert Smith & Co. (for the defendant company) ; S. Myers & Son (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SEABROOK v. MERVYN

[COURT OF APPEAL (Morton, Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 16, 17, 29, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Furnished letting—Value of landlord's furniture to tenant—Tenant possessed of furniture, but willing to accept furnished tenancy to secure premises—Subsequent removal of furniture by landlord and use by tenant of his own—Conversion of tenancy into protected tenancy—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1).

In 1942 a landlord let furnished premises to a tenant at a weekly rent of £1 15s. The tenant possessed his own furniture which he would have preferred to use, but he took the flat furnished as he "could not get it in any other way" and he stored his furniture. In September, 1945, the rent was raised to £2 10s. a week. In December, 1945, the landlord informed the tenant that she required the furniture in the flat for her personal use, and the tenant asked the landlord if she would "allow him to move his own furniture into the flat and, therefore, permit him to remain as her tenant." To this the landlord agreed, there being no alteration made in the amount of the rent. Subsequently, the landlord removed her furniture and the tenant brought in and used his own furniture.

HELD: (i) where the letting of a dwelling-house includes furniture which the landlord has no right to remove, there is a presumption that the rent includes some element attributable to that furniture and that the furniture is of some value to the tenant, and also a presumption that the furniture is of the same value to the tenant involved in the case under consideration as to any other tenant, but these presumptions are not conclusive.

Property Holding Co. Ltd. v. Mischeff ([1946] 2 All E.R. 294) and Palser v. Grinling ([1946] 2 All E.R. 287) referred to.

(ii) although the tenant in the present case possessed furniture of his own which he would have preferred using, the landlord's furniture was of value to him within s. 10 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, since he had the use of it and yet retained an asset in the shape of his own furniture which he could, if he wished, raise money on or hire out for valuable consideration. Even though the landlord's furniture was of real value to the tenant the rent might logically remain the same when that furniture was removed in 1945, since its loss was balanced by the acquisition by the tenant of a clearly protected tenancy.

(iii) in Dec., 1945, there was a variation in the original agreement of tenancy resulting in the substitution of an unfurnished letting which was protected under the Rent Restrictions Acts for a furnished letting which was not so protected.

[AS TO DWELLING-HOUSES LET AT A RENT INCLUDING USE OF FURNITURE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 314, para. 370; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 560 and 561, 7078 to 7084.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294; [1946] 1 K.B. 645; 175 L.T. 192.

(2) Wilkes v. Goodwin, [1923] 2 K.B. 86; 92 L.J.K.B. 580; 129 L.T. 44; 31 Digest 560, 7080.

(3) Palser v. Grinling, [1946] 2 All E.R. 287; [1946] K.B. 631; 175 L.T. 204.

APPEAL by tenant from a decision of Kingston-on-Thames County Court giving possession to the landlord of a dwelling-house within the Rent Restrictions Acts. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

C. L. Hawser for the tenant.

A. E. Holdsworth for the landlord.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 29. ASQUITH, L.J., read the judgment of the court. This is an appeal from a decision of the Kingston-on-Thames county court granting the landlord an order for possession of the lower floor of premises at Ilford let as a separate dwelling-house by the landlord to the tenant. The premises were let in 1942 at a rent of 35s. per week, later (in September, 1945) raised to £2 10s. The basis of the order for possession was that the premises, though assumed by both parties and the court to be covered by the Rent Restrictions Acts so far as annual value was concerned, were outside their protection because the letting was a furnished letting within s. 10 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923.

Counsel for the tenant in this court sought to establish two propositions: (1) that neither when originally let nor at any subsequent time was there a furnished letting of these premises within the subsection referred to; (2) alternatively, that, if the original letting was a furnished letting, it lost that character towards the end of 1945 owing to certain arrangements then made by the parties, and was a protected letting when proceedings for possession were launched in the summer of 1946.

We will deal first with the first of these propositions. Section 10 (1) provides:

For the purposes of proviso (i) to subs. (2) of s. 12 of the [Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920] (which relates to the exclusion of dwelling-houses from the principal Act in certain circumstances), a dwelling-house shall not be deemed to be bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of attendance or the use of furniture unless the amount of rent which is fairly attributable to the attendance or the use of the furniture, regard being had to the value of the same to the tenant, forms a substantial portion of the whole rent.

The tenant's contention under this head is that on the facts of the present case the dwelling-house was not originally let at a rent which "included payments in respect of the use of furniture," but that, even if it were, the letting cannot come within the terms of s. 10 (1) because, in deciding whether the portion of the rent attributable to the use of the furniture is substantial, regard has to be had "to the value of the same" (that is the furniture) "to the tenant" and because that value, in this case, on the evidence was nil.

The evidence on this issue is that of the landlord, the tenant and the tenant's wife. It seems that the furniture supplied by the landlord was ample to furnish the flat fully. No question as to its sufficiency in point of quantum, such as arose in Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (1) arises here, but the tenant says he did not want the landlord's furniture as he had plenty of his own and would have preferred to import and use that. Hence, it is argued, the landlord's furniture was valueless to the tenant. It is also argued that the landlord herself attributed no weight to it as an element determining the amount of the rent she should demand. The following extracts from the evidence are the relevant ones. The landlord's evidence was: "Rent was 35s. fair proportion for use of furniture, I could not say, I did not take it into consideration, I did not think about it at all. When I let the flat I knew tenants had their own furniture. After some time said they would have liked to have own furniture. I know they had substantial furniture stored." The tenant's wife said in evidence: "We always had furniture in store and always wanted our own furniture." The tenant said: "We took the flat furnished in the first instance because we could not get it in any other way." Counsel for the tenant sought to infer from these passages, not only that the furniture was valueless to the tenant, but that the landlord also attributed no value to it in fixing the rent and hence the rent was not one which "included payments in respect of the use of furniture" at all. He relied on another fact as pointing to the same conclusion. As will be seen, in November and December, 1945, the landlord, in negotiating terms for the removal of her furniture, did not propose to reduce the rent, which before such negotiations was £2 10s. a week. Hence it is suggested that the presence or absence of the landlord's furniture was at that time manifestly regarded as a matter of no consequence, and that there is no reason for assuming a different state of affairs in 1942 when the lease was granted.

We do not think these arguments can prevail. To deal with the last point first, the rent might logically remain the same under the proposed arrangements in 1945, notwithstanding the loss of the landlord's furniture being a real loss to the tenant, since this loss was balanced by the acquisition by the tenant of a clearly protected tenancy. But the real answer is surely that some one else's furniture, if actually used by the tenant, must have been of some value to him, notwithstanding that he possessed equivalent furniture of his own which he would have preferred using. Things which are in fact made use of do not become valueless because used reluctantly or under compulsion. The tenant had the use of the landlord's furniture, yet retained an asset of value in the shape of his own, which he could, if he wished, raise money on, or hire out for valuable consideration. As to the contention (already in part dealt with), that the letting was not at a rent which included payment for the use of the landlord's furniture at all, we think that counsel for the tenant based this largely on a strained construction of the passage cited above from the landlord's evidence. This passage, though a little ambiguously phrased, would seem to have meant no more than that, in fixing the rent of 35s. a week, the landlord did not consciously advert to the proportion of this sum which could properly be attributed to the use of the furniture, not that she would have let at the same rent, furniture or no furniture.

In these circumstances we are of opinion: (1) That the letting was for a rent which included payments for the use of furniture; (2) that the furniture was of value to the tenant, and (3) that, having regard to its quantity, a substantial proportion of the rent was attributable to it. Such a conclusion is, it seems to us, consonant with the few leading authorities bearing on the construction of the subsection, of which the most material are Wilkes v. Goodwin (2), Palser v. Grinling (3) and Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (1). Of these cases Wilkes v. Goodwin (2) was decided under s. 12 (2), proviso (i), of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which provides as follows:

Provided that (i) this Act shall not, save as otherwise expressly provided, apply to a dwelling-house bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of board, attendance, or use of furniture.

The case is, nevertheless, relevant and important to the construction of the later provision in the 1923 Act. In his judgment in Wilkes v. Goodwin (2), SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1923] 2 K.B. 86 at p. 97):

What the parties agree must be judged by the words used, and if they have expressly included the particular furniture in the consideration for the rent agreed to be paid, it would seem that the rent "includes payment for the use of the furniture." If it is substantial and important enough to be expressly mentioned in the consideration, or if the landlord in withdrawing it from the house would commit a breach of contract, it is difficult to say that payment for it is not included in the rent.

The propositions which seem to emerge from these authorities are: (a) that, where the letting in fact includes furniture which the landlord has no right to remove, there is a presumption that the rent includes some element attributable to such furniture and that such furniture is of some value to the tenant; (b) that there is a presumption that such furniture is of the same value to the tenant involved in the case under consideration as to any other tenant: see Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (1) where MORTON, L.J., says ([1946] 2 All E.R. 294, at p. 297):

Next, the judge must have regard to "the value of the same to the tenant." These words raise difficult questions in some cases. In my view, if a dwelling-house is bona fide let to any tenant at a rent which includes payments in respect of certain articles of furniture, then prima facie those articles are of the same value to that tenant as they would be to any other tenant, and the burden lies on the tenant to show that, by reason of some special circumstances, those articles should be treated as being worth less to him than they would be to any other tenant: compare my judgment in Palser v. Grinling (3).

(c) These presumptions are not conclusive and in Palser v. Grinling (3), MORTON, L.J., gives an example of circumstances which may displace them. He is there dealing with a rent which includes payments for attendance, but his observations apply mutatis mutandis to a rent which includes payments for the use of furniture. He says ([1946] 2 All E.R. 287, at pp. 290, 291):

For instance, the tenant might prove that when the terms of the lease were being arranged, he told the landlord that he did not require this service, and that the landlord could make the appropriate alteration in the lease. If, in these circumstances, the landlord insisted on keeping to his common form of lease, which included this provision, the judge might well think that the amount of rent which was fairly attributable to that particular attendance was little or nothing.

While not laying down that no other circumstances than those instanced in this passage would suffice to rebut the presumption, we are of opinion, for the reasons given above, that the circumstances in the present case do not suffice and that the letting was a furnished letting originally within the terms of s. 10 (1) of the 1923 Act.

We now turn to the question whether this dwelling-house was brought within the scope of the Rent Restriction Acts by reason of certain events which happened at the end of 1945. On Nov. 6, 1945, a firm of solicitors, acting on behalf of the landlord, served a notice on the tenant in the following terms:

Dear Sir, We have been instructed by your landlady, Miss Enid Margaret Seabrook, to give you herewith notice to quit and deliver up possession of the furnished rooms which you occupy at 2, Cranbrook Rise, Ilford, on Dec. 7, 1945, or at the end of the month of your tenancy which will expire next after the expiration of one month from the date hereof. Will you kindly acknowledge receipt, Yours faithfully, Frank White & Williams.

We feel some doubt whether that notice was effective. It appears to treat the tenant's tenancy as a monthly tenancy, whereas it had been a weekly tenancy and had probably become, by December, 1945, a four-weekly tenancy. We can find no evidence that it was ever a monthly tenancy, and there is no evidence to show that Dec. 7 was the end of a weekly or four-weekly period of the tenancy. However, it is not necessary to determine that point, having regard to the view which we take of certain subsequent events. It is clear from the evidence given at the hearing that at some time between Nov. 6, 1945, and Dec. 5, 1945, a conversation took place between the landlord and the tenant's wife, acting as agent for her husband. The landlord's evidence as to this was as follows: "I came to an arrangement with tenant's wife. I told Mrs. Mervyn I wanted my furniture downstairs for my own personal use . . . Mrs. Mervyn agreed to my having furniture and said she would like to remain on as tenant . . . Nothing definite said about rent." The tenant's wife said: "We discussed whether we could come to some agreement about furniture. She said she'd think it over. She said she wanted her furniture for her house at Angmering. Furniture in top flat more important, but she wanted it all. She said: 'You have nothing to worry about, you can stay, but I am unable to give you a definite date when I can remove my furniture.' I asked about rent. She said it would be the same, of course. I told husband of conversation and he wrote letter. She asked me to write a letter." The tenant said: "Letter of Dec. 5 written as result of conversation wife had with landlord. When I wrote letter purpose was I wanted my own furniture in the flat."

From the above quotations it appears that, while the landlord said that nothing definite was said about rent, Mrs. Mervyn gave evidence that the landlord said it would be "the same, of course." The judgment does not indicate which version the judge accepted. The rent which was, in fact, being paid prior to this conversation, from September, 1945, onwards, was £2 10s. a week. On Dec. 5, 1945, the tenant wrote the letter referred to above. The landlord said in her evidence that this letter was written to her at her request. It is as follows:

Dear Miss Seabrook, I understand that you require your furniture from this flat for your personal use and would esteem it a favour if you would kindly consider allowing me to move my own furniture into the flat and, therefore, permit me to remain as your tenant. Should you favour this arrangement it would, I trust, be to our mutual advantage. Thanking you and awaiting the favour of your reply. Yours very sincerely,

On Dec. 17, 1945, the landlord answered this letter as follows:

Dear Mr. Mervyn, I thank you for your letter of the 5th inst. and hereby agree to the proposals set out therein, yours faithfully.

It appears to us that these letters, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, amount to a variation of the tenancy agreement already existing between the landlord and the tenant, the variation being that the furniture was no longer to be included in the letting, and the landlord was to be at liberty to remove it at any time. Thereupon, the tenant would move his own furniture into the flat. We think, further, that, having regard to the surrounding circumstances and the words "permit me to remain as your tenant," the intention of the parties, as revealed in this exchange of letters, was that the terms of the tenancy should remain the same as before, with this one exception. From the time that the landlord accepted the tenant's offer by her letter of Dec. 17, 1945, we think that the dwelling-house in question was no longer let at a rent which included payments in respect of the use of furniture. The landlord could have removed the furniture at any time, and the tenant had no longer any contractual right to the use of it. In these circumstances, we do not think that, as from that date, it would be right to ascribe any part of the rent of £2 10s. a week, which the tenant continued to pay, to the use of the furniture: see Property Holdings Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (1) ([1946] K.B. 645, at p. 650). Subsequently, there were certain further discussions between the landlord and the tenant in regard to certain items of furniture in the flat, but the only effect of these was that two further variations were made in the terms of the tenancy. The landlord was to leave in the flat the surrounds in the bedroom and dining room and the linoleum in the hall and breakfast room. Further, she was not to take away the "Ascot" (which seems to have been some form of heating apparatus) unless and until she provided "alternative or similar arrangements for the bath and kitchenette." We infer that the landlord agreed to these further variations because in a letter of Jan. 25, 1946, the tenant sent to her a cheque for £10 "being four weeks rent in advance from Thursday, Jan. 24, 1946," and in the same letter and its enclosure are set out in full the further variations to which we have already referred. In our view, the subsequent discussions and agreement on these minor matters do not have the effect of re-transforming this letting into a furnished letting, so as to take it outside the scope of the Rent Restrictions Acts. Even if we assume that as from Jan. 25, 1946, some portion of the rent might be attributable to the use of these items of furniture which the landlord was not free to remove, it was not suggested that such portion could be regarded as forming a substantial portion of the whole rent.

It follows that, in our view, the learned county court judge should have held that the premises had been within the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts for some months before the proceedings began. His decision in favour of the landlord on this branch of the case was not based on any finding of fact, but was entirely based on his view of the law. The judge took the view that the tenant gave no consideration for the first variation of the original agreement of tenancy, and he further expressed the view that "so fundamental a change as the tenant contends took place, namely, the substitution of a protected for an unprotected tenancy, is not aptly described by the word 'variation.'" We are unable to accept either of these reasons. In our view, the variation was for the mutual benefit of the landlord and the tenant, and it can accurately be described as a variation, notwithstanding that in the result that which formerly was an unprotected tenancy became a protected tenancy. The result is that this appeal must be allowed. We should add that throughout this judgment we have assumed that the rateable value of the flat in question was such as to bring it within the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. No evidence appears to have been given on this matter, and it would appear that the parties must have agreed on this point.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Manches & Co. (for the tenant); Robinson & Bradley, agents for Frank White & Williams, Ilford (for the landlord).

[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOMFORD v. SOUTH WORCESTERSHIRE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lawrence, Tucker and Cohen, L.JJ.), January 28, 1947.]

Rates and Rating—Valuation—Agricultural dwelling-house—Limitation of value by amount in respect of the dwelling-house which may be deducted from wages—Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17), s. 72.

The ratepayer was a farmer who occupied two cottages in which two of his agricultural workers resided by virtue of their employment. By an Order, dated Dec. 12, 1941, made by the Worcestershire Agricultural Wages Committee under the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts, 1924 and 1940, these cottages were to be treated as worth 3s. a week each, and only 3s. could be deducted weekly for each cottage from the minimum wage paid to each worker. The assessment committee valued the cottages for rating purposes at higher values than they would have borne if they had been let at only 3s. a week each.

HELD : assuming that under s. 72 of the Local Government Act, 1929, consideration of competition to obtain the cottages by other farmers in the neighbourhood must be excluded so that the only hypothetical tenant who was to be taken into account was the farmer whose workman was residing in the cottage occupied by the farmer, that farmer might be prepared to pay a higher rent for the cottage than 3s. a week, and, therefore, the assessment committee was not limited in its valuation by the 3s. a week laid down by the Order under the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts, 1924 and 1940, which were enacted for an entirely different purpose from that of the Local Government Act, 1929. A Decision of Divisional Court ([1946] 2 All E.R. 80) affirmed.

[FOR AGRICULTURAL WORKERS' WAGES, see HALSBURY Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 389-395, paras. 625-660; AND FOR THE VALUATION OF AGRICULTURAL DWELLING-HOUSES, see ibid, Vol. 27, p. 434, para. 870.]

Case referred to :

(1) Williams v. Smith, [1934] 2 K.B. 158; 103 L.J.K.B. 421; 151 L.T. 112; Digest Supp. B

APPEAL by the ratepayer from the decision of a Divisional Court on a Case Stated by Worcestershire Quarter Sessions (reported [1946] 2 All E.R. 80) who had dismissed an appeal by the ratepayer, a farmer, against a valuation for rating purposes made by the South Worcestershire Assessment Committee of two cottages occupied by the ratepayer for the accommodation of agricultural workers employed by him. The facts are set out in the judgment of LAWRENCE, L.J. C

Rowe, K.C., and Harold B. Williams for the ratepayer.
Capewell, K.C., and Squibb for the assessment committee.

LAWRENCE, L.J. : This is an appeal from the Divisional Court on a Case Stated by quarter sessions on a question of rating. The ratepayer is a farmer who occupies two cottages in which dwell two of the workmen on his farm. The valuation of these two cottages which has been made by the assessment committee for rating purposes has been raised to a figure which is greater than the value for rating purposes of the cottages if let at 3s. 0d. a week. D

By an Order made by the county wages committee under the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts, 1924 and 1940, for the purposes of the minimum wages which are payable to agricultural workers, a cottage (including any garden which is provided for the worker) is to be treated as worth 3s. 0d. per week, and only that amount can be deducted from the minimum wage which is paid to the worker. The question raised is put thus in the Special Case : E

The question for the opinion of the court is whether or not on the facts stated herein the gross value of the two cottages numbered 45 and 46, Salters Lane, Pershore, ascertained in accordance with s. 72 of the Local Government Act, 1929, is limited by the value at which they are to be reckoned as payment of wages in lieu of payment in cash under the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts and the Order in force. If this question be answered in the affirmative, the said gross and rateable values are to be reduced to £6 and £4 respectively in respect of each cottage, and if in the negative, the gross and rateable values determined by the assessment committee are to stand. F

The only question we have to determine is whether the value of these cottages is to be taken at the 3s. 0d. specified in the Order made under the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts in view of the terms of s. 72 of the Local Government Act, 1929. Section 72 provides : G

As from April 1, 1930, the gross value for rating purposes of a house occupied in connection with agricultural land and used as the dwelling-house of a person who— (a) is primarily engaged in carrying on or directing agricultural operations on that land; or (b) is employed in agricultural operations on that land in the service of the occupier thereof and is entitled, whether as tenant or otherwise, so to use the house only while so employed, shall, so long as the house is so occupied and used, be estimated by reference to the rent at which the house might reasonably be expected to let from year to year if it could not be occupied and used otherwise than as aforesaid. H

Counsel for the ratepayer has, as I understand it, based his argument on the words in para. (a) of s. 72, "that land," and those in para. (b), "is employed in agricultural operations on that land." He says that the restrictive covenant which one has to imagine attaches to the cottages is that they could not be occupied and used "otherwise than as aforesaid," that is to say, otherwise than by the workmen of the farmer of "that land." That would have the effect, he contends, of excluding the competition of all other farmers, and would lead to competition, so far as the rent was concerned, merely between the farmer of the land and any employees of his on that land. This argument, however, was not accepted by the Divisional Court who decided the case in favour of the assessment committee on the view that the rent at which these cottages might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, if they could not be occupied and used otherwise than as aforesaid, would be a rent which might be expected to be obtained from the competition of any farmers in the neighbourhood who wanted these cottages for the occupation of their workmen. It appears to me, however, that the Special Case does not raise that question, and that it is unnecessary for this court to decide the question whether s. 72 excludes or includes the competition of all farmers. The Special Case seems to me to put the question simply as being whether or not the valuation must have regard to the 3s. 0d. rent which is laid down by the Order under the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts. In my opinion, on that question the assessment committee are clearly right. Even if the only hypothetical tenant who is to be taken into account is the farmer whose workman is occupying the cottage, that farmer might be prepared to pay a higher rent for the cottages than the 3s. 0d. laid down by the Order. The Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts and the Local Government Act, 1929, have nothing to do with each other. They were enacted for entirely different purposes. In my opinion, as a matter of fact and ordinary economy, a single farmer, without any competition from any farmers, might be prepared to rent these two cottages—the present ratepayer might have been prepared to do so—at a higher rent than 3s. 0d. a week to get housing accommodation for his employees. I, therefore, answer the question put by the Special Case in the negative, and am in favour of dismissing the appeal.

TUCKER, L.J.: I agree. I think that s. 72 of the Local Government Act, 1929, envisages as possible hypothetical tenants of the hereditaments under consideration either the agricultural workers who are employed on the land in question or the farmer, the person in occupation of the agricultural land which is being worked, who may take the hereditament either for his own occupation, or for letting to his farm worker, or for allowing the farm worker to live there as a licensee. So, the hypothetical tenants are the farm worker or the farmer. The argument is that, in any event, by reason of the operation of the Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Acts, 1924 and 1940, and the Order made thereunder, the value, for the purposes of rating, of such a cottage as these is fixed irretrievably once and for all at 3s. 0d. a week, because that sum has been specified as that which may be deducted from the wages fixed by the statute to be paid to the farm workers. Furthermore, it is pointed out, it has been decided by the Divisional Court in Williams v. Smith (1), the correctness of which both sides accept, that such a cottage can be let to a farm worker only at 3s. 0d., and not at a rent in excess of that sum. It is said that it follows from that, as a matter of law, that only one figure can be taken as the gross value and that is the figure arrived at on the basis of 3s. 0d. a week. In my view, that is the only point which the Case raises. If that contention is right, the ratepayer succeeds; if it is not, he fails.

I think that he fails. It would be surprising, from the rating point of view, if an Act fixing the remuneration of agricultural workers has had the effect of fixing one uniform gross value for all kinds of hereditaments in Worcestershire of different sizes and types merely because they are occupied by a particular class of person. That would be a remarkable result, but it would be the result if the ratepayer is right. I should have thought that what the ratepayer in the present case, as one of the hypothetical tenants, would be willing to pay was clearly an element proper to be taken into consideration in fixing the value for rating purposes of these cottages. I agree that you must envisage a willing landlord and a willing tenant, but I think the fact that a willing tenant will only be able to deduct 3s. 0d. from his workman's wages in respect of the user of the hereditament is only one of the elements, though a very important element, to be taken into consideration in arriving at the value for rating purposes. There are other elements to be taken into consideration, namely, the desire of the farmer to secure the cottage to house one or more of his workmen, or the desire to get it for his own occupation. Those seem to me to be proper elements to be taken into consideration, even assuming (which it is not necessary to decide for the purposes of this case) that other farmers desirous of obtaining the cottages for similar purposes must be excluded altogether as possible competitors. As has been said, this Case does not seem to raise that point, and I express no opinion on it. For the reasons I have stated, I agree that this appeal fails.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs. A

Solicitors : Ellis & Fairbairn (for the ratepayer); Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash, agents for Smith & Roberts, Evesham (for the assessment committee).
[Reported by RONALD ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. DUCK v. PEACOCK. [1949]
1 All E.R. 318.

RENNISON v. KNOWLER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
January 23, 31, 1947.]

Street and Aerial Traffic—Motor vehicle—Insurance against third-party risks—Causing a motor vehicle to be used on a road without a policy of insurance being in force—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for refraining from disqualification—Misapprehension of legal effect of policy—Date from which disqualification runs where quarter session allow appeal against disqualification—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) (2). C

The respondent was the owner of a motor cycle which he allowed a friend to drive, while he himself rode as a pillion passenger. The respondent's insurance policy covered him while driving his own or any other motor cycle, but did not cover any person other than himself who might be driving the cycle in question. The respondent was convicted by justices in petty sessions of causing a motor vehicle to be used on a road without a policy of insurance against third party risks being in force, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), and was disqualified for holding a licence for 12 months, under s. 35 (2). On his appeal to quarter sessions against the disqualification, the appeals committee found that the respondent honestly believed that his policy covered third party risks while the motor cycle was being driven by his friend and held that this was a special reason for not imposing disqualification. There was, however, no reasonable ground for this belief, as the respondent had never acquainted himself with the terms of the policy. The appeals committee also found that there was no likelihood that the respondent would drive again without satisfying himself that he was insured, and that, therefore, the safety of the public would not be prejudiced by allowing him to continue to drive :— D

HELD : (i) whether it was open to a court, on facts found by them, to hold that special reasons existed for not imposing a disqualification for holding a licence under s. 35 (2) of the Act of 1930 was a question of law. E

(ii) where an insured person neither informed himself of the provisions of his policy nor obtained advice as to what it covered, he had no reasonable ground for believing that his policy covered something which it did not. A mistaken belief with regard to any fact, however honest, could not be regarded as a "special reason" unless it was based on reasonable grounds. F

(iii) where there were special reasons for not disqualifying a driver, the court, in considering whether they would exercise the discretion then given them, should take into account the fact that he would not offend again, but that fact, in itself, was not a "special reason," nor was the evidence of hardship. G

(iv) the disqualification should be reimposed, and would be effective for 12 months from the date when it was imposed by petty sessions. H

Whitall v. Kirby ([1946] 2 All E.R. 552) applied.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 35, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 636.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Whittall v. Kirby, [1946] 2 All E.R. 552 ; 111 J.P. 1 ; 175 L.T. 449.
- (2) R. v. Leicester (Recorder), Ex p. Gabbitas, [1946] 1 All E.R. 615 ; 110 J.P. 228 ; 175 L.T. 173.
- (3) R. v. Crossen, [1939] N.I. 106.
- (4) Muir v. Sutherland, [1940] S.C. (J.) 66 ; Digest Supp.
- (5) Adair v. Munn, Adair v. Brash, [1940] S.C.(J.) 69 ; Digest Supp.
- (6) Murray v. MacMillan, 1942 S.C.(J.) 10 ; Digest Supp.
- (7) Fairlie v. Hill (1944), Sc.L.T. 224.
- (8) Re Stevens, Ex p. Board of Trade, [1898] 2 Q.B. 495 ; 67 L.J.Q.B. 932 ; 79 L.T. 80 ; 4 Digest 518, 5309.
- (9) Shotts Iron Co., Ltd. v. Fordyce, [1930] A.C. 503 ; 99 L.J.P.C. 101 ; 143 L.T. 200 ; 23 B.W.C.C. 73 ; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by the appeals committee of Lincolnshire (Parts of Lindsey) Quarter Sessions.

The respondent was convicted by Scunthorpe justices of causing a motor bicycle to be used on a road without a policy of insurance being in force, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35, and was disqualified for holding a driving licence for 12 months. His appeal against disqualification was allowed by quarter sessions on the ground that there was a special reason for not imposing disqualification in that the respondent honestly believed that the user of the motor cycle was covered by an insurance policy. The appellant, a police officer, appealed. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J.

J. MacMillan for the appellant.

R. C. Vaughan and J. G. S. Hobson for the justices in quarter sessions.

Jan. 31. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a case stated by the appeals committee of the quarter sessions for the Parts of Lindsey who allowed an appeal by the respondent against so much of a conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction at Scunthorpe as adjudged that he be disqualified for holding a driving licence for a period of 12 months. The case again raises the question what can constitute special reasons entitling a court to refrain from imposing disqualification—on this occasion for causing a motor vehicle to be used on a road without a policy of insurance being in force, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35. In the recent case of Whittall v. Kirby (1), this court was considering disqualification for an offence against s. 15 of the Act and gave no final decision as to s. 35, though it is clear from the judgment in that case that many, if not all, the considerations which should influence the court in considering this matter apply equally to both sections. Thus, the circumstances must be special to the offence and not to the offender, and, as, indeed, the appeals committee held, financial hardship cannot be taken into account.

The facts of the present case are that the respondent was the owner of a motor cycle and on the day in question it was being driven by a friend of his, the respondent at the time riding as a pillion passenger on the cycle. The friend had owned a motor cycle, and he and the respondent were accustomed to ride to work together, on one or other of the cycles. The friend had sold his cycle a few days before the offence, and the quarter sessions have accepted the respondent's evidence that he knew his friend was looking out for another cycle and also that he believed the friend had for this reason kept his policy in force. On the occasion of the offence these two men appear to have been on a poaching expedition, which was the reason why the respondent would give no information as to who his friend was, so that no inquiry whether the latter had a policy in force covering him while driving a cycle owned by another person was possible. The policy insuring the respondent covered him while driving his own or any other motor cycle, but did not cover a person other than the assured who might be driving the insured cycle. It is, indeed, common ground that the motor cycle was, in fact, uninsured at the material time.

In the Case, as originally stated, the appeals committee found that the respondent acted under a misapprehension as to his legal position relating to insurance and that he honestly believed that the user of the motor cycle was covered either by his own or his friend's policy, and that such belief constituted a special reason for not imposing disqualification. They added that they disregarded financial hardship and set out also another consideration on which we shall say a word hereafter. We remitted the case for further information as to the grounds on which the respondent based his belief, and in their further statement the committee tell us that he did not give any grounds for believing either that his friend was going to buy another cycle or that he had kept his policy in force, but the committee thought he was an honest witness and accepted his evidence as to his belief. They also, we think, must have thought that the respondent believed that his own policy covered third party risks while it was being driven by his friend.

We are in agreement with decisions given in Scotland that the question whether, on facts found by the court, it is open to the court to hold that special reasons exist is one of law. Can, therefore, the fact that a man misapprehends the legal effect of his policy be a special reason? In our opinion, it would be most dangerous so to hold. The Act requires every person who uses a motor vehicle or causes or permits it to be used on a road to be insured against third party risks. The obvious duty, therefore, of the owner is to see that he is insured and to make himself acquainted with the contents of his policy. He is not obliged to have a motor vehicle, but, if he does, he must see that he has such a policy as the law requires. If he does not understand his policy, he can seek guidance and instruction, but, if he neither informs himself of its provisions nor gets advice as to what it covers, we are unable to see that he has any reasonable ground for believing that the policy covers something which it does not. Belief, however honest, cannot, in our opinion, be regarded as a special reason unless it is based on reasonable grounds. It could hardly be even suggested that forgetfulness to renew a policy could be a special reason, and, indeed, this court said in Whittall v. Kirby (1) that it could not. Can then, a man who has forgotten the renewal date of his policy and drives in the honest belief that his policy is still current, be in a worse position than one who, having a current policy, believes it covers him in a particular state of circumstances when it does not? It seems obvious that they are both in exactly the same position. It may be that, if a man who felt he did not understand his policy took the advice of someone who was, apparently, in a position to explain it, such as an insurance agent, and received a wrong opinion, this might be considered a special reason, or, again, if the question turned on some obscure phrase which might lead a person to believe he was covered when a court ultimately decided that he was not. Those are questions which can be decided if and when they arise. We express no opinion on them. Here there is no finding or suggestion that the respondent took any advice or that the policy was one which a person in his position or degree of education could not understand, still less that it contained any obscurity or ambiguity. The plain fact is that, having got the policy, he never troubled to acquaint himself with its terms. We cannot hold that a belief founded on no reasonable ground can constitute a special reason.

The second ground given by the committee is, in our opinion, covered by the same considerations and must also be rejected. In view of the findings we will assume that the committee thought that the respondent actually applied his mind to the question whether his friend had kept his policy in force and believed he had. But what possible ground had he for any such belief? That he knew his friend was looking for a new cycle may well be true, but that of itself could be no ground for believing that he still had an effective policy after he had parted with his cycle. Considering that he never even asked the question, we cannot possibly accept his belief on this matter as a special reason.

We desire to say a word with regard to the finding that there was no likelihood that the respondent would drive again without satisfying himself that he was insured, and that, therefore, the safety of the public would not be prejudiced by allowing him to continue to drive. This matter has been emphasised in some of the Scottish decisions, which, no doubt, is why the committee refer to it. We do not understand them to give this as a special reason, and, in our opinion, it could not be so regarded. In our opinion, the Scottish cases do not, when rightly understood, mean to say that the fact that a man is not likely to offend again can of itself be a special reason. This is a matter which it is right to take into account in considering, where there are special reasons, whether the court will exercise the discretion which is then given to them. The court is not bound to refrain from disqualifying a driver, be the circumstances as special as can well be imagined. They may so refrain where there are special reasons and, in deciding whether they will or will not exercise their discretion, they may take into account whether it is probable that the offender has learnt his lesson.

- We recognise in this case that the appeals committee, although we are obliged to differ from their conclusions, gave it the most thorough and careful consideration, and what we are about to add is not intended as the slightest reflection on them, but is for the guidance of magistrates and quarter sessions generally.
- A It must be understood that disqualification is part of the punishment which Parliament has prescribed for certain motoring offences. Everyone will agree that, certainly where a fine and not imprisonment is imposed, it is the most serious part of the punishment. That it often inflicts hardship, and in many cases grievous hardship, none will deny, but it is the punishment which Parliament has ordained, and, moreover, has enacted that prima facie, at least, it is to be imposed in all cases to which this penalty applies. There are in the statute
- B book laws which in terms allow the courts to take, or refrain from taking, steps on the ground of exceptional hardship, but there is no such provision in the Road Traffic Acts. This court has already laid down that financial hardship is not a matter which can be taken into account in this respect, and we desire to emphasise that this applies to any other form of hardship. It may often be distasteful to a court to impose a penalty or to take a certain course which it may think is disproportionate to the offence, but it is not for them to question
- C what the legislature has enacted. It is no doubt true that disqualification may work very hardly in a case where a man drives for his living and have little effect in the case of another who can afford to employ someone to drive him while the disqualification is in force. Parliament has not seen fit to draw that distinction and the decisions may now be said to be uniform throughout the United Kingdom that hardship is not a special reason for refraining from imposing this punishment. It is the duty of all courts to apply the law as enacted
- D and as interpreted by the courts.

It follows that this appeal is allowed. We were asked by counsel to state, in the event of this court allowing the appeal, from what date the suspension of the licence was to run. The period of disqualification is, both in the case of s. 35 and s. 15, a period of 12 months from the date of the conviction. We observe that in s. 6 (2) it is provided:

- E A person who by virtue of an order of a court . . . is disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence may appeal against the order in the same manner as against a conviction, and the court may, if it thinks fit, pending the appeal, suspend the operation of the order.

- The justices were not, apparently, asked to suspend the operation of the order pending the appeal to quarter sessions, and, accordingly, the respondent was disqualified from Mar. 20, to May 27, 1946, when the quarter sessions removed the disqualification. There is no provision in the Act as to what is to happen if the decision of quarter sessions is given subject to a Case, though it would seem that, if quarter sessions either themselves imposed a disqualification or dismissed an appeal from petty sessions which had imposed a disqualification, they could suspend the operation of the order until the decision of the High Court. Where, however, quarter sessions states a Case, there is nothing in the
- F Act to suggest that it is open to the High Court to order that disqualification should run from the date of the judgment of the High Court. All we can do is to restore the order of the petty sessions, and it follows therefore, that the disqualification is reimposed, but will only be effective until Mar. 20 of this year.

Appeal allowed.

- Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Sergeant & Collins, Seunthorpe (for the appellant); Taylor, Jelf & Co., agents for Eric W. Scorer, Lincoln
- H (for the justices).

[Reported by F. A. AMLES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILLIAMSON v. WILSON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
January 28, 31, 1947.]

Street and Aerial Traffic—Motor vehicle—Insurance against third-party risks—Permitting vehicle to be used on road without policy of insurance in force—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reason" for refraining from disqualification—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1), (2).

The respondent owned a motor car which was insured only while she or her brother was driving it. She allowed a friend to drive the car without an insurance policy being in force while it was so driven, and she was charged with, and convicted of, an offence against the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). She was not, however, disqualified for holding a licence, under s. 35 (2), because the justices considered that disqualification was too severe a penalty in the circumstances and that this constituted a "special reason" within the meaning of the section:—

HELD: it was not for the justices to say that a penalty which Parliament had imposed was too severe, and no "special reason" existed for not imposing disqualification on the respondent.

Rennison v. Knowler (1) applied.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 35, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 636.]

Case referred to:

(1) Rennison v. Knowler, ante, p. 302.

CASE STATED by Lincolnshire (Parts of Lindsey) justices.

The respondent was convicted of permitting a motor vehicle to be used on a road without a policy of insurance against third party risks being in force, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). The justices did not, however, disqualify her for holding a licence under s. 35 (2), because they considered disqualification too severe a penalty in the circumstances of the case. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J.

J. MacMillan for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 31. LORD GODDARD, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the court): This is a Case stated by justices for the Parts of Lindsey in which the respondent was charged under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1):

... for that she, the respondent, on Sept. 22, 1946, at the Broadway, Woodhall Spa, in the Parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln, unlawfully did permit a motor vehicle to be used on a road without there being in force in relation to the user of the vehicle by the person using the vehicle such a policy of insurance . . .

as is required by the Act.

The respondent, who owned a motor car, had a policy which only insured the car when she or her brother were driving, but she allowed a man named O'Keeffe to drive the car. Mr. O'Keeffe had no policy in force, and, therefore, she permitted the car to be driven without any policy being in force at the time when it was so driven. The justices convicted her, but they state that they were of opinion that:

... in view of the circumstances of the case disqualification was too severe a penalty, and that, such being the case, it constituted a special reason required by [s. 35 (2)].

Accordingly, they did not impose any penalty of disqualification.

In view of the judgment which we delivered in Rennison v. Knowler (1) it is not necessary to say more than that this case is covered entirely by that judgment. It is not for the justices to say that a penalty which Parliament has imposed is too severe, and it cannot be pretended that there is any special reason in this case for not imposing disqualification. The position is simply that the respondent either forgot or ignored the fact that her policy only covered the driving of the car when it was being driven by herself or by the brother who is also named in the policy. It may be that, after the decisions which we have now given, owners of motor cars will hesitate before they take advantage of the opportunity of paying a slightly smaller premium if the driving of the

A car is limited to named drivers, because it is obvious that, if they do, they run the risk of forgetting that provision in their policy and of finding themselves prosecuted for allowing uninsured cars to be driven. In that event, in view of this decision, it is impossible to suppose that magistrates will any longer refrain from imposing the sentence of disqualification because they think that it is a severe penalty. I repeat once more that it is not for magistrates or for this court to question the wisdom of Parliament in imposing disqualification as a punishment. It follows that this appeal is allowed. The case will go back for the justices to impose a disqualification of not less than 12 months from the date of the conviction.

Case remitted.

Solicitors : Godfrey Warr & Co., agents for John Barkers, Louth (for the appellant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILLIAMSON v. O'KEEFFE

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), January 28, 31, 1947.]

C Street and Aerial Traffic—Motor vehicle—Insurance against third-party risks—Using vehicle on road without policy of insurance being in force—Whether person other than owner of vehicle can be guilty of the offence—"Any person"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1).

D The respondent was driving a friend's car which was only insured while she herself or her brother was driving it. He was charged with an offence against the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). The justices held that he had not committed an offence since he was not the owner of the car, because the offence could only be committed by the owner, the words "any person" in s. 35 (1) meaning "any owner":—

E HELD: the words "any person" in s. 35 (1) did not merely mean "any owner"; the offence of using a motor vehicle on the road without an insurance policy against third party risks being in force could be committed by any person; the respondent had committed an offence against s. 35 (1); and the case should be remitted to the justices with a direction to convict.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 35 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 636.]

Cases referred to:

- F (1) Williamson v. Wilson, ante, p. 306.
 (2) Morris v. Tolman, [1923] 1 K.B. 166; 92 L.J.K.B. 215; 128 L.T. 118; 86 J.P. 221; 14 Digest 92, 612.
 (3) Monk v. Warbey, [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Lincolnshire (Parts of Lindsey) justices.

G The respondent, who was driving a friend's car, was charged with using a motor vehicle on a road without a policy of insurance against third party risks being in force, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). No policy was, in fact, in force at the time, but the justices held that the respondent had not committed an offence since he was not the owner of the car, because the offence was one which could only be committed by the owner. The facts appear in the judgment of the court, delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Williamson v. Wilson (1) (ante, p. 306).

H J. MacMillan for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 31. LORD GODDARD, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the court): The respondent is the person who was driving the car which was owned by the respondent in Williamson v. Wilson (1), and it is unnecessary for me to state the facts again.

The justices in the present case held that no offence had been committed because of the construction which they placed on the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). The respondent was charged with using the car on the road when there was no policy in force and, in fact, no policy was in force. The reasons the justices give for their decision are :

(1) The words "any person" in the said section must mean either any person whatsoever or "any owner." They cannot have two meanings in the same section, and we consider they mean "any owner," as in Morris v. Tolman (2) for the following reasons. (2) The said section creates two offences (or rather three, but the case in question is only concerned with two), namely : (a) It shall be not lawful for "any person" to use, etc. (b) It shall not be lawful for "any person" to permit any other person to use, etc. In (b) the words "any person" must mean any owner because the owner is the only person who can legally permit another person to use. (3) As the words "any person" cannot have two different meanings in the same section they must mean "any owner" in (a) as well as (b). (4) If the legislature had meant the words to have two different meanings in the same section it would have said "It shall not be lawful for any person to use or, if he is the owner, to permit any other person to use." Therefore the words "any person" are confined to the owner. The respondent was not the owner, so the said section does not implicate him and he is not guilty of an offence. (5) We referred to the judgments in Monk v. Warbey (3) and considered they supported our conclusions in that they implied that the dominant intention of the said section was to impose a duty on the owner of a vehicle to see that it is insured when used either by him or by any other person.

This is a very subtle piece of reasoning, but the court finds it impossible to adopt the same view as the justices. The Act is perfectly clear in its terms. It creates an offence and imposes a penalty on any person who uses a motor car on the road without a policy being in force. The words are as clear as they possibly can be, and, as Mr. O'Keeffe was a person who used a car on a road without a policy being in force, it follows that he committed an offence and is liable to disqualification for not less than 12 months. The case must go back to the magistrates with a direction to convict.

Case remitted.

Solicitors : Godfrey Warr & Co., agents for John Barkers, Louth (for the appellant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROBERTS v. COVENTRY CORPORATION

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Croom-Johnson, JJ.), January 21, 1947.]

Acquisition of Land—Compensation—Owner also a shareholder and director of tenant company—Possible depreciation of shares through notice to quit—Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, (c. 57), s. 2.

The owner of land which was acquired compulsorily by a local authority was a director and shareholder of the company which was tenant and occupier of the land. She alleged that, if the company were dispossessed of the land, the value of her shares in it would be depreciated.

HELD : she could not claim as compensation under s. 2 of the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, a sum representing this depreciation in the value of her shares.

[FOR S. 2 OF THE ACQUISITION OF LAND (ASSESSMENT OF COMPENSATION) ACT, 1919, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 2, p. 1178.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Horn v. Sunderland Corporation, [1941] 1 All E.R. 480; [1941] 2 K.B. 26; 110 L.J.K.B. 353; 165 L.T. 298; 105 J.P. 223; 85 Sol. Jo. 212; 57 T.L.R. 404; Digest Supp.
- (2) Smith, Stone & Knight, Ltd. v. Birmingham Corporation, [1939] 4 All E.R. 116; 161 L.T. 371; 104 J.P. 31; 83 Sol. Jo. 961; Digest Supp.

AWARD in the form of a SPECIAL CASE stated by an Official Arbitrator appointed under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

H. A. Hill (for the appellant).

G. D. Squibb (for the respondents).

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is an award in the form of a Special Case stated by an official arbitrator appointed under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919. The appellant, Mrs. Roberts, is the owner of the land which the respondents, Coventry Corporation, have acquired compulsorily. On that site a company named F. Roberts & Sons, Ltd., were carrying on business, and were her tenants on a yearly tenancy. She was the principal shareholder in that company, holding a large majority of the shares, and the other two shareholders were her sons. The corporation having given notice to acquire this land, an arbitration was held, and before the official arbitrator there was no question that the value of the land, as land and as between a willing purchaser and a willing seller, was £13,500. The appellant, however, also claimed a further sum of £1,775, on the ground that it was an advantage to her as the principal shareholder in the company that the company should carry on their business on her land. As long as it did so, she said, she had a greater interest in and a control of the company and it would be a disadvantage to her if the company were dispossessed and could no longer carry on business on the land, and the value of her shares would be depreciated. The arbitrator found that the depreciation of the shares was £1,775, if she were entitled to claim it, and the question for this court is whether, in addition to the value of the land, she is entitled to that sum.

I am content to put my judgment on the short ground that that damage is far too remote for the appellant to be able to claim compensation in respect of it. The company is carrying on its own business. The fact that the appellant is a shareholder in the company does not give her a right to claim in respect of a loss which the company will suffer. It is said that she is entitled to claim, not because she is a corporator in the company, but because she is also the landowner. In my opinion, the only loss she has suffered is the value of the land which is being taken from her and that she is not entitled to have taken into account any possible depreciation in the value of the shares if the company has to carry on business elsewhere. In my opinion, the question submitted to the court by the arbitrator should be answered in the negative, and, therefore, the award will stand for £13,500, plus solicitors' scale costs for the conveyance and the other fees set out in the award, and the award for costs will be as the arbitrator has directed.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J.: I have come to the same conclusion. I do not find it necessary to go into the many questions which have been discussed before us as to what precisely is the extent to which, under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, the right of a landowner to compensation is either limited, circumscribed or increased; the loss which is here in question is a loss by reason of the fact that the respondent corporation, having acquired the premises, may give notice which the appellant herself could give were she minded for any reason to do it, to terminate the tenancy which the company at present has. If that notice were given, either by the appellant or by the corporation after the property has been acquired, it is the company which would suffer the loss, and I should have thought it was plain almost beyond possibility of argument that a corporator in the company, as such, would have no claim. The arbitrator says in the Case that the loss he was dealing with in this respect was a loss of the appellant in her capacity as shareholder and director. Her case is: "I claim as a landowner, but I happen at the same time to be a large shareholder and a director: accordingly, I am entitled to say that in my capacity as owner of the land, I am suffering some sort of additional loss which I am entitled to recover under s. 2 (6) of the Act of 1919." I regard that as an astonishing proposition. I do not see where it is to stop. I put the case to counsel for the appellant: "Supposing the company had been a sub-tenant of compulsorily acquired land, what would be the position of the appellant then if she made a claim as shareholder in the company which owned a sub-tenancy?" As I understood, he agreed that there could be no separate claim by the appellant to compensation by reason of the property of the sub-tenant having been acquired in the way the tenancy of this company has been acquired. I agree with my Lord. This seems to me to be very remote. I think that to allow the claim would be to break in on a rule which I thought was fairly well established, viz., that a corporator in a company has no direct claim as corporator in respect of a loss which the company makes. I cannot see that it makes any difference that the appellant is also a director. A director is only a servant and agent of the company, with special duties and special responsibilities. How that makes any difference to him as a shareholder, it is a little difficult to understand. I agree that the order should be in the form proposed by my Lord.

Question answered.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard, agents for Browne, Jacobson & Hallam, Nottingham (for the appellant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for the Town Clerk of Coventry (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. EAST KESTEVEN RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ex parte SLEAFORD & DISTRICT WHITE CITY SPORTS STADIUM CO.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Croom-Johnson, JJ.), January 21, 1947.]

Town and Country Planning—Agricultural land—Refusal to permit construction of a sports stadium—Over-riding need of agriculture—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 10 (5).

The Minister of Town and Country Planning, in determining an appeal against the decision of a planning authority under s. 10 (5) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, is entitled to refuse permission for the development of agricultural land as a sports stadium on the ground of "the over-riding need to preserve for agricultural use any land which can be so used and is not required for essential development, even though its quality may not be high."

[FOR THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACT, 1932, s. 10 (3), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 25, p. 482; and for THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING (INTERIM DEVELOPMENT) ACT, 1943, s. 1, see ibid., Vol. 36, p. 240.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) R. v. Johnson, [1905] 2 K.B. 59; 74 L.J.K.B. 585; 92 L.T. 654; 69 J.P. 236; 53 W.R. 655; 21 T.L.R. 423; 49 Sol. Jo. 460; 16 Digest 414, 2732.
- (2) Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179; 80 L.J.K.B. 796; 104 L.T. 689; 75 J.P. 393; 27 T.L.R. 378; 55 Sol. Jo. 440; 9 L.G.R. 652; H.L.; 19 Digest 554, 9.
- (3) Local Government Board v. Arlidge, [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 30 T.L.R. 672; 38 Digest 97, 708.
- (4) R. v. Hendon R.D.C., Ex parte Chorley, [1933] 2 K.B. 696; 102 L.J.K.B. 658; 149 L.T. 535; 97 J.P. 210; 49 T.L.R. 482; 31 L.G.R. 332; Digest Supp.
- (5) Denby (Wilham) & Sons, Ltd. v. Minister of Health, [1936] 1 K.B. 337; 105 L.J.K.B. 134; 154 L.T. 180; 100 J.P. 107; 32 T.L.R. 173; Digest Supp.
- (6) R. v. Minister of Health, Ex parte Glamorgan County Mental Hospital (Committee of Visitors), [1938] 4 All E.R. 32; [1939] 1 K.B. 232; 108 L.J.K.B. 27; 159 L.T. 508; 102 J.P. 497; 55 T.L.R. 4; Digest Supp.

APPLICATIONS for orders of certiorari and mandamus directed to the Minister of Town and Country Planning to bring up and quash, and to order him to hear and determine in accordance with law, a decision of his under the Town and Country Planning Acts, 1932 and 1943. The Minister had dismissed an appeal by the applicants against the refusal of the East Kesteven Rural District Council to give permission for the development of agricultural land at Leasingham, Lincolnshire, as a sports stadium. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

P. E. Sandlands, K.C., and G. R. Swanwick for the applicants.

The Attorney General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and H. L. Parker for the Minister of Town and Country Planning.

G. D. Squibb for the East Kesteven Rural District Council.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is a motion for certiorari directed to the Minister of Town and Country Planning to bring up and quash a decision which he has given dismissing an appeal by the Sleaford & District White City Sports Stadium Co., which we are told is a partnership, under the Town and Country

Planning Act, 1932, s. 10, and the Town and Country Planning Act, 1943, s. 1, against the refusal of East Kesteven Rural District Council to grant permission for the development as a sports stadium, under the protection of the Town and Country Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1945, of land situate in the parish of Leasingham in the county of Lincoln. The Minister has given as his reasons for so doing that "he has felt obliged to pay particular regard to the over-riding need to preserve for agricultural use any land which can be so used and is not required for essential development, even though its quality may not be high."

The circumstances of the case as disclosed in the affidavits are that the applicants for the order desire to establish in the area of the rural district council a stadium for sports of all sorts. The question is whether or not, an application having been made to the rural district council, and the council having refused their consent on the same grounds as the Minister, the Minister's decision is ultra vires the powers given him under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932.

Without going in detail through the somewhat complicated provisions of these Acts, the main provision is that a council may provide a scheme for the planning of their district, which may be an urban district or, as in this case, a rural district, and it is obvious that the main object which Parliament had in view was that the best and most suitable use was to be made of the land within the district of the planning authority. In considering to what use the land within their district is to be put, the planning authority must be entitled to consider whether certain land should be kept and used as agricultural land, or whether it should be used as building land or for some other purpose. If they refuse an application to develop land in a particular way because they think that the land should be kept and used as agricultural land, I cannot see that it is any objection that there is in existence another Minister, namely, the Minister of Agriculture, who can, if he chooses, give directions as to the cultivation of any land in the kingdom. It is not necessary for me to go into details with regard to interim orders of development and resolutions to prepare schemes and so forth, because it is common ground that, when an application is made to the district council for permission to alter the use of the land, they then act under their powers as a planning authority and must consider whether they are going to give consent to the development of the land in the way desired. All the district council have said in this case is: "We are not going to consent to certain land in our district being used for a purpose other than that of agriculture," and it seems to me that to refuse their consent to agricultural land being used for another purpose is clearly within the powers which they have. They can say: "In planning this area we have to make the best use we can of the land. We think that certain land should be kept as agricultural land because potentially it is land which can be used for raising food." Whether it will actually be used for raising food is another matter, but if they choose to keep land within their district as agricultural land, I see nothing in the Act which says that it is beyond their powers to do so. In these circumstances, I think the East Kesteven Rural District Council were within their powers in refusing consent to the building of a stadium on agricultural land, and it follows from that that the Minister was within his powers in upholding that decision. Consequently, the application for certiorari fails, and in those circumstances also no mandamus can be granted. Both these applications fail and must be dismissed with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J. : I agree. Under s. 1 of the Act of 1932, power is given to prepare schemes with respect to land—and it is not unimportant to observe that that is so whether there are or are not buildings on the land—with the object of controlling the development of the land. You may control development if you say: "We will not permit it to be used for any other purpose than its present purpose as agricultural land." I think the same sort of provision is to be found in s. 10 (3) under which, when there is an application for permission to develop land by an interim order, the authority may grant permission subject to such conditions as they think proper to impose, or may refuse the application. It seems to me that there is the widest power conferred on the authority to refuse to allow land to be developed, as it was called in the argument to which we have listened. I can see no ground, therefore, for saying, on these general considerations in addition to those to which the Lord Chief Justice has referred, that the Minister has exceeded the wide powers conferred on him in this case. I can see no excess of jurisdiction, and I agree with the order which is proposed.

Applications dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Cunliffe & Airy, agents for Ernest H. Godson & Co., Sleaford (for the applicants); The Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister of Town and Country Planning); Gibson & Weldon, agents for J. Hunt, Peterborough (for respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HARRIS v. HAWKINS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Croom-Johnson, JJ.), January 20, 1947.]

Infants and Children—Adoption—Dispensing with consent to order—“Person whose consent ought to be given”—Whether limited to person who has failed to contribute to support of infant—Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 2 (3).

The words “or is a person whose consent ought, in the opinion of the court and in all the circumstances of the case to be dispensed with,” in the proviso to s. 2 (3) of the Adoption of Children Act, 1926, which gives justices power to dispense with the consent to an adoption order of such a person, are not limited to the case of a person who is liable to contribute to the support of the child, but are intended to apply to any person whose consent is required under the enacting part of the sub-section.

[FOR THE ADOPTION OF CHILDREN ACT, 1926, s. 2 (3), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 9, p. 827].

CASE STATED by Brighton justices on an application for the making of an adoption order under s. 2 (3) of the Adoption of Children Act, 1926. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Douglas Lowe for the appellant.

C. J. T. Pensotti for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the county borough of Brighton on an application which was made to them by the appellant who desired to adopt an illegitimate child of which she is the natural maternal grandmother. The child was born in 1941 and lived with her mother till the mother died in September, 1944. Thereafter the appellant entered into an arrangement with the respondent, the putative father, that he should have the custody of the infant four days each week and that she should have the custody for the remaining three days of the week. This arrangement continued until Mar. 13, 1946, since which date the appellant has not had possession of the infant. We are left to infer from that that the respondent has had the actual custody of the child since Mar. 13, 1946, and, therefore, had the actual custody of the child when the application came before the justices.

The sole point that arises here is whether the justices, if they should see fit to do so, can make an adoption order without obtaining the consent of the respondent, who is the person having the actual custody of the child. That depends entirely on the true construction of s. 2 (3) of the Adoption of Children Act, 1926. It is there provided that:

An adoption order shall not be made except with the consent of every person or body who is a parent or guardian of the infant in respect of whom the application is made or who has the actual custody of the infant or who is liable to contribute to the support of the infant.

The respondent comes under the words “who has the actual custody of the infant,” and, therefore, prima facie, his consent must be obtained, but there is the following proviso to that section:

Provided that the court may dispense with any consent required by this sub-section if satisfied that the person whose consent is to be dispensed with has abandoned or deserted the infant or cannot be found or is incapable of giving such consent or, being a person liable to contribute to the support of the infant, either has persistently neglected or refused to contribute to such support or is a person whose consent ought, in the opinion of the court and in all the circumstances of the case, to be dispensed with.

The justices have taken the view that those words "or is a person whose consent ought, in the opinion of the court and in all the circumstances of the case, to be dispensed with," apply only to the case of a person liable to contribute to the support of the infant. It is said that such a person's consent can be dispensed with if he has persistently neglected or refused to contribute to the support of the infant, or for some other reason is a person whose consent ought to be dispensed with. On the other hand, it is contended by counsel for the appellant—and, in my opinion, rightly contended—that the last three lines of the proviso apply to any person whose consent has to be obtained but whose consent the justices may for one reason or another think in all the circumstances of the case ought to be dispensed with. I attach great importance to the words "and in all the circumstances of the case." It seems to me to be intended to give the justices the widest possible discretion, and I ventured to point out in the course of the argument that, if that be not the right construction, one might certainly get a very remarkable state of affairs. If a most disreputable person had kidnapped a child against the will of its parents and habeas corpus had not been obtained, so that, at the time the application for an adoption order came before the court, that person had the actual custody of the child, though wrongly, and was not liable to support it, the court would not be able to dispense with his consent; or one might get the case of a woman who had been divorced by her husband, the custody of the child being given to the husband, and then a relative of the husband, knowing the husband had difficulty in looking after the child, coming forward and asking for an adoption order, to which the father would consent, but the justices would not be able to dispense with the consent of the mother, who might refuse it purely to annoy her husband.

In my opinion, these words mean exactly what they say and are not limited to the case of a person who is liable to contribute to the support of the child, but are intended to apply to any person whose consent ought to be given if the justices feel in all the circumstances of the case that his consent should be dispensed with. In my opinion, the case should go back to the justices with an intimation that they can dispense with the consent of the respondent if, in all the circumstances of the case, they think it ought to be dispensed with.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I am of the same opinion. I think the proviso was clearly intended to allow the justices, if they think it right in all the circumstances of the case, to dispense with any consent required by the sub-section, and, indeed, those are the opening words of the proviso. I can see no reason why one of the persons, namely, a person who has the actual custody of the infant, who comes within the words "person whose consent is required by this sub-section," should not be a person whose consent may in the discretion of the justices be dispensed with in a particular case. It is for the justices to decide whether the consent in the case of the respondent ought to be dispensed with or not.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J.: Grammatically, I should have thought there was no difficulty about this proviso. What the court is empowered to do is to dispense with the consent of any person whose consent is required under the first part of sub-s. (3) and what follows are reasons why the justices may dispense with consent. They are not obliged to. The matters mentioned are those which they may consider, and, in my judgment, the last 25 words of the proviso are words of general application giving a general reason for the justices dispensing with consent with regard to a particular person, and are not limited to applying that particular reason only in the case of a person who is liable to contribute to the support of the infant. I should have thought as a pure matter of English grammar that a different view would lead to a hopeless construction. I agree with the order proposed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Gordon Gardiner, Carpenter & Co., agents for F. H. Carpenter, Brighton (for the appellant); Haslewood, Hare & Co., agents for Bosley & Co., Brighton (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. EDWARDS AND OTHERS, Ex parte JOSEPH.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Croom-Johnson, JJ.), January 20, 1947.]

Public Health—Housing—Limitation of purchase price of houses constructed under building licence—Sale of registered land at price exceeding limit—Place of sale—Jurisdiction of justices—Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), ss. 7 (1), 9 (3).

A
A sale, within the meaning of the Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945, s. 7 (1), takes place where the contract is completed, and it is immaterial that the transaction requires registration at the Land Registry Office. Consequently, justices for the area in which the sale is completed, and not those in the Land Registry area, have jurisdiction to deal with a summons for contravening s. 7 (1).

[FOR THE BUILDING MATERIALS AND HOUSING ACT, 1945, ss. 7 (1) and 9, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 38, pp. 373, 375]

MOTION for an order of prohibition to be directed to Essex justices sitting at Becontree prohibiting them from proceeding on two summonses charging the applicant with unlawfully selling a house, constructed under the authority of a licence granted for the purpose of a Defence Regulation subject to a condition limiting the price for which the house might be sold, for a greater price than the price so limited, contrary to s. 7 of the Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945. The application was made on the ground that the sale did not take place in the area of the justices and they, accordingly, had no jurisdiction. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

C. L. Henderson, K.C., and Frank Whitworth for the applicant.
Nelson, K.C., and Vernon Gattie for the respondents.

D
LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is an application for a writ of prohibition to be addressed to the justices of Essex sitting in the Beacontree division prohibiting them from proceeding on two summonses which have been issued against the applicant charging him that he "unlawfully did sell a house, to wit, 228, Sheringham Avenue, East Ham, constructed under the authority of a licence granted for the purpose of a Defence Regulation, which said licence was granted subject to a condition limiting the price for which the house might be sold, for a greater price than the price so limited, contrary to . . . s. 7 of the Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945." It is not suggested that the applicant in this case did not commit an offence, but he has an objection to being dealt with by the justices of the Beacontree Division and says he prefers to be dealt with by the magistrate sitting at Bow Street. Those are the merits, so far as one can dignify them by the term, of this application, and it really all comes down to the question what the word "sell" means in the Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945.

E
F
The object of that Act was to prevent people getting a licence under the Defence Regulations, which entitled them to use building materials and so forth in building a house, and also to make it a condition that they must not sell the house for more than a certain sum of money, and then, selling the house when they had built it in excess of what the licence provided. In other words, the Act is designed to stop what sometimes may be inaccurately described as profiteering in houses. If you are given a licence to build a house with a condition that you shall not sell it for not more than £1,000 and you sell it for £1,500, you commit an offence under the Act. Section 7 provides:

G
H
(1) Where a house has been constructed under the authority of a licence granted for the purposes of a Defence Regulation (hereinafter referred to as "a building licence") and the licence, whether granted before or after the passing of this Act, has been granted subject to any condition limiting the price for which the house may be sold . . . any person who, during the period of four years beginning with the passing of this Act, sells or offers to sell the house for a greater price than the price so limited . . . shall be guilty of an offence.

By s. 9 (3) it is provided:

For the purposes of this Act, (a) a person sells a house if he sells or agrees to sell any interest in the house. . . .

That clearly shows that a person can commit an offence under the Act even if he agrees to sell the house, which would mean that he has entered into a contract to sell the house but has not perfected the matter and the matter is not completed. The point that is taken in the present case is that, as this was registered land, and, therefore, the sale had to be registered and the land registration certificate issued at the Land Registry, the sale was not complete until that was done; that was done at the Land Registry in Lincoln's Inn Fields; and, therefore, the offence, if any, was committed in Lincoln's Inn Fields. In my opinion, that is not correct.

The vendor carried out the preliminary negotiations and so forth and signed the contract of sale, in the county borough of East Ham, more than 500 yards from the boundary of the Beacontree division, and any proceedings in relation to the agreement to sell would have to be taken before the stipendiary magistrate at East Ham, but the completion of the purchase, as that is understood by conveyancers and others, took place at a solicitor's office at Barking, which is in the Beacontree division. The money was paid there; the necessary documents were there put into the possession of the solicitor to enable him to send them to the Land Registry and get this transaction registered and the necessary certificate issued by the Land Registry. The sale, therefore, took place at Barking, where the money was paid and the completion took place. It seems to me that for the purposes of the Building Materials and Housing Act we are not concerned with all the nice provisions of the Land Registration Act dealing with the registration of a completed transaction. All we have to see is where the sale took place. I am satisfied that the sale took place within the meaning of this section in the office at Barking, and the Beacontree justices came to the right conclusion when they said that they had jurisdiction. There is no ground for granting this application for a rule of prohibition and the application is dismissed.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I agree.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J.: I agree, for the reasons given by my Lord.

Rule discharged with costs.

Solicitors: Kingsford, Dorman & Co., agents for Hatten, Asplin, Jewers & Glenny, Barking, Essex (for the applicant); Duthie, Hart & Duthie (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FABBRI v. MORRIS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.
December 12, 1946.)]

Highways—Wilful obstruction of footway—Business not carried on in normal manner—Selling from window of, and not inside, shop—Liability of shopkeeper—Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 72.

A shopkeeper sold ice-cream from a window of her shop, which the justices found was not the ordinary manner of conducting her business. A crowd assembled which obstructed the highway, and the shopkeeper ignored a suggestion made by the police that the sale be made within the shop.

HELD: as the obstruction could have been avoided by the shopkeeper selling the ice-cream inside the shop in the ordinary way and not through the window, the obstruction was wilful and the shopkeeper was liable.

Dwyer v. Mansfield, [1946] 2 All E.R. 247, distinguished.

[FOR S. 72 OF THE HIGHWAY ACT, 1835, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 9, pp. 86-89.]

Case referred to:

(1) Dwyer and another v. Mansfield, [1946] 2 All E.R. 247; [1946] K.B. 437; 175 L.T. 61; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Birkenhead justices.

The appellant sold ice-cream from the window of her shop with the result that people were attracted in considerable numbers and an obstruction of the highway was caused. A police constable drew her attention to the obstruction and suggested that she should sell inside the shop in the ordinary way. The justices found that the obstruction would have been avoided had she complied with this suggestion and that by her failure so to do she wilfully caused an obstruction. They, therefore, convicted the appellant of wilfully obstructing the passage of the footway, contrary to s. 72 of the Highways Act, 1835. The appellant appealed.

Kennan for appellant.

H. G. Garland for respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case Stated by the Birkenhead justices who convicted the appellant of an offence under the Highway Act, 1835, s. 72. The appellant is a manageress of shop premises which have a frontage of 30ft. consisting of two interconnected shops with a narrow recess, 27ins. deep and 9ft. wide in front of the shop window, the recess being no part of the highway. The appellant had a machine inside the shop for making ice-cream, which she sold to persons on the street, not in her shop, but through the window. No doubt, when persons were actually buying the ice-cream they were standing in the recess which is no part of the footway, but, as such an unusual commodity as ice-cream was being supplied, people who were anxious to purchase it collected in considerable numbers on the pavement and that caused an obstruction. Apparently, these people did not form a queue, but gathered round the window. Attention was called by a police constable to the fact that this obstruction was being caused by the fact that people were being supplied through the window and not in what would be the ordinary way, inside the shop, and it was suggested that the appellant should sell in the shop and open both doors so that the people could come in at one door and go out at the other. The justices, whose local knowledge is valuable in these cases, found that there was without doubt an obstruction and that it could have been avoided had the appellant sold the ice-cream inside the shop premises and not through the window.

If a person is selling in the ordinary way from a shop, he cannot be held responsible because a queue forms in the street of people anxious to go into the shop and buy. If he is carrying on business in the ordinary way, no offence is committed, as was recently pointed out by ATKINSON, J., in Dwyer v. Mansfield (1). In that case the shopkeeper was a greengrocer, and at the time in question he was selling potatoes of which there was a scarcity. People in the neighbourhood, learning that potatoes were for sale, "queued up," and the queue obstructed the highway because it extended in front of other shops and impeded the free passage of people into them. ATKINSON, J., held, after a review of the cases, that the shopkeeper could not be held responsible because he was carrying on his business in a normal and ordinary way. In that case the shopkeeper was selling in the shop, and I think counsel for the respondent is right in pointing out that, if it had been held that the shopkeeper could in no event be responsible, it would have been open to any shopkeeper, instead of supplying the public in his shop, to supply them on the highway. I cannot think that the mere fact that there is in the present case a small recess in front of the shop so that persons can just step into it makes any difference. The justices are of opinion, knowing, as they do, the premises and the neighbourhood, that there would not have been an obstruction if the appellant had opened the door and supplied people in the shop. That is a matter that the justices are entitled to find, and in view of that finding it seems to me that they were justified in saying that the appellant, having been informed of the crowd that was assembled and having been requested to open both doors of the shop and having failed to do so, wilfully caused an obstruction. I think, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I am of the same opinion. I would only add that, as I understand it, the decision of this court is given on the particular facts of this case.

LEWIS, J.: I agree. If the appellant had been carrying on business in a normal and proper manner there could have been no offence.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Berkson & Berkson, Birkenhead (for appellant); Robins, Hay & Waters, agents for D. P. Heath, Birkenhead (for respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DICKER (deceased)

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), January 16, 17, 29, 1947.]

Will—Construction—Gift to a class of children or an only child—Illegitimate child.

By her will, dated Apr. 20, 1940, the testatrix gave legacies to various named relatives and one "to my nephew J.X." She then directed that her residuary estate (subject to a life interest in her sister Mrs. X., who predeceased her) should be divided into four equal shares. As to three of such shares no question arose, but the fourth share was given on trust to divide the capital and income thereof equally between the children of Mrs. X., living at her death if more than one, and, if only one, to that child absolutely. J.X. was the only child of Mrs. X., he being illegitimate. The evidence of what the testatrix knew of the facts went no further than to show that she was aware that J.X.'s status as the legitimate child of Mrs. X. was open to doubt.

HELD : (i) the mere description of J.X. as the nephew of the testatrix in one clause of the will would not of itself entitle him to count as a child of her sister under another clause: Re Hall (3) followed.

(ii) "child" in the absence of a clear controlling context or plainly rebutting circumstance means legitimate child: see Hill v. Crook (4); Dorin v. Dorin (5); Re Pearce (6).

(iii) the testatrix expressed an intention to benefit either (a) a class of children, or (b) an only child, and there was no ground for holding that she meant the class of children to include any illegitimate child, and, therefore, an illegitimate child could not come in as an only child, with the result that the share in question was undisposed of by the will.

But aliter if the gift had been to Mrs. X.'s "child" (without any mention of "children"): see Re Eve (7).

[AS TO INCLUSION OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 292-296, paras. 344-347; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 807-817, Nos. 6603-6685.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Re Deloitte, Griffiths v. Deloitte, [1926] Ch. 56; 95 L.J.Ch. 154; 135 L.T. 150; 37 Digest 149, 752.

(2) Re Blake, Berry v. Geen, [1938] 2 All E.R. 362; 107 L.J.Ch. 173; 54 T.L.R. 703; sub nom., Berry v. Geen, [1938] A.C. 575; 159 L.T. 122; Digest Supp.

(3) Re Hall, Branton v. Weightman (1887), 35 Ch.D. 551; 56 L.J.Ch. 780; 57 L.T. 42; 44 Digest 819, 6703.

(4) Hill v. Crook (1873), L.R. 6 H.L. 265; 42 L.J.Ch. 702; 44 Digest 808, 6614.

(5) Dorin v. Dorin (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 568; 45 L.J.Ch. 652; 33 L.T. 281; 39 J.P. 790; 44 Digest 809, 6616.

(6) Re Pearce, Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Francis, [1914] 1 Ch. 254; 83 L.J.Ch. 266; 110 L.T. 168; 44 Digest 810, 6627.

(7) Re Eve, Edwards v. Burns, [1909] 1 Ch. 796; 78 L.J.Ch. 388; 100 L.T. 874; 44 Digest 812, 6646.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, when the testatrix had given a specific legacy to a named nephew and her residuary estate on trust to divide the capital and income thereof equally between a class of children if more than one, and, failing one, to that one absolutely, the nephew, who was the only child of the testatrix's sister and illegitimate, could take under it.

H. A. Rose for the plaintiff.

A. J. Belsham, McMullan & Jopling for the several defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 29. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. The question which I have to decide is whether the first defendant, John Edward X. (whom I will call "John X."), is entitled to the one fourth share of her residuary estate which the testatrix, Henrietta Sophia Dicker, by her will directed (in effect) to go to the children of her sister, Beatrice Harriet X. (whom I will call "Mrs. X."), equally, if more than one, or, if there should be only one such child, then to that one child absolutely.

The difficulty arises in the following circumstances. John X was born in 1900 and was the child of Mrs. X. by the man to whom she was married some three years later in South Africa. John X. does not, and, presumably, cannot, claim to have been legitimated either under English or South African law by the subsequent marriage of his parents, because his father was at the time of his birth married to a third person. He, therefore, was and is, in fact, illegitimate. Mrs. X. never had any other child. She died on June 2, 1941, predeceasing her sister, the testatrix, whose death occurred on Apr. 28, 1943.

The testatrix was the elder of the two. She made her will on Apr. 20, 1940, she being then more than 80, and Mrs. X. being more than 77 years of age. Among other legacies to various relatives named and described as such is the following: "To my nephew John X. £300." She directed that her residuary estate, subject to a life interest in Mrs. X., who, as I have said, died before her, should be divided into four equal shares. As to three of such shares no question arises. The fourth is given, ungrammatically, on trust to divide the capital and income thereof equally between the children of Mrs. X. living at her death, if more than one, and, if only one, to that child absolutely.

The evidence which has been filed of what the testatrix knew of the facts which I have mentioned goes no further than that she was aware that John X.'s status as a legitimate child of Mrs. X. "was open to doubt," and that in conversation she would refer to him as "Beatrice's child" or as "my nephew." I am not told that she knew, or even believed, that he was Mrs. X.'s only child, and I should have had the greatest difficulty in crediting her with any such knowledge or belief in the face of the reference in her will to her sister's children or child. That reference plainly implies that she thought when she made her will that there were, or might be, two or more children of Mrs. X. then in existence, for I dismiss as absurd the suggestion that this old lady of over 80 can possibly have had in her mind the idea that her sister of over 77 might thereafter have another child, nor, in my judgment, am I thereby offending against any principle laid down in Re Deloitte (1), or in Re Blake, Berry v. Geen (2).

It is well settled that the mere description of John X. as the nephew of the testatrix in one clause of her will would not of itself entitle him to count as a child of her sister under another clause: see Re Hall (3). This is because the word "child," in the absence of a clear controlling context or plainly rebutting circumstance, means legitimate child: see Hill v. Crook (4), Dorin v. Dorin (5), and Re Pearce (6). No such context and no such circumstance is to be found here. The testatrix in the relevant clause of her will expresses her intention to benefit either (a) a class of children or (b) an only child. I can see no possible ground for holding that she meant the class of children to include any illegitimate children or child, and, therefore, I fail to see how an illegitimate child can possibly come in as an only child. If the gift had been to Mrs. X.'s "child" (without any mention of "children") the case would have been different: see Re Eve (7).

I confess that I should like to have found some reason for deciding this matter in John X.'s favour because I strongly suspect that the verbiage of the clause in question was introduced into it by the draftsman in conformity with the wording of the clauses relating to two of the other three fourth shares. The unnecessary allusion to children in the plural would usually have been innocuous. My suspicion may be wrong, and, in any case, I have to construe the will as it stands. If, as is probable, the testatrix was fully aware of all the facts and had intended John X. to take the share if he survived his mother, she could so easily have said so in plain terms. I am bound to declare that the share in question is undisposed of by the will of the testatrix and devolves as under her partial intestacy. The costs of all parties as between solicitor and client must be raised and paid out of the estate in due course of administration, which means, I suppose, that they will come primarily out of the said share.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Bannister & Fache (for plaintiff); Fine & Hawkins; Church, Adams & Co.; and Ince & Co. (for defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BUCHLER v. BUCHLER

Order of LORD GREENE, M.R., at p. 20, applied. BARTHOLOMEW v. EDWARDS. [1952] 2 All E.R. 1035. L (Lord Greene, M.R., Asquith, L.J., and Vaisey, J.), 10, 11, 12, 13, 1946, January 24, 1947.]

Divorce—Desertion—Constructive desertion—Need to prove both factum and animus on part of respondent—Conduct equivalent to expulsion of other spouse—Inference of intention to end consortium—Husband's association with male servant—Persistence despite wife's threat to leave matrimonial home.

Where the desertion alleged in a petition for divorce on the ground of desertion is constructive desertion, it is important to see that the circumstances necessary to constitute that offence are present before the final step of dissolving the marriage is taken by the court. Incompatibility of temperament or unhappiness in the marital relationship which is not caused by cruelty are not by themselves grounds of divorce, nor by themselves do they entitle the spouse affected to leave the matrimonial home and then to claim that the other spouse, even if he or she is alone to blame for the ill-success of the marriage, has been guilty of the grave matrimonial offence of desertion. It is as necessary in cases of constructive desertion as it is in cases of actual desertion to prove both the factum and the animus on the part of the spouse charged with the offence of desertion. The spouse charged must be shown to have been guilty of conduct equivalent to "driving the other spouse away" from the matrimonial home and to have done so with the intention of bringing the matrimonial consortium to an end. In each case the intention may be inferred if the circumstances are such as to justify the inference. The acts alleged to be equivalent to an expulsion of the complaining spouse must be of such gravity and so clearly established that they can fairly be so described. If they do not satisfy this test, not only is expulsion in fact not proved, but it is not legitimate to infer an intention to desert. A man may wish that his wife would leave him, but such a wish, unless accompanied by conduct which the court can properly regard as equivalent to expulsion in fact, can have no effect whatever. Conversely, where the conduct of the required nature is established, the necessary intention is readily inferred, since no one can be heard to say that he did not intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts. The acts sufficient to satisfy this test must be of a serious and convincing nature, but conduct short of an actual matrimonial offence may be sufficient. The conduct, however, must, from the very nature of the offence of desertion, obviously be of a grave and convincing character. Whether in any given case this requirement is fulfilled is a question of fact on which a jury would require to be carefully directed.

A husband formed an association with one of his male farm-hands which, while in no way sexually improper, was persisted in by the husband to the exclusion of his wife and to such an extent as to cause her great distress and to arouse comment among friends and neighbours and villagers who would be likely to think it had a homosexual basis. The wife continually objected to the husband's conduct, and ultimately stated that she would leave the matrimonial home unless it ceased. The husband replied that, if the wife did not like it, she could "clear out," and he persisted in the association, with the result that she left him. On the wife's petition and the husband's cross-petition for divorce on the ground of desertion:—

HELD: while the husband's conduct, no doubt, caused the wife intense unhappiness and was such that no decent man would have been guilty of it, it did not justify her in treating it as a dismissal from the consortium and in leaving the matrimonial home.

[As to CONSTRUCTIVE DESERTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 655, para. 964; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 315, 316, Nos. 2930-2939.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Leng v. Leng, [1946] 2 All E.R. 590; 175 L.T. 517; 110 J.P. 395.
- (2) Boyd v. Boyd, [1938] 4 All E.R. 181; 108 L.J.P. 25; 159 L.T. 522; Digest Supp.
- (3) Sickert v. Sickert, [1899] P. 278; 68 L.J.P. 114; 81 L.T. 495; 27 Digest 315, 2930.

APPEAL from a decision of WALLINGTON, J., dated July 5, 1946 (reported, 110 J.P. 335).

In consolidated suits the wife, who had left the matrimonial home on Oct. 7, 1942, petitioned for divorce on the ground that the husband's conduct had obliged her to leave home, and the husband in his cross-petition alleged that the wife was guilty of deserting him. WALLINGTON, J., granted a decree to the wife and rejected the prayer in the petition of the husband who appealed. The facts appear fully in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and Harold Brown for the husband.
Beyfus, K.C., and Leslie Brooks for the wife.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 24. The following judgments were read :

LORD GREENE, M.R. : In these consolidated suits in which each of the parties was asking for a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion by the other for the statutory period WALLINGTON, J., granted a decree to the wife and rejected the prayer of the husband's petition. The desertion of which the judge found the husband guilty was what is known as "constructive" desertion. The wife left the matrimonial home on Apr. 1, 1941. The circumstances relating to her departure might, as the judge thought, be treated as to some extent equivocal and, with the concurrence of both sides, he treated Oct. 7, 1942, as the crucial date, that being the date of a letter to her husband in which she said : "I have decided after a great deal of thought during a very long time now that I am not returning home." After his wife left him on Apr. 1, 1941, the husband never made any attempt to induce her to return to him and apparently had no desire even to discuss the matter. As the judge very naturally confessed, the case was one which gave him considerable anxiety and from time to time his mind wavered and fluctuated. He felt oppressed by the fact that it was the first case of the kind in the books, for he was, as he said, confronted with a set of circumstances without precedent. It is manifest, therefore, that this appeal demands, as it has received, the most careful consideration.

Now that desertion for the statutory period of three years is by itself a ground for divorce, that particular matrimonial offence has assumed a greater practical importance than it had before. Where the desertion alleged is constructive desertion, it is important to see that the circumstances necessary to constitute that offence are present before the final step of dissolving the marriage is taken by the court. It would, I venture to think, be unfortunate if under the guise of alleged constructive desertion a new cause for divorce should imperceptibly creep into our law : see the language of LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Leng v. Leng (1) ([1946] 2 All E.R. 590, at p. 593). Incompatibility of temperament and unhappiness in the marital relationship which is not caused by cruelty are not by themselves grounds of divorce, nor by themselves do they entitle the spouse affected to leave the matrimonial home and then to claim that the other spouse, even if he or she is alone to blame for the ill-success of the marriage, has been guilty of the grave matrimonial offence of desertion. It is as necessary in cases of constructive desertion as it is in cases of actual desertion to prove both the factum and the animus on the part of the spouse charged with the offence of desertion. The practical difference between the two cases lies in the difference in the circumstances which will constitute such proof. In actual desertion the spouse charged must be shown to have abandoned the matrimonial consortium in fact and to have done so with the intention of deserting. In constructive desertion the spouse charged must be shown to have been guilty of conduct equivalent to "driving the other spouse away" : per BUCKNILL, J., in Boyd v. Boyd (2) ([1938] 4 All E.R. 181, at p. 183); from the matrimonial home and to have done so with the intention of bringing the matrimonial consortium to an end. In each case the intention may, of course, be inferred if the circumstances are such as to justify the inference. In the case of actual desertion the mere act of one spouse in leaving the matrimonial home will in general make the inference an easy one. In the case of constructive desertion where there is no such significant act as a departure by the spouse who is alleged to be in desertion, the acts alleged to be equivalent to an expulsion of the complaining spouse must be of such gravity and so clearly established that they can fairly be so described. If they do not satisfy this test, not only is expulsion in fact not proved, but it is not legitimate to infer an intention to desert. A man may wish that his wife will leave him, but such a wish, unless accompanied by conduct which the court can properly regard as equivalent to expulsion in fact, can have no effect whatever. Conversely, where the conduct of the required nature is established, the necessary intention is readily inferred since no one can be heard to say that he did not intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts: Sickert v. Sickert (3) ([1899] P. 278). The crucial matter for consideration, therefore, is the nature of the conduct relied on as equivalent to an expulsion of the complaining spouse.

A It must, I think, be accepted that the acts sufficient to satisfy this test must be of a serious and convincing nature. Counsel for the husband submitted that nothing short of a matrimonial offence such as cruelty or adultery would suffice, and he pointed out that, even in the case of adultery, some more flagrant conduct beyond the mere commission of adultery had always been present in the reported cases, but he eventually found himself compelled to agree that conduct short of an actual matrimonial offence might be sufficient. In this I agree with him, but the necessary conduct must, from the very nature of the offence of desertion, obviously be of a grave and convincing character. Whether in any given case this requirement is fulfilled is a question of fact on which a jury would require to be carefully directed. It would be for the judge to say whether the facts were capable of being regarded as equivalent to an expulsion from the matrimonial home.

C I now turn to the facts of this case. There is no suggestion of cruelty or of any other matrimonial offence. The wife's case is based entirely on the allegation that the husband's association with a man in his service, named Harris, was conducted in such a manner and with such lack of consideration for the wife's feelings as to cause her unhappiness and a sense of humiliation over a period of years. In her own words, the marriage "gradually deteriorated until there was no marriage whatsoever."

D The marriage took place on June 14, 1928. On the death of his father on Jan. 1, 1932, the husband gave up his business in London and became manager for his mother of his late father's farm near Reigate. Harris "about whom," as the judge said, "the whole of the difficulty in this married life had arisen," had been engaged by the father shortly before his death as pigman, and he continued in that employment under the husband's management. Later, he was promoted to the position of bailiff. Not long after the death of the father the husband began to form a friendship with Harris which developed into a very close and remarkable association. As the judge found, the friendship was a perfectly clean one, and there was no foundation for any suggestion that the relationship was of a homosexual or other degrading character. Before us counsel for the wife not only accepted that finding, but strenuously disclaimed having made any such suggestion at any time in the course of the case. This disclaimer, of course, I accept. He did, however, make a great point of the suggestion that people would inevitably think that the relationship between the two men was a homosexual one. The judge accepted this suggestion, and it formed one of the main grounds of his decision. One may perhaps wonder to what extent a man should allow his actions to be affected by scandalous gossip of this kind—if, indeed, it existed in the present case. The judge's view seems to have been that the husband ought to have given way to it and abandoned the friendship. There is nothing in the evidence to suggest that, at any rate on the side of the husband, this friendship was other than a genuine and deep-rooted attachment. The wife, however, ascribed the friendship on her husband's side to the fact that he was very easily flattered. As regards Harris, although the wife did throw out a suggestion that he was a "schemer" concerned only with the material benefits which the relationship conferred on him, there is no other evidence to this effect and the suggestion—surely an unworthy one in the case of a "very honest fellow"—can, I think, only be ascribed to the strong dislike which the wife felt for Harris and his association with her husband. H The friendship was, no doubt, an unusual one in the sense that the two parties to it differed so widely in regard to class and education, but to treat this circumstance as in any way affecting the sincerity of the friendship or the value which the husband attached to it is to give an entirely wrong colour to the situation. The wife regarded the friendship as "unnecessary." Things which the husband did with or for Harris were in her view "unnecessary." The judge went so far as to say that, if the husband had had any real sense of his duty to his wife, he would have given up this friendship with Harris

"which was not vital to him in any business or social sense" when he realised that it was distressing her. Some people might think this to be a strange view of friendship and might prefer to think "The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel." Opinions on such a subject may differ, but to say that a considerate and self-sacrificing husband should give up his friend to please his wife is one thing. It is quite a different thing to treat a valued friendship as a thing to be lightly discarded because it is not vital in a business or social sense.

The husband evidently thought that his wife's objections to the friendship were unreasonable and due to snobbery, and he refused to give it up or to modify his behaviour in relation to it. His affection for her had, undoubtedly, cooled. He ceased to take the same pleasure in her company as he had taken in the early years of their marriage and I am prepared to accept the view that he deliberately refused to fall in with his wife's wishes and give up his friendship for Harris, well knowing that it distressed her. I am also satisfied that there were many respects short of giving up or weakening his friendship in which he might have acted with greater regard for his wife's feelings. He was rude and inconsiderate. He, so to speak, flaunted his liking for Harris in the face of his wife and that of the neighbourhood in a way which, to his knowledge and not unnaturally, was distressing and humiliating to her. I must not be thought to fail in appreciating the blameworthy nature of his behaviour, but it is not suggested that these defects in his conduct amounted to cruelty. The question is: Was his conduct such as to amount to turning his wife out of doors, or was it the sort of conduct, blameworthy though it was, which one spouse may, under the obligations of the married state, be called on to put up with throughout, perhaps, the whole of married life, in spite of the fact that great and continuing unhappiness is suffered? Speaking broadly, one would have thought that the risk of such things occurring is one of the risks that a man or woman takes on entering into the condition of matrimony. The legislature has not thought fit to make the continuous unhappiness of one spouse caused by the unkindness, the lack of consideration, the selfishness, or even the drunken degradation of the other spouse, a ground for obtaining a dissolution of the marriage. I say "speaking broadly" merely to emphasise the distinction which, however lacking it may be in precise definition, unquestionably exists between those actions, such as cruelty, adultery, desertion, which the legislature regards as good grounds for a dissolution, and that type of unhappiness which, however deplorable it may be, one spouse is, as the law stands, bound to endure at the hands of the other. But, as I have already said, in cases of alleged constructive desertion it is essential to examine the actual facts to see whether the conduct of the spouse who is to blame can fairly and clearly be said to have crossed the borderline which divides blameworthy conduct causing unhappiness to the other spouse from conduct equivalent to expulsion from the matrimonial home. This leads me to examine a little more closely the conduct of the spouses in relation to the friendship and its manifestations of which the wife complains.

One thing is clear from the wife's own evidence. From the earliest days before what she called the "gradual deterioration" of the marriage—and she emphasised the gradual nature of the change—could have proceeded very far, she set herself to break up the friendship which was developing between her husband and Harris. She had at one time a suspicion—some people might perhaps think it an unworthy one—that there was an improper sexual relationship between them. There can, I think, be little doubt that this suspicion, although she discarded it, did, so long as it existed, influence her attitude, and she was, no doubt, affected by her belief that people in the neighbourhood did entertain a similar suspicion. The judge, in some rather cryptic passages, expressed the view that these suspicions were current in the neighbourhood, but counsel for the wife was unable to call our attention to any passage in the evidence which could support such a view. The position of the wife, believing, as she said, that other people were saying (what she herself knew to be untrue) that her husband was guilty of an infamous crime was an extremely painful one. She can scarcely be blamed for wishing that her husband would give up a friendship which led, as she thought, to such abominable gossip, or for doing everything that she could to induce him to do so. On the other hand, the husband, knowing himself to be innocent, would not unnaturally resent the imputation (if she told him of it as she said that she did) and it would be no more than human on his part to refuse to allow his conduct to be in any way influenced by it. It might, perhaps, be thought too much to have expected from the wife that she should stand by her husband in the face of such slanders and show by her behaviour both to her husband and to Harris that she knew that they were untrue, but the mere existence of these alleged slanders is put forward by the wife and regarded by the judge as one of the more important of the circumstances which go to build up the case that the husband was engaged in turning his wife out of doors. Although, however, this was, undoubtedly, one of the reasons which led the wife to attempt to destroy the friendship, her motives, like many human motives, were, no doubt mixed. She objected to many other things in his conduct in relation to Harris. It is difficult to eliminate altogether a certain class feeling—snobbishness is, perhaps, too hard a word—and her husband's growing preference for the society of Harris—a man of little education—must have been extremely humiliating to a woman of her upbringing, but she did, I think, fail to realise that her husband had found a real friend whose company was congenial to him. The word "unnecessary" which in her evidence she repeatedly used to describe the association, and the expression, "this man Harris," which she used more than once, appear to me to throw some light on her attitude. They seem rather out of place when used in relation to a close and genuine friendship. From her point of view they were, perhaps, just, but from the husband's point of view they could scarcely be described as apt or sympathetic.

As I have already said, the wife from the earliest days set out to break up the friendship. It was a friendship in which she was from the first clearly incapable of sharing and she not unnaturally disliked it, but her attempts to bring the friendship to an end all met with failure. Rather they seem to have produced a result opposite to that intended. The husband was clearly much annoyed at being made the subject of such a campaign—indeed, a selfish and obstinate man, as he appears to have been, might well be annoyed.

I must now turn to the circumstances on which the wife principally relies. She does not rest her case on the existence of this friendship as such, but on the fact, as she alleges, that by degrees, over a period of years, it so absorbed her husband's time and interest that she was, in effect, deprived of that association which one spouse is entitled to expect from the other. There can be no doubt that, as the friendship developed and absorbed more and more of her husband's time and interest, she suffered increasing unhappiness and felt very acutely the humiliation of seeing herself, so to speak, displaced in favour of Harris. For a woman to feel that her husband has lost interest in her company and conversation is a misfortune which calls for sympathy and pity. Such cases do, unfortunately, occur—a flagrant example is, of course, that of a husband who degrades himself with drink. The judge's findings of fact are conveniently set out in his judgment (110 J.P. 335, at pp. 337-339). Speaking generally and with certain reservations, counsel for the husband was prepared to accept them. His case was that, even if all of them are accepted, they are far from sufficient to make the husband guilty of the matrimonial offence of desertion. It cannot be disputed that, as the judge found, the reason why the wife left her husband was "her continuous and increasing objection to her husband's association with Harris," or that the husband knew of her objection. The judge also found that he must have known her attitude to be that some day he would have to choose between Harris and her. No doubt, she used expressions of this kind, but the judge appears to have taken the view not merely that the husband ought to have taken them seriously, not merely that he ought to have acceded to her wish that he should give up the friendship (a wish that the husband regarded as unreasonable), but that, by refusing to do what she asked, he was guilty of conduct which in law amounted to turning her out of doors. This view the judge supported by his finding that "on more than one occasion the husband used language of this kind: 'If you do not like it, you know what you can do. You can clear out, and go and live with your mother.' " Now, the very occasional remarks of this kind are, in my opinion and with all respect, given much too much emphasis by the judge. What was the position? The husband had formed what to him was obviously a valued and cherished friendship. His wife was objecting to it for reasons which he considered snobbish and unreasonable and from the first conducted a carefully designed campaign to break it up. It appears to me that in all the circumstances it was to be expected that the husband would express his annoyance in some such phrase. Let me not be misunderstood. A man of refined susceptibilities would, I should hope, have done what his wife asked him, regardless of the sacrifice to himself, but we are not concerned to pass a moral judgment on the husband's conduct as a man. We are concerned, and concerned only, with the question whether his conduct amounted to desertion, and I cannot attach such weight to angry expressions of this kind as to treat them as serious invitations by the husband to his wife to leave the matrimonial home.

The judge then proceeds to find that the husband's conduct with regard to Harris was of such a character as to justify the wife's objection. If the word "justify" is intended to mean (as I think it is) that the conduct of the husband justified the wife in leaving him and thus amounted to desertion on his part it is the crux of the case and it is important to note the reasons given by the judge for taking this view. He says:

The constant association of the husband with Harris not only had the effect of depriving the wife of the full consortium to which she was entitled. Though this of itself would not give her any such rights as she now claims, it was accompanied by an exhibition by the husband to the rest of the farm servants, to the population of the village, and to all the friends and acquaintances of the parties, of a most unusual and unnatural friendship with one of his own servants. By unnatural I do not mean anything sexually improper. There can be no doubt—I entertain no doubt—that this association was, as I have said, the subject of general gossip and adverse comment in the village and that this fact was known to the wife and communicated by her to the husband with the result that I have already stated. I find that this friendship cast a serious social reflection on the wife, not only in itself but also because it was accompanied by a manifest private and public preference by the husband for the company and companionship of Harris to the increasing and serious exclusion of the wife. I need only pose this question to indicate what I mean. What would the friends and acquaintances, the people of the village and the country around, say if (as I am satisfied was the fact) they saw the husband always with Harris and, as time went on—not long after 1935 if not even before then—he was never to be seen about with his wife. What would they say and think? It is not for me to supply the answer.

Counsel for the wife agreed that this cryptic reference to talk in the neighbourhood was intended by the judge to mean that, in his view, people in the neighbourhood must have regarded the husband and Harris as homosexuals and was an answer to the question which the judge propounded as being important for him to decide. After saying that there was no impropriety in the association, he went on:

It does not follow that people in the village might not think this was so odd a relationship between master and servant, carried to such an extent in public and of so constant a character, that it might be due to some such quality as that. Therefore, it is not unimportant for the purpose of this case to be satisfied that there was no such quality about it, but also to be satisfied one way or the other whether its external manifestations might not give rise to that sort of idea in the mind of persons without any prurient minds at all but looking at human nature and contemplating it as one knows it as one lives.

It is, I think, clear that the existence of gossip of this kind (which the judge thinks must have existed although, as I have said, there was no real evidence of it) formed a most important factor in leading him to the conclusion that the husband had publicly humiliated his wife. I have already made some observations on the subject of the choice between giving way to and standing up to gossip and of how a wife might or might not behave in face of such atrocious gossip affecting her husband. That, no doubt, is a matter of temperament, but we are not discussing temperament. We are discussing the question whether the husband by his conduct turned his wife out of doors, and in so far as his conduct in giving ground for gossip (assuming that it did) is relied on—and it is most strongly relied on by the wife in her evidence, by the judge in his judgment, and by counsel in argument—as one of the matters justifying the wife in regarding herself as having been deserted by her husband, I find it impossible to agree. I attach very little or no importance to this aspect of the case so far as regards what we have to decide, however foolish, obstinate and inconsiderate we may reasonably consider the husband to have been.

If this unpleasant element is excluded from the judge's reasons there remains the finding that the constant association of the husband with Harris deprived the wife of the full consortium to which she was entitled, but this circumstance, the judge agrees, would not justify an allegation of desertion without the public exhibition of what in the passage cited he calls "a most unusual and unnatural friendship with one of his own servants," a phrase which I must admit puzzles me. It is what he calls "the social reflection" on the wife which, to the judge's mind, was the determining factor, coupled with what I have already mentioned, namely, the wife's warnings to her husband of what she would do and his retorts that she could go away if she liked. I need not go through the detailed findings about the manner of the husband's association with Harris—the holidays for which he took him in preference to his wife; his entertainment of Harris at the house "almost as one of the family when family guests were being entertained"; the frequent invitations to Harris to call at the house after dinner, both when there were and when there were not guests; the time spent with Harris in the evenings at the house, leaving the wife to entertain the guests; the evenings spent with Harris in public-houses playing darts and ping-pong and drinking; the insistence on Harris sleeping in the house (a thing which the wife, as a matter of fact, encouraged as part of her plan of campaign); taking Harris to theatres in the neighbourhood without giving his wife the opportunity of accompanying him instead of Harris; taking Harris to the motor show (he always paid two visits, taking his wife on one and Harris on the other); taking Harris to the launching of the "Queen Mary"; taking Harris on one occasion to the stalls in a London theatre, having refused to go to a theatre with his wife and others—these findings were not criticised by counsel for the husband. All these matters the judge found to have been the cause of great humiliation and distress to the wife. One finding was, however, criticised and rightly so, namely, that "as time went on—not long after 1935 if not even before then—he was never to be seen about with his wife" The judge cannot have had in mind the number of times when the husband and wife went for holidays together or the frequent occasions when they had friends or relations staying in the house.

On a careful consideration of the case and a study of the whole of the evidence I am forced to the conclusion that the facts relied on were not of sufficient gravity to justify a finding that the husband deserted his wife. That they caused her intense unhappiness I have no doubt, but they were not, in my opinion, such as to justify her in treating them as a dismissal from the consortium although the husband, I agree, behaved to his wife in a manner in which no decent man ought to have behaved. If I am right in this, she could not concert them into such a justification by announcing her intention of leaving her husband if he did not change his conduct. If conduct is not a justification for one spouse to leave another, it cannot be made so by threats of this kind. Moreover, if the conduct in question is in its nature insufficient, a statement that, if she did not like it she could go, even if taken at its face value, could not, in my opinion, give to that conduct the character of desertion in fact. As I indicated earlier in this judgment, constructive desertion requires both factum and animus, and an indication by the husband to the wife that she may leave him if she likes (animus) is not enough unless the conduct is such as to amount to an expulsion (factum). This is not, in my opinion, affected by the doctrine that a person must be taken to intend the probable consequences of his acts, for, if the acts are not such as to justify the wife in treating herself as expelled from the matrimonial home, no inference can be drawn from those acts of an intention to expel her. Mere wish to expel, even if it exists, without acts equivalent to expulsion is, in my opinion, insufficient to constitute constructive desertion. Accordingly, I am of opinion that the husband's appeal against the decree must be allowed. He also appeals against the judge's refusal to grant him a decree. Counsel for the wife agreed that, if the husband's conduct was not such as to justify her in treating herself as a deserted wife, she must be regarded as having deserted him and that he would be entitled to a decree. In this counsel was, in my opinion, clearly right. A decree must be granted to the husband.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I agree and will only add a few sentences. The law applicable to this case is, I feel, somewhat simpler than it has been made to appear at certain stages of the argument. In the first place, it is common ground and a commonplace that the spouse who leaves the matrimonial roof is not necessarily the deserter. Constructively the deserter may be the party who remains behind, if that party has been guilty of conduct which justifies the other party in leaving. Secondly, to afford such justification the conduct of the party staying on need not have amounted to a matrimonial offence, such as cruelty or adultery. But, thirdly, it must exceed in gravity such behaviour, vexatious and trying though it may be, as every spouse bargains to endure when accepting the other "for better or worse." The ordinary wear and tear of conjugal life does not in itself suffice. Where the judge seems to have erred is in supposing that on the evidence before him conduct complying with this last test had been established.

It is difficult to deduce from the decided cases any principle of law by reference to which it can be determined in every case on which side of this line the case falls. To say that the petitioner must establish conduct by the respondent which has made it "practically impossible for the parties to live properly together," or which "drove the petitioner out," is to propound a criterion too vague to be very helpful. It is, I think, possible to say of certain courses of conduct that they could not amount to constructive desertion, and of certain other courses that they could not fail to do so. This would appear to be a question of law, involving, as it does, the issue whether there was any or no evidence to support the judge's conclusion. But between the extremes indicated there is obviously a no man's land where the issue is one of fact. This does not debar an appellate tribunal from disturbing the judge's findings if, in the view of that tribunal, they are plainly wrong.

What was the course of conduct on the part of the husband in this case which the judge held sufficient to justify the wife in leaving him, or, having left for other reasons, in deciding not to return? My lord has analysed it in detail and what I venture to add is purely by way of summary. First, it is said that he contracted a strange, but, admittedly, quite innocent, friendship for a farmhand in his employment, a man named Harris, belonging to what is vulgarly, but conveniently, called a different social class. Secondly, it is said that the husband preferred the company of Harris to that of his wife, that he made that preference obvious, and that this was humiliating to her. In the judgment there are nine findings of fact, relating to incidents alleged to involve neglect of and humiliation to the wife, and none of these particular findings is challenged on behalf of the husband. Thirdly, it is said, and the judge has found, that, innocent as was, in fact, the association with Harris, friends and acquaintances of the parties and the villagers (not only the prurient among them) would be likely to think it had a homosexual basis, and that it was wrong of the husband to act in a manner which was calculated to convey that impression and provoke gossip of this order however baseless. These three elements in the husband's conduct in their combination were held by the judge sufficient to justify the wife in leaving, and, accordingly, to convict the husband of constructive desertion.

I agree with the Master of the Rolls that they did not so suffice. As to the first head of complaint, association with what it is fashionable to call a social inferior is not on any view legally or morally wrong in itself and may well be a virtue in so far as it helps to break down senseless social barriers and class prejudices. If, of course, the association of two men with such different backgrounds could only be explained on the assumption of a homosexual tie, the case would be different, but that supposition is expressly disclaimed by the wife. As to the second head of complaint, the husband cannot be absolved from neglect and want of consideration for his wife, but this is a charge which thousands of spouses could prefer against each other with abundant justification, but without any hope or prospect of securing legal relief on the ground of constructive desertion or otherwise. It may, no doubt, be galling—or, in some sense of the word, humiliating—for a wife to find that the husband prefers the company of his men friends, his club, his newspaper, his games, his hobbies, or indeed his own society, to association with her, and a husband may have similar grievances regarding his wife, but this is what may be called the reasonable wear and tear of married life, and, if it were a ground for divorce, a heavy toll would be levied on the institution of matrimony. None of the cases cited in my view comes near to deciding that conduct such as that of this husband entitles the wife to the relief claimed. Habitual drunkenness (unless accompanied with a certain degree of violence or threats of violence), persistent nagging and insult, even incest, forgiven but followed by an indecent assault on a girl of thirteen, to mention nothing else, have been held not to suffice.

A There remains the third ground of complaint—that the husband's association with Harris, however innocent in fact, must or should have been known to him to be likely to encourage gossip and the suggestion of homosexuality. No witness has, in fact, come forward to say, either that he was led by the husband's behaviour to suppose he was a homosexual or to testify to the existence of gossip to that effect. The judge is not concerned with the effect the husband's conduct actually had on local public opinion, but on the effect which, in the judge's view, it was calculated to have, but let it be assumed that this type of gossip did arise from a misconception (for it would have been misconception) of conduct in fact perfectly innocent on the part of the husband, though, perhaps, B defiantly persisted in and paraded. I entirely agree with the Master of the Rolls in feeling that this would tend to rally the average wife to the defence of her husband when he was grossly traduced rather than to impress her as a sufficient or contributory ground for leaving him. Neither singly nor in combination with the other matters complained of does this factor seem to me to establish a constructive desertion by the husband. I agree that, as the result of this appeal, the wife's petition fails and the husband's succeeds. I agree C that a decree must be granted to the husband.

VAISEY, J.: I agree. If the contest had been as to which of the two spouses had most to put up with from the other, and to which of them the unhappiness which subsisted during the latter part of their married life was chiefly due, I apprehend that we should have laid the blame on the husband, but the issue is of a different character, and what we have to decide is whether D the separation between them which began on Apr. 1, 1941 (or, at any rate, on Oct. 7, 1942) is to be attributed to a desertion on the part of the wife, by her actual abandonment of her husband and the matrimonial home, or to a notional or, as it is called, "constructive," desertion of the wife by the husband. I would only add to what my Lords have said as to the nature and limits of this doctrine of constructive desertion that the misconduct on which a case of such desertion would be founded would nowadays rarely if ever amount to a matrimonial offence, because such an offence, if it existed, would itself give the other spouse a right to relief and obviate the necessity for any application of the doctrine. E

It is clear that the husband displayed eccentricities of behaviour which were very galling and irritating to the wife. He was not, I think, ill-natured, but rather stubborn, and certainly lacking in the finer perceptions. He was simple, F perhaps rather silly, and had become somewhat bucolic in his ways and manner. As to the wife, she seems to me to be deserving of some sympathy, though her "plan of campaign" strikes me as being rather cold-blooded and it was certainly ill-contrived and futile. The question is whether the conduct or misconduct of the husband was such as to compel her to leave him, and was intended or must be presumed to have been intended to bring about that result. Or the matter may be put thus—whether, having regard to that conduct or misconduct, it was within the wife's rights and consistent with her duties as his G wife to leave him. For myself, I think that, so far from being entitled to leave him, she was under a strong positive obligation not to do so. Believing, as she did, that the eccentricities to which I have alluded had created, or were creating, in the minds of their neighbours and others the suspicion that her husband's association with the man Harris was of a criminal, or, at any rate, degrading, nature, and convinced, as she was, that the suspicion was baseless, H she took the one step that was best calculated (and she should have known it) to confirm the unjust suspicion, if it existed, and to redouble the gossip and scandal to which it must inevitably have given rise. We do not know how far the existence of the suspicion was real or imaginary, nor for this purpose does it matter. Believing, as she did, and convinced, as she was, I think it was her duty not to forsake her husband, but to protect his good name by her continued presence in the matrimonial home, and not less so because his need for her protection was, in her view at least, due to his own stupid folly and indiscretion. I should have thought that it was an elementary obligation of a wife to support and countenance a husband accused or suspected, whether justly or not. Here the wife believed that the husband was suspected unjustly, and yet she left him.

I would acquit the wife of anything like a conscious or deliberate dereliction of her duty, and would account for what she did by her having become so obsessed with her wrongs and grievances that she persuaded herself that they justified her in taking a step which she thought would secure for her comfort and peace of mind, without reflecting at all on the probable or possible serious consequences of it to the husband. I cannot believe that he meant to expel her from their home, or that she ever thought that he meant to do so, and I cannot hold that his behaviour in their matrimonial relationship ought to be regarded as the equivalent of an actual or intended expulsion of her. I think that she found herself unable to tolerate him any longer, and so she left him, that is to say, she deserted him, with the result that he is entitled to a decree.

Appeal allowed. Decree nisi granted to husband.

Solicitors: Mawby, Barrie & Letts (for the husband); Ingledeu, Brown, Bennison & Garrett (for the wife).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LUDDITT AND OTHERS v. GINGER COOTE AIRWAYS LTD. C

[JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Macmillan, Lord Wright, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds and Lord Uthwatt), November 7, 8, 11, 12, 1946, February 5, 1947.]

Carriers—Carriage of passengers—General duty to carry with due care—Special contract excluding liability—Validity—Canadian Transport Act, 1938 (c. 53), s. 25 (1).

The liability at common law of a carrier of passengers is to carry with due care, but that general duty may be enlarged, diminished, or excluded by a special contract, e.g., a condition in the contract of carriage that the passenger travels "at his own risk against all casualties." A specific contract to carry at a reduced fare is not invalidated if the passenger is not given an option either to retain his full rights against the carrier at the higher fare or to waive them at the lower fare, nor is the position of the carrier in this respect affected by the provisions of a statute laying on him the obligation to afford "to all persons all reasonable and proper facilities for the conveyance of passenger traffic," those words referring, not to the terms of any special contract or their reasonableness, but simply to external physical and mechanical facilities.

[AS TO CARRIERS AND SPECIAL TERMS OF CONTRACT WITH THEM, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 71-76, paras. 108-113; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 97-105, Nos. 651-697.] F

Cases referred to:

- (1) Readhead v. Midland Ry. Co. (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 379; 38 L.J.Q.B. 169; sub nom. Redhead v. Midland Ry. Co., 9 B. & S. 519; 20 L.T. 628; 8 Digest 71, 480.
- (2) Peek v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. (1863), 10 H.L.C. 473; 3 New Rep. 1; 32 L.J.Q.B. 241; 8 L.T. 768; 8 Digest 57, 58, 381. G
- (3) Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Robinson, [1915] A.C. 740; 84 L.J.P.C. 194; 113 L.T. 350; 8 Digest 104, 694.
- (4) Great Northern Ry. Co. v. L.E.P. Transport and Depository, Ltd., [1922] 2 K.B. 742; 91 L.J.K.B. 807; 127 L.T. 664; Digest Supp.
- (5) Clarke v. West Ham Corpn., [1909] 2 K.B. 858; 79 L.J.K.B. 56; 101 L.T. 481; 73 J.P. 461; 8 Digest 7, 14.

APPEAL from a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. H

On Nov. 29, 1940, the three plaintiffs were being carried as passengers for reward on an aeroplane operated by the respondent company which was flying from the city of Vancouver to Zeballos on Vancouver Island. During the flight the aeroplane caught fire. Owing, as was not now contested, to the negligence of the respondents' servants, each of the appellants was injured. The appellants severally brought action in the Supreme Court of British Columbia claiming damages for the injury which they had sustained. They succeeded in their claim before the trial judge and damages were assessed under the judgment in their favour dated June 25, 1941, but that judgment was set aside by a majority of the judges of the Court of Appeal for the province of British Columbia. On an appeal from that judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada, that court in its turn by a majority affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal. From that judgment the present appeal was brought before the Board pursuant to special leave.

- A The express contract of carriage was embodied in a single trip ticket from Vancouver to Zeballos dated Nov. 28, 1940, which was issued by the respondents to each of the appellants, the fare being 25 dollars for the carriage. Each passenger signed the ticket before a witness and the most material provision is as follows :

- B This ticket is expressly subject to the conditions below . . . In consideration of the Ginger Coote Airways, Ltd. of Vancouver, B.C., permitting me, at my own risk against all casualties, to fly as a passenger in any aircraft owned or operated by the said Ginger Coote Airways, Ltd., I hereby agree with the Ginger Coote Airways, Ltd., that such flight is and shall be at my own risk against all casualties to myself or my property and that I take all risk of every kind, no matter how caused, and I hereby release and discharge the Ginger Coote Airways, Ltd., and indemnify it of and from all actions claims and demands of every nature and kind whatsoever, which I, or my heirs, executors, administrators or assigns may now, or may or can at any time hereafter, have against the Ginger Coote Airways, Ltd., for or on account of any loss, damage or injury to me, C my person or property while so flying, and whether in or on any such aircraft or getting to or from, into or off, or in or out thereof, or in any manner in connection with or in consequence of such flight, and whether any such loss, damage or injury be caused by negligence, default or misconduct of the Ginger Coote Airways, Ltd., itself, servants, agents or members, or otherwise howsoever.

- D Pritt, K.C., Kenneth Diplock and Paul D. Murphy (of the Canadian Bar) appeared for the plaintiff.

Sir D. Maxwell Fyfe, K.C., H. G. Robertson and Patrick Browne for the defendant.

The Board took time for consideration.

Feb. 5. LORD WRIGHT read the following judgment of the Board.

- E There is now no dispute on the facts or as to the amount of damages. The sole question is whether an express condition contained in the ticket issued to each of the appellants which exempted the respondent company from liability is valid so as to exonerate that company from any obligation to compensate the appellants for their injuries, or whether it is illegal and void. The answer to the question depends on the express terms of the ticket, the general law, and the relevant conditions of the Canadian Transport Act, 1938, (c. 53), and the orders of the Board of Transport Commissioners established under s. 3 of the Act, which has for one of its purposes the control of contracts of this type. F

- It is not suggested that the appellants and each of them had not sufficient notice of this condition when the tickets were signed. The condition itself is clear and unambiguous. Nevertheless the judge in the first court and the dissenting judges in the Appellate Courts in Canada have held it illegal and void. Their Lordships dissent from this view and agree with the decisions of the majority of the judges in the Provincial Court of Appeal and in the Supreme Court of Canada that the condition is valid and enforceable for the reasons which they will now state. G

- It will be convenient in the first place to explain what is the general law on the subject before discussing the special legislative provisions which are relevant. The liability of a common carrier of passengers was settled by the decision of the Exchequer Chamber in 1869 in Readhead v. Midland Ry. Co. (1). H It was there held that the liability of a general or public or common carrier of passengers is more limited than that of a common carrier of goods. By the custom of the realm a common carrier of goods was at common law "bound to answer for the goods at all events . . . The law charges this person thus entrusted to carry goods against all events but acts of God, and of the enemies of the King" (L.R. 4 Q.B. 379, at p. 382). The carrier of passengers is not subjected to a duty so stringent. His obligation at common law, as was held in the leading case just cited, is to carry "with due care." One reason for the distinction, no doubt, is that the carrier of goods is a bailee of the goods which he carries, whereas a carrier of passengers is not a bailee of his passengers. Both classes of carriers, however, are subject to the obligations which arise from their exercising a public profession which requires them to carry for all and sundry subject to the obvious limiting conditions.

The common carrier of goods was, nevertheless, at common law free to limit his stringent obligations by special contract. He still remained a common carrier, and was bound to carry for all according to his profession, but he could all the same insist on making his own terms and refuse to carry except on those terms, provided that there were no statutory conditions limiting his right. The classical exposition of this principle is to be found in the language of BLACKBURN, J., in advising the House of Lords in Peck v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. (2). The issue in that case was as to the effect of s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, which imposed certain conditions on railway companies seeking by special contract to limit their liability in respect of goods which they carried as common carriers. Under these statutory conditions such contracts were only valid if they were in writing and were just and reasonable, but, apart from the Act, the general freedom possessed by carriers was unimpaired and the Act clearly had no reference to the conveyance of passengers. It was, therefore, only with reference to carriers of goods that BLACKBURN, J., observed (10 H.L.C. 473, at p. 511), that "a condition exempting the carriers wholly from liability for the neglect and default of their servants was prima facie unreasonable." When making that observation the learned judge was discussing the effect of s. 7 of the Act which, as already stated, contained an express enactment that the terms of the special contract should be reasonable, and it was in that connection that he went on to say that an offer to carry at a lower rate than the normal rate might be reasonable for purposes of the Act. He added (10 H.L.C. 473, at p. 511) :

For the terms of a special contract entered into by a person who has the option of employing the carrier on the terms of the contract, or on the terms of his undertaking the common law liability, are necessarily reasonable as regards the person having that option.

But this principle, stated in regard to a railway company as a carrier of goods and in regard to the operation of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, has no bearing on the position of a carrier of passengers whose complete freedom at common law to make such contracts as he thinks fit has not been curtailed by the Act of 1854. What limitations on this freedom result from the relevant legislation for the control of the carriage of passengers by air will be examined later, but light is thrown on the common law position of carriers of passengers by the decision of this Board in Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada v. Robinson (3). The main question in that case was whether a passenger carried at half fare under what was called a "livestock special contract" was bound by a term of the contract giving the carrier complete exemption from liability even when caused by the negligence of the railway company. A subsidiary question was whether the passenger who went on the train to look after a horse during the transit was bound by the special contract which his employer had made on his behalf. The subsidiary issue, which was decided against the man, is not material in this case, but the general law was stated by VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., delivering the judgment of the Board in the following terms ([1915] A.C. 740, at p. 747) :

There are some principles of general application which it is necessary to bear in mind in approaching the consideration of this question. If a passenger has entered a train on a mere invitation or permission from a railway company without more, and he receives injury in an accident caused by the negligence of its servants, the company is liable for damages for breach of a general duty to exercise care. Such a breach can be regarded as one either of an implied contract, or of a duty imposed by the general law, and in the latter case as in form a tort. But in either view this general duty may, subject to such statutory restrictions as exist in Canada and in England in different ways, be superseded by a specific contract, which may either enlarge, diminish, or exclude it. If the law authorises it, such a contract cannot be pronounced to be unreasonable by a court of justice. The specific contract, with its incidents either expressed or attached by law, becomes in such a case the only measure of the duties between the parties, and the plaintiff cannot by any device of form get more than the contract allows him.

Their Lordships accept this statement of general principle, and, therefore, must now consider the effect in this case of such statutory restrictions as exist in Canada in order to determine whether they qualify or supersede the exemption of liability for negligence which is clearly set out in the contract agreed to and signed by each of the appellants.

The legislative provisions to be considered are to be found in the (Dominion) Transport Act, 1938, in certain regulations made thereunder by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, and in certain "schedules" containing its tariffs and regulations, which were drawn up by the respondent company under powers conferred on it by the regulations of the Board. The general effect of the Transport Act, 1938, so far as concerns matters arising in the present case, is to lay on every operator licensed to operate aircraft the obligation to afford to all persons all reasonable and proper facilities for the conveyance of passengers and goods traffic; further, to oblige operators to file "standard tariffs" of their charges, which themselves are subject to the approval of the Board; and, lastly, to empower operators to file, in addition to their standard tariffs, "special tariffs" lower than their standard tariffs. All the material provisions of these instruments have been elaborately analysed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada and need not be repeated in detail. It should, however, be observed that by the Transport Act the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada as constituted under the Railway Act (R.S.C., 1927, c. 170) are designated to act as the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada and are vested with the duties of licensing aircraft to transport passengers between various points in Canada and of approving tolls to be charged or made in connection with the transport of passengers. The respondent company had obtained and at all material times held the necessary licence permitting it to transport passengers on its aircraft between Vancouver and Zeballos.

Part IV of the Transport Act contains a code of provisions relating to traffic, tolls and tariffs to which all licensees under the Act must adhere. The provisions of this part so far as they are relevant to this appeal are to be found in ss. 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 32 and 33. In pursuance of the powers conferred by this part of the Act, the Board of Transport Commissioners have issued two general orders (numbers 580 and 584, dated respectively Dec. 16, 1938, and Mar. 23, 1939), containing regulations:

... governing the construction and filing of air transportation tariffs.

When entering on their duties under the Act the Board were taking under their control a wide variety of existing services, and, accordingly, special attention is drawn to the "Foreword" forming part of general order 580 in which the Board announces its decision not to exercise its powers by imposing forthwith a pre-conceived plan for the detailed control of air services but to impose on the traffic arrangements of individual carriers such modifications or restrictions as experience may show to be necessary. In the third paragraph of the "Foreword," the Board laid down the following general rule as to initial tariffs or schedules:

All initial tariffs or schedules filed will be deemed to comply with the law relative to filing, unless and until they are rejected by the Board with directions to file other tariffs or schedules in lieu thereof.

The respondent company duly filed with the Board a special passenger and goods tariff incorporating by reference a tariff of rules and regulations which were drawn up by it on the same date and specified that passengers were carried only in accordance with the terms and conditions of the respondents' passenger ticket. The fare of 25 dollars paid by each appellant was that prescribed by the special passenger tariff just referred to, and some question arose whether the fare was a special or standard fare within the tariff filed. Special tariffs were defined as those specifying a toll or tolls lower than the standard tolls, but there was no evidence that any other toll than 25 dollars for the journey had been filed or that it had been approved by the Board. If, however, it was a special tariff no approval was required, and in any case their Lordships agree with the conclusion of the Supreme Court that there is no ground for holding that the provisions of the Act were not satisfied. In particular, there is no ground for holding that the fare charged and the terms of the contract, which were either actually or by sufficient reference before the Board, were not duly approved. There was thus no reason to hold that statutory restrictions had been infringed and no reason under the statute to set aside or refuse to give effect to a specific contract which the law authorises. Such a contract cannot be pronounced unreasonable, invalid or illegal by a court of justice. The contrast between the provisions of the Canadian Transport Act and s. 7 of the English Railway and Canal Traffic Act is that, whereas the former requires an administrative decision of the Board to be complied with, the latter leaves it to the court to determine whether its provisions have been carried out. It follows in their Lordships' judgment that there is no valid reason against holding the appellants and each of them bound by their contract.

In their Lordships' opinion, the view they have expressed provides an answer to the contention so strenuously urged that, if the passenger is not given an option either to retain his full rights against the carrier at the higher fare or to waive them in whole or in part at the lower, the specific contract must be invalid. As their Lordships have pointed out, BLACKBURN, J., in Peek's case (2) merely said that such a contract may (not must) be invalid, and he only said that in reference to the construction of s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act. Indeed, even if the carrier were obliged to comply with the conditions imposed by s. 7, it might be considered that a carrier of passengers by air could reasonably, if he thought fit, refuse to carry anyone save at the passenger's own risk. It does not matter for this purpose whether the carrier was a common or a general carrier. His duty to carry for all and sundry according to his profession is something different from the terms on which he so carries. A carrier of goods or of passengers may or may not be a common carrier. In the words of MAULE, J., quoted by ATKIN, L.J., in G.N. Ry. Co. v. L.E.P. Transport and Depository, Ltd. (4) ([1922] 2 K.B. 742, at p. 771):

I deny the truth of the position that a man who is not an insurer is therefore not a common carrier. A common carrier who gives no notice limiting his responsibility, is an insurer; but, if he gives notice that he will contract only to a limited extent, and with respect to articles of a given value, he ceases to be an insurer beyond that, though in all other respects he remains a common carrier.

In this passage MAULE, J., is speaking of carriers of goods, but the same principle is true, mutatis mutandis, of a carrier of passengers who in law is neither an insurer nor precluded from making a special contract with his passengers. From this aspect it is not material whether he is a common carrier or not—nor is his position altered by the terms of s. 25 (1) of the Transport Act, 1938, which require the carrier to afford to all persons and companies all reasonable and proper facilities for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of traffic, inasmuch as this provision does not in their Lordships' judgment relate to the particular terms of any special contract or their reasonableness but simply to external physical and mechanical facilities.

Finally, it may be observed that their Lordships do not regard the decision of the Court of Appeal in Clarke v. West Ham Corporation (5) as giving any real help or guidance in the decision of the present appeal. While they do not think it necessary to give any opinion on the correctness of much that was said in that case or of the actual decision, the judgment at least of the majority in the Court of Appeal turned largely on the construction of the statutes regulating the tramways operated by the corporation for the carriage of passengers. These statutory regulations were substantially different from those in question in this appeal. For all these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise that the appeal in their judgment fails and should be dismissed. The appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Gasquet, Metcalfe & Walton (for the plaintiffs); Beaumont & Son (for the defendant).

[Reported by RICHARD PHILLIPS, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

OLSEN v. MAGNESIUM CASTINGS & PRODUCTS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 22, 23, 27, 28, 1947.]

Negligence—Defence—Acceptance of compensation under Workmen's Compensation Acts—Onus of proof—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 29 (1).

A Where, in defence to an action by a workman claiming damages for negligence resulting in his suffering personal injury, an employer pleads under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 29 (1), that the workman has accepted compensation under that Act with the knowledge of his common law right to recover damages for negligence, the burden of proving those facts is on the employer.

B [AS TO ALTERNATIVE REMEDIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 961-966, paras. 1318-1325; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 490-492, Nos. 4063-4071. See also WILLIS'S WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION, 37th Edn., pp. 529-538.]

Case referred to :

(1) Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39.

APPEAL from CROOM-JOHNSON, J.

C The plaintiff, a maintenance electrician employed by the defendant company, fell from a ladder while at work on the defendants' premises and was injured. He claimed damages from the defendants alleging that they had been guilty of breaches of the Electricity Regulations, 1908 (S.R. & O., 1908, No. 1312), and of their duty to provide a safe system of working or reasonably safe plant and equipment. CROOM-JOHNSON, J., held that the defendants were not guilty of the breaches alleged and that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory D negligence, and gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

Beney, K.C., and John Thompson for the plaintiff.

Nelson, K.C., and R. Marven Everett for the defendants.

E LORD GREENE, M.R. : In this case the workman claimed damages from his employers in respect of an alleged breach of electricity regulations, and also at common law for an alleged breach of the employers' duty to provide a safe system of working, or, alternatively, for failure to provide a reasonably safe plant and equipment. I will get rid at once of one question that was raised, namely, whether, under s. 29 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, the plaintiff workman was precluded from bringing his action by reason of the fact that he had received certain payments which purported to be workmen's compensation payments. The case in that regard is the not unfamiliar one of a F workman being invited to sign a form applying for workmen's compensation and acknowledging receipt of payments. In the past, we have had occasion to criticise that procedure on the part of employers, which, I suppose, is imposed on them by the terms of their insurance policy. We have described as not very desirable the practice of an employer offering a man in the position of a workman G compensation without telling the workman that he has, or may have, an alternative claim, and that, if he accepts workmen's compensation payments, he may be unable to prosecute his alternative claim, especially in view of the very natural ignorance of workmen of the niceties of the distinction between workmen's compensation and common law liability. The point made here is that we ought to hold on the evidence that the workman had accepted payment under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, knowing that he had, or might H have, a common law right, and that, in view of that knowledge, the receipt of those payments operated as an exercise by him of the option which the sub-section gives him in accordance with the opinions of the majority of the House of Lords in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (1). I can find no evidence which would justify the conclusion that the workman, when he received those payments, knew of the existence of his common law right. The facts which counsel for the employers put before us seem to me to be all consistent with the workman's having no knowledge of his common law right. He swore (and in spite of a careful and continued cross-examination on the point he stuck to his story) that he never knew about his common law right at the time when he received the payments in compensation. The judge found it rather difficult to believe his denials of knowledge, but I must confess I do not feel any such difficulty. Perhaps, my mind is liable to be influenced by the circumstance that, in my experience, ignorance of this kind in cases which have come before this court is the commonest thing in the world among workmen, who show a surprising lack of interest in the rights which the law gives them. I find no ground for disbelieving the workman in this respect, and I do not interpret the judge's decision as involving any such disbelief. What he did say was that, even if he did not accept what the workman said, the onus of proof would still remain undischarged by the employers. I think the judge was right in taking the view that the onus of proof was on the employers. This is a statutory defence given by the sub-section, and it seems to me that, unless the employers established all the facts necessary to bring that statutory defence into operation they must necessarily fail.

[HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with the evidence and found that the system of working was not in accordance with the employers' common law duty, that the employers had been guilty of a breach of reg. 1 of the Electricity Regulations, that the workman had not been guilty of contributory negligence, and that the appeal must be allowed.]

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Rowley, Ashworth & Co. (for the workman) ; Carpenters (for the employers).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BULL v. VAZQUEZ AND ANOTHER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 22, 23, 1947.]

Libel and Slander—Slander—Statement actionable per se—Words reflecting on a man in his profession—Publication at a time when pursuing that profession—Army officer—Indefinite Parliamentary leave.

Libel and Slander—Slander—Damages—Assessment—Judge sitting without jury—Right to award heavy damages—Grounds on which Court of Appeal will interfere with award.

The plaintiff in a slander action alleged that at all material times he was a commissioned officer in the army, and that, on June 16, 1945, the second defendant spoke and published of him in relation to his office or profession as an officer in the army the following words : " Personally I do not believe he was wounded. It is my opinion he was sent home for drinking too much spirits." The defendant denied that the words were actionable per se.

In 1940, the plaintiff, then a member of Parliament, joined the army for the duration of the war and was commissioned a first lieutenant. After being wounded on active service he went abroad on a mission for the Ministry of Information for a year, after which he rejoined his unit. From the end of 1943 up to the time of the alleged slander in June, 1945, and later, until his demobilisation in Oct., 1945, he was continuously on indefinite Parliamentary leave, but he was subject throughout to military law and was liable at any moment to be recalled to his unit for active service. The trial judge assessed the amount of damages for slander at £1,000 which the defendant asserted was an amount fixed only as " a gesture " because the judge knew that the defendant could not pay.

HELD : (i) the words complained of were spoken of the plaintiff in the way of his profession of a commissioned officer in the army.

(ii) at the time of the alleged slander he was pursuing that profession.

(iii) the Court of Appeal would not reverse the decision of the trial judge on the amount of damages as it was not satisfied either that the judge acted on some wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded was so extremely large as to make it an entirely erroneous estimate of damage.

Per LORD GREENE, M.R. : The judgment in Rook v. Fairrie (2) cannot be read as suggesting that where a judge expresses in his spoken judgment his opinion of the libel, and the conduct of the person uttering it, he is thereby in some way disentitled from awarding heavy damages.

[As to STATEMENTS ACTIONABLE per se, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 20. pp. 385-386, 412-421, paras. 460, 496-506; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 32, pp. 31-59, Nos. 233-866.]

A Cases referred to :

- (1) Hopwood v. Muirson, [1945] 1 All E.R. 453; [1945] K.B. 313; 114 L.J.K.B. 267; 172 L.T. 231; 61 T.L.R. 312; 89 Sol. Jo. 224, C.A.; Digest Supp.
- (2) Rook v. Fairrie, [1941] 1 All E.R. 297; [1941] 1 K.B. 507; 110 L.J.K.B. 319; 165 L.T. 23; 57 T.L.R. 297; 85 Sol. Jo. 297, C.A.; Digest Supp.
- (3) Flint v. Lovell, [1935] 1 K.B. 354; 104 L.J.K.B. 199; 152 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.

B APPEAL by defendant from a decision of CHARLES, J., dated April 8, 1946. The judge found that the words complained of were spoken and published by the defendant at the time alleged, and he assessed the damages at £1,000. The defendant appealed on the grounds that (1) the words complained of were not spoken of the plaintiff in relation to his profession or office as a commissioned officer in the army, and (2) the damages were fixed by the judge at a high level simply as "a gesture" because he knew that the defendant could not pay. The facts appear in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J.

Eddy, K.C. and J. R. Ogilvie Jones for the defendants.
Beresford, K.C. and L. I. Horniman for the plaintiff.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : ASQUITH, L.J. will deliver the first judgment.

D ASQUITH, L.J. : This is an appeal against a decision of CHARLES, J., awarding the plaintiff £1,000 damages for an alleged slander.

That a slander may qualify as actionable per se because spoken of a man in the way of his office or profession, two separate conditions have to be fulfilled. In the first place, it must be shown that the words reflect on him as a professional man or in his office, and, in the second place, it must be shown that the slander was published at a time when he held that office or pursued that profession. So far as the first requirement is concerned, speaking for myself, I think it was abundantly satisfied. It seems to me quite unarguable that these words did not refer to the plaintiff in his character as a soldier. Hopwood v. Muirson (1) was cited by counsel for the defendants as supporting the contrary argument, but that was a very different case in which the act of a solicitor, which was the subject-matter of the slander, was not performed by him in his character as a solicitor at all and there was no reflection on him as being incompetent or unfit to exercise the duties of a solicitor. I, therefore, consider that case is not in point.

F Most of the argument of counsel for the defendants, however, was directed to what I have called the second requirement, that is that the plaintiff must occupy the office or pursue the profession in question at the time when the slander is published. That brings me to the facts of this case. They are not now in substance contested. The plaintiff was called to the Bar in 1928 and he became a member of Parliament in 1935 and remained in Parliament for ten years. Both before and after his election to Parliament he practised to some extent at the Bar. In 1939 he joined the colours, and was commissioned a first lieutenant and posted to the 3rd battalion of the Coldstream Guards. In Dec., 1940, he was fighting in the African Campaign and was badly wounded at Sidi Barrani. He spent seven and a half weeks in hospital, after which he had sick leave and he returned to his unit. In Jan., 1942, he was seconded to the Ministry of Information for a mission in connection with public relations to the G Middle West of America and he was absent on that work for almost exactly a year. On returning to England in Dec., 1942, he at once rejoined his unit at the Regent's Park Barracks. During the year 1943, subject to a certain amount of Parliamentary leave in March and April, he was on duty with his unit. From the end of 1943 until the time of the slander in June, 1945, and later he was continuously on what is called indefinite Parliamentary leave. Finally, he was demobilised in Oct., 1945.

On those facts we are invited by counsel to reverse the judge's conclusion that the plaintiff was pursuing the profession of a commissioned officer in June, 1945.

Counsel does not deny that he was at that time a commissioned officer. Indeed, it is admitted on the pleadings that at all material times he was, but counsel says that, whatever may have been the case in 1940 and 1941, in June, 1945, he was not pursuing the profession of a commissioned officer. I find it difficult to apprehend this distinction. It would appear that in advancing his argument counsel has in mind that throughout 1942 the plaintiff was seconded for this work in America and that from the end of 1943 until the date of the slander he was on Parliamentary leave. This does not seem to me to involve the consequence that his profession, which in 1940 and 1941 was unquestionably that of a soldier, had changed in the interval. He had joined the colours for the duration of the war. He was subject throughout to military law. He was liable at any moment to be recalled to his unit for active service from the leave on which he had been from time to time. He might, as my Lord has pointed out, the day before this slander was uttered, have been sent to Japan on active service. Is it suggested that this slander would in that event have become actionable per se, not being so otherwise? This does not seem to me reasonable, nor does it seem to me to follow that because he had been for some time a member of Parliament politics were his profession to the exclusion of the profession of arms. A man may conduct several professions simultaneously. For those reasons I am unable to persuade myself that he was not pursuing the profession of a commissioned officer in the army at the time of the slander, and, if that is right, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether he was occupying an office of profit or an office at all, because, if counsel for the defendants fails quoad the argument relating to "profession," it avails him nothing to succeed quoad the argument relating to "office." If it had been necessary to decide the point I should be inclined to the view that he was at all times until his demobilisation in Oct., 1945, exercising an office and an office of profit qua commissioned officer in His Majesty's Army.

The only other point raised on the appeal is that of damages. It is clear that the sum of £1,000 contains a very strong punitive or exemplary element and, therefore, it is not conclusive to point out that the slander was only published to two people, neither of whom apparently believed it or acted upon it. The reason why this substantial figure was arrived at was clearly that the judge thought this a peculiarly wicked slander, and in that opinion I personally concur. The principles on which damages can be varied by an appellate tribunal have been cited from Rook v. Fairrie (2). That case, though directed in part to another point, expressly affirmed the principles laid down by GREER, L.J., in Flint v. Lovell (3), when he said that the Court of Appeal will not reverse the decision of the trial judge on the question of the amount of damages unless it is satisfied either that the judge acted on some wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded was so extremely large or so very small as to make it an entirely erroneous estimate of damage. That principle was held to be applicable to actions for libel and, therefore, also presumably for slander. I cannot see any ground for thinking that the judge acted on any wrong principle of law or that the amount, having regard to the gravity of the slander, was "so extremely large as to make it an entirely erroneous estimate." The judge speaks of awarding these damages as "a gesture" and it is suggested that that means that he only fixed the figure at this high level because he knew that the defendant could not pay, but I think he makes it clear that he assessed the damages at this high level because he thought the slander was a particularly heinous one. For these reasons I think the appeal ought to be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : I entirely agree, and only wish to say one word on the subject of what was said in Rook v. Fairrie (2). In that case the question arose whether it was open to a judge sitting alone in assessing damages to have regard to the fact that, unlike a jury, he was able in his spoken judgment to express his opinion of the seriousness of the libel. This court held that the judge there had not misdirected himself in holding that he was entitled to take that circumstance into account. All I wish to say is that that judgment cannot be read as suggesting that where a judge expresses in his spoken judgment his opinion of the libel and the conduct of the person uttering it, he is thereby in some way disentitled from awarding heavy damages. The position, as I understand it, is that the whole matter is at large and the judge is entitled, though not bound, to take into account what he has been able to say in his spoken judgment. In one case he may think that that is sufficient and that damages may be on the low side in consequence. In another case he may think that that is not sufficient and he may award heavy damages as well as expressing his opinion in his judgment. The case certainly cannot be taken as suggesting for a moment that once a libel action is heard by a judge alone it is not competent to him to award the damages which he would have awarded if he had not been in a position to express his opinion in words. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Cliftons (for the defendants) ; Pennington & Son (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Followed. MARSH v. MOORES. [1949]
2 All E.R. 27.

JOHN T. ELLIS, LTD. v. HINDS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.),
January 17, 22, February 7, 1947.]

C Street and Aerial Traffic—Motor vehicle—Insurance against third-party risks—Permitting vehicle to be used on road without a policy of insurance being in force—Exception if vehicle driven by unlicensed driver—Need for policy to cover driver's liability—Knowledge of owner—Constructive knowledge—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1).

D A motor vehicle owned by the appellants and driven by their servant M., aged 17, collided with a motor omnibus. The appellants' vehicle was insured at the time of the accident, but M. did not hold and never had held a driving licence and, by reason of his age, was not qualified to obtain one, facts of which the appellants had no express knowledge, but which would have been disclosed by a request to M. to produce his licence and an investigation of his statement that he held a licence and had driven for other firms, one of which was named. By an exceptions clause in the appellants' insurance policy the insurance company was exempted from liability "in respect of any claim arising whilst such vehicle is . . . being driven with the general consent of the insured or of his representative by any person who to the knowledge of the insured or of such representative does not hold a licence to drive such vehicle" unless such person had held, or was not disqualified for holding or obtaining, such a licence. The appellants were convicted under s. 35 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, of unlawfully permitting the use of the vehicle on a public road when there was not in force in relation to the user of the vehicle by the person using it such a policy of insurance as complied with the requirements of pt. II of the Act.

F HELD : (i) s. 35 of the Act did not require that there should be in force a policy which covered M.'s liability (Sutch v. Burns (3) criticised); and, though M. was not entitled to be treated as insured under the policy, if at the material time the appellants themselves were within the cover of the policy in respect of the driving of the vehicle by M., there would be in force a policy in relation to the user of the vehicle by M., and no offence would have been committed by the appellants.

G (ii) the exceptions clause in the policy, which should be construed strictly, did not place any duty on the appellants to inquire whether a person driving the vehicle held a driving licence, so that, if they made no such inquiry and the driver, in fact, had no licence, they must be taken to have constructive knowledge of that fact. The appellants, therefore, were within the cover of the policy and no offence had been committed by them.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 35, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 636.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) London General Insurance Co. v. General Marine Underwriters Assn., [1921] 1 K.B. 104; 89 L.J.K.B. 1245; 124 L.T. 67; 36 T.L.R. 887; 15 Asp. M.L.C. 94; 26 Com. Cas. 52; 29 Digest 167, 1237.

- (2) London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, [1892] A.C. 201; 61 L.J.Ch. 723; 66 L.T. 625; 56 J.P. 644; 41 W.R. 108; 8 T.L.R. 478; 36 Sol. Jo. 394; 6 Digest 139, 917; H.L.
- (3) Sutch v. Burns, [1944] 1 All E.R. 520 n.; [1944] 1 K.B. 406; 113 L.J.K.B. 407; revsq., [1943] 2 All E.R. 441; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by the Amounderness, Blackburn and Leyland Quarter Sessions who dismissed an appeal by the appellants against a conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), of unlawfully permitting the use of a vehicle on a public road when there was not in force in relation to the user of the vehicle by the person using the vehicle such a policy of insurance as complied with the requirements of pt. II of the Act. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Harold Lever for the appellants.

B. L. A. O'Malley for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 7. The following judgments were read.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Special Case stated by Amounderness, Blackburn and Leyland Quarter Sessions, who dismissed an appeal by the appellants against a conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction for unlawfully permitting the use of a certain motor vehicle on a public road when there was not in force in relation to the user of the vehicle by the person using the vehicle such a policy of insurance as complied with the requirements of the Road Traffic Act, 1930.

The facts of the case are that on June 18, 1943, a motor vehicle owned by the appellants and driven by their servant, a lad named McDonald, came into collision with a motor omnibus. This motor vehicle had been insured by the appellants with the Alliance Assurance Co. under a policy dated Oct. 8, 1942, which was current at the date of the accident. At the time of the accident McDonald was in fact under 17 years of age and did not hold and never had held a driving licence, and by reason of his age he was not qualified to obtain one. The quarter sessions found that the appellants had no express knowledge of the fact that McDonald was unlicensed or was not qualified to obtain a licence. He had told them that he held a licence, that he had already driven for several firms, including one that he named. They also held that a request to McDonald to produce his licence and an investigation of his statement would have revealed the fact that he did not hold a licence, and they found that the appellants recklessly omitted to make those enquiries. They give as their opinion (a) that McDonald was not himself entitled to be treated as insured under the policy of insurance; (b) that if at the material time the appellants themselves were within the cover of the said policy of insurance no offence would have been committed by them, even though McDonald was not entitled to be treated as insured thereunder; (c) that the appellants ought to have asked to see the licence and ought to have enquired into the truth of his statements, and, having recklessly failed to do so, must be taken to have known what such request and enquiries would have revealed, namely, that McDonald was unlicensed; (d) they further held—and this and the last preceding findings are clearly matters of law—that by reason of such knowledge on the part of the appellants they were not within the cover of the policy of insurance in respect of the circumstances of this case, and that there was not in force such a policy of insurance in relation to the circumstances of this case as complied with the requirements of pt. II of the Road Traffic Act, 1930.

With regard to findings (a) and (b), this court is of opinion that quarter sessions were right and the real question in the case, therefore, is whether at the material time the appellants were protected by an existing policy of insurance taken out in respect of the vehicle.

It was not disputed in this case that had there been an accident causing death or personal injury by negligence while the car was being driven by the servant of the company, unless the exceptions clause applied, their liability was covered by the policy, but counsel for the respondent argued that it was necessary for there to be in force a policy which would also have covered the liability of the driver. Admittedly, there was no such policy and, therefore, he contended that the appellants had not complied with s. 35 of the Act, and were guilty of an offence on that ground.

The section provides that it shall not be lawful to use or to cause or permit any other person to use a motor vehicle on the road unless there is in force in relation to the user of the vehicle by that person or that other person as the case may be such a policy of insurance as complies with the Act. It is to be observed that the section says nothing about driving; it refers to the use of the vehicle. No doubt, the owner of a car who drives himself uses the vehicle, but so he does if it is driven on his account by his servant. Where the statute deals with matters relating to driving, for instance in ss. 5, 9 and 15, it uses the word "drives." A person who rides in his car while it is being driven by someone else, or who sends his driver out with his motor vehicle on business, uses, but does not drive, the vehicle. In the latter case clearly he causes his driver to use the vehicle. If, when the owner is driving or the car is being driven by a servant on the employer's business so that the owner would come under a liability if death or personal injury is caused to a third person by the negligence of the driver, and the liability of the owner is covered by insurance, in our opinion, it is clear that there is in force in relation to the user of the vehicle whether by the owner or driver a policy of insurance. The appellants in this case were using the vehicle which was being driven by their servant. If their liability for accidents was covered, there was in force a policy in relation to the user of the vehicle by another person although that person's separate liability would not be covered. If the owner of a car who has covered his own liability by a policy lends it to a friend he will commit an offence unless either his own policy extends to cover liability incurred by the friend while driving or the friend has a policy which will indemnify him while he is driving another person's car. It is not unusual for an owner to effect a policy which covers only liability incurred either by himself alone or by himself and another named person. In such a case use of the car by any other person would not be covered by the policy.

We must now refer to the judgment of ATKINSON, J., in Sutch v. Burns (3) with which, with all respect, we are unable to agree. The facts of that case appear to be that a company called Convoys Ltd., owned a motor lorry which was driven by one of their men. He took a load of goods to the premises of Mono Containers Ltd. So far he was acting within his employment by Convoys Ltd. The foreman of Mono Containers, Ltd., asked him, apparently as a favour, to take some of their goods to another branch of their business and while he was doing so an accident happened. The injured person sued both Convoys, Ltd., and the driver. WROTTESELY, J., who tried that action, entered judgment against the driver and dismissed the action against Convoys, Ltd., obviously for the reason that the driver was not acting as their servant while he was doing this work for Mono Containers Ltd. ATKINSON, J., held that the underwriters ought to have granted Convoys, Ltd., a policy which would have insured their driver while he was doing this work for Mono Containers Ltd.—at least, that is how we understand the judgment. With this we cannot agree. A company which employs men to drive their vehicles must take out a policy which will cover the user of the vehicles by their servants, but only while they are being driven on their business, because, if the company's servants are driving on their own account or are using their masters' vehicles without authority, the master has neither caused nor permitted the use of the vehicles. If we understand the judgment aright it would mean that the owner of a car was bound to have a policy which would cover the liability of his chauffeur who had taken out his master's car for what is commonly called a "joy ride" and caused personal injury to a third party while so doing. If a driver, the results of whose negligence would be covered by his master's policy when driving for him, drives in circumstances which absolve the master from liability, he commits an offence against the section, but the master does not. We desire to make it clear that we differ from the judge because it seems to us clear that WROTTESELY, J., must have held that the employers of the driver were not liable because he was not driving on their business when the accident occurred. We can see no ground, therefore, on which the employers would be bound to have a policy which would have insured him (the driver) in those circumstances, since they had not permitted him to drive, and if they had, their own policy would have covered the accident.

The question whether the appellants were unable to rely on the protection of the policy by reason of their having recklessly failed to make the enquiries referred to or require the production of the licence depends on the terms of the policy. If the insurance company would have been entitled to refuse to indemnify the appellants, the offence was committed. If they were not, no offence had been committed. The matter turns entirely on an exceptions clause in the policy. By that clause the company is exempted from liability while the vehicle is being driven with the general consent of the insured or of his representative by any person who, to the knowledge of the insured or of such representative, does not hold a licence to drive such vehicle unless such person has held and is not disqualified for holding or obtaining such a licence.

Quarter sessions have held that, in fact, the appellants had no knowledge that McDonald was not licensed. In holding that they recklessly omitted to make enquiries, I understand them to mean no more than that the court considered that they were extremely careless in not making the enquiries. If they meant more than that, it would have been the duty of quarter sessions to state it in plain terms. If a man deliberately shuts his eyes to the obvious, he has as much knowledge as if he were expressly told the fact to which he has closed his eyes, but it is quite another thing to say that because a man has means of knowledge of which he does not avail himself, therefore, he has knowledge. In matters relating to the law of negligence, where the alleged negligence depends on the state of mind or knowledge of a person, knowledge and means of knowledge may often have the same result. If a person does not know of something which it is his duty to know, and which he, therefore, ought to have known, he cannot plead his lack of knowledge, but it is fallacious to say that in all cases knowledge and means of knowledge are the same thing. It will be observed that this clause is an exception clause, and exceptions clauses always receive a strict construction. It is true that in some cases on the law of insurance relating to non-disclosure of material facts it has been held that, if an applicant for insurance ought in the ordinary course of his business to have known certain facts material to the proposed risk and ought to have known those facts before making his application, he must be treated for the purposes of disclosure as having known the facts in question, and he cannot rely on his ignorance of the facts due to the negligence of himself or his servants in the conduct of his business : see, for instance, London General Insurance Co. v. General Marine Underwriters (1). So, too, if an intending assured answers certain questions which it is agreed shall form the basis of the contract and gives an unqualified answer which turns out to be untrue, it is no answer for him to say : "I did not know it." That is because he has given an unqualified answer which is made the basis of the contract, and, if it is untrue, it matters not whether he could have found that out or not. The untruth is fatal though he did not know it to be untrue.

But, in my opinion, entirely different considerations arise when we are dealing with an exceptions clause. It is always for the underwriters to prove the necessary facts to establish an exception, and to escape liability on this policy they would have had to prove that the appellants knew that McDonald was unlicensed. They do not prove that by proving that, if the appellants had made some enquiries, they would have known that he was unlicensed. The exceptions clause does not, in my opinion, place any duty on the assured to make enquiries the absence of which would enable the insurers to take advantage of the exceptions clause. Of course, if the court finds, as I have already said, a wilful shutting of the eyes to the obvious, that only means that they find that, in fact, the assured did know the facts. I can find no case in which it has ever been held that an insurer could take advantage of an exceptions clause in these circumstances. It would, of course, be open to an insurer to insert in his policies a clause which would enable him to take advantage of the exception if the assured knew or might by reasonable enquiry have ascertained that the driver was not insured, but I am certainly not inclined to read into this clause any such provision. What quarter sessions have really held in this case is that the assured would be estopped as against the insurance company from denying that they knew a fact because they might have discovered it if they had made enquiries. There is nothing here to suggest that quarter sessions intended to find that the assured did not act honestly. An honest man may often believe a liar although a person equally honest, but wiser, would have made further enquiries which would have disclosed the untruth. I am not prepared to hold that for the purpose of this exceptions clause means of knowledge is the same as knowledge. To do so would be to open the door to doctrines with regard to constructive notice being incorporated into the law of insurance.

It would, I think, be as disastrous in the case of policies as it would be in the law of negotiable instruments, and I may quote the words of LORD HERSCHELL, in London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons (1) ([1892] A.C. 201, at p. 221), where he said :

A I should be very sorry to see the doctrine of constructive notice introduced into the law of negotiable instruments. But regard to the facts of which the taker of such instruments had notice is most material in considering whether he took in good faith. Let me say in parenthesis that with regard to bills of exchange it is expressly provided that a thing is deemed to be done in good faith where it is, in fact, honestly done, whether it is done negligently or not : Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 90. LORD HERSCHELL continues :

B If there be anything which excites the suspicion that there is something wrong in the transaction, the taker of the instrument is not acting in good faith if he shuts his eyes to the facts presented to him and puts the suspicions aside without further inquiry.

C I can see nothing which would justify it being held—and quarter sessions have not held—that there was anything in this case to excite suspicion in the minds of the appellants. It is satisfactory to know that the insurance company in this case did not seek to take advantage of the exception clause because I have no doubt they recognised that it did not apply to the facts of this case. The consequence is that the appeal is allowed and the conviction is quashed. The appellants must have their costs of this appeal.

D HUMPHREYS, J. : On the first point taken by counsel for the respondent I entirely agree with the judgment of my Lord which has just been read. The driver of the motor vehicle, McDonald, was unlicensed and uninsured. He was driving the vehicle on a road, and was employed for that purpose by the appellants. In my opinion, the appellants would have had no defence to a charge under s. 4 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, of having so employed him while he was unlicensed.

E The question in this Case as stated is whether the appellants also committed an offence against s. 35 (1), in permitting him to use the vehicle on the road while he was not covered by insurance. He was, undoubtedly, one of the persons falling within the expression “persons using the vehicle on the road.” It is, I think, manifest that not everyone using such a vehicle is required to be covered by insurance. A mere passenger may be said to use the vehicle while he is being given a lift ; a person to whom the owner lends his car for the day, with the services of his driver, is one, at least, of the users of the vehicle on that day. F If the driver and owner are insured, no one would contend that the borrower in that case also requires to be covered. The reason, as I think, is that it is not any particular person who uses the vehicle who is required by s. 35 to be insured. What is required is that the user on the road by the person or persons in fact using should be covered by insurance in respect of third party risks.

G In the present case, the appellants, as the owners, had a policy which indemnified them against any liability which might be incurred by them in respect of death or bodily injury to any person arising out of the use on the road of the vehicle. The policy was, therefore, one which complied with the requirements of s. 36 (1) of the Act. The contention of counsel for the respondent is that something further is required by s. 35, namely, an insurance indemnifying the driver, McDonald. I find nothing in the section to support that contention. I think the true view of the section is that what must be covered by insurance H in respect of third party risks is the use on the road of the vehicle by the driver. On the facts stated in the Case, McDonald was driving the vehicle as the servant of the appellants, and was acting in the scope of his authority. The appellants, therefore, were plainly liable for the consequences of any negligence displayed by McDonald in the course of his driving, and no such question arises as that which ATKINSON, J., purported to decide in Sutch v. Burns (3). If that learned judge is to be taken as having held that in every case of a motor vehicle on the road driven by a servant of the owner, both the driver and the owner must be covered by insurance, I respectfully differ from his view. As my Lord has pointed out, no insurer, when insuring the owner of a vehicle to be driven by servants, agrees to cover those servants when driving on their own account, or using the vehicle without authority, as was the case in Sutch v. Burns (3). To give effect, therefore, to the judgment of ATKINSON, J., it would be necessary to construe s. 35 as requiring every driver of such a vehicle to take out a policy of insurance in precisely the same way as he is required by s. 4 to take out a licence to drive, and I cannot agree that such is the effect of the section.

The second point seems to me to turn upon the meaning of the word "knowingly" in the exceptions clause, the words being : A

The company shall not be liable in respect of any claim arising (1) whilst such vehicle is . . . (c) being driven with the general consent of the insured or of his representative by any person who to the knowledge of the insured or such representative does not hold a licence to drive such vehicle.

And then there is an exception which is not material. The absence of express knowledge is plainly not conclusive. Knowledge may be implied from circumstances. During the argument I was much impressed by the contention of counsel for the respondent that quarter sessions had found knowledge on the part of the appellants that their servant was not insured, and they found that on evidence sufficient to support that inference from the facts. They, in fact, found that the appellants were reckless in their failure to make enquiries. I take the view that the word "reckless" means a great deal more than negligence, and in this class of case one may turn to ss. 11 and 12 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, to see what great differences there may be to a person as the result of his either having driven a motor car negligently, that is, without due care and attention, or recklessly, since in the latter case he is liable to infinitely more serious penalties than in the former. B

That is their finding. They have not, however, found in terms that there was knowledge, and both my Lord and, as I understand, LEWIS, J. (who are far more familiar with insurance law than I am) are of opinion that the principle of the doctrine of constructive notice, which in this case might be said to be constructive knowledge, ought not to be applied to the exceptions clause in the policy. The finding that the appellants must be taken to have known would, I think, in other circumstances, be equivalent to a finding that they did know, but in this case I do not think the appellants should be convicted unless the court has made an unequivocal affirmative finding that they had the requisite knowledge. For that reason I agree with the result proposed by my Lord. C

LEWIS, J. : I have had an opportunity of considering the two judgments which have been read. I agree with them and have nothing to add. D

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : J. H. Milner & Son, agents for Arnold Lever & Co., Blackpool (for the appellants); Gibson & Weldon, agents for T. L. Child, Kirkhampton (for the respondent). E

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Distinguished. BANNISTER v. BANNISTER. [1948] 2 All E.R. 133.

BUCK v. HOWARTH

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Lewis, JJ.), January 24, 1947.] G

Landlord and Tenant—Small tenement—Possession—Oral permission to occupy for life—Licence or tenancy—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 54—Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1.

The respondent and his wife occupied a freehold dwelling-house, the property of the wife. By her will, the wife devised the house to her son, who told the respondent that he could live in the house until he died. The respondent paid no rent to the son, and the son paid the rates. By deed of gift dated Dec. 21, 1945, the son gave the property to the appellant, who likewise received no rent from the respondent and also paid the rates. In proceedings under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, s. 1, for a warrant for possession, H

Held : the respondent was given an uncertain interest in the premises and the law would presume a tenancy at will, and, therefore, proceedings to obtain possession of the property under the Act of 1838 could be taken.

[As to DISTINCTION BETWEEN LEASE AND LICENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 8-10, para. 5; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, pp. 501-510, Nos. 1598-1657.]

As to TERM DEFINED BY REFERENCE TO DETERMINING EVENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 148-150, para. 161; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 30, pp. 462-466, Nos. 1245-1292.

FOR THE LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1925, s. 54, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 15, p. 235; and FOR THE SMALL TENEMENTS RECOVERY ACT, 1838, s. 1 see ibid, Vol. 10, pp. 324-326.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Anderson v. Midland Railway Co. (1861), 3 E. & E. 614; 30 L.J.Q.B. 94; 3 L.T. 809; 25 J.P. 405; 7 Jur. N.S. 411; 121 E.R. 573; 30 Digest 390, 537.
- (2) Doe d. Hull v. Wood (1845), 14 M. & W. 682; 15 L.J. Ex. 41; 6 L.T.O.S. 102; 9 Jur. 1060; 153 E.R. 649; 31 Digest 53, 2010.
- (3) Richardson v. Langridge (1811), 4 Taunt. 128; 128 E.R. 277; 31 Digest 36, 1825.
- (4) Lace v. Chantler, [1944] 1 All E.R. 305; [1944] K.B. 368; 113 L.J.K.B. 282; 170 L.T. 185; Digest Supp.

Case stated by Bury (Lancashire) Justices.

The appellant applied to the justices for a warrant for possession of a house within the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, s. 1. The justices refused a warrant on the ground that the occupier had been granted a tenancy for life and the appellant appealed. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

A. S. Orr for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court. This is a Case stated by magistrates to whom the appellant applied for a warrant for possession under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838. The tenement in question was formerly owned by the wife of the respondent, and by her will she devised the property, which was freehold property, to her son, Ernest Buck. The will having been proved, Ernest Buck told the respondent that he could live in the house until he died. The respondent paid no rent to Buck and Buck has paid the rates in respect of the tenement. By deed of gift, dated Dec. 21, 1945, Buck gave the tenement to the appellant, who thus became the owner of the property. He likewise received no rent from the respondent, and he paid the rates on the house. The justices found that the respondent was a tenant for life, but that is not a finding that can be supported in law. The only question which has been troubling the court is whether the court could imply more than a licence, for, if there had been only a licence, the difficulty would have been that proceedings under the Small Tenements Recovery Act cannot be taken where the relationship of the parties is that of licensor and licensee and not landlord and tenant.

The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 54, and Anderson v. Midland Railway Co. (1), seem to clear the matter up. On the facts as found by the justices the respondent was given an uncertain interest in the premises, and in those circumstances the law will presume a tenancy at will. Therefore, there is a tenancy here.

I may say that the other case to which reference should be made is Doe d. Hull v. Wood (2), which refers to the case of Richardson v. Langridge (3). In that case, PARKE, B., said (14 M. & W. 682 at p. 687) :

Richardson v. Langridge correctly lays down the law on this subject, viz., that a simple permission to occupy creates a tenancy at will, unless there are circumstances to show an intention to create a tenancy from year to year.

I think we can reverse the decision of the magistrates and order that a warrant should issue. In a case of this sort neither side really understood their rights. The case would have been much better brought in the county court, and we shall not give any costs in this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Pickstone & King, Radcliffe, Lancashire (for the appellant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SOCHACKI v. SAS AND ANOTHER

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), January 29, 30, 1947.]

Negligence—Fire—Outbreak—Lodger leaving fire in grate during absence—Doctrine in Rylands v. Fletcher—Res ipsa loquitur.

An outbreak of fire, the probable cause of which was a spark from a lodger's fire, caused damage to the house. There was no evidence of negligence on the part of the lodger.

HELD: neither the rule in Rylands v. Fletcher (1) nor the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied, and the lodger was not liable.

[AS TO THE RULE in Rylands v. Fletcher, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 24, p. 46, para. 83; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 187-189, Nos. 311-316.

AS TO res ipsa loquitur, see HALSBURY, Vol. 23, pp. 671-675, paras. 956-958; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 88-92, Nos. 539-607.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70, H.L. affg. S.C. sub nom. Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L.R. 1 Exch. 265; revsg. (1865) 3 H. & C. 774.
- (2) Musgrove v. Pandelis, [1919] 2 K.B. 43; 88 L.J.K.B. 915; 120 L.T. 601; 36 Digest 54, 339.
- (3) Vaughan v. Menlove (1837), 3 Bing. N.C. 468; 3 Hodg. 51; 4 Scott, 244; 6 L.J.P.C. 92; 36 Digest 21, 95.
- (4) Filliter v. Phippard (1847), 11 Q.B. 347; 17 L.J.Q.B. 89; 10 L.T.O.S. 225; 11 J.P. 903; 36 Digest 54, 334.
- (5) Tubervill (Tubervil) v. Stamp (1697), Holt K.B. 9; Carth. 425; Skin. 681; Comb. 459; 1 Com. 32; 1 Ld. Raym. 264; 12 Mod. Rep. 152; 1 Salk. 13; 2 Digest 66, 418.
- (6) Grayson (H. & C.) v. Ellerman Lines, Ltd., [1920] A.C. 466; 89 L.J.K.B. 924; 123 L.T. 65, H.L.; affg., S.C. sub nom. Ellerman Lines, Ltd. v. Grayson (H. & C.), [1919] 2 K.B. 514, C.A.; 36 Digest 116, 780.
- (7) Job Edwards, Ltd. v. Birmingham Navigation, [1924] 1 K.B. 341; 93 L.J.K.B. 261; 130 L.T. 522; 36 Digest 214, 575.
- (8) Brooke v. Bove, [1928] 2 K.B. 578; 97 L.J.K.B. 511; 139 L.T. 376; Digest Supp.
- (9) Honeywill & Stein, Ltd. v. Larkin Bros. (London's Commercial Photographers), Ltd., [1934] 1 K.B. 191; 103 L.J.K.B. 74; 150 L.T. 71; Digest Supp.
- (10) Charing Cross Electricity Supply Co. v. Hydraulic Power Co., [1914] 3 K.B. 772; 83 L.J.K.B. 1352; 111 L.T. 198; 78 J.P. 305; 36 Digest 189, 315.
- (11) Read v. J. Lyons & Co., Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 471; 175 L.T. 413.
- (12) Powell v. Fall (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 597; 49 L.J.Q.B. 428; 43 L.T. 562; 45 J.P. 156; 36 Digest 431, 1501.
- (13) Gunter v. James (1908), 72 J.P. 448; 26 Digest 431, 1502.

ACTION for debt with counterclaim for damage caused by fire in a lodger's room. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Gallop, K.C. for the plaintiff.

B. B. Stenham for the defendants.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: In this action, inter alia, the question arises whether the plaintiff is responsible for damage done to the defendants' property and nursery school business through a fire starting in the room which he occupied as a lodger in the defendants' house.

The plaintiff occupied a bed-sitting-room on the second floor of the house. He paid no rent, but in return for the board and lodging which he got, he kept the books and acted as a business adviser to the defendants. His position in law as a lodger was that of a licensee. One afternoon he went out leaving a fire burning in his room. There is no suggestion that he made his fire in any unusual way or built up any enormous fire. While he was out, a fire took place in the room, the most probable cause of which was that a spark jumped from the fire and set fire to the floorboards. There was no fire guard, and there does not seem to have been an iron fender. I say at once that I cannot find any evidence of negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The fire spread to the room next to the plaintiff's room in which there was stored a lot of furniture, which was for use in the school, and caused a considerable amount of damage.

The question which I have to determine is whether or not the plaintiff is responsible for damage caused by the fire in the absence of any evidence of negligence. In my opinion, he is not. I do not think the doctrine in Rylands v. Fletcher (1) applies to a case of this sort. He was using his room in the ordinary, natural way in which the room could be used. It is not the case of a fire starting on one owner's premises and spreading to the premises of an adjoining owner. If a fire is negligently or improperly started by a person on his land, as, for instance, lighting a bonfire which spreads, he may be liable, not merely to an adjoining owner who suffers damage, but to any other person who suffers damage. If I happen to be on somebody else's land at a time when a fire spreads to that land and my motor car or property is destroyed, I have just as much right against the person who improperly allows the fire to escape from his land as the owner of the land on which I happen to be. I do not doubt that for a moment, but here the fire was being used by a man in a fireplace in his own room. There was an ordinary, natural, proper, everyday use of a fireplace in a room. The fireplace was there to be used. The plaintiff was using it with the assent of the defendants. There is no necessity for him to show that the defendants said in so many words: "You may have a fire." They licensed him to be the occupier of a room at a time when it was natural and proper for a man to have a fire. If a person goes into lodgings where the landlady provides a fireplace, and he uses it for a fire in a proper way, the landlady, in my opinion, has no claim against that person if a fire happens to take place in his room unless there is negligence on his part. The consequence of holding otherwise would certainly be remarkable, because it seems to me that, if I gave effect to counsel's argument, it would follow that, if a man living in a house lit a fire in his room, and, owing to the construction of the fireplace or some defect in a fire-brick, a fire took place, he would be responsible, because, it is said, if one lights the fire, one is responsible for keeping the fire in. I do not think that is the law. If a person living in a house does no more than light a fire in a fireplace, and through some unhappy accident a fire occurs, he is certainly not liable under Rylands v. Fletcher (1), a very hard-worked case, which the House of Lords said recently should not be extended. Therefore, in the absence of evidence of negligence, there is no ground for holding the plaintiff liable on the counterclaim.

Counsel for the defendants argued that I am bound to apply the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, but I do not think this is a case of res ipsa loquitur. Everybody knows fires occur through accidents which happen without negligence on anybody's part. There is nothing here to show that the plaintiff left any improper fire in his room, any larger fire than usual, a fire which was too large for the grate, or anything like that. There was a fire burning in his room. He left his room for two or three hours. I do not consider that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could possibly apply to a case such as this. I come to the conclusion here that there is no evidence of negligence against the plaintiff in this case, and without evidence of negligence there is no liability on the plaintiff for the fire. Consequently, there will be judgment for the plaintiff against both defendants, with costs.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors: H. Davis & Co. (for the plaintiff); Booth & Blackwell (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MIDDLETON'S SETTLEMENT, COTTESLOE v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 27, 28, 1947.]

Estate Duty—Sale of land situated in Ireland and arising out of strict settlement—Investment of proceeds in United Kingdom—Whether investments "situate out of United Kingdom."—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (2).

The proceeds of the sale of land situated in Ireland and arising under a strict settlement were invested in the United Kingdom, and on the death of the settlor estate duty was claimed in respect of such investments.

HELD: the investments were not property situated out of the United Kingdom within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (2), but were liable to estate duty.

[AS TO DUTIES ON FOREIGN PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13: pp. 246-248; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, p. 17, Nos. 89-96.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Re Stoughton, [1941] Irish Reports 166.

(2) Re MacKenzie, [1940] 4 All E.R. 310; [1941] Ch. 69; 110 L.J. Ch. 28; 164 L.T. 375; 57 T.L.R. 107; 84 Sol. Jo. 670; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether estate duty was payable upon certain capital moneys invested in the United Kingdom, being the proceeds of a sale of lands in Eire under a strict settlement.

N. C. Armitage for the trustees.

J. H. Stamp for the Attorney-General.

Denys B. Buckley for the tenant for life.

A

ROXBURGH, J. : The short, but important, question which I have to decide in this case is whether capital moneys invested in the United Kingdom, being the proceeds of sale of land in Ireland and arising under a strict settlement, are situate out of the United Kingdom within the meaning of s. 2 (2) of the Finance Act, 1894, because they are capital moneys arising under a strict settlement of Irish land. The sub-section provides :

B

Property passing on the death of the deceased when situate out of the United Kingdom shall be included only, if, under the law in force before the passing of this Act, legacy or succession duty is payable in respect thereof, or would be so payable but for the relationship of the person to whom it passes.

Looking at the sub-section without regard to any other consideration, it is difficult to see how such investments could be said to be situate out of the United Kingdom, because the plain fact is that they are not, and the Act does not say "situate or deemed to be situate" or anything of that sort, but, of course, there is the well-known provision with regard to capital moneys arising in such circumstances which I will read, for a reason which will presently appear not from the present Settled Land Act but from s. 22 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1882 :

C

Capital money arising under this Act while remaining uninvested or unapplied, and securities on which an investment of any such capital money is made, shall, for all purposes of disposition, transmission, and devolution, be considered as land, and the same shall be held for and go to the same persons successively, in the same manner and for and on the same estates, interests, and trusts, as the land wherefrom the money arises would, if not disposed of, have been held and have gone under the settlement.

D

A converse case to the present arose in Ireland and is the subject-matter of a decision, Re Stoughton (1). In that case a testator died in England on Dec. 6, 1885. By his will, dated Nov. 6, 1868, he left all his lands in England, Wales and Ireland to trustees in trust for various persons. The domicile of the testator both at the date of the will and at the date of his death was English; the will was prepared by English solicitors and the trustees and beneficiaries resided in England. The testator's wife died on June 19, 1924, but some years prior to her death she, as tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, sold the land in Ireland under the Land Acts to the occupying tenants. Part of the proceeds of sale amounting to £36,076 was invested by the trustees in securities in England; the balance was invested in land in England. On the death of the testator's nephew in 1936, the revenue commissioners claimed that estate duty was payable on these securities.

E

For the most part that case turns upon matters which are not relevant to the matter which I have to decide today, but there is no doubt that one ground of the decision is relevant. Towards the end of his judgment HANNA, J., first of all held that the Settled Land Act of 1882 was an Irish Act. He then read s. 22 (5), which I have already read. He then read s. 16 (1) (d) of the Irish Land Act, and about that he said this : ([1941] I.R. 166 at p. 181)

F

the provisions of s. 16, sub-s. 1 (d), secure that all claims as from the date of the vesting order as against the land, shall attach to the purchase money in like manner as immediately before the date of the order they attached to the land.

G

He then continued as follows :

H

I am of opinion that the effect of these sections is to give a complete answer to the argument of the petitioners and to establish not only that the English securities are notional Irish land but that the claim of the Revenue Commissioners to have the estate duty charged upon the proceeds falls upon them. The succession of William Anthony Stoughton was, in my opinion, a "devolution" within the meaning of the words in s. 22, sub-s. (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, under the will, and also one of a series of successions made by the "disposition" thereunder. This brings the securities within one or other, or both, of the words in s. 22, sub-s. (5) of the Settled Land Act. These words cannot refer to the barest legal meaning to be applied to the terms and would, in my opinion, carry with them the legal incidents or obligations such as estate duty attached thereto by statute or otherwise.

Mr. Buckley concedes that no English Settled Land Act can be applicable to the present case in present circumstances; but his argument is that I must have regard to the Irish settled land legislation, and that, having regard to that legislation and to this judgment, I must hold that, contrary to all appearances, the investments in question, which are in fact in England, are in the eye of the revenue law property situate outside the United Kingdom.

The ratio decidendi of Re Stoughton (1) causes me no little difficulty, but I do not think that I need pursue that question further, because I feel bound to accept Mr. Stamp's submission in reply. Mr. Stamp's submission is this, that the meaning of s. 2 (2) of the Finance Act, 1894, as applied to the present case is quite plain, and that I am not entitled to control that meaning by any statute which is not an English statute, and I cannot see the answer to that point.

Moreover, I have found assistance in a judgment of MORTON, J., in Re MacKenzie (2). The legislation which he had to consider was different, but in his judgment he said, ([1941] Ch. 69, at p. 72):

The property being situate in this country, I should have had to find, in some other Act, clear words transposing notionally its position to enable me to hold that it escaped the taxation which is levied by the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2.

By "some other Act" I think he means some other English Act.

In my judgment, in the present case, so far from there being any English Act which in clear words notionally transposes the position of these investments, there is no other English Act applicable at all; and even if, contrary to my judgment, and I think to Mr. Buckley's admission, I had got to construe s. 22 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, I should have very great difficulty in holding that by clear words it notionally transposes the position of the investments in question, being capital moneys, for the purposes of estate duty. Accordingly, in my judgment, the claim of the Crown succeeds.

Solicitors: Warrens (for the trustees and the tenant for life); Solicitor of the Inland Revenue (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

claim of DENNING, J., at p. 348, MINISTER OF PENSIONS
HIGHAM. [1948] 1 All E.R. 863.

STAYNINGS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), January 23, 1947.]

Royal Forces—Pension—Mercantile marine—War injury—Abnormal conditions on board ship—Service in cable ship on Iceland station—Complaint of tinned food and bad living conditions—Pensions (Mercantile Marine) Act, 1942, (c. 26) s. 1 (2) (d).

The appellant served in a cable ship during the war and eventually suffered from duodenitis. Between Oct., 1942, and Oct., 1943, the ship was based on Iceland, and the appellant claimed that his illness was caused by the climatic and other conditions under which he worked during that period. He alleged that his quarters were bad, and that his diet consisted mostly of tinned food and there were no fresh vegetables.

HELD: the appellant's condition was not "attributable to... the existence on board ship of any... conditions arising out of [the] war... which would be abnormal in time of peace," within s. 1 (2) (d) of the Pensions (Mercantile Marine) Act, 1942, and, therefore, he was not suffering from a "war injury" entitling him to a pension.

[FOR THE PENSIONS (MERCANTILE MARINE) ACT, 1942, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 35, pp. 317-318; and FOR THE WAR PENSIONS (NAVAL AUXILIARY PERSONNEL) SCHEME (S. R. & O., 1944, No. 499) see BUTTERWORTH'S EMERGENCY LEGISLATION SERVICE, title Pensions [31]]

Case referred to:

(1) Re Saffell, [1945] 1 All E.R. 321; [1945] K.B. 259; 114 L.J.K.B. 513; 172 L.T. 183; 61 T.L.R. 208; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from a decision of a pensions appeal tribunal dismissing the appellant's claim for a pension under s. 1 (2) (d) of the Pensions (Mercantile Marine) Act, 1942. The facts appear in the judgment.

C. H. Crispin for the appellant.

Stephen Chapman for the respondent.

DENNING, J.: The appellant who was serving during the war in a cable ship and eventually suffered from stomach trouble, claims a pension under the Scheme in favour of naval auxiliary personnel, (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 499). He says that the ship was based on Iceland for a year from October, 1942, to October, 1943, and it was because of the conditions there that he suffered with this stomach trouble. The Minister and the tribunal have rejected the claim, and he appeals to me.

Questions of law arise over the interpretation of the Act and Scheme relevant to the matter. It is material to trace the history. At the beginning of the war in 1939 an Act was passed giving merchant sailors and naval auxiliary personnel pensions in respect of "war injuries," which were physical injuries caused by enemy action or the like. Other injuries suffered by merchant seamen and naval auxiliary personnel were left to be dealt with under the Workmen's Compensation Acts. In 1942, however, the Pensions (Mercantile Marine) Act was passed, which extended the pensions payable by the government to "war risk injuries," which were defined by s. 1 (2) of that Act. They include physical injuries attributable to a number of defined war perils, which are specified in paras. (a), (b) and (c) of s. 1 (2), and include perils due to sailing in convoy, to the absence of lights at sea, or to cargo being loaded above the Plimsoll line, and then para. (d) provides for injuries attributable to:

... the existence on board ship of any other conditions arising out of [the] war ... which would be abnormal in time of peace.

The injuries covered include "tuberculosis and any other organic disease:" see s. 5. If they are attributable to the specified causes, they are subject to rights of pension, but other injuries such as, for instance, falling down a ladder on board ship, are still left to be dealt with under the Workmen's Compensation Acts. Section 1 (3) provides that the injury is to be treated as attributable to those causes only if they "substantially increased the risk of the peril occurring which caused the injury." For instance, sailing in convoy might substantially increase the risk of collision, and so would the absence of lights, while the carrying of excessive cargo might substantially increase the risk of stranding. If an injury was caused by that increased risk, the man was entitled to a pension but not otherwise. If, for instance, a ship was overloaded owing to war conditions and an injury occurred not due to that overloading but to bad navigation, the man's claim would be a matter for proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Acts.

The question I have to determine is: What is the meaning of the words, "the existence on board ship of any other conditions arising out of [the] war ... which would be abnormal in time of peace." In construing that paragraph I look to the other paragraphs in s. 1 (2) because those words: "any other conditions" warrant me in so doing. I also have regard to the words: "on board ship" and "abnormal in time of peace." On the proper construction of this enactment I am of opinion that the fact that a ship goes into northern waters or other waters where there are bad climatic conditions, or goes on a long voyage, or is out for a long period of time from home, or is subjected to gales or severe weather of any kind, is not an existence on board ship of conditions which would be abnormal in times of peace. Nor, indeed, the fact that the men have to work very hard or for long hours. In such respects there is no norm. A sailor is subjected to rigours and hardships as part of his normal life in times of peace. What is covered by para. (d) is something ejusdem generis with the preceding paragraphs such as alterations in the physical conditions existing on board ship. For example, in Re Saffell (1), there was on board ship a closer atmosphere from fuel oil in the engine room than would be normal in time of peace, exactly as the blacking out of port holes or shutting out air or such like conditions in the ship would not be normal in time of peace.

In the present case the question is whether the conditions come within the test I have mentioned. The commanding officer in his report said this :

During the whole of this period [i.e., the Iceland period] the ship was never involved in any incident in respect of damage by enemy action, nor any near misses, but very heavy storms were encountered in Iceland. War time conditions are at all times more exacting, especially in a cable ship. Conditions in Iceland were grim, but food and good food was plentiful. The ship for nearly twelve months was almost completely devoid of minor ailments and sickness of any kind. The full crew that left England in the ship returned to England in the ship without exception. Every man was far healthier than when he left England. I have no record, nor can I remember at any time of this rating complaining of stomach trouble.

A

Taking what he says there, "heavy storms were encountered in Iceland," but that is not a condition which comes within the paragraph. "Conditions in Iceland were grim." No doubt, conditions in that climate would be grim, but that does not come within the paragraph. It is not a condition on board ship ; it is the sort of condition which a merchant sailor encounters in the course of his employment. Then : "War time conditions are at all times more exacting, especially in a cable ship." As I understand it, he is saying there that in war time the general conditions, such as the time the ship is at sea, the amount of work to be done, and so forth, are more exacting, but not that there is any condition on board the ship itself arising out of the war which could be said to be abnormal.

B

C

The appellant's case is that he was :

serving in the cable ship under extreme conditions, mostly tinned food, extremely bad living quarters. There was secondary heating, one Valor stove per six men, while the ship was periodically under repairs. While serving all this period in Iceland, fresh vegetables nil.

Taking the last sentence : "While serving all this period in Iceland, fresh vegetables nil," that is not one of the conditions on board ship. It is a condition in Iceland. In any case tinned food and absence of fresh vegetables is the sort of condition which arises in time of peace with sailors who are on voyages in certain parts of the world. "Extremely bad living quarters." That may be, but it does not mean that they were abnormal in time of peace. In some ships there are bad living quarters in time of peace. The tribunal found as a fact that the conditions on board ship were not such as could be considered abnormal in time of peace and I see no ground for saying they were wrong in law.

D

E

It seems to me that, applying the test I have mentioned, this is not a case which comes within the provision of s. 1 (2) (d). It is a case in which a man suffered from a disease, it may be owing to the fact that the voyage took him to Iceland, it may be owing to the conditions in Iceland being grim, but none of those was the existence "on board ship" of conditions arising out of the war which would be abnormal in time of peace. The claim fails on that ground.

F

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Culross & Trelawny (for the appellant) ; Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, ESQ, Barrister-at-Law.]

*tinguished. Re VISCOUNT GALWAY'S
L TRUSTS. [1949] 2 All E.R. 419.*

G

Re HARVEY, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HOSKIN AND OTHERS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), January 23, 29, 1947.]

Wills—Ademption—Gift of undivided shares in land—Will made in 1912—Statutory trusts imposed in 1926—Conversion of undivided shares into personally—Codicil made in 1927, containing reference to will but not to gift—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 35, sched. I, pt. IV, para 1.

H

By his will, made in 1912, the testator gave all his "parts or shares" in certain estates to his trustee on trust for one of his daughters for life with remainder to her issue. At the date of the will, the testator was entitled to undivided shares in the estates in question. By the Law of Property Act, 1925, sched. I, pt. IV, para. 1, the statutory trusts declared by s. 35 were imposed on undivided shares in land, and on Jan. 1, 1926, those shares were converted into personal property. The testator, who died in 1929, made a codicil to his will in 1927 which was described as a "further codicil" to the will of 1912, but which merely placed on record the cancellation and destruction of an earlier codicil and contained no reference to the contents of the will. This codicil was admitted to probate with the testator's other testamentary documents. The question to be determined was whether the gift of the undivided shares in land had been adeemed by the imposition of the statutory trusts:—

HELD: since the codicil made in 1927 (i.e., after the imposition of the statutory trusts) expressly referred to the will, the will had been sufficiently republished thereby so as to preclude ademption: Re Warren, Warren v. Warren (9) followed; Re Newman, Slater v. Newman (8) distinguished. The absence of any express confirmation of the will was immaterial: Re Hardyman, Teesdale v. McClintock (15) applied.

[AS TO UNDIVIDED SHARES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 27, pp. 629-632, paras. 1104-1106; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supplement, Equity, Nos. 817A-817C. AS TO ADEPTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 127-129, para. 164; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 403-405, Nos. 2355-2372.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) A.-G. v. Public Trustee and Tuck, [1929] 2 K.B. 77; 98 L.J.K.B. 462; 141 L.T. 398; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Mellish, Clark v. Buchannan (1927), cited in [1929] 2 K.B. at p. 82, n.; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Wheeler, Jameson v. Cotter, [1929] 2 K.B. 81, n.; 141 L.T. 322; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Price, [1928] Ch. 579; 97 L.J.Ch. 423; 139 L.T. 339; Digest Supp.
- (5) Richards v. A.-G. of Jamaica (1848), 6 Moo. P.C.C. 381; 42 Digest 782, 2114.
- (6) Frewen v. Frewen (1875), 10 Ch. App. 610; 33 L.T. 43; 44 Digest 404, 2367.
- (7) Re Kempthorne, Charles v. Kempthorne, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J.Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111; Digest Supp.
- (8) Re Newman, Slater v. Newman, [1930] 2 Ch. 409; 99 L.J.Ch. 427; 143 L.T. 676; Digest Supp.
- (9) Re Warren, Warren v. Warren, [1932] 1 Ch. 42; 101 L.J.Ch. 85; 146 L.T. 224; Digest Supp.
- (10) Pows v. Mansfield (1837), 3 My. & Cr. 359; 7 L.J.Ch. 9; 44 Digest 379, 2133.
- (11) Oakes v. Oakes (1852), 9 Hare 666; 44 Digest 413, 2438.
- (12) Re Slater, Slater v. Slater, [1907] 1 Ch. 665; 76 L.J.Ch. 472; 97 L.T. 74; 44 Digest 405, 2378.
- (13) Re Smith, Bilke v. Roper (1890), 45 Ch.D. 632; 60 L.J.Ch. 57; 63 L.T. 448; 44 Digest 370, 2042.
- (14) Berkeley (Countess) v. R. G. W. Berkeley, [1946] 2 All E.R. 154; [1946] A.C. 555; 115 L.J.Ch. 281; 175 L.T. 153.
- (15) Re Hardyman, Teesdale v. McClintock, [1925] Ch. 287; 94 L.J.Ch. 204; 133 L.T. 175; 44 Digest 385, 2196.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether a gift in a will made in 1912 of undivided shares in land had been adeemed by the conversion of the undivided shares into personalty by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 35, and sched. I, pt. IV, para. 1. The testator, who died in 1929, made a codicil in 1927, described as a codicil to the will of 1912 but containing no reference to the gift in question. The facts appear in the judgment.

C. V. Rawlence for the Public Trustee.

J. Pennycuik for the first three defendants.

A. J. Belsham for the remaining defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 29. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. In this case, the testator, Samuel Harvey, made his will on Nov. 7, 1912, and thereby disposed of some undivided shares in real estate. The question which I have to decide is whether the disposition was invalidated and the gift adeemed by operation of law, that is to say, by the coming into force of the Law of Property Act, 1925, in his lifetime. He died on Mar. 30, 1929. He had made five codicils to his will, of which four were admitted to probate, the fifth (being the second in order of date) having been revoked, as I will presently mention. The first codicil is dated Oct. 7, 1919, and contains an express confirmation of his will. All that I know of the second is that it was dated Jan. 9, 1922, made some provision for a servant of the testator, and was cancelled and destroyed by him with the intention of thereby revoking it when she left his service. The third codicil is dated June 15, 1922, and confirmed the will and two preceding codicils. The fourth codicil is dated June 17, 1924, and contains no express confirmation of the will or any preceding codicil. The fifth and last codicil was made after the Law of Property Act, 1925, came into force, being dated Jan. 15, 1927. It contains no disposition of any kind, nor does it confirm any preceding testamentary document, but merely places on record the cancellation and destruction of the second codicil, in order, no doubt, to obviate any difficulty that might arise from the allusion to it in the third codicil. It is described as a "further codicil" to the will, the date of which it mentions.

- I now turn to the will. After appointing the Public Trustee to be the sole
A executor and trustee thereof, the testator, among other dispositions, devised Sea View House, in which he resided, upon trust for his wife (who, in fact, predeceased him) for her life, and after her death for one of his daughters, whom I will call Miss Harvey, for her life, and after the death of the survivor of them upon the trust thereafter declared with respect to the hereditaments therein after devised for the benefit of another daughter of his, whom I will call Mrs. Hoskin, and her issue. The testator then gave, devised and bequeathed unto
B his trustee a sum of £2,000 local loans stock or an equivalent in money, and also his live and dead farm stock on his farms in the parish of Sancreed, Cornwall, and also, quoting the words of the will, "all my parts or shares in the estates or farms of Derval Chegwiddden Vean and Ennismanen and all other my lands in the said parish of Sancreed," and also, after the death of the survivor of his wife and Miss Harvey, the Sea View property upon trust for sale and investment of the proceeds. He then directed his trustee to hold his said estates and lands
C or "parts or shares of estates and lands" at Sancreed and the said stock or money equivalent and the said farm stock or the proceeds thereof in trust (subject to successive life annuities of £60 to his wife and Miss Harvey) for Mrs. Hoskin for life, and subject thereto for her issue as therein mentioned. He gave the residue of his estate to his wife and Miss Harvey equally. By the third codicil, he revoked the annuity given to Miss Harvey, and gave her in lieu D thereof the half share in residue which he had given to his wife. By the fourth codicil, he gave, after the death of Mrs. Hoskin, the property of which she was life tenant to her two sons equally.

- At the date of his will, the testator was entitled to eight undivided fifteenth shares of Derval and Chegwiddden Vean Farms and to eight undivided tenth shares of Ennismanen farm, but he did not at any material time own any other land in the parish of Sancreed. Under the transitional provisions of the Law
E of Property Act, 1925, the three farms became vested in the Public Trustee upon the statutory trusts, and they have, in fact, recently been sold. On and after Jan. 1, 1926, the testator, it is said, ceased altogether to own any parts or shares in the farms and acquired instead of those parts and shares corresponding fractional interests in the proceeds of the sale of them under the statutory trust for sale. The quality and whole nature of his property was, it is said, fundamentally changed, so that that which he purported to dispose of by his
F will had previously to his death been taken away from him, or, in other words it was adeemed, and his new substituted statutory interest did not, it is said, pass by the disposition of his previous interest, but fell into his residuary estate.

- Apart from authority, I think that a very strong case could be made against the suggested ademption. I would, myself, hesitate to draw fine distinctions between such expressions as "parts or shares in," "parts of or shares in,"
G "parts or shares of," "right title and interest to or in," and other similar variants. The questions I would propound to myself are whether, after the Act came into force, the owner of an undivided share in land had or had not still his part of the land, or his part in the land, or his share in the land, or his share of the land, or his right or title to the land, or his interest in the land, and if to each and every of these questions either a plain affirmative or else a plain negative answer must be given, it might well be thought that the affirmative would be nearer to the truth. After all, the object of the Act, in this regard, was to provide improved
H machinery, and not to affect, more than necessary, the beneficial interests of landowners. I may observe that the testator uses the two expressions "parts or shares in" and "parts or shares of." I agree, of course, that my questions, if put to a conveyancer, would have a technical significance, and that they, or some of them, would be answered by him in the negative. I venture to think, however, that, on a matter such as this, the testator's language ought to be taken in its popular rather than in any technical sense. True it is that his will was probably prepared by a lawyer, but I can hardly attribute to the latter in 1912, any sort of prescience of the legislation of 1925.

Until recently all the parties in this case have proceeded without regard to a possible ademption, but this, of course, can in no way affect my decision of the point. I must now refer to the authorities, and see how far I am obliged to follow them, and what guidance they afford me.

The point appears to have arisen first in connection with the incidence of estate duty. In A.-G. v. Public Trustee (1) ROWLATT, J., followed the decisions of EVE, J., in Re Mellish (2), and TOMLIN, J., in Re Wheeler (3), by holding that there was for that purpose no change in the nature or quality of the property which remained real estate. In Re Mellish (2), before EVE, J., the words were "all my share and interest in" a certain estate, and in Re Wheeler (3), before TOMLIN, J., "all my real estate and undivided shares of real estate in the county of York." Then, in Re Price (4) CLAUSON, J., surveyed the new Acts, as they then were, and said ([1928] Ch. 579, at p. 589):

The result of this survey of the new Acts seems to show that on Jan. 1, 1926, Thomas John Price ceased to have any estate in the fourteen acres or any part of it and became entitled to an equitable interest in the proceeds of sale of the fourteen acres—namely, such interest as might be requisite for giving effect to his rights as a person interested in the land. In my opinion such an interest is an interest in personal estate. By the statutory imposition of a trust for sale the land has, so far as beneficiaries are concerned, been converted into money, and Thomas John Price has an interest in the money. This view of the effect of the Act seems to me not only to be sound in principle but to accord with such decisions as Richards v. A.-G. of Jamaica (5) and Freven v. Freven (6), which recognise that the usual consequences of conversion follow whether the conversion is effected by agreement or compulsorily by Act of Parliament. The provisions with which I have to deal which turn a copyhold estate into a beneficial right in a fund arising under a trust for sale seem to me to be analogous to the provisions which notionally converted, in the one case cited, slaves, and in the other case cited, an advowson, each real property, into a money claim for compensation.

I come next to Re Kempthorne (7), the headnote of which is as follows ([1930] 1 Ch. 268):

By his will dated Dec. 2, 1911, a testator devised to his brother Charles "all my freehold and copyhold property," and gave all his leasehold property and personal estate and effects, subject to payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies upon trust for division amongst his brothers and sisters as therein mentioned. The testator died on Aug. 15, 1928, and was at his death entitled (subject to the effect of the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925) to two equal ninth shares of certain freehold property comprised in his father's residuary estate, and to one equal fourth part of certain freehold minerals purchased by him. He also owned the entirety of certain other freehold property. The residuary gift of personalty lapsed as regards three equal seventh parts owing to the death of two legatees in the testator's lifetime: Held: (1) that as the land held in undivided shares was by the Law of Property Act, 1925, sched. I, pt. IV, para. 1 and s. 35, subjected to a trust for sale as from Jan. 1, 1926, the testator's interest in undivided shares of freehold property was then converted into personal property and passed on his death under the gift of personal property.

On this point, MAUGHAM, J., and the Court of Appeal were in agreement. They approved and followed Re Price (4), and distinguished Re Wheeler (3) and Re Mellish (2). MAUGHAM, J., after reading the passage which I have just quoted from the judgment of CLAUSON, J., in Re Price (4), expressed the view ([1930] 1 Ch. 268, at p. 275) that he was bound to follow the decision in that case. In the Court of Appeal, RUSSELL, L.J., said (ibid., at p. 293):

I desire to add nothing to the judgment of CLAUSON, J., in Re Price (4), which was adopted and approved of by MAUGHAM, J., in his judgment in the present case. As regards the two other cases which Mr. Grant relied upon, the cases before EVE, J., and TOMLIN, J., they are in my opinion distinguishable. So far as Re Mellish (2), the case before EVE, J., is concerned, the terms of the disposition contained in the will under consideration were such as to cover the interest, whether it was freehold property or whether it was personal estate. The gift there was of "all the testator's share and interest" in a certain estate. In Re Wheeler (3), the case before TOMLIN, J., the distinguishing feature, in my opinion, was that although the testator's devise was of all his real estate and undivided moiety of his real estate in the county of York, he had, after the Act had been passed, made a codicil by which he confirmed his will; so that his testamentary disposition had to be treated as one made at the date of the codicil. The learned judge must necessarily have taken the view that, when the testator used that language, he must have been intending to apply it to the interest, whatever it was, which he had in the real estate or undivided share of real estate in the county of York. Those two cases are in my opinion distinguishable; but if they do by any chance conflict with the decisions of CLAUSON, J., in Re Price (4) and of MAUGHAM, J., in the present case, I prefer their views to any views inconsistent with them, which may be involved in the decisions in the other two cases.

I now come to Re Newman (8). In that case, the testator made his will on May 15, 1922, and devised all his "moiety or equal half part or share and all other" his "share in" certain hereditaments to his brother John, they being then tenants in common of the property in equal undivided moieties. The effect of the Act was, of course, on Jan. 1, 1926, to vest the entirety of the hereditaments in the testator and John as joint tenants on the statutory trusts. The testator died on Jan. 29, 1929, without having either altered or confirmed his will, and it was held by FARWELL, J., that the specific devise was adeemed by the imposition of the statutory trusts so that John took nothing thereunder. FARWELL, J., said ([1930] 2 Ch. 409, at p. 417):

The result is this. If the testator uses language that can only be construed as a devise of real estate, and, notwithstanding the imposition of the statutory trusts, he dies without altering or confirming his will, the conversion effected by the statutory trusts adeems the devise, because there is nothing left for that devise to operate on. If on the other hand the testator uses language wide enough to carry any interest in the property whether it be in law real or personal property, the conversion is immaterial. I have therefore to determine the true construction of the testator's language in the present case. It is in my judgment not apt to pass anything but a moiety of real estate, and as there is no real estate left the devise does not operate. It may well be that this result is not in accordance with what the testator would have intended if he had considered the matter, but I am not concerned with that. I am only concerned with his language, i.e., his expressed intention. The whole devise therefore fails.

The point next came before MAUGHAM, J., in Re Warren (9). There, by a will made in 1923, a testatrix devised her "share in" certain land (actually, an undivided fourth share) to a named devisee. By a codicil made in 1927 (i.e., after the imposition of the statutory trusts) she made certain alterations in her will and, subject thereto, she confirmed it. The codicil did not refer to, nor did it in any way affect, the devise. It was held that there was no ademption, and that the interest of the testatrix in the proceeds of sale went absolutely to the devisee. MAUGHAM, J., said ([1932] 1 Ch. 42, at p. 46):

It is not correct to say that the testatrix was entitled only to a share of the proceeds of sale. She had certain other rights. Apart from the recent legislation, there can be no question but that the devise was an effective devise to Mr. Warren; and the question for decision is whether, as the result of the recent legislation, the devise has been adeemed by operation of law. In considering that question it is important to note that the legislature has not deprived the testatrix of all interest in the land. The "statutory trusts" (the meaning of which expression is set out in s. 35 of the Law of Property Act, 1925) are shortly to sell and hold the net proceeds on such trusts as may be requisite for giving effect to the rights of the persons interested in the land. Then by an amendment in the schedule to the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926, it is enacted, in substitution for s. 26 (3) of the Act of 1925, that "trustees for sale shall so far as practicable consult the persons of full age for the time being beneficially interested in possession in the rents and profits of the land until sale and shall, so far as consistent with the general interest of the trust, give effect to the wishes of such persons, or, in the case of dispute, of the majority (according to the value of their combined interests) of such persons, but a purchaser shall not be concerned to see that the provisions of this sub-section have been complied with." Having regard to the provisions of that sub-section, it is clear that trustees for sale would be acting wrongly, in general, in selling, if undivided beneficial owners required them not to sell. There is no doubt that, since the coming into force of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the position of undivided owners is different from what it was before. That Act, for the purpose of simplifying the law, has introduced provisions for undivided shares, and has made partition actions unnecessary and obsolete. But in substance the beneficial interests of the undivided owners in regard to enjoyment so long as the land remains unsold have not been altered, and it is true to say that the ordinary layman possessed of an undivided share in land would be quite unaware of any alteration in his rights as the result of the Act.

After referring to Re Newman (8) MAUGHAM, J., said (ibid., at p. 50):

I should be disposed to follow that decision in a case that was like it. But I think it right to say that I attribute weight in these cases to the consideration that the result of the statutory trusts is not wholly to deprive the person previously entitled to an undivided share of all interest in the land; and the language of the testator may well be such that that consideration may result in the decision that there is no ademption.

For myself, I am satisfied that MAUGHAM, J., was reluctant to follow, and anxious to distinguish, Re Newman (8), a reluctance and an anxiety which I feel and share in the present case. He was not, I think, convinced of the accuracy of that decision, nor, if I may respectfully say so, am I. He found himself able to come to the opposite conclusion in Re Warren (9) by differentiating it from Re Newman (8) by reason of the existence of the post-1925 codicil. This he did after considering Powys v. Mansfield (10), Oakes v. Oakes (11) and Re Slater (12). A

But for the existence of a post-1925 codicil in the present case, I should have felt constrained to disregard any doubts I may entertain as to its correctness, and to follow the decision of FARWELL, J., in Re Newman (8), but the difficulty that I feel is that the fifth codicil here is, as I have already indicated, of a very tenuous character. All that it does is to place a certain fact on record, a thing that might have been done with equal efficacy by a statutory declaration or other non-testamentary document. On the other hand, it does contain an express reference to the will, suggesting that the testator must have been looking at it, though, perhaps, only for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to its date. The fact remains, however, that it calls itself a codicil, was executed as such, and has been admitted with the testator's other testamentary documents to probate. Now, as I understand the matter, a codicil described as a codicil to a particular will republishes that will: see and distinguish Re Smith (13), and see the observations of LORD PORTER ([1946] 2 All E.R. 154, at p. 163) in Berkeley v. Berkeley (14). Re Hardyman (15) is also, I think, in point. The headnote states ([1925] 1 Ch. 287): B

A testatrix, by her will made in 1898, bequeathed a legacy of £5,000 "in trust for my cousin his children and his wife failing his children upon his death and that of his wife or until she marries again the said sum of £5,000 to be divided" in manner therein mentioned. The cousin of the testatrix was, at the date of the will, married to his first wife and she died in January, 1901. In November, 1901, the testatrix, with knowledge of the death of her cousin's first wife, made a codicil to her will, in which she made a bequest of a sum of stock and appointed a residuary legatee. The codicil contained no reference to the bequest of £5,000. In 1903 the cousin of the testatrix remarried. He died in 1924. There was no issue of either marriage. This summons raised the question whether the second wife was entitled to benefit under the bequest of £5,000: Held: that the will and codicil must be read together, and that the second wife was entitled to an interest in the £5,000 for her life or until remarriage. C

The absence of any express post-1925 confirmation of the will does not, in my judgment, affect the matter, and it is to be observed that the codicil in Re Hardyman (15) did not confirm the will. D

I have come to the conclusion that the fifth codicil sufficiently republishes, constructively, as it is said (see JARMAN ON WILLS, 7th ed., p. 184) the testator's will so as to prevent or preclude ademption. I shall, therefore, declare that the gift in question was not adeemed. Out of the testator's share in the proceeds of the sale of the farms, or out of any of the other property devolving therewith, the costs of all parties, taxed as between solicitor and client, must be raised and paid. This is not a case in which the costs should fall on the residue, even if there were any still in the trustees's hands, which is probably not the case. E

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Bird & Bird, agents for Borlase & Venning, Penzance (for the Public Trustee); Hatchett Jones & Co., agents for Wolferstan, Snell & Turner, Plymouth (for the first three defendants); Winter & Co. (for remaining defendants). F

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] G

H

PEGLER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.),
January 30, 31, February 3, 14, 1947.]

Railways and Canals—Railways—Amalgamation—Employee's position worsened—Compensation from amalgamated company—Claim—Limitation—"Cause of arbitration" equivalent to "cause of action"—Date from which time runs—Railways Act, 1921 (c. 55), sched. III, para. (3)—Limitation Act, 1939, (c. 21), ss. 2 (1), 27 (1) (6).

The claimant entered the employment of the T. railway on Oct. 24, 1913, and worked in the locomotive running department. On Apr. 14, 1919, he was appointed a fireman. On July 1, 1923, the T. railway was absorbed into the Great Western group under a scheme pursuant to the Railways Act, 1921, and the claimant was transferred to the service of the respondents. Under the practice of the T. railway, seniority for the purposes of promotion from fireman to driver was calculated from the date of entry into the company's locomotive running department, but the practice of the respondents at the date of transfer (July 1, 1923) was to calculate such seniority from the date of the employee's engagement as a cleaner, or, if he had not been a cleaner, then from the date when he became a fireman. As the claimant had never been a cleaner, his seniority under the respondent's system dated only from Apr., 1919, as compared with Oct., 1913, under the practice of the T. Railway. In May, 1924, the respondents' practice was changed so that the claimant became entitled to be treated for the purpose of seniority as if he had become a fireman 3 years after entry into the locomotive running department. As a result of this loss of seniority the claimant's promotion did not take place until Mar. 9, 1936, whereas a man, junior to him under the practice of the T. railway, but senior under the respondents' practice, was promoted on Apr. 3, 1933. In an arbitration begun on Mar. 2, 1942, the arbitrator held that the claim was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, but, to avoid further references should this view be wrong, he assessed the claimant's loss at £111 14s., being the difference between the wages he had in fact received and those which he would have received if he had been promoted on Apr. 3, 1933.

HELD: (i) in effecting the application of the Limitation Act, 1939, to arbitrations which s. 27 (1) of that Act requires, the word "actions" and the phrase "cause of action" in s. 2 (1) must be interpreted so as to include "arbitrations" and "cause of arbitration," and, accordingly, under s. 2 (1), the period of limitation in the present case would run from the date when the cause of arbitration accrued and not from the date of the award.

(ii) the cause of arbitration accrued when the claimant first became entitled to complain that by reason of the transfer he had been placed in a worse position, and he became so entitled on July 1, 1923 (the date of transfer), notwithstanding that his injury did not materialise until Apr. 3, 1933.

(iii) as the arbitration was not begun before the commencement of the Limitation Act, 1939 (July 1, 1940), s. 27 (6) of that Act operated to apply the provisions of the Act to the claimant's case notwithstanding that the appropriate period of six years had (wholly or in part) expired before the operation of the Act.

(iv) the claimant's only right was to claim directly he lost his seniority for loss or injury consequent thereon, and there was, therefore, no question of his suffering a fresh loss or injury as each pay day arrived.

(v) in consequence, his claim was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 2 (1) (d).

[AS TO WHEN TIME BEGINS TO RUN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 649-650, paras. 826, 827; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 32, pp. 327-328, Nos. 134-141.]

FOR THE LIMITATION ACT, 1939, s. 27, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, pp. 240-241.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Brueton v. Woodward, [1941] 1 K.B. 680 ; [1941] 1 All E.R. 470 ; 110 L.J.K.B. 645 ; 165 L.T. 348 ; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Arbitration between Parker and Great Western Ry. Co., [1944] 1 All E.R. 400 ; sub nom. Parker v. Great Western Ry. Co., 170 L.T. 284 ; Digest Supp.
- (3) Layen v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1944] 1 All E.R. 432 ; Digest Supp.

APPEAL of claimant from order of ATKINSON, J., dated Apr. 15, 1946.

The decision of the arbitrator is stated in the headnote. ATKINSON, J., on a Case stated by the arbitrator on the question whether the Limitation Act, 1939, applied to the matter, held that the arbitration was one within the contemplation of the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 27 (6) ; that the " cause of arbitration " was equivalent to the " cause of action " ; that the claimant's cause of arbitration arose on May 14, 1924, when his seniority was finally settled ; and that his claim was, accordingly, barred by the provisions of s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1939. The claimant appealed.

Beney, K.C., and M. R. Nicholas for the claimant.

Cartwright Sharp, K.C., Fox-Andrews, K.C., and B. J. M. Mackenna for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 14. LORD GREENE, M.R., read the following judgment of the Court. For some years before July 1, 1923, the claimant had been employed in the locomotive running department of the Taff Vale Railway Co., and on Apr. 14, 1919, he had been appointed fireman. On July 1, 1923, the Taff Vale Railway Co. was absorbed into the Great Western Railway group under a scheme made pursuant to the Railways Act, 1921. In accordance with s. 5 (f) of that Act, the scheme incorporated the provisions of sched. III to the Act, and under para. 1 of that schedule the claimant, as an existing servant of the Taff Vale Railway Co., was transferred to and became a servant of the respondents, the Great Western Railway Co. Under the practice followed by the Taff Vale Railway Co., seniority for the purpose of promotion from fireman to driver was calculated as from the date of entry into the company's locomotive running department, which in the case of the claimant was Oct. 24, 1913. In the case of the respondents, however, the practice governing promotion to driver was, at the date of the transfer (July 1, 1923), to calculate seniority as from the date of the man's engagement as cleaner or, if he had never been a cleaner, as from the date when he became a fireman. In the case of the claimant, who had never been a cleaner, this latter date was Apr. 14, 1919. Accordingly, so far as his seniority for the purpose of promotion to driver was concerned, the claimant lost some five and a half years' seniority when his transfer to the respondents took place. On May 14, 1924, however, the practice of the respondents was changed and the old employees of the Taff Vale Railway became entitled to be treated for the purposes of seniority as having been made firemen three years after entering the running department, that is to say, in the case of the claimant, Oct. 24, 1916. By virtue of this change in practice, therefore, the claimant's loss of seniority was reduced from some five and a half years to three years. As a result of this loss of seniority the claimant's promotion to driver was deferred until a date subsequent to that on which he would have been promoted under the practice of the Taff Vale Railway Co. This is shown by the fact that on Apr. 3, 1933, a man formerly in the service of the Taff Vale Railway Co., who was junior to the claimant under the practice of that company but senior to him under the practice of the respondents, was appointed a driver, whereas the claimant did not receive his appointment as driver until Mar. 9, 1936. If he had been appointed as driver on Apr. 3, 1933, he would have received in wages the sum of £111 14s. 0d. more than, in fact, he did receive. By the Special Case the arbitrator awarded this sum as compensation to be paid by the respondents to the claimant if the court should be of opinion that he was wrong in holding, as he did, that the claimant's claim was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939.

It is now necessary to refer to the provisions of sched. III to the Act of 1921, under which the claimant claimed to be entitled to compensation. They are contained in paras. (3) and (4) of the schedule. It is common ground that para. (5) is not, in whole or in part, the appropriate paragraph. Under para. (3) an existing servant of an absorbed company who is transferred to the service of an amalgamated company is not without his consent to

. . . be by reason of such transfer in any worse position in respect to the conditions of his service as a whole [including a number of specified matters] as compared with the conditions of service formerly obtaining with respect to him.

The arbitrator found that the claimant's position was worsened by reason of the transfer without his consent.

Paragraph (4) provides :

A If any question arises as to whether the provisions of [para. (3)] have been complied with, the question shall be referred to a standing arbitrator . . . and, if the arbitrator . . . consider[s] that those provisions have not been complied with, and that the officer or servant has thereby suffered loss or injury, [he] shall award him such sum to be paid by the amalgamated company as [he thinks] sufficient to compensate him for such loss or injury.

B The arbitrator found that the claimant suffered pecuniary loss by reason of the transfer to the amount of £111 14s. 0d. already mentioned. But, although the arbitrator found in favour of the claimant as regards the substance of his claim, he held that the claim was barred by reason of the Limitation Act, 1939, and the question submitted to the court is whether he was right in law in so holding. In the event of the court considering that the claim was only barred as to part, the Case is to be remitted to the arbitrator.

C It is common ground that, if the Limitation Act, 1939, applies to such a case as this, the period within which a claim must be made is six years before the date of the commencement of the arbitration. That date, in the present case, the arbitrator found was Mar. 2, 1942. He did not expressly find what was the date when the six years period began to run, but it is a necessary implication in his decision that the date was not later than Apr. 3, 1933, which was the date when the claimant would have been appointed driver if the D practice of the Taff Vale Railway Co. had been followed. ATKINSON, J., thought that the period began on May 24, 1924, when the respondent company finally settled its practice. The respondents contend primarily that it began on July 1, 1923, when the claimant was transferred to their service and became subject to their practice as it then existed. The claimant contends, in the first place, that, if the statute applies (which he denies), it did not begin to run until the award was actually made, that being the first time that any cause of action arose. Alternatively, he contends that the correct date was the date when "the question" arose, or, in the further alternative, was Apr. 3, 1933, and not earlier. If the latter is the correct date, the claimant contends that the statute would not affect his rights in respect of any payment which he ought to have received less than six years before Mar. 2, 1942, the commencement of the arbitration.

E The first questions for consideration are whether the statute applies, and, if so, whether the period began to run before the date of the award; and, if the answer to the latter question is "Yes," whether the suggestion made by the respondents that a claim in respect of payments which he would have received during the period of six years before the commencement of the arbitration is well founded.

G The Limitation Act, 1939, is a consolidating and amending statute. It received the Royal Assent on May 25, 1939, but it did not come into operation until July 1, 1940, more than a year later. The Act incorporated the provision of the Arbitration Act, 1934, s. 16 (1), which had enacted that the statutes of limitation should apply to arbitrations as they applied to proceedings in the court (so. the High Court : see the Arbitration Act, 1889, s. 27, and the Arbitration Act, 1934, s. 21 (4).) This provision of the Act of 1934 did not, however, apply to statutory arbitrations (s. 20 and sched. II). The law in this latter respect H was altered by the Act of 1939 which, by s. 27 (1), repeats the provisions of s. 16 (1) of the Act of 1934 and provides in sub-s. (6) that the provisions of s. 27 are to apply to an arbitration under an Act of Parliament as well as to an arbitration pursuant to an arbitration agreement. Section 27 (3) and (4), which are taken from s. 16 of the Act of 1934, relate to the determination of the question when an arbitration is to be deemed to be commenced.

Logically, the first question to be considered is whether the provision of the Act of 1939, which made statutory arbitrations for the first time subject to the law of limitations, applies to a case where the time limit laid down by the Act has expired before the Act came into force. Counsel for the claimant, indeed, argued that it did not, but he frankly admitted that he found difficulty in doing so. In our opinion, the argument cannot succeed. Unless the claimant can show that the period does not begin to run until the raising of the "question" or the making of the award, the period must on any view have elapsed (as to the whole, or on the claimant's alternative submission as to part, of his claim) before the Act received the Royal Assent. As, however, s. 33 (b) provides that the Act is not to affect any arbitration begun before the commencement of the Act, and as the Act did not commence until July 1, 1940, he had over a year in which to preserve his position by commencing the arbitration. The language of s. 27 (6) is quite general in its terms and we can see no ground for implying any such limit on its operations as is suggested. Indeed, the considerations to which we have just referred appear to us to make it impossible to read in any such implication. This was the view taken by SINGLETON, J., in Bruton v. Woodward (1), and by ATKINSON, J. in the present case.

The main argument of counsel for the claimant rests upon the proposition that in a case which falls under the Railways Act, 1921, sched. III, paras. (3) and (4), no cause of action arises until an award has been made since there is nothing in those paragraphs which creates a cause of action, the sole right of the complainant being a right to go to the arbitrator and obtain an award of compensation. He rejects the view that, in the application of the Act of 1939 to a statutory arbitration of this nature, what has conveniently been called the "cause of arbitration" takes the place of and corresponds to the cause of action which is the subject of a private arbitration. As ATKINSON, J., points out, the effect of this argument, if accepted, would be to deprive s. 27 (6) of the greater part of its content since it would leave the most important types of statutory arbitration in exactly the same position as they were before, i.e., outside the operation of the law of limitations, but, quite apart from this, the language of s. 27 appears to us, as it appeared to ATKINSON J., to place the matter beyond doubt. Section 2 (1) provides :

The following actions shall not be brought after the expiration of six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued, that is to say : . . . (d) actions to recover any sum recoverable by virtue of any enactment, other than a penalty . . .

By s. 31 (1) " 'action' includes any proceedings in a court of law " and is not, therefore, confined to such proceedings. Section 27 (1) provides :

This Act . . . shall apply to arbitrations as they apply to actions in the High Court.

It appears to us to be clear beyond argument that, in making the application to arbitrations which s. 27 (1) requires, the word "actions" and the phrase "cause of action" must be interpreted so as to include "arbitrations" and "cause of arbitration." It is to be noted also that s. 27 (3) and (4), which provide for the fixation of the date when an arbitration is to be deemed to have commenced, apply to statutory arbitrations. The only purpose of fixing the date for the commencement of the arbitration is to enable the relevant statutory period to be calculated. Yet, if the argument is right, these provisions would be entirely purposeless in the case of statutory arbitrations, save, perhaps, in the rare cases (if, indeed, any such exist) where a cause of action and provisions for statutory arbitration are combined.

The result is that, if the "cause of arbitration" in the present case accrued more than six years before the commencement of the arbitration on Mar. 2, 1943, the claim is statute-barred. When did the cause of arbitration accrue in the present case ? In our opinion, it arose when the claimant first became entitled to complain that by reason of the transfer he was placed in a worse position in respect of his service as a whole and that he had "thereby suffered loss or injury." Counsel for the claimant did suggest that the right date was that on which the "question" arose. This seems to us an impossible view. The true date, surely, is the date when the claimant became entitled to raise the question, not that on which it was actually raised.

If our reasoning so far is correct, it follows that there is no possible date later than Apr. 3, 1933, when the loss occasioned by the claimant's loss of seniority actually materialised, and, subject to the argument that, even on this basis, only part of the claim would be barred, it is not strictly necessary to determine what was the exact date. The argument in favour of choosing Apr. 3, 1933, is based partly on convenience—it is said that a workman could not be expected to prove or an arbitrator to find loss until it had actually materialised—but mainly on the fact that in para. (4) the phrase “has thereby suffered loss or injury” is in the past tense and it is pointed out that the corresponding phrase in para. (5) “who otherwise suffers any direct pecuniary loss” is in the present tense. We do not think that there is any real weight in this argument. The phrase “loss or injury” is not, of course, limited to loss or injury due to the infringement of a legal right since it may be caused by the deprivation of some expectation based merely on practice and custom which is treated as analogous to the infringement of a legal right. In the present case the claimant never had any legal right to promotion. Where by reason of the transfer the employee suffers loss of seniority his expectation of the customary promotion is at once affected to his prejudice. It is true that this prejudice will only be quantified when the date when he would have been entitled to expect promotion arrives, but he has nevertheless suffered “loss or injury” within the somewhat loose meaning of that phrase when his name is in effect struck out of its proper place in the seniority list and is inserted lower down in the list. In the present case, therefore, it would, in our opinion, have been open to the claimant to complain that he had suffered loss or injury by his reduction in seniority and he could at once have claimed compensation. The task of the arbitrator in fixing the compensation would, no doubt, have been a difficult one, but no more difficult than many questions which arbitrators or juries are in the habit of deciding and no more difficult than a jury would have had to decide if in this case the claimant had had a contractual right to promotion according to his original seniority which the company had repudiated before the date for promotion had arrived.

A similar point was considered in this court by DU PARCQ, L.J. (as he then was), in Re Arbitration between Parker and Great Western Railway (2). There the employee, while in the employment of the company from which he was transferred, was subject to the practice of that company under which he would have been entitled to remain in its service so long as he was capable of performing his duties, while on transfer to the Great Western Railway he became subject to the practice of that company under which he had to retire at the age of 60. In the case of a man under 60 the question to be examined was, said DU PARCQ, L.J. ([1944] 1 All E.R. 400, at p. 403):

What does he lose by the possibility that at the age of 60 he may still be fit for work and yet have to leave his employment? If you do not know what the position is going to be when he reaches the age of 60, because you are assessing compensation in advance, you have to make the best estimate you can.

If this view is correct, the cause of arbitration accrued when the claimant was put back in the order of seniority, notwithstanding that his loss or injury did not materialise until Apr. 3, 1933. On this basis there are only two possible dates to consider: July 1, 1923, when the transfer took place, and May 14, 1924, when the respondents altered their practice and raised the seniority of the claimant to a point higher than that fixed in accordance with their practice as it existed at the date of transfer. Whichever of these two dates is the correct one the claimant's alternative argument that the claim is only barred in part must necessarily fail, and there is, strictly speaking, no necessity for us to decide between them. As, however, the question has been fully argued and ATKINSON, J., expressed a preference for the later of the two dates, it is perhaps not improper for us to express our own preference which is for the earlier date. On the transfer taking place, the claimant immediately suffered loss or injury by losing his previous seniority and could at once have claimed compensation. If the change of practice which took place on May 14, 1924, had not taken place before his compensation was awarded by the arbitrator, its subsequent adoption could not deprive him of the benefit of his award. If, however, the change of practice took place before the award, that would have been taken into account by the arbitrator as an alleviation of the loss or injury. With respect, therefore, we prefer not to accept the view of ATKINSON, J.

If, however, contrary to our view, the correct date when the loss or injury was first suffered was Apr. 3, 1933, it will be necessary to consider the alternative argument already referred to. This, in effect, is that on every pay day after that date the claimant suffered a fresh loss or injury in that the sum in his pay-packet was smaller than it ought to have been. On this basis he would, technically at least, have the right to claim a fresh arbitration every week and a small part of the £111 14s. 0d. awarded would escape the operation of the statute. But, in our opinion, the argument is incorrect. There may, of course, be cases where an employee has had his position worsened by reason of the transfer and obtains compensation for the loss or injury suffered and then has it further worsened by some further action of the company of which it can also be said that it was by reason of the transfer. For instance, if a man who lost seniority for promotion to driver by reason of the transfer and received compensation in respect of the loss was subsequently after his promotion to driver put back to some lower position for the reason that the company as a result of economies directly attributable to the amalgamation found that it had more drivers than it needed, we apprehend that it might well be held that a new worsening of the man's position for which he could claim new compensation had occurred. But that is not the case here. The claimant's claim is in respect of only one worsening of the claimant's position, namely, that occasioned by his loss of seniority and the loss or injury alleged is confined to the loss of pay. In our opinion, directly he lost his seniority, his only right was to claim once for all for the loss or injury consequent thereon and the arbitrator would have to make the best estimate that he could of what the future loss would turn out to be. Speaking generally, it would, as it appears to us, be more advantageous both to employees and to the company for compensation for a specific worsening of conditions of service to be decided once for all and this we consider to be in accordance with the true interpretation of the language used. We are confirmed in this view by the opinion expressed by TUCKER, J. (as he then was) in Layen v. London Passenger Transport Board (3), a case on similar provisions in the London Passenger Transport Act, 1933 ([1944] 1 All E.R. 432, at p 434). He said, in reference to an argument similar to that addressed to us :

. . . the conclusion at which I have arrived is that it was intended to fix the compensation for this worsening of conditions once and for all at some one specific date, whatever that date may be . . . the arbitrator has to look at the position as a whole, doing the best he can to assess the loss with regard to the future, and taking into account such facts as may have occurred at the time when he makes his award.

In passing, we may refer to the fact that in that case it was not, apparently, argued on behalf of the applicant that the Limitation Act, 1939, did not apply, and there is nothing in the judgment of TUCKER, J., to suggest that he felt any doubt on the point. He used the expression "cause of arbitration" as the equivalent of "cause of action."

ATKINSON, J., was right in his opinion that the award in favour of the respondents as set out in the Special Case is correct, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Pattinson & Brewer (for the claimant) ; M. H. B. Gilmour (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KIMBER v. WILLIAM WILLETT, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Oaksey, Tucker and Cohen, L.J.J.), February 6, 7, 1947.]

Contract—Implied term—Work to be done in safe manner—Carpet taken up for cleaning—Floor left in dangerous condition.

A By a verbal contract, the defendants, a firm of expert carpet layers, agreed to take up and clean a carpet in the plaintiff's dining room. At the doorway of the room this carpet was attached to the hall carpet, which was tacked down to the floorboards in the hall, by being sewn to a "tongue" of the hall carpet which protruded under the door into the room. When the defendants came to remove the dining room carpet, they cut the sewing and took away the dining room carpet, but they left the "tongue" of the hall carpet protruding under the door without tacking it down. The plaintiff was, to the defendants' knowledge, in occupation of the flat at the time, and, about a fortnight later, she caught her foot in the "tongue" of the hall carpet and fell, sustaining injury. In an action in which the plaintiff claimed damages:—

B
C HELD: (i) in a contract of this kind between an ordinary householder and a firm of expert carpet layers there was an implied term that the work should be done in a workmanlike and safe manner, and, as the defendants knew that the flat was occupied at the time, leaving the hall carpet in such a condition that it constituted a danger to any one using the premises and exercising reasonable care in such user was a clear breach of the obligation to do the work in a workmanlike and safe manner.

(ii) the damages claimed flowed from the breach of the implied term in the contract and were recoverable by the plaintiff.

D [AS TO IMPLIED TERMS IN CONTRACT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 322, 323, para. 451; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 607-612, Nos. 5028-5058.

AS TO DIRECTNESS OF DAMAGES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 93-98, paras. 115-122; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 17, pp. 93-95, Nos. 101-113.]

Case referred to:

E (1) Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 17 Digest 93, 101.

APPEAL by the defendants from a judgment of HENN COLLINS, J., dated June 6, 1946, in an action for damages for breach of an implied term of a contract, or, alternatively, for negligence. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD OAKSEY, L.J.

R. F. Levy, K.C., and T. F. Davis for the defendants.

F G. Russell Vick, K.C., and S. R. Edgedale for the plaintiff.

LORD OAKSEY, L.J.: I am of opinion that this appeal cannot succeed. It is principally a matter of fact and appreciation of the evidence, and I see no reason to think that the judgment of HENN COLLINS, J., was wrong.

G The plaintiff had a flat in Sloane Court, London, and under a verbal contract she employed the defendant company to take up and clean the carpet in the dining room of that flat. At the doorway of the dining room the carpet was of sewn to a "tongue" of the hall carpet which came under the door, the rest of the hall carpet being tacked down to the hall floor. When the defendant company came to do their work, their sub-contractor or workman, Mr. Solomon, cut the sewing, took away the dining room carpet, and left the "tongue" of the hall carpet which protruded under the door without tacking it down. It was said that it lay flat in that condition, but about a fortnight after the dining room carpet had been taken up, the plaintiff caught her foot in the "tongue" of the hall carpet, fell, and sustained serious injuries. The plaintiff's case was that it was an implied term of the contract that the work should be done in a workmanlike and safe manner, and that, in fact, it was not done in a workmanlike and safe manner, the "tongue" of the hall carpet being left in an unsafe condition. The judge took the view that the term that the work should be done in a workmanlike and safe manner was one which ought to be implied in a contract of this sort made between an ordinary householder, who is not an expert in carpet laying, and a firm of expert carpet layers, that that implied term had been broken, and that the damage which the plaintiff had suffered was the result of the breach. He awarded her £500 damages.

Although it is a case of some difficulty and nicety, I am of opinion that this court ought not to disturb the finding of the judge. I think the view which he took of the law—that there was an implied term—was right, and that it was open to him on the evidence to find that the implied term had been broken. It seems to me that the reasonably safe thing to have done would have been to tack down the “tongue” of the hall carpet. A carpet like this hall carpet is not the same as a rug which is not tacked at all. It was tacked all over the hall, and, therefore, anybody who caught his foot in the “tongue” which protruded under the door would meet all the resistance of the nailed part of the carpet in the hall, and the effect would be quite different from catching his foot in a carpet which was moveable. In my opinion, the judge was at liberty to take that view after hearing the evidence.

It was further argued that the damages claimed did not flow from the breach of contract, and we were referred to Hadley v. Baxendale (1), but, in my opinion, damage such as this may arise naturally in the usual course of things. For these reasons I think that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

TUCKER, L.J.: I agree. The plaintiff founded her claim partly on the breach of an implied term in the contract between the parties and, alternatively, in negligence. I am clear that it was an implied term of this contract that the work should be done in a proper and workmanlike manner. The real and only issue is: Did the defendants on the facts found by the judge do this job in a proper and workmanlike way? If they had left the carpet in a dangerous condition, I do not think they did the work in a proper and workmanlike way.

In considering whether work has been done in a proper and workmanlike way it is always material to take into consideration whether the work was being done in an empty house or an occupied house. In this case it was being done in a house which, to the knowledge of the defendants, was in use, in a room which was in use adjoining a passage. It would have been a clear breach of the obligation to do the work in a proper and workmanlike way if there had been left a state of things which constituted a danger to anybody using the premises and exercising reasonable care in the course of such user. In my view, the whole case depends on whether the carpet in the condition in which it was left did constitute such a danger. With regard to that, I find myself in complete agreement with the judge below. I am not by any means deciding that it is bad workmanship or dangerous always to leave a carpet flat and loose and untacked, but the circumstances of this case were rather peculiar. In course of time the “tongue” of the hall carpet was liable to ruck slightly as any loose carpet does when people are walking about, and then it would constitute a danger because a person would be liable to get his foot caught under the part which was tacked down. I think that that was not a proper and workmanlike way to carry out this contract, that a danger was created, and that that danger caused the accident.

To test the matter, because it is very much one of first impression, suppose that someone had a mat in the doorway of a room, 2 or 3ft. long and 18 or 21ins. wide. Suppose for some reason that that mat was at one end sewn on to the drawing room carpet and tacked down at the other end. Then the drawing room carpet is removed and the sewing is cut, but the tacks are left in the other end of that mat. Can anybody suppose that that would not be a highly dangerous thing? That, in effect, is what happened in this case, only it was the tongue of a carpet which is rather longer than the mat I have described. If this was a danger, and if it was the duty of the defendants not to leave things in a dangerous condition, I find it difficult to see why the damages which, in fact, flowed from this breach are not recoverable by the plaintiff. For these reasons I agree that this appeal fails.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Bulcraig & Davis (for the defendants); William Charles Crocker (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NASH v. HIGH DUTY ALLOYS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lawrence, Tucker and Cohen, L.J.J.), January 13, 14, 15, 1947.]

Factories and Shops—Dangerous machinery—Fencing—Exception—“Examination or adjustment”—Tests after tool setting operation—Need for dangerous parts to be exposed—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 16.

A Factories and Shops—Regulations—Breach—Registration and certification of “machine attendants”—Inclusion of tool setters—Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 641), regs. 1 (ii), 2.

The plaintiff was an inspector employed by the defendants, and his task, inter alia, was to inspect the components produced by a press for making parts of aircraft engines. The press, which was operated by an electric motor of its own, with switch alongside, was provided for all its normal operations with a secure guard which had to be lifted for the purpose of examination or for setting the dies. The plaintiff had rejected some of the components and, after the dies had been altered by a tool maker, M., they were set in the press by a tool setter B., who had examined the press for necessary adjustments. The power, which during the setting and adjustment had not been required, was then switched on, and samples were taken while the guard was still up in the presence of B., M., F. (a charge hand), and the plaintiff. B., M. and F. had all been appointed under the Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938, reg. 2, as machinery attendants, but they had not been furnished with certificates of appointment indicating the limitations of their duties. The samples were rejected by the plaintiff, and during an argument whether the machine was doing its work properly M. put a master component into the press. F. and the plaintiff, following the recognised method of testing, looked underneath, and the plaintiff, having discovered some daylight showing between the component and the die, was in the act of pointing at it when M., in order to release the component, put his foot on the starting pedal, with the result that the press came down and caught the plaintiff's fingers:—

HELD: (i) the process of tool setting, which required the removal of the dies, their adjustment in the tool maker's shed, and their replacement in the machine, did not constitute “examination” or “adjustment” rendering it necessary that the dangerous parts of the machine should be exposed while in motion, so the defendants could not bring themselves within the exception in s. 16 of the Factories Act, 1937, and were, therefore, guilty of a breach of the section and were liable to the plaintiff in respect of the injuries received by him.

(ii) the effect of the second proviso to reg. 1 of the Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938, was to make it unnecessary for tool setters to comply with the restrictions imposed by reg. 5, but “machine attendants” referred to in reg. 2 were a class of whom tool setters formed a part, and, therefore, reg. 2 applied to tool setters equally with other machine attendants, and they should be registered and issued with the necessary certificates.

[AS TO FENCING OF MACHINERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 594, 595, paras. 1130, 1131; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 24, pp. 908-911, Nos. 62-81.]

APPEAL by defendants from an order of DENNING, J., awarding damages to the plaintiff for breach, by the defendants, of statutory duty under the Factories Act, 1937, s. 16. The facts appear in the headnote and in the judgment of LAWRENCE, L.J.

Nelson, K.C., and Stuart Horner for the defendants.
Beney, K.C., and Marven Everett for the plaintiff.

LAWRENCE, L.J.: This appeal raises three points: (i) whether at the time of the accident the machinery in question was necessarily exposed, within the meaning of s. 16 of the Factories Act, 1937, for examination or for lubrication or adjustment shown by such examination to be immediately necessary; (ii) whether, if it were, all conditions laid down in the Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938, had been complied with; and (iii) whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Section 16 of the Factories Act, 1937, provides :

All fencing or other safeguards provided in pursuance of the foregoing provisions of this part of this Act shall be of substantial construction, and constantly maintained and kept in position while the parts required to be fenced or safeguarded are in motion or in use, except when any such parts are necessarily exposed for examination and for any lubrication or adjustment shown by such examination to be immediately necessary, and all such conditions as may be specified in regulations made by the Secretary of State are complied with.

The Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938, are as follows :

1. Regulations 2 to 7 of these regulations shall apply to the following operations namely :— . . . (ii) the carrying out, in pursuance of s. 16 of the Act, of an examination or any lubrication or adjustment shown by such examination to be immediately necessary when parts of machinery otherwise required to be fenced or safeguarded are in motion or in use but are necessarily exposed for those operations : . . . Provided further that reg. 5 shall not apply to the setting up of a machine by a tool setter or other skilled mechanic, being a male person who has attained the age of eighteen and whose duty it is to set up such machine.

2. One or more persons shall be appointed by the occupier of the factory, by signed entry in or by certificate attached to the general register, to be machinery attendants to carry out operations to which this regulation applies, and any such appointment may be made for all such operations or may be limited to such only of those operations as may be specified in the entry or certificate. The occupier shall furnish to each person so appointed a certificate of his appointment, which certificate shall indicate the limitations (if any) specified as aforesaid.

5. No operation to which this regulation applies shall be carried out :—(a) except by a machinery attendant authorised as aforesaid to carry out the operation (b) unless every person carrying out the operation is wearing a close-fitting single-piece overall suit in good repair which (i) is fastened by means having no exposed loose ends and (ii) has no external pockets other than a hip pocket, (c) unless another person instructed as to the steps to be taken in case of emergency is immediately available within sight or hearing of a person carrying out the operation, and (d) unless such steps as may be necessary, including where appropriate and reasonably practicable the erection of a barrier, are taken to prevent any person, other than a person carrying out the operation, from being in a position where he is exposed to risk of injury from the machinery.

The plaintiff was employed by the defendants as a floor-inspector. The machine at which the accident happened was a power press which sheared off the rough edges of pressings. This was done by putting a lower die in position and an upper die fixed in to the power press. It was admittedly a dangerous machine, but it was sufficiently guarded. The dies could be put into position while a gate was open, and then the pedal operating the machine could not be put down. No accident could, therefore, happen when the gate of the guard was open. The plaintiff took exception to some of the pressings and he sent for the tool setter, whose name was Barry, so that some adjustment might be made. The tool setter made some adjustments and took some samples, but they failed to satisfy the plaintiff and he made a rectification note and left further work to be done. When he returned he was still dissatisfied. He was then asked by the tool setter to look underneath the lower die for daylight, which was an acknowledged mode of inspection. This he did, and he was still unsatisfied. After that the tool setter sent for Fisher, the charge hand of the tool setters, and the lower die was attended to by Morgan, a tool maker. Further samples having been taken, there was a conference between the four men, the plaintiff still maintaining that the die was not correct. In the course of the argument the tool maker, Morgan, put a master pressing, which was accepted by everyone as being correct, into the press. Fisher, the charge hand, and the plaintiff looked for daylight and the plaintiff pointed to a place which he said was untrue, but at the same moment Morgan put his foot on the pedal and brought the press down, catching the plaintiff's fingers.

It was held by DENNING, J., that there had been a breach of the provisions of s. 16 of the Act of 1937, and he decided the case on that ground, finding also that the plaintiff had not been guilty of contributory negligence. He found that the dangerous parts of the machine were not necessarily exposed for the purpose of examination or adjustment—lubrication did not arise—and he, therefore, found it unnecessary to deal with the further question whether the conditions laid down by reg. 2 of the Operations at Unfenced Machinery Regulations, 1938, had been complied with. Morgan (the tool maker), Barry (the tool setter), and Fisher, the charge hand, had all been appointed under reg. 2 as machinery attendants, but they had not been furnished with certificates of appointment indicating the limitations of their duties. Morgan being a tool maker, it is suggested that it was improper for him to have been working on the job of tool setting at the machine, his duties being in the tool makers' shed.

A Counsel for the defendants contends, on the construction of s. 16, that this was a tool setting operation, that the parts of the machine were necessarily exposed for it, and so it was not necessary to have the guard down. He reads the words "examination, lubrication or adjustment" as equivalent to a tool setting operation, and as forming all one operation, and he says that, if it was necessary to raise the guard for the purpose of that operation, it was not necessary to put it down while the operation continued. Counsel for the plaintiff contend that s. 16 and the exception contained in it in terms only apply to machinery in motion or in use, and that, if the machinery is not in motion or in use, the B adjustment can be made without guards without invoking the section. Therefore, they say, neither s. 16 nor the exception had any application in this case, until the machinery was set in motion by Morgan, and that then it was not necessary for the guard to be removed.

C In my opinion, it was not in the least necessary that the parts that caused this accident should be exposed for the operation actually being done. Morgan was pushing out the master pressing, and there was no necessity for the guard to be up. The plaintiff's interpretation is supported by s. 15, the words of which throw light on the similar words in s. 16, and show that the machinery must be in motion for the purposes of s. 16. I am in agreement with DENNING, J., as to the ratio on which he based his judgment.

D I ought, however, to express my view on the other points—whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence and on the failure to issue certificates under reg. 2. The argument for the defendants on the latter matter is that Barry and Morgan are tool setters, and that the second proviso to reg. 1 makes it unnecessary for the employer to register or issue certificates to tool setters, because reg. 2 applies only to "machine attendants." I think "machine attendants" are a class of whom tool setters form one part. They are exempted from reg. 5, but reg. 2 applies to tool setters and other machine attendants. It is argued E for the defendants that because reg. 5 provides that "no operation to which this regulation applies shall be carried out except by a machinery attendant," and reg. 1 excludes setting-up operations from reg. 5, it is unnecessary for those engaged in such an operation to be in possession of certificates as machinery attendants. I am unable to accept that contention. If that had been the intention, it would have been said that "regs. 2 and 5 shall not apply." The effect of the proviso to reg. 1 is simply to make it unnecessary for tool setters to F comply with the restrictions imposed by reg. 5 so that they need not have close-fitting one-piece overalls, or a second person standing by, and so forth, but reg. 2 applies to tool setters equally with other machinery attendants. Section 16 of the Act makes it abundantly clear that the regulations must be complied with, and, if they are not, the exception cannot be relied on. It can only be relied on if the machinery is exposed for the purposes mentioned in the section, and if all the regulations are complied with. Here reg. 2 was not complied with, nor was the machinery necessarily exposed.

G As to contributory negligence, I agree with DENNING, J., that it was not made out. For these reasons I think the appeal should be dismissed.

H TUCKER, L.J. : I agree. It is common ground that the parts of the machine which caused the accident were dangerous within s. 14 of the Act of 1937. It is also common ground that the defendants had provided a guard. We have, therefore, a dangerous machine with a proper guard, and an obligation that the guard shall be constantly maintained. When the accident happened the guard was not maintained or kept in position and the parts required to be fenced were in motion, so the defendants are at fault unless they can bring themselves within the words of the exception in s. 16—that is, unless they can show that this machine, which was admittedly in motion and exposed, was necessarily exposed.

The final conclusion I have arrived at is that these parts were not necessarily exposed. The process of tool setting requires the removal of the dies, their adjustment in the tool makers' shed, and their replacement in the machine. That does not require the parts to be in motion. No doubt, it is usual to follow that process by a test to see whether the operation has been successful, and it may be customary to regard that as part of the operation, but, in fact, it is the ordinary working of the machine which could be done with the guard down. The facts in the present case were very special. The use of the master pressing was not part of the usual process of tool setting, and the removal of the master-pressing did not necessarily require the parts to be exposed. It could quite well have been done with the guard down.

The defendants have failed to bring themselves within the exception in s. 16, but if they had, it would not have been enough. They would still have to show that they had complied with all the regulations. Regulation 2 had not been complied with. It must be read with reg. 1 which provides that "Regulations 2-7 . . . shall apply to . . . the carrying out, in pursuance of s. 16 of the Act, of an examination or any lubrication or adjustment shown by such examination to be immediately necessary, when parts of machinery otherwise required to be fenced or safeguarded are in motion or in use but are necessarily exposed for those operations." Counsel for the defendants, however, relies on the second proviso to reg. 1, but that merely says that reg. 5 shall not apply to tool setters, and if reg. 2 was not to apply to tool setters, as the defendants contended, the proviso, no doubt, would have said so. Therefore, even if the defendants had brought themselves within s. 16, they would still fail. This is not a mere technicality, because these stringent regulations are intended to provide for the safety of men who are obliged to work on dangerous machines with the guard up.

I agree as to contributory negligence. There was nothing to put the plaintiff on inquiry, or on his guard.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree and only desire to add one word on the second point. I think the conclusion we have arrived at may be reinforced by reference to sub-s. (3) of s. 130 of the Factories Act, 1937, which provides :

If the occupier of a factory avails himself of any special exceptions allowed by or under this Act and fails to comply with any of the conditions attached to the exception, he shall be deemed to have contravened the provisions of this Act.

The defendants are clearly availing themselves of an exception, and they have failed to carry out one condition, namely, that requiring them to issue certificates to certain attendants, i.e., the tool setters concerned in the case.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Bell, Brodrick & Gray, agents for Pickavance & Heron, Barrow-in-Furness (for the defendants) ; Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROBINSON v. THAMES MEAD PARK ESTATES, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Evershed, J.), February 5, 6, 7, 1947.]

Landlord and Tenant—Building lease—Option to renew—Performance of covenants—Delay in performance—Obligation satisfied before date for renewal of lease although not at date specified in agreement—Right to renewal.

On July 22, 1941, the tenant entered into an agreement for the lease of a piece of land on which she was to build a temporary bungalow. The lease was to end on Apr. 22, 1944, but the landlord agreed that, "subject to the tenant having faithfully performed and observed all her agreements herein contained," she was to have the option of continuing the tenancy under the grant of a building lease from a date not later than Apr. 22, 1944. One of the tenant's obligations was to erect a private dwelling by July 22, 1942. This obligation had not been satisfied by July 22, 1942, but it was satisfied by Apr. 19, 1944, when the tenant wrote to the landlord asking for a renewal of the tenancy, stating, in effect, that she had performed her obligations. The landlord refused a new lease on the ground, inter alia, that the obligation in regard to the dwelling had not been satisfied at the time specified :—

HELD : (i) the tenant had sufficiently performed her obligations under the option for renewal if she had ended any previous breaches of covenant or failure to perform covenants by the date when she gave her notice calling on the landlord to grant a new lease, and, therefore, she was entitled to a new lease.

Per cur.: An option of renewal of a building lease was not to be construed as strictly as an option of renewal contained in a lease granted by a landlord of his house: Bastin v. Bidwell (1) distinguished.

A [AS TO OPTION TO RENEW LEASE, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 68, 69, paras. 74-76, and pp. 152-154, paras. 165, 166; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 73-75, Nos. 2202-2209.]

Case referred to:

(1) Bastin v. Bidwell (1881), 18 Ch.D. 238; 44 L.T. 742; 31 Digest 75, 2209.

B ACTION by a tenant to enforce an agreement by the landlord to grant her a renewal of her building lease. The defence was that the tenant was not entitled to a renewal of her tenancy because she had not fulfilled her obligations under the agreement. The facts and the relevant clauses of the agreement appear in the judgment.

Ingram J. Lindner for the tenant.

J. A. Wolfe for the landlord.

C EVERSLED, J.: The plaintiff, Mrs. Robinson, sues on an agreement which she made with the defendant company, Thames Mead Park Estates, Ltd., on July 22, 1941, relating to a piece of land at or near the tow path at Shepperton, within the jurisdiction of the Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council. The object of the agreement was that Mrs. Robinson should take a tenancy for a term commencing on July 22, 1941, and ending on Apr. 22, 1944. During that period she was under an obligation to erect and maintain what was well understood by both parties to the document to be a temporary structure of the character of a bungalow or dwelling-house. Mrs. Robinson was engaged in carrying on the business of a nursery gardener in the neighbourhood, and her object was to provide herself with a convenient place at which to live near the garden, but it was also an essential part of the bargain that at the end of that three years term, or, possibly, earlier, a lease for a considerable term of years should be granted to her, she undertaking to erect on the land a permanent dwelling-house. The lease was, in other words, to be what is commonly called a building lease with the small ground rent appropriate to such a transaction. The claim in the action by Mrs. Robinson is for enforcement of that part of the bargain which obliges the defendants to grant her a lease. It is necessary to read only three paragraphs of the document. The first is cl. 2 which was an agreement on the part of the tenant, Mrs. Robinson:

F To use the land only as building land and to erect thereon at her own expense during the first 12 months of the term [i.e., not later than July 22, 1942] a private dwelling of a design and structure on permanent foundations and with permanent drainage to satisfy the bye-laws and regulations of Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council.

Clause 3 contains the further obligation:

G To produce to the landlord prior to the commencement of any building plans of the proposed private dwelling with evidence that the aforesaid council (and any other authority concerned) have approved such plans and have granted permission to her to build and that (either before or immediately after erection) the aforesaid council have licensed or will licence the building to be used for human habitation.

The landlord's obligations begin at cl. 17, and cl. 19, the penultimate clause, is as follows:

H The landlord agrees that subject to the tenant having faithfully performed and observed all her agreements herein contained the tenant shall have the option of continuing the tenancy under the grant of a building lease for a term of not less than 60 years and of not more than 99 years at a ground rent of £10 a year from a date mutually agreed upon (but which in any case shall be a date not later than Apr. 22, 1944) provided that the tenant shall then undertake to erect before a date to be agreed upon a private dwelling constructed wholly or in the main of bricks concrete or stone with tiled or slated roof to plans approved both by the local authority and the landlord of which the estimated prime cost at the time is not less than £450 such prime cost to be calculated to include the prime cost of any then existing drainage or foundations of brick or concrete which it may then be agreed upon shall form part of the new building.

It is obvious that that last clause is in some respects of a very indeterminate character, and something turns on that to which I will presently refer.

By way of implementation of her various agreements, the tenant, shortly after the date of this document, obtained a plan of the structure which she proposed to erect. The plan acquired the number, vis-a-vis the local authority, the Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council, of 2481, and it will be convenient to identify it in that way. The plan (or a copy of it) was approved by the Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council. This plan shows that the outfall drainage from the bathroom and kitchen flowed into an inspection chamber near the east side of the house and then proceeded in a southerly direction, the plan indicating "to sewer in road." Owing to the distance from the road and for various other reasons, that was later altered. In fact, the whole bungalow was re-sited, and a further plan, known as 2481A, showed the altered siting of the house and a substituted method of drainage in a different direction to a cesspool on the premises outside in the garden. That substituted plan was approved both by the council and by the landlord.

For various reasons—chiefly, no doubt, owing to difficulties, due to war conditions, in obtaining materials—Mrs. Robinson had not, in fact, built this bungalow within the time specified in the agreement, but had done so by Apr., 1944. On Apr. 17, 1944, the Sunbury Council officer, Mr. Clark, made an inspection of the drains. Following that inspection, a letter was written, addressed to the defendant's solicitors by or on behalf of the council, in which it is stated: "The drains and cesspool were passed as satisfactory on the 17th instant." On Apr. 19, 1944, the plaintiff, through her solicitors, wrote a letter to the defendants' solicitors which, after reciting cl. 19 of the agreement, stated:

The house has been completed to the satisfaction of the local authorities, and we shall be obliged if you will submit the draft of the lease to be granted to our client.

It seems to me, therefore, plain that before—shortly before, but still before—the expiration of the three years specified in this document of July 22, 1941, Mrs. Robinson was saying: "I have faithfully performed and observed all the agreements herein contained, and I, therefore, call on you to fulfil your obligations to me of continuing the tenancy for a period of 99 years from Apr. 22, 1944, on the terms set out in cl. 19." Counsel for the defendant company has thought it right to confine himself to one question of fact: Aye or no, were the drains and cesspool in such a condition as satisfied cl. 2 of the agreement when the letter of Apr. 19, 1944, was written, or, indeed, as he said, at any subsequent date? Although there are, as I have said, some grounds for supposing that in other respects Mrs. Robinson had not complied strictly and in due date with all her covenants, counsel for the defendants is content to let those go and to confine himself to the point as to the drains.

[EVERSHED, J., then reviewed the evidence on this point and found that on Apr. 17, 1944, the obligation of the tenant in regard to the drains had been satisfied. He continued:] The terms of cl. 2 require all that to have been done not later than July 22, 1942. The question, therefore, arises: Is the delay in satisfying that obligation fatal to the plaintiff's rights?

That question turns on the meaning to be given to the opening words of cl. 19:

... subject to the tenant having faithfully performed and observed all her agreements herein contained.

I agree that options of renewal contained in leases are normally construed as conditions, and strictly construed. Counsel for the defendants referred, by way of illustration, to Bastin v. Bidwell (1). It is, however, to be noted, in construing this particular document (and every document must be construed on its own merits), that this is not a case where the landlord grants a lease of his own house which he (the landlord) has erected, and gives to the tenant the privilege of renewal. In such a case plainly, as KAY, J. points out in Bastin v. Bidwell (1), the strict obligation is justified because the landlord may reasonably say: "I want to be quite sure that you are in all respects a scrupulous tenant before I grant you a new tenancy." : see 18 Ch.D. 238, at pp. 250, 251. This is a case where the tenant was entering into obligations as to the erection of new premises, both during the first three years' term and later. I think, in those circumstances, that the problem, which KAY, J., found it unnecessary to decide in the case before him (ibid., at pp. 252, 253), I decide in the plaintiff's favour here, namely, that it is sufficient for the purpose of this cl. 19 that the tenant, when she comes to give her notice calling on the landlord to grant the lease, has then ended any previous breaches of covenants or failure to perform covenants. I construe the words "having faithfully performed and observed" as meaning "having, at the date when she gives the notice, faithfully performed and observed," in the sense of having remedied any defects in any previous performance. I am not concerned with anything except the drains, and, on the facts as I find them, Mrs. Robinson had, on Apr. 19, 1944, satisfied—albeit at a later date than was intended—her obligations in regard to the drains. I note that the landlord had not, before Apr. 19, 1944, claimed that the obligation to grant an extension of the term had determined by reason of the tenant's earlier failure to perform her obligation in regard to the drains.

If that is so, the only question now remaining is: Is the rest of the clause of so vague and uncertain a character as to be unenforceable, with the result that to attempt so to do would be equivalent to the court making for the parties an agreement in which they themselves have failed? It is, no doubt, true that, if the parties express themselves in so uncertain and indefinite a way that the court cannot really say that they have agreed at all, then the court cannot re-form the agreement and make one where the parties have failed, but I think that here I am not compelled to come to that negative and depressing conclusion. It seems to me there is sufficient here to give certainty and to enable the court to direct, if necessary, specific performance or its equivalent.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Saunders, Sobell, Greenbury, Leigh (for the plaintiff); Walker, Rowe & Clark (for the defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re A SOLICITOR. Re TAXATION OF COSTS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), January 23, 24, 1947.]

E Solicitors—Costs—Taxation—Non-contentious business—Gross or lump sum—Distinguished. Re A SOLICITOR. tion for taxation six years after payment—Discretion of every of bill—Solicitors' Remuneration Act General Order 1882, cl. 2 (a), cl. 2 (c).—Solicitors' Act, 1932 (c. 37), ss. 64, 66—Solicitors Remuneration (Gross Sum) Order, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 548), art. 1.

On July 31, 1940, the respondent solicitors wrote to the applicant, who was in Switzerland, enclosing their receipted bill of costs and a cash account. An item in the cash account was a disbursement, "bill of costs herewith," amounting to a substantial sum. The accompanying statement of charges showed only a gross or lump sum for a large proportion of the work specified. One of the items for which the lump sum was charged was a mortgage completed, but it was not contended that it included any freehold or leasehold property within the jurisdiction. The applicant received the letter and documents in Aug., 1940. The respondents continued to act for her and she sent them many letters and cables and introduced two new clients. In a letter dated Mar. 20, 1944, she informed the respondents that she had changed her solicitors, but it was not until Jan. 4, 1946, that she raised the question of the statement of charges which had been paid by retention on July 31, 1940.

HELD: (i) the statement of charges was not a "bill" within the Solicitors' Act, 1932, s. 66.

(ii) the statement of charges fell within the Solicitors' Remuneration (Gross Sum) Order, 1934, if the only business included therein was business regulated by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, General Order, 1882, cl. 2 (c), but, if the statement did so fall, the court would not make an order under the Solicitors' Act, 1932, s. 64, unless the proviso to the Order of 1934 with regard to the time of application had been complied with.

(iii) the mortgage in this case, not being wholly or partly of freehold or leasehold land within the jurisdiction, was not within the scale fees set out in pt. I of sched. I, to the General Order of 1882, and, accordingly, cl. 2 (a) of the General Order was inapplicable and cl. 2 (c) covered the work.

Re Furber (1) distinguished, and dicta of KEKEWICH, J., therein criticised.

(iv) no order for taxation could be made under the Solicitors' Act, 1932, s. 66, without making an order under s. 64, because there would be no bill within the meaning of s. 66.

(v) in view of the applicant's conduct in delaying her application for taxation, and continuing to employ the respondents for several years without complaint, the court would not exercise its jurisdiction to make an order under s. 64.

[AS TO REMUNERATION OF SOLICITORS FOR NON-CONTENTIOUS BUSINESS, see HALSBURY, Halsam Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 140-157; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 232-248, Nos. 2648-2796.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Re Furber [1898] 2 Ch. 538; 47 W.R. 184; sub nom. Re Furber, Ex p. Furber, 67 L.J.Ch. 593; 79 L.T. 266; sub nom. Re Furber, Ex p. Watkins, 42 Sol. Jo. 718; 42 Digest 234, 2672.

APPLICATION for the delivery of a bill of costs under Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 64, or for the taxation of a bill of costs under s. 66. The statement of charges of the respondent firm of solicitors was a lump sum or gross sum and could not be a bill within s. 66 unless by the Solicitors' Remuneration (Gross Sum) Order, 1934. One of the questions to be determined was whether the business constituted in the statement of charges fell within the scope of that Order. If it did not, no order could be made under s. 66 unless an order was made under s. 64 as there would be no bill within s. 66.

James Stirling for the applicant.

Maurice Berkeley for the respondent.

ROXBURGH, J.: The application as amended is for the delivery of a bill of costs under s. 64, or the taxation of a bill of costs under s. 66 of the Solicitors Act, 1932. Section 64 provides:

(1) The jurisdiction of the High Court to make orders for the delivery by a solicitor of a bill of costs and for the delivery up of, or otherwise in relation to, any deeds, documents or papers in his possession, custody or power, is hereby declared to extend to cases in which no business has been done by him in the High Court.

Section 66 provides:

(1) On the application, made within one month of the delivery of a solicitor's bill, of the party chargeable therewith, the High Court shall, without requiring any sum to be paid into court, order that the bill shall be taxed and that no action shall be commenced thereon until the taxation is completed. (2) If no such application is made within the period mentioned in the last preceding subsection, then, on the application either of the solicitor, or of the party chargeable with the bill, the court may, upon such terms, if any, as they think fit (not being terms as to the costs of the taxation), order—(a) that the bill shall be taxed; (b) that, until the taxation is completed, no action shall be commenced on the bill, and any action already commenced be stayed: Provided that—(i) if twelve months have expired from the delivery of the bill, or if the bill has been paid . . . no order shall be made on the application of the party chargeable with the bill except in special circumstances and, if an order is made, it may contain such terms as regards the costs of the taxation as the court may think fit; (ii) in no event shall any such order be made after the expiration of twelve months from the payment of the bill.

On July 31, 1940, Mr. Baker, a member of the respondent firm of solicitors, wrote to the applicant, who was in Switzerland, as follows: "Dear Mrs. Saunders, I am enclosing my firm's receipted bill of costs together with a cash account showing various amounts paid and also retained for your credit." The letter then went on to deal with a large number of matters in respect of which Mr. Baker or his firm was or were acting in a professional capacity for the applicant. The statement of account which accompanied that letter showed a considerable sum of money credited to the applicant and the manner in which it had been disbursed. The only item of importance for the present purpose is the disbursement "bill of costs herewith" and it was a substantial sum, though, undoubtedly, the work which the solicitors had done covered a long period and was of a detailed character and of considerable extent. The "bill" enclosed I will call a statement of charges as I think there is little doubt that it is not a "bill" within the meaning of the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 66. The statement of charges which was enclosed in that letter begins with the following item :

Re [a certain person deceased] November, 1938, to July, 1940. To professional services rendered during this period in relation to your financial affairs and the subsequent negotiation of an advance on the security of your interest in the family trust involving . . .

There follows a long and detailed statement of the work claimed to have been done. Though that work is particularised in considerable detail no separate charge is given, at any rate, for the earlier part of it. It is just a gross or lump sum charged for the whole, and that is the point which raises the issue in this case. That item is followed by an item of disbursements which is considerable and an item for which, apparently, no charge was made, and then follows a small item for which there is a charge of three guineas. The total amount of the statement of charges is computed, and at the end appear the words : "Delivered and paid July 31, 1940." It is clear from the accompanying account which was sent to the applicant that the charges were paid by retaining the total amount out of monies which the solicitors had received on behalf of the applicant.

The applicant received those documents in Aug., 1940, and between 1940 and 1946 she made no comment. Mr. Baker, in his affidavit filed in this matter, says :

From August, 1940, when the applicant states she received my firm's bill of costs and cash account, until she instructed her present solicitors, upwards of 100 letters and cables passed between her and my firm alone, and, indeed, she appeared most satisfied, and in addition to expressing appreciation from time to time of our continuing efforts on her behalf, in two cases introduced friends of hers living in Switzerland as clients. In addition, in letters and cables dated April 25, 1942, June 1, 1942, April 20, 1943, and January 26, 1944, she asked and urged me to become a trustee of certain trusts in which she was beneficially interested.

One of those letters and two of those cables were exhibited to that affidavit. The letter, which is dated Apr. 25, 1942, is such a letter as would lead anybody receiving it to believe that the writer was entirely satisfied with the services which were being rendered by the person to whom the letter was addressed, and the same applies to the two cables. On Mar. 20, 1944, however, she wrote a letter in which she said :

Dear Mr. Evan Baker, You will, no doubt, have received a telegram from me suggesting that you should hand over our files to Ridsdals [i.e., another firm of solicitors]. I am sorry that I should find myself obliged to send you such a cable, but it seemed quite impossible to carry on as things were.

Of course, she was entirely free to change her solicitors, but there is not a word or suggestion that she had any complaint about the charges of the respondent firm. The applicant says in her affidavit :

It was always my intention to have the said bill of costs taxed as soon as I was able to give proper instructions for this to be done.

It was not until Jan. 4, 1946, that she, or, more accurately, her new solicitors, raised a question with regard to the statement of charges which had been paid by retention on July 31, 1940. If it was always the applicant's intention to challenge the bill of costs, it seems to me very unfair to have continued to invite the respondent firm to continue to act for her, not only in old matters but in new, without expressing any suggestion of dissatisfaction with the charges or of her intention to try and reopen a paid account.

I have already pointed out that the statement of charges contained what is commonly called a gross sum or a lump sum charge, and it has been conceded that a statement of charges in that form certainly was not a "bill" within the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 66, before the Solicitors' Remuneration (Gross Sum) Order, 1934, came into operation, whatever may be the position now. That Order, on which this case mainly depends, provides :

1. Without prejudice to the power possessed by the court under the Solicitors Act, 1932, or otherwise, or to the powers conferred upon the solicitor or the party chargeable with the bill under s. 66 of the Solicitors Act, 1932, the remuneration of a solicitor in respect of all business regulated by cl. 2 (c) of the General Order of 1882 as amended by any subsequent General Order may at the option of the solicitor be by a gross sum in lieu of by detailed charges : Provided that within six months after delivery of a charge made under this Order whether it has been paid or not the client may require that a detailed bill of charges shall be delivered and the solicitor shall thereupon comply with the requisition and any bill so delivered shall be subject to taxation as if the provisions of this Order with respect to the regulation of remuneration by gross sum had not been made.

This statement of charges seems to me to fall within the scope of that Order, provided that the only business included therein is business remuneration in respect of which is regulated by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, General Order, 1882, cl. 2 (c). If the business is of that description, it appears to me that, on the face of the Order of 1934, the court would not make an order under the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 64, unless the client had taken the steps open to him or her under the proviso to the Order. Therefore, the main question for me to consider is whether all the business to which this statement of charges relates is business regulated by cl. 2 (c) of the General Order of 1882. All non-contentious business is within cl. 2 (c) of the General Order unless it falls within some other provision of the General Order. The only provision in the General Order other than cl. 2 (c) which could possibly apply to this case is cl. 2 (a), which provides :

In respect of sales, purchases, and mortgages completed, the remuneration of the solicitor having the conduct of the business, whether for the vendor, purchaser, mortgagor, or mortgagee, is to be that prescribed in pt. I of sched. I to this Order, and to be subject to the regulations therein contained.

CORDERY ON SOLICITORS, 4th ed., p. 348, makes the following observation with regard to pt. I of sched. I to the General Order of 1882 :

The scale fees in sched. I do not apply : (a) To land situate out of the jurisdiction . . . (c) To property other than freehold, [copyhold,] or leasehold, but qu. as to the fees for negotiating sales, purchases and loans. The scale fee for negotiating a loan applies though the loan is not exclusively on real or leasehold property.

It is plain, therefore, that I must investigate sched. I further. Undoubtedly, a mortgage was completed in this case, but it has not been contended before me that the mortgage includes any freehold or leasehold land within the jurisdiction. I emphasise that because I think this was a Scottish trust. The only item in pt. I of sched. I which could apply to any of the business transacted by the respondent firm in this case is the item "Mortgagor's solicitor for negotiating loan." It is plain that there is no other scale charge which could possibly apply to any of the work done in this case.

I have to consider the decision of KEKEWICH, J., in Re Furber (1), because I am bound by that decision. In that case there was freehold or leasehold property within the jurisdiction and there were other scale charges which were applicable besides the scale charge for negotiating a loan. Accordingly, the judge began his judgment ([1898] 2 Ch. 538, at p. 542) :

The question raised on this summons is one of general importance to the profession. It is whether a solicitor can charge a scale fee for negotiating a loan though the loan is not to be advanced on a mortgage of freehold, copyhold or leasehold property exclusively.

That, if I may presume to say so, precisely stated the point raised by the facts of that case. The judge concluded his judgment (ibid. at p. 544) :

The result is that I must remit the matter to the taxing master with an intimation of my opinion that Mr. Furber is entitled to charge the scale fee for negotiating loan notwithstanding that there was no mortgage of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold property exclusively.

That again was a decision on the precise point raised in that case, and I have no doubt that, if any freehold or leasehold property within the jurisdiction had been subjected to the mortgage in question, this decision would have applied and would have bound me, but in that case, of course, other scale fee charges would have been applicable also. In reaching his conclusion the judge uses language which seems to me to go beyond the case which he had to decide and to apply where no freehold or leasehold property within the jurisdiction is subjected to the mortgage, and, indeed, to a case like the present where no other scale fee of any kind is applicable to any of the business to which the statement of charges relates. He says (ibid., at p. 543) :

My conclusion—and I am bound to say that but for the opinion of the taxing master I should have had very little hesitation about it—is that “negotiating loan” means “negotiating loan” of any kind provided the loan is on mortgage. It would not, for instance, include the case of a loan upon a promissory note, or money borrowed from bankers without any specific security. I think it is erroneous to suppose that because some property comprised in a mortgage is not of the particular kind to which title is deduced, or of which the title is investigated in the manner indicated in the schedule, therefore the scale fee for negotiating ought not to be charged.

In so far as that language extends, as I think it does extend, to a case in which no freehold or leasehold property within the jurisdiction is subjected to any mortgage and in which no other scale fee is applicable, while it is an observation to which I must apply great weight, it is not binding on me. I cannot bring myself to hold that the item “Mortgagor’s solicitor for negotiating loan,” is a scale charge which is applicable to business of the character indicated in the statement of charges which I have to consider in this case and to which no other scale charge is applicable.

If my conclusion is well founded that must be an end of the application, but if I am wrong in my conclusion on the construction of the General Order of 1882, the respondents could not rely on the statement of charges as a statement delivered pursuant to the Gross Sum Order of 1934 because it is impossible to say how much of the gross sum in the statement of charges is referable to the item for negotiating the loan to which a scale fee would be applicable. I should still have to consider whether, in the circumstances of this case, I ought to make an order under s. 64. I could not make an order under s. 66 without making an order under s. 64 because there would be, on the hypothesis which I am now considering, no bill within the meaning of s. 66. Accordingly, the question would be whether I ought to make an order under s. 64 to deliver a bill and an order under s. 66 for taxation of the bill so delivered. Counsel have conceded that I am neither guided nor constrained by any judicial decision in considering whether I ought to exercise my jurisdiction under s. 64 to make an order for delivery of a bill. The question whether or not the scale charge ought or ought not to have been made is, from a practical point of view, of small moment in the present case, though from a legal point of view it is, of course, most important. The applicant by implication admits that she realised both the amount which she had been charged and the work in respect of which that amount had been charged within a month of the date on which the bill was delivered and the charge paid by retainer, because she says she always intended to have the bill taxed. Realising all that, she not only refrained from raising even the slightest question about the statement of charges, but she continued to employ the respondent firm for several more years both in relation to old business and in relation to new business and expressed appreciation of their services in one direction or another on several occasions. Even when she notified the respondents that she was about to change her solicitors and when, therefore, she could have no possible ground for withholding from them the information that she had always intended to have the bill taxed, she does not make the slightest suggestion of any such intention, and it was not until 1946 that any such suggestion was made to the respondent firm. It is suggested she was in difficulty in communicating with the respondent firm. It is plain she was not. It is suggested that she was without assistance, but she had her husband with her in Switzerland. It seems to me that, in the circumstances which I have indicated even if I am wrong in my construction of the General Order of 1882, I ought not to exercise the jurisdiction which I should undoubtedly have in that event to order the defendants to deliver a bill of costs.

Application dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Ridsdale & Sons (for the applicant); Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker (for the respondents).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. E. PHILLIPS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BOURNE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkinson, J.), January 16, 17, 30, 1947.]

Income Tax—Assessment—Profit from trade—Cattle dealer—Lands insufficient for the keep of the cattle—"Cattle"—Inclusion of pigs—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case III, r. 4.

The taxpayer, a farmer, had 45 acres of land, of which 33 were pasture and 12 arable, the rent of the farm being £130 per annum. He kept pigs the number of which varied, but there were at times 60, and there was housing for 70. Only about 10 per cent. of their food was grown on the farm. The profits from this business amounted to more than £2,000.

HELD: the word "cattle" in the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, case III, r. 4, included pigs, and, as the taxpayer's lands were insufficient for the keep of the pigs, so that the assessable value afforded no just estimate of the profits, he should be assessed on his profits under the rule.

[AS TO ASSESSMENT ON CATTLE DEALERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, p. 73, para. 146 and Supplements; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supplement, Income Tax, Nos. 79e, 79f.]

AS TO "CATTLE," see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, p. 569, para. 975; and FOR CASES, see those referred to herein; also WORDS AND PHRASES, Vol. 1, p. 402.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Paty (1770), 2 Wm. Bl. 721; 2 East, P.C. 1074; 1 Leach, 72; 2 Digest 292, 626.
- (2) R. v. Chapple (1804), Russ. & Ry. 77; 2 Digest 293, 635.
- (3) R. v. Whitney (1824), 1 Mood. C.C. 3; 2 Digest 294, 643.
- (4) Fletcher v. Sondes (Lord) (1826), 3 Bing. 501; 1 Bl. N.S. 144; 42 Digest 672, 836.
- (5) Wright v. Pearson (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 582; 10 B. & S. 723; 38 L.J.Q.B. 312; 20 L.T. 849; 33 J.P. 534; 2 Digest 247, 307.
- (6) Child (Childs) v. Hearn (1874), L.R. 9 Ex. 176; 43 L.J.Ex. 100; 2 Digest 236, 231.

CASE STATED BY General Commissioners of Income Tax.

The Commissioners found that pigs were not "cattle" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, case III, r. 1, and, accordingly, that a farmer, who kept a large number of pigs as well as cows, was not liable to be assessed on his profits under that rule, although the assessed value of his land was no just estimate of his profits. The Crown appealed. The facts, as found in the Case Stated, appear in the judgment.

D. L. Jenkins, K.C., and Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.

L. C. Graham-Dixon for the taxpayer.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 30. ATKINSON, J. This is an appeal by the revenue against a finding by the general commissioners that a farmer was not liable, on the facts of the case, to be assessed on his profits. I think the most convenient course would be to refer to the relevant sections first.

The Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. B, provides:

Tax under sched. B shall be charged in respect of the occupation of all lands, tenements, hereditaments and heritages in the United Kingdom, for every 20s. of the assessable value thereof estimated in accordance with the rules of this schedule.

The rule applicable to sched. D, case I, provides:

The tax shall extend to every trade carried on in the United Kingdom or elsewhere . . . and shall be computed on the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains . . .

The Finance Act, 1941, s. 10 (1), provides:

Subject, as respects farming and farm land, to the provisions of the next succeeding section, farming and market gardening shall be treated as trades for the purposes of income tax and accordingly (a) the profits or gains thereof shall be charged under case I of sched. D.

The exception is contained in s. 11 of the Act of 1941. I may say that the two years involved in this case are 1940-41 and 1941-42. Section 11 (1) provides:

If, for the year 1941-42 or any subsequent year of assessment, the total annual value of the farm and market garden land of an individual in the relevant period, together with so much of the annual value of the farm and market garden land of any partnership of which he is a member during that period as is proportionate to his share for that period in the partnership income, does not exceed £300 in all, so much of the last preceding section as requires the profits or gains of farming to be charged under sched. D as the profits or gains of a trade shall not apply in relation to him for that year of assessment and he shall be assessed and charged to income tax . . .

under sched. B on the assessed value of his land. I come next to the rule which has to be interpreted in this case, namely, r. 4 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. D, case III :

A If the commissioners find that lands which have been charged under sched. B on the assessable value, and which are occupied by a dealer in cattle or a dealer in or a seller of milk, are insufficient for the keep of the cattle brought on to the lands, so that the assessable value affords no just estimate of the profits, they may require a statement of the profits to be delivered, and charge such further sum thereon as, together with the charge under sched. B, will make up the full sum wherewith the dealer or seller ought to be charged in respect of the like amount of profits charged according to r. 2 of the rules applicable to this case.

B The scheme seems simple. A farmer prima facie is taxed on his profits, but, if he has only a small place, of which the annual value is £300 a year—this has since been reduced to £100 a year [by the Finance Act, 1942, s. 28 (1)]—his profits will not be inquired into, but he will be assessed merely on the annual value of his holding. That is fair enough if his profits are made from the occupation of the land, but, if he carries on a trade on the land and makes considerably more than the assessed value, one cannot talk of these profits as being made out of the occupation of the land any more than one could if one built a factory on the land and proceeded to make profits from the use of the factory. They are profits made on the land ; they are not profits made from the occupation of the land. Section 11 of the Act of 1941 is intended to provide for such a case. If you bring on more cattle than you can maintain and keep on the land and deal in cattle or milk so that you make far more profits than the assessable value, then you have to be taxed as if you were carrying on a trade. That is the scheme of this legislation.

D The question here is : What is the meaning of the word "cattle" ? The facts stated in the Case are these. The taxpayer, Mr. Bourne, had a farm at Eccleshall. The area was 45 acres of which 33 acres were pasture and the remaining 12 acres arable. The rent of the farm was £130 per annum, and he was assessed under sched. B for the two years under appeal on assessable values of £130 and £108 respectively. Then the Case states : "The taxpayer kept between 30 and 40 cows on the land and sold the milk to milk dealers." E In 1940 work was begun on an armament factory close to the farm and canteens were opened to supply meals to the factory, where a large number of people were employed. The taxpayer contracted to supply the canteens with milk and for a time he was allowed to take whatever swill he required free of charge. At a later date a charge was made for the swill. The taxpayer used this swill to fatten pigs which he bought at approximately 3 months old, kept F for 3 to 4 months, and then sold them for killing for bacon. At times he had up to 60 pigs, but the numbers varied from time to time. The Case finds that the pigs were fed in certain buildings, which I will describe later on, and approximately 90 per cent. of their feed was composed of swill which was obtained from the canteens and only 10 per cent. of their food was grown on the farm. The pigs were housed in this way. There were three existing G brick-built pig-styes holding 10 pigs each, four loose boxes holding 10, and one moveable wooden pig arch holding approximately 8 pigs, so that there was housing for 78 pigs. The profits of these activities amounted to more than £2,000 a year, so that the profits he made were out of all proportion to the assessment.

The main point is whether pigs are "cattle" within the meaning of sched. D, case III, r. 4. The commissioners found that they were not, and that the H land was sufficient to maintain the cattle he had got, i.e., some cows, but there is a clear implication that, if the pigs were cattle, the land was not able to maintain them and that more animals had been brought on to the land than the land could maintain. They found, as they could not help so doing in those circumstances, that the assessable value was no just estimate of the profits.

The issue was thus reduced to the simple question : Are pigs "cattle" ? There are three ways in which counsel for the Crown approached this question. The first one I will call the "dictionary" way. It is perfectly clear that at one time the word "cattle" was a collective name for live stock—for live animals held as property. THE NEW ENGLISH OXFORD DICTIONARY states :

The application of the term has varied greatly, according to circumstances of time and place, and has included camels, horses, asses, mules, oxen, cows, calves, sheep, lambs, goats, swine, etc. The tendency in recent times has been to restrict the term to the bovine genus, but the wider meaning is still found locally, and in many combinations . . . c. Now usually confined to, or understood of, bovine animals.

It is perfectly plain that at some time or other—the dictionary does not say how long ago—the word “cattle” would have included pigs and that it may do so to-day. One has to look at the surrounding circumstances to see in what sense it has been used. I forget the precise year in which the present translation of the Bible was made, but clearly at that time the term “cattle” was not restricted to bovine animals. One reads : “Adam gave names to all cattle.” Many quotations in THE NEW ENGLISH OXFORD DICTIONARY show that it was used in the widest sense. So that I start with this, that “cattle” may include pigs. I bear in mind the argument which was pressed on me that, in taxing matters, there is no room for intendment and that burdens have to be clearly and unambiguously imposed, but I am not infringing that rule when I say that it is quite clear that the word “cattle” may include pigs. There is this also to be said. This particular rule is a reproduction of the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 100, sched. D, case III, r. 3, and it is in almost precisely the same language. That was a reproduction of a section which appeared in the Income Tax Act, 1806 [s. 112, sched. D, case III, r. 3.], 46 Geo. 3, c. 65. The point made is that, in interpreting a section which is a reproduction of a previous section, it is right to look at the meaning which the original section had. There is not the faintest doubt, I think, that in 1806 the word “cattle” would have been construed so as to include pigs. Even in 1842 (which is over 100 years ago) I think the same result would have followed. So much for the dictionary approach.

The next point is to consider what the rule is aiming at. I have touched on this already. If one is merely making profit from the occupation of land, say a small-holding, which is assessed at less than £300 (now £100) there is no inquiry into profits. That is all very well as long as the profits one is making arise from the occupation of the land, but, if the profits do not arise from the occupation of the land but from some industry or trade carried on on the land, a totally different position is created. The object of the rule clearly is to provide for a case where a number of animals are brought on the land which the land cannot possibly support, and dealing in them, or, if they are bovine animals, dealing in milk and making profits far in excess of the sum on which one is assessed. Let me take a simple example which I have seen for myself. In Canada, I went over a very big cattle farm with very big cattle houses. The cattle were kept in sheds and they were never let out, the reason being that there were so many bitter herbs in the grass in the district that the milk would be ruined. They were milked three times a day. On the fields some food was grown to help feed the animals, but in the main they obtained the food from outside, the amount grown on the ground being quite small. It would be absurd to say that the profits there were made from “the occupation of land.” They were not. They were made from carrying on an industry on the land, which is a totally different thing. So here. It is a typical example of what the section is designed to prevent. Here is a man who has quite a small farm and he brings some 50 pigs on to it. I think the Case refers to the fact that they were at times allowed to root about the fields, but they were not getting their food in that way—90 per cent. of their food came from outside. They were in pig-styes, loose boxes and the like. It is perfectly plain that the profits made out of this trade in pigs did not arise from the occupation of land. They arose from a business carried on on the land, a trade carried on on the land, which is quite a different thing. So it is clear that this trade in pigs was the very thing which the rule was designed to prevent. Therefore, even if the matter stopped there, I think one would be bound to say that pigs were cattle within the meaning of the rule.

The third line of argument of counsel for the Crown was to call my attention to a number of cases in which the expression “cattle” had been interpreted. The first in order of date was in 1770, R. v. Paty (1). In that case, it was necessary to interpret what was known as the Black Act (9 Geo. I, c. 22) :

If any person or persons shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim, or wound any cattle . . .

certain results were to follow. The question in R. v. Paty (1) was whether a mare was cattle. BLACKBURN, J., had the point submitted to all the judges, and unanimously they held that the word "cattle" included a mare. In other words, they rejected the narrow interpretation of the word which suggested that it merely referred to cows and animals of the bovine class. The next case was in 1804, R. v. Sarah Chapple (2), where a woman was prosecuted under the same Act for killing three pigs. Again, the question was submitted to all the judges, except two. All agreed that pigs were "cattle" within the meaning of that Act. The next case was in 1824, R. v. Whitney (3), where, in a case under the same Act, two asses were held to be cattle. Eleven judges were called together to determine the point. In other words, on three occasions, the narrow meaning of the word "cattle" was rejected. The next case was in 1826, Fletcher v. Lord Sondes (4). It was a complicated case, and the facts do not matter for this purpose, but there is a passage which shows what the meaning of the word "cattle" was supposed to be then. BEST, C.J., said (3 Bing. 501, at pp. 580, 581):

The statute of Elizabeth is a penal law. The rule to which I allude requires that all penal laws should be construed strictly, that no case should be holden to be reached by them but such as are within both the spirit and letter of such laws. If these rules are violated, the fate of accused persons is decided by the arbitrary discretion of judges, and not by the express authority of the laws. If general words follow an enumeration of particular cases, such general words are by another rule of construction holden to apply only to cases of the same kind as those which are expressly mentioned. By 14 George II, c. 1, persons who should steal sheep or any other cattle were deprived of the benefit of clergy. The stealing of any cattle, whether commonable or not commonable, seems to be embraced by these general words, any other cattle; but by 15 George II, c. 34, the legislature declared that it was doubtful to what sorts of cattle the former Act extended besides sheep, and enacted and declared that the Act was meant to extend to any bull, cow, ox, steer, bullock, heifer, calf and lamb, as well as sheep, and to no other cattle whatsoever. Until the legislature distinctly specified what cattle were meant to be included, the judges felt that they could not apply the statute to any other cattle but sheep. The legislature by the last Act says it was not to be extended to horses, pigs, or goats, although all these are cattle.

That passage was cited to me as showing the view that was held at that time as to the meaning of the word "cattle"—in other words, that the term "cattle" was not restricted to bovine animals. The next case cited was Wright v. Pearson (5), decided in 1869, where the question was the meaning of the word "cattle" in the Dogs Act, 1865, which gave a right of damages against the owners of dogs for injuries done to cattle or sheep. It was held that the word "cattle" included horses and mares. In 1874 in Child v. Hearn (6), the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68, imposing an obligation to fence against the straying of cattle, fell to be construed. In that case, pigs had strayed on the land and damage had been caused, and it was held that the expression "cattle" did include pigs.

Thus, I have had a number of cases cited to me in which the word "cattle" had to be construed, and in every one of them the narrow meaning was rejected and the wider meaning was adopted. I agree that they were all decisions on a particular Act, but they do establish that, in interpreting the word "cattle" in an Act, one has to look at what is the evil aimed at—what it is that the section wishes to deal with. If one finds that the word "cattle" must have been used in the wider sense, one must give effect to it. The conclusion to which I have come is that the word "cattle" in this section does include pigs, that the lands were insufficient to maintain these pigs, that the decision of the commissioners was wrong, and that the appeal must be allowed with costs. The Case must go back to the commissioners to arrive at the true assessment of profits.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Ellis & Fairbairn (for the taxpayer).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PEARCE v. DOULTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkinson, J.), January 20, 1947.]

Income Tax—Schedule A—Deductions—Depreciation of value of lease—Premiums on insurance policy to produce sum equivalent to purchase price—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. A, No. I (1); No. V, r. 8 (1).

In 1932 the appellant bought a lease, expiring in 1958, of 12 houses for £900. The ground rent was £20 and the rent received for each house £16 a year. The appellant was assessed to income tax under the Income Tax Act, 1918, sched. A, No. I, in the sum of £144—viz., 12 times the annual value of each house, £16, less £48 for repairs :—

HELD : no allowance could be made in respect of the ultimate loss of the purchase price on the expiration of the lease nor in respect of the annual premiums which would be payable on an insurance policy to produce that amount at the expiration of the period of the lease, the latter not being a maintenance expense within sched. A, No. V. r. 8 (1).

[AS TO THE INCOME TAX ACT, 1918, SCHED. A, No. I, and No. V, r. 8 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 9, pp. 533, 542.]

Case referred to :

(1) Inland Revenue Commrs. v. Fergus (1926), 10 Tax Cas. 665.

CASE STATED by General Commissioners of Income Tax.

At a meeting of the commissioners at Woolwich on Mar. 5, 1946, the taxpayer appealed against assessments to income tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1946, in the net sum of £144 under sched. A to the Income Tax Act, 1918. The commissioners confirmed the assessment, and the taxpayer appealed. The facts appear in the judgment.

The taxpayer appeared in person.

Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.

ATKINSON, J. : On July 23, 1932, the taxpayer purchased a lease of 12 houses, and paid a sum of £900 for it. The ground rent under the lease was £20. The rent that he collects on the houses amounts to £16 a year for each house. No one disputes that that is a fair rental, or that that sum fairly represents the annual value of the house. The taxpayer was assessed under sched. A on that basis, the gross assessment being 12 times £16, or £192. The statutory allowance of £48 for repairs was allowed, and that left a sum of £144 in respect of which the taxpayer paid tax.

That assessment was made under sched. A, No. I, which provides :

In the case of all lands, tenements, hereditaments or heritages capable of actual occupation, of whatever nature, and for whatever purpose occupied or enjoyed . . . the annual value shall be understood to be :—(1) the amount of the rent by the year at which they are let, if they are let at a rackrent and the amount of that rent has been fixed by agreement commencing within the period of seven years preceding the fifth day of April next before the time of making the assessment.

The annual value is, therefore, fixed under the rules in a particular way. In this case it has been arrived at in that way, and really that is an end of the case, but the taxpayer says : "That is not treating me fairly, because I have paid £900 for this lease and at the end of the lease, which expires in 1958, I shall have lost my £900 capital. This way of taxing me makes no allowance for my loss of that sum." He contends that that £900 ought to be spread out over the number of years of the lease and a deduction made accordingly, or that he ought to be allowed the annual premium he would have to pay for a policy of insurance producing £900 at the end of the period. That is a very attractive argument, but, as a matter of law, it is untenable. The assessment is to be made in accordance with the rules.

This point has been dealt with in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Fergus (1). There a lease had been purchased and a lump sum paid, and a claim was made that there ought to be a deduction in respect of that sum. ROWLATT, J., said (10 Tax Cas. 665, at p. 672) :

When you consider the nature of income tax, it is to charge income tax upon an income-producing property or an annual-value-producing property when you have got it, although of course you have had to pay to get it first.

That is this case put in a nutshell. Therefore, I am bound to disallow that claim.

The claim in respect of the premiums really arises under sched. A, No. V, r. 8 (1):

If the owner of any land or houses to which this rule applies shows that the cost to him of maintenance, repairs, insurance, and management, according to the average of the preceding five years, has exceeded, in the case of land, one-eighth part of the annual value of the land as adopted under this schedule, and, in the case of houses, [one-sixth part of that value], he shall be entitled in addition to any reduction of the assessment for the purposes of collection, on making a claim for the purpose, to repayment of the amount of the tax on the excess.

In my judgment, the cost of the premiums in question is not an expense he could bring into account under r. 8 (1), because the insurance referred to in the rule is insurance of the premises, the expense of insuring the continued existence of the premises against loss by fire or in other ways. The words "cost to him of maintenance, repairs, insurance, and management" all have relation to the maintenance of the property in question. It is clear that, because a man who owns a wasting asset may choose wisely to take out an insurance to replace the capital, he cannot claim that the premium he has paid in respect of such a policy be treated as a maintenance expense. So, on both the points raised the taxpayer fails, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

EDWARDS v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), January 23, 1947.]

Royal Forces—Pension—Attributability—Compelling presumption—Medical examination and attestation before outbreak of war—No further examination when embodied for war service—Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943, art. 4 (3).

The benefit of art. 4 (3) of the Royal Warrant Concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1943, applies to members of the territorial and of the regular forces who were medically examined before the outbreak of war, as well as to those who were examined when they joined the forces after the outbreak of war.

On attestation, on Apr. 4, 1939, the appellant was medically examined and found fit for general service. He was embodied on Sept. 2, 1939, but there was no further medical examination or medical report. He was discharged in 1945 on account of epilepsy:—

HELD: the disease was not noted in a medical report made on the commencement of the appellant's service, and, therefore, there was a compelling presumption in his favour.

Brown and others v. Minister of Pensions (1) not followed.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] The conflict between the High Court and the Court of Session which is revealed by this case is unfortunate because, by s. 6 (2) of the Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act, 1943, the decision of the judge nominated by the Lord Chancellor to hear appeals on points of law is final and conclusive. In the Scottish cases referred to by DENNING, J., the Court of Session were hearing sixteen appeals and the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK (COOPER), giving the opinion of the court, said that each case depended on its own facts and then observed that there were certain general matters which were common to a number of the cases which could be conveniently discussed at the outset. He then asked the question: Does art. 4 (3) of the Royal Warrant apply where a person in respect of whom a claim is made was not examined at the commencement of his war service? Having given the definition of "war service" in art. 1 (21), of the Warrant—"service . . . during the whole or any part of the period beginning on Sept. 3, 1939"—he said that art. 4 (3) applied primarily to those men and women affected by the National Service Acts who began their service after Sept. 3, 1939, and were medically examined at the commencement of their war service. The implication was that, if the medical authorities made an examination and failed at that examination to detect or note a disease in a recruit, it should be presumed that the disease was not then present and a special onus was applied in favour of such a claimant, requiring the Minister to establish that the disease which subsequently appeared was not attributable or aggravated by war service. If, however, the claimant, either because he was already a serving soldier or for some other reason, was not medically examined on the commencement of his "war service" as defined, there was no room for the application of this special onus or for the added emphasis which it applied to the general onus prescribed by art. 4 (2). In such cases art. 4 (3) did not apply and the case was ruled by art. 4 (2). The court pointed out that in many cases it made little practical difference, because, at least by the time the case reached an appellate tribunal, the issue was usually so narrowed down that the onus prescribed by art. 4 (2) was sufficient to make it possible for the average applicant to dispense with the added emphasis on that onus prescribed by art. 4 (3). It is interesting to note that DENNING, J., decided the point now raised in the same way in Jewitt v. Minister of Pensions, [1946] 2 All E.R. 545, on which occasion his attention was not drawn to the cases in the Court of Sessions.

FOR THE PENSIONS APPEAL TRIBUNALS ACT, 1943, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, p. 480.]

Case referred to :

(1) Brown and Others v. Minister of Pensions, 1946 S.C. 471.

APPEAL against a decision of a pensions appeal tribunal that there was no compelling presumption in favour of the appellant who had been medically examined on attestation but not on embodiment for war service. The facts appear in the judgment of DENNING, J.

G. H. Crispin for the appellant.

Stephen Chapman for the respondent.

DENNING, J. : In this case the appellant was medically examined on Apr. 4, 1939, with a view to service, was found fit for general service, and was attested. He was embodied on Sept. 2, 1939, but there was no further medical examination or medical report. He went into the army, served in France, and was evacuated from Dunkirk, where he was in the water and subjected to bombing. On June 21, 1944, after the Normandy landings, he went to France again. He developed epilepsy in 1945 and was discharged on that account. He now claims a pension.

The first question that arises is whether there is any compelling presumption in his favour. The chairman of the tribunal, following, no doubt, observations by the Court of Session in Brown and others v. Minister of Pensions (1946 S.C. 471, at pp. 473, 474), said that there was no compelling presumption. The Court of Session there held that the compelling presumption under art. 4 (3) is not applicable where there has been no medical examination at the commencement of war service. Although the course which the chairman took is perfectly understandable, in my judgment, that approach is not correct, especially when the man was examined, as he was in this case, before war service commenced in Sept., 1939. It seems to me that it would be a very strange result to hold that because he was not examined on or after Sept., 1939, he is thereby deprived of the benefit of the compelling presumption. There were many members of the Territorial Army or the regular forces and others who enlisted before Sept. 3, 1939, and were not medically examined again after it, and it would be strange if all these men were deprived of the benefit of the compelling presumption. Article 4 (3) says :

Where an injury or disease which has led to a member's discharge or death during war service was not noted in a medical report made on that member on the commencement of his war service, a certificate under para. (1) of this article shall be given unless the evidence shows that the conditions set out in that paragraph are not fulfilled.

It seems to me that if the services accept a man for war service without a medical report, either because he has been previously examined or for some other reason, he still has the benefit of art. 4 (3). If there was no medical report on the commencement of his war service, there was nothing noted in a medical report, and in those circumstances I should have thought the disease was not noted in a medical report made on the commencement of his war service. In this case the disease was not noted in the medical report on Apr. 4, 1939, which was the effective medical report. The man was found fit for general service and that should suffice. Reluctant as I am that there should be any difference between this court and the Court of Session on a point, I feel bound to say that, in my judgment, the benefit of art. 4 (3) applies to members of the Territorial Army and of the regular forces who were examined before Sept., 1939, as well as to those men who were examined after Sept. 3, 1939, when they went into the army. Indeed, the Minister of Pensions has not contended before me for the contrary view.

As for the rest of the case, the facts are that the appellant had three epileptic attacks since January, 1945. They all occurred while he was asleep and after he had travelled long journeys. The Medical Services Division made a report saying, as has been proved before in these cases, that epilepsy often develops inside the individual. It is a constitutional nervous disease. It is only if there is some severe stress in service that there may be any aggravation of it. They reported that these long journeys were of no material importance as such exercise is not looked on as constituting the degree of physical stress or shock necessary to aggravate the malady. The effect of that evidence was entirely for the tribunal. When the appellant was before the tribunal, he gave further detailed descriptions of the experiences to which he was subjected. Again, that was a matter for the tribunal to consider in relation to the medical evidence. They were entitled to deal with the case on the appellant's statement coupled with the opinion of the Medical Services Division as explained by the medical member then and there. If they had approached the case in the right way, therefore, there would have been no reason for interfering with their decision. But the correct approach is important and may be vital. As the chairman seems, according to the note, to have said that this was a case where there was no compelling presumption, and as, in my judgment, there was a compelling presumption, the proper course is to remit the matter to the tribunal so that they can approach it in the light of what I have said.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Culross & Trelawny (for the appellant); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondent).

[Reported by W. J. ALDERMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRYOR, B. I. v. PRYOR, E. S.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), February 7, 1947.]

Infants and Children—Custody—Divorce proceedings—Death of parent obtaining order for custody—Application by third party for custody—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, (c. 49), s. 193 (1).

On the death of the parent to whom custody of the children of a marriage has been granted after a decree of divorce the court has jurisdiction, under s. 193 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, to entertain an application by a third party for the custody of the children.

Davis v. Davis (1) no longer law.

[AS TO APPLICATIONS BY THIRD PARTIES FOR CUSTODY OF CHILDREN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 756, para. 1194; and FOR CASES, see 27 DIGEST, p. 534, Nos. 5786 and 5788.]

Case referred to:

(1) Davis v. Davis (1889), 14 P.D. 162; 58 L.J.P. 88; 27 Digest 534, 5788.

APPLICATION by the parents of a deceased petitioner (the wife), to whom a decree of divorce and custody of her children had been granted, for leave to intervene in her suit and ask for the custody of the children. The facts appear in the judgment (which was delivered in open court).

L. V. Ardagh for the parents of the deceased wife.

The husband was not represented.

WILLMER, J. : In this case application is made by the parents of a deceased petitioner (a) for leave to intervene in the suit, notwithstanding the death of the petitioner, for the purpose of asking for the custody of the children of the marriage between the petitioner and the respondent, (b) for an order for such custody, and (c) for certain other relief which does not raise any question of general interest and which will be dealt with by the order of the court. I have adjourned the summons into court for judgment because so much of the application as is concerned with leave to intervene in the suit raises a question under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, which does not appear to have arisen previously for determination by the court.

The petition, which was by the wife, was filed on Sept. 18, 1944, and was for dissolution on the ground of desertion for a period of at least three years immediately prior thereto. The suit was undefended, and on Oct. 18, 1945, a decree nisi was pronounced, which was made absolute on Apr. 30, 1946. On the pronouncing of the decree nisi a further order was made that the two children of the marriage should remain in the custody of the petitioner until further order. On Aug. 12, 1946, the petitioner died, leaving a will which made no testamentary disposition with regard to the guardianship of the two children of the marriage. Since the death of the petitioner the children have resided with and have been cared for by, the parents of the petitioner, the present applicants. I have before me an affidavit sworn by the father of the petitioner, which satisfies me that the children are well cared for and are happy in their present surroundings; that the respondent, since his desertion of the petitioner some seven years ago, has been virtually a stranger to them; and that he is not now in a position to undertake the custody of the children or provide them with a suitable home. The respondent has, in fact, given his consent in writing to an order in the terms now prayed, and it seems obviously desirable in the best interests of the children that an order should be made committing them to the custody of the present applicants, the result of which will be no more than to give legal effect to the existing arrangement.

The question has been raised, however, whether I have power to make such an order in the present proceedings. My attention has been directed to a statement in RAYDEN, 4th ed., c. XII, p. 454, s. 70, where it is said:

Such an application [i.e., to intervene on a question of custody] cannot be made by a third party after the death of a petitioner judicially separated from her spouse.

It may be said that a fortiori it cannot be made in a case where the marriage of the deceased petitioner has been dissolved. The authority cited for the statement in the text is Davis v. Davis (1). A similar statement, and a reference to the same case, is made in LATEY, 13th ed., p. 236, note (g). In that case BUTT, J., refused to accede to an application by the mother of a deceased petitioner in circumstances precisely similar to those of the present case. The application in Davis v. Davis (1), however, was made under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, now repealed and replaced by s. 193 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and it is instructive to compare the wording of the repealed section with that of the section now in force. Section 4 of the Act of 1859 provided:

The court, after a final decree of judicial separation, nullity of marriage, or dissolution of marriage, may . . . make, from time to time, all such orders and provision with respect to the custody . . . of the children the marriage of whose parents was the subject of the decree . . . as might have been made by such final decree or by interim orders in case the proceedings for obtaining such decree were still pending; . . .

BUTT, J., held in Davis v. Davis (1) that this section referred only to an application to be made by one of the parents, and did not contemplate an application being made by a stranger. The words of s. 193 (1) of the Act of 1925 are significantly different:

In any proceedings for divorce or nullity of marriage or judicial separation, the court may from time to time, either before or by or after the final decree, make such provision as appears just with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of the children, the marriage of whose parents is the subject of the proceedings . . .

It will be seen that the words of s. 4 of the 1859 Act limiting the power of the court to such orders "as might have been made" by final decree or by interim orders in the proceedings have not been reproduced in the present section. On the contrary, the court is given power, at any time, to "make such provision as appears just." I see nothing in the present section to prevent me from doing that which, under the old section, BUTT, J., held that he had no power to do, subject to my being satisfied, as I am, that the application by the parents of the petitioner is just, that is, in the best interests of the children. In my judgment, the decision in Davis v. Davis (1), being founded on the wording of the repealed section of the Act of 1859, is no longer authoritative, and the statements in the textbooks, to which I have drawn attention, are erroneous having regard to the wide powers now conferred by s. 193 (1) of the Act of 1925. For these reasons I accede to the present application. The applicants will have leave to intervene in the suit, and on their application I grant them the custody of the two children of the deceased petitioner.

Leave to intervene and custody given.

A Solicitors: Moodie, Randall, Carr & Brown (for the parents).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LLOYD v. LLOYD AND HILL.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Hodson, J.), January 15, 1947.]

B Divorce—Condonation—Revival of condoned offence—Effect on liability of co-respondent.

Revival of condoned adultery operates against both respondent and co-respondent. Where, therefore, a husband petitioned for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, which had been condoned, but had been revived by her subsequent desertion, the petitioner was, therefore, entitled to ask for an order against the co-respondent for costs and damages.

C [AS TO REVIVAL OF CONDONED ADULTERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 680, para. 1006; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 345, 346, Nos. 3266-3276.]

Cases referred to:

D (1) Bernstein v. Bernstein, [1893] P. 292; 69 L.T. 513; sub nom. Bernstein v. Bernstein, Turner and Sampson, 63 L.J.P. 3; 27 Digest 341, 3213.

(2) Beard v. Beard, [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.

(3) Norris v. Norris, Lawson and Mason (1861), 4 Sw. & Tr. 237; 30 L.J.P.M. & A. 111; 27 Digest 346, 3270.

E PETITION by a husband for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery which had been condoned but had been revived by the wife's subsequent desertion and renewed adultery with the co-respondent. The report is confined to the question of the liability for costs and damages of the co-respondent in these circumstances.

Graham R. Swanwick for the husband.

The wife did not appear.

F Karminski, K.C., and F. T. Alpe for the co-respondent.

HODSON, J.: This is a petition for divorce presented by the husband against his wife on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent, against the latter of whom damages are claimed. The adultery alleged in the petition was condoned, but there was revival as against the wife of that condoned adultery by reason of her subsequent desertion and adultery with the co-respondent.

G It has been argued that, even if the adultery of the wife was revived against her by her subsequent desertion, it could not be revived against the co-respondent apart from her later adultery with him. It seems to be an odd proposition that, because the co-respondent has nothing to do with the condonation or the revival, he should get the benefit of the condonation and not lose that benefit when the wife forfeits it by her own conduct in reviving the adultery. The position, as counsel for the husband put it, is simply this. I have to consider on the case as a whole whether condonation exists as a bar. If there has been revival, it does not exist as a bar, and that is good for the co-respondent as well as good for the wife. I think there is no authority to the contrary. Language has been used in many cases, and, in particular, by the Court of Appeal in Bernstein v. Bernstein (1), inveighing against the proposition that when an act of adultery has been condoned, it can afterwards be brought up and relied on, but that language, certainly in Bernstein v. Bernstein (1) (see per LINDLEY, L.J. ([1893] P. 292, at p. 318), was not directed to the question of revival, and when the courts have had to consider the question of revival they have always held that the revival of condoned adultery as a result of a subsequent matrimonial offence is part of the law of England (Beard v. Beard (2)). No question of revival arose in Bernstein v. Bernstein (1), and, to my mind, nothing in that case is of any assistance here except a reference to an earlier case, Norris v. Norris, Lawson and Mason (3). The actual wording of the judgment of the Judge Ordinary in that case does assist the argument of the co-respondent in this case, but the Judge Ordinary was only exercising his discretion on a question of costs where there were two co-respondents, the adultery of one having been condoned and the petitioner being unable to prove his case against the second. In the exercise of his discretion the Judge Ordinary refused to condemn the first co-respondent in costs where the adultery had been condoned, and he used language which went further than any that he need have used in saying (4 Sw. & Tr. 237): "I cannot condemn Lawson in costs." If he had considered the doctrine of revival, which he obviously did not consider, he might not have used the word "cannot." It is a very short report, and all that the judge said after that was: "The petitioner, by condoning his wife's adultery with Lawson, has waived all right to any proceedings against him in this court." Again, if he had been considering the doctrine of revival he would not have said that. It is plain from that passage and from the judgment in the case of Bernstein v. Bernstein (1) to which I have made reference, that the question of revival was not being considered at all.

I see no reason to doubt that, in any event, if the condonation goes, it goes for all purposes, and I am certain that it is not open to a co-respondent to say: "Because the wife has been forgiven, you can never bring up the past against me although you may bring it up against her." Therefore, I find that the husband is entitled to his decree, to ask for an order for costs against the co-respondent and to an order for damages.

Decree nisi with costs against the co-respondent and an order for £200 damages.

Solicitors: Taylor, Jelf & Co. (for the husband); W. R. Perkins (for the co-respondent).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FRASER v. FRASER.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), January 24, 1947.]

Divorce—Maintenance—Secured maintenance—Liberty to apply as to nature of security—Variation of order—Power of court—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1)—Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938 (c. 63), s. 14.

On an application for maintenance subsequent to decree absolute the registrar made an order for payment by the husband of certain sums for the maintenance of the wife and the child of the marriage, and further ordered the husband to secure to the wife for her life dum sola the annual sum of £50 upon the balance of his capital then remaining in England, with liberty to apply as to the nature of the security. The husband held an appointment in Turkey and was a beneficiary to the extent of £3,650 in the estates, administered in Scotland, of his parents, of which sum £2,000 had been paid. It transpired that the husband was not in possession of any capital in England, practically the whole of the £2,000 having been expended, and the balance being in the hands of lawyers in Scotland. On a further summons, taken out under the liberty to apply in the registrar's order, the registrar made an order that the security to be provided by the husband for the annual sum of £50 should comprise the property devised by his parents then being administered by the lawyers in Scotland:—

HELD: even if it were proper to reserve liberty to apply in an order of this character (which was doubted), that provision must be read subject to the provisions of the order as a whole, and, in particular, subject to the provision that the order for payment was to be secured on the balance of the husband's capital then remaining in England, and it could not empower the registrar to make an order securing payment on capital out of England, as to do so would amount to a variation of the original order, which was outside the power of the court.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. This case reveals an unfortunate position, and possibly, a casus omisus in the relevant legislation, doubtless due to the unsatisfactory way in which this branch of our law has developed. It is important to note that the judge suggests a remedy which may be effective in at least some cases, namely, a variation of the unsecured payments.]

AS TO ORDERS SECURING MAINTENANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 789, para. 1251; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 508-510, Nos. 5467-5475.]

A Cases referred to:

- (1) Blyth v. Blyth, [1942] 2 All E.R. 469; [1943] P. 15; 112 L.J.P. 4; 167 L.T. 411; Digest Supp.
- (2) Shearn v. Shearn, [1931] P. 1; 100 L.J.P. 41; 143 L.T. 772; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband from an order of a registrar varying a previous order for secured maintenance. The facts appear in the judgment.

B S. Seuffert for the husband.
Frank Whitworth for the wife.

WILLMER, J.: This is an appeal by the respondent husband against an order made by the registrar varying a previous order made by him for maintenance in so far as the same related to an annual sum ordered to be secured for the wife by the husband. The ground of the appeal is that the registrar had no power to vary his own previous order with regard to secured maintenance.

C In view of the importance of the point and the authorities to which I was referred I have thought it right to take time to consider my decision and to pronounce my judgment in open court.

The history of the matter can be shortly stated. The petition was based on adultery. The husband did not defend the proceedings, and on Sept. 3, 1945, a decree nisi was pronounced by PILCHER, J. The decree was made absolute on March 11, 1946, and on the following day the wife filed notice of application for maintenance. The registrar, by an order dated July 4, 1946, ordered the husband to pay to the wife for her own maintenance £150 per annum less tax and a further sum of £52 per annum for the maintenance and education of the child of the marriage, and he further ordered the husband to secure to the wife for her life dum sola the annual sum of £50 less tax on the balance of the husband's capital now remaining in England. The order

E further gave liberty to apply as to the nature of the security. The wife did not appeal against this order, but the husband did. His appeal was dismissed by BYRNE, J., and a further appeal to the Court of Appeal was dismissed on Nov. 20, 1946.

The husband is a chartered accountant and holds an appointment in Turkey, in respect of which he is in receipt of a salary and a cost-of-living bonus. He is also a beneficiary under the wills of his parents, lately deceased, and the amount of his interest under the two wills is estimated at £3,650. The estates of the husband's parents are being administered by a firm of writers to the signet in Edinburgh. It appears that up to date the husband has received some £2,000 odd of the total due to him, and there remains due something in excess of £1,600. I was informed that the reason for the wording of the registrar's order, that the annual sum of £50 should be secured on the balance of the husband's capital now remaining in England, was to make it clear that any assets which the husband might have in Turkey were to be excluded, since it was not thought desirable to tie up any assets in Turkey so as to impair the ability of the husband to earn his living in Turkey.

After the dismissal of the husband's appeal to the Court of Appeal it appeared that he was not in possession of any capital in England. Apparently, the £2,000 received by him under his parents' wills had already been totally, or practically, expended, and the balance of £1,600 was (and is still, so far as I am aware) in the hands of the lawyers in Scotland. In these circumstances the original order of the registrar, in so far as it ordered the annual sum of £50 to be secured on the balance of the husband's capital now remaining in England was of no value to the wife. A further summons was, therefore, issued by the wife, under the liberty to apply in the previous order, asking that the security to be provided by the husband for the annual sum of £50 should comprise the stocks, shares, monies and securities, the land and house, furniture and other effects, or the proceeds thereof when realised, and any other property devised or sequestered to the husband by his late father and mother and now being administered by the lawyers in Edinburgh. The registrar made an order in the terms prayed, and it is from this order that the present appeal is brought.

It should be said at once that the husband's behaviour throughout appears to be completely without merits. With the salary which he earns from his appointment in Turkey and the amounts received, or to be received, under the wills of his late parents, it is obvious that he is in a financial position to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife. Quite apart from the fact that it was his misconduct which broke up the marriage, he appears to have done his best to evade his responsibilities to his wife and the child of the marriage. It is only necessary to mention the abortive appeals from the original maintenance order and the manner in which the monies already received under the wills of his parents appear to have been recklessly squandered. One cannot but sympathise with the wife in the difficult position in which she has been placed. The decision of this appeal, however, does not depend on the merits of the parties or on sympathy with the wife in her difficulties, but on whether the registrar had power, as a matter of law, to make the order now complained of.

The original order of the registrar, in so far as it provided for secured maintenance, was made in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 190 (1). The provisions for variation of orders for alimony, maintenance and periodical payments are now consolidated in the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938, s. 14. Under this section the court has power to discharge or vary such orders, to suspend the provisions thereof, or to revive the operation of any provisions so suspended, but this section is silent as to any power to vary an order for secured maintenance made in pursuance of s. 190 (1) of the Act of 1925. There is not, and so far as I know there never has been, any statutory power to vary or discharge an order for secured maintenance. This is made abundantly clear by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Blyth v. Blyth (1) in which case the court refused to rescind an order for secured maintenance, notwithstanding the fact that both parties desired its rescission. That, of course, was a case in which a deed had already been executed in pursuance of the order, and it may be said that the present case is different because as yet no deed has been executed, but it is clear that the decision of the Court of Appeal did not depend on the fact that a deed had been executed. On the contrary, the judgment of GODDARD, L.J., makes it quite clear that it is not only the order, but the order under which the deed was executed, that the court has no power to rescind.

The rule that the court cannot rescind or vary an order for secured maintenance is not really challenged by the wife. It is argued that what the registrar has done in this case does not amount to a variation of his previous order, but that, having reserved liberty to apply as to the nature of the security in his original order, he was free, on the subsequent summons, to make a further order specifying what securities should be comprised within the order. I regret that I am unable to agree. Having regard to what was said by HILL, J., in Shearn v. Shearn (2), I doubt very much whether in an order of this character it was proper to reserve liberty to apply at all. This point was not before the Court of Appeal, because it was not necessary for their decision on the hearing of the previous appeal by the husband. Nor is it necessary for me to decide it now, for, even if it was proper to reserve liberty to apply, that provision must be read subject to the provisions of the order as a whole, and, in particular, subject to the provision that the order for payment was to be secured on the balance of the husband's capital now remaining in England. How could the liberty to apply empower the registrar to make an order securing payment on capital not in England, which is what he has, in fact, done? To do so amounts, in my judgment, to a variation of the original order, which is outside the power of the court. It appears to me that what was said by HILL, J., in Shearn v. Shearn (2) is very much in point, and I think it is valuable to quote a short passage from his judgment. He says ([1931] P. 1, at p. 4) :

But the court has no power to modify an order to secure, nor has it power in modifying an order to pay to turn it into an order to secure. The two orders are essentially different. The order under s. 190, (1) is not an order to make periodical payments and secure the payments; it is an order to secure and nothing else. Under it the only obligation of the husband is to provide the security; having done that, he is under no further liability. He enters into no covenant to pay and never becomes a debtor in respect of the payments. The wife has the benefit of the security and must look to it alone; if it ceases to yield the expected income she cannot call upon the husband to make good the deficiency.

Applying that to the present case, the only obligation of the husband under the original order to secure was to provide the security specified—i.e., his capital now remaining in England. Having done that he is under no further liability. Equally he is under no further liability if there is no capital now remaining in England. He cannot now be forced to provide other or different security, that is, capital not at the time of the order in England.

For these reasons, although I sympathise with the wife in the difficulties in which she finds herself, I cannot do other than allow the present appeal. It appears to me that the wife's remedy, if the maintenance provided under the original order falls short of what is just, lies in a different direction. As has been previously pointed out, the court always has power in a proper case to vary an order for unsecured maintenance. It may be that where, as here, the provision for secured maintenance fails, a strong case could be made out for variation of the unsecured monthly or weekly payments.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Crawley & De Reya (for the husband); Russell & Arnholz (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BAXTER v. BAXTER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Asquith, L.J., and Vaisey, J.), January 4, February 17, 1947.]

Divorce—Nullity—Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Wife insisting on use of contraceptives by husband—Acquiescence by husband—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a).

A petitioner who only succeeds in proving a refusal in which he has acquiesced does not establish that non-consummation of the marriage is due to the wilful refusal of the respondent within the meaning of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 7 (1) (a).

Therefore, where, to obtain sexual gratification, a husband had for 10 years acquiesced, though reluctantly, in the condition, imposed by the wife, that he should use a contraceptive sheath:

HELD: the husband was not entitled to a decree of nullity.

[FOR THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1937, s. 7 (1) (a), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 339.]

Case referred to:

(1) Cowen v. Cowen, [1945] 2 All E.R. 197; [1946] P. 36; 114 L.J.P. 57; 173 L.T. 176; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of HODSON, J., dated June 5, 1946, refusing a decree of nullity on the ground that the husband had not sufficiently proved that the non-consummation of the marriage was due to the wilful refusal of the wife. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

S. Lincoln for the husband.

S. E. Karminski, K.C., and Colin Duncan for the King's Proctor.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 17. LORD GREENE, M.R., read the following judgment of the court. By his petition, dated Nov. 16, 1945, the husband sought a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground that his marriage had never been consummated owing to the wilful refusal of his wife to consummate the marriage. This is a new ground for a decree of nullity introduced for the first time by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 7 (1) (a). The case was undefended. HODSON, J., held that the husband had not sufficiently proved the contents of his petition and dismissed it. As the appeal appeared to us to be likely to raise questions of some general importance in the decision of which we would not have the benefit of argument on behalf of the wife, we thought it right to ask for the assistance of the King's Proctor. Counsel, accordingly, appeared for the King's Proctor and placed before us a full argument in support of the decision of HODSON, J.

The parties were married on Jan. 10, 1934, and they lived together until 1944 when the husband left the wife. It was the husband's case that throughout the whole of this period, from the very beginning of the married life, the wife wilfully refused to consummate the marriage in that she would never allow him to have intercourse with her unless he took the precaution of using a contraceptive sheath. This attitude was, according to his evidence, due to the wife's firm refusal to have a child, an attitude in which she was encouraged by her parents. The evidence of the husband as to this attitude of the wife and her parents was supported by that of his brother-in-law. HODSON, J., found or assumed that the husband was to be believed when he said that he had never had intercourse with his wife save when he was wearing a contraceptive sheath. On this basis we are, in my opinion, constrained to say that the marriage has never been consummated. The authority for this is the recent case in this court of Cowen v. Cowen (1) where it was held that intercourse of this character does not effect a consummation of the marriage. This authority is, of course, binding on us, but the section requires proof that the non-consummation of the marriage was due to the wilful refusal of the respondent which is, we think, not the same thing as saying that the respondent wilfully refused to consummate the marriage.

On this branch of the case HODSON, J., held that the husband failed. He had not the advantage which we have had of hearing a full argument in opposition to the husband's case. His judgment was a very short one and we do not think it right to examine his phraseology too minutely. In substance he found that the husband had not proved that this non-consummation was due to the wilful refusal of the wife and that it was due rather to the husband's own action in acceding to his wife's "request" without even making an attempt to consummate the marriage without a contraceptive. Counsel for the husband not unnaturally criticised the use of the word "request," which, he said, did not adequately describe what was the foundation of his case, namely, the firm refusal of the wife to allow intercourse unless the husband wore a contraceptive sheath. We do not, however, think that the sense of the judgment would really be affected if the word "demand" or the word "insistence" were to be substituted for the word "request."

The husband's case is a remarkable one since, to succeed, it requires a finding that for a period of 10 years, during which intercourse regularly took place, the husband was regularly and continuously being prevented from effecting a normal consummation of the marriage by his wife's regular and continuous refusal to allow him to do so. Counsel for the husband agreed that, if the husband had acquiesced in the wife's requirements, he would not be entitled to relief. This appears to us to be plainly right since in that case the non-consummation would be due, not to a refusal by the wife, but to a course of conduct acquiesced in by the husband. Counsel, however, contended that on the evidence acquiescence could not be attributed to the husband since it was due, not to his free will that he used the contraceptive, but to the fact that he could not have intercourse in any other way. He said that the husband pleaded with the wife for many years.

The answer to the question: What will amount to "wilful refusal"? must, in our opinion, depend on the facts of the case. A wife, through coyness, frigidity or nervousness, may well refuse to allow intercourse for a considerable period after the marriage. It is not to be thought that in such cases the husband would be entitled to say that she had been guilty of wilful refusal within the meaning of the sub-section until at least he had unsuccessfully brought to bear such tact, persuasion and encouragement as an ordinary husband would use in the circumstances. It is, in our opinion, insufficient for a husband to say: "My wife refused to let me do what I asked." He must show that he himself has acted as a reasonable man would have acted with a view to overcoming his wife's reluctance before he can successfully assert wilful refusal by her. In the present case the evidence fails to satisfy us, as it failed to satisfy HODSON, J., that the husband took all reasonable steps to effect the consummation that he desired. We do not place among such reasonable steps the use of force or a trick, but we do not know the circumstances in which the wife's refusal was made save that it was not in response to any attempt to have normal intercourse.

A refusal in cold blood in a discussion over the dinner table is one thing. A refusal in other and more intimate circumstances when the passions of a normal woman might be expected to be active might well be more difficult to persist in, particularly for a period of ten years. Moreover, it is clear from the evidence that the wife was not averse to sexual intercourse, and it is proper to infer, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that she found it as attractive as a normal woman might be expected to do. Her only stipulation was that, in enjoying this advantage, she should be protected against the risk of becoming pregnant. There is nothing to suggest that she was prepared to deprive herself altogether. The husband indulged her desires in the sense that he was willing to give her the gratification which her instincts demanded. If he was sincere in his aversion to the use of a contraceptive, one would have thought that a refusal of the type of intercourse which the wife found both attractive and safe might well have brought her to a different frame of mind. But he did not refuse. On the contrary, leaving aside any question of gratifying the passions of his wife, he continued to have intercourse with a sheath in order to gratify his own, because, as he said in answer to a question by HODSON, J., had he not used a sheath he would not have been able to cohabit with her. In other words, he was not prepared to deprive himself of sexual intercourse. He could not get it in the way that he wished, and he, accordingly, took it in the only way that he thought was available to him.

The true conclusion from all the facts, in our opinion, is that suggested by ASQUITH, L.J.—that, to obtain the desired gratification, he acquiesced, though, no doubt, reluctantly, in the conditions imposed by his wife and did so for 10 years. A reluctant acquiescence is, nevertheless, an acquiescence, and, in our opinion, HODSON, J. was right in his decision. A petitioner who only succeeds in proving a refusal in which he has acquiesced does not, in our opinion, establish that non-consummation is due to a wilful refusal by the respondent within the meaning of the statute. The appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : William P. Webb (for the husband) ; Treasury Solicitor (for the King's Proctor).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CAKEBREAD v. HOPPING BROS. (WHETSTONE) LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Oaksey, Tucker and Cohen, L.JJ.), February 6, 1947.]

Factories and Shops—Dangerous machinery—Woodworking machinery—Circular saw—Employers' duty to maintain guard in position—Delegation to workman—Negligence of workman—Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196), reg. 21—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1).

The plaintiff workman, a woodworker of experience and skill, while operating a circular saw belonging to his employers, the defendant company, suffered injury, part of one of his fingers being cut off. Regulation 21 of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922 No. 1196) provides : "The guards and other appliances required by these regulations shall be maintained in an efficient state and shall be constantly kept in position while the machinery is in motion, except when, owing to the nature of the work being done, the use of the guards or appliances is rendered impracticable. The guards shall be so adjusted as to enable the work to be carried on without unnecessary risk." There was a guard on the saw in question, but, with regard to maintaining it in position, there was an arrangement between the workman and his foreman by which the workman was permitted to adjust the guard and keep it some 3½ inches high, a height which was a breach of reg. 10 (c).

HELD : (i) the employers were in breach of their statutory duty to maintain the guard in an efficient state and in position and also in breach of their duty adequately to supervise the work in the factory, and these breaches contributed to the accident.

(ii) the workman was under a duty at common law to observe for his own safety the care which a prudent man would have observed and his failure to exercise this care contributed towards the accident, and, therefore, the damages must be apportioned under the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945.

(iii) it could not be said that the workman had aided and abetted the employers in the breach of their duty under reg. 21 and that, therefore, he was prevented from recovering by the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio.

[AS TO THE DUTY TO FENCE DANGEROUS MACHINERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 594-595, paras. 1130 and 1131; and FOR CASES, see Digest, Vol. 24, pp. 908-911, Nos. 62-81.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Gordon v. Metropolitan Police Chief Commissioner, [1910] 2 K.B. 1080; 79 L.J.K.B. 957; 103 L.T. 338; 74 J.P. 437; 12 Digest 280, 2297.
- (2) Holman v. Johnson (1775), 1 Cowp. 341; 12 Digest 279, 2288.
- (3) Vincent v. Southern Railway Co., [1927] A.C. 430; 96 L.J.K.B. 597; 136 L.T. 513; Digest Supp.
- (4) Butterfield v. Forrester (1809), 11 East 60; 1 Man. & G. 571 n; 36 Digest 112, 745.
- (5) Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; Digest Supp.
- (6) Lewis v. Denye, [1940] 3 All E.R. 299; [1940] A.C. 921; 109 L.J.K.B. 817; 163 L.T. 249; Digest Supp.
- (7) Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; Digest Supp.
- (8) Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] 1 K.B. 50; 173 L.T. 330; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from HILBERY, J. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD OAKSEY, L.J.

Edgedale for the workman.

Beney, K.C., and H. C. Leon for the employers.

LORD OAKSEY, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of HILBERY, J., in an action brought by a workman under the Factories Act, 1937, and the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196). HILBERY, J. decided the case in favour of the defendants, the employers, on the general ground that the accident had been caused entirely by the workman's own negligence, but, in case another court should take a different view, he assessed the damages at £600.

The workman, who was a man of great experience and skill in woodworking, was working on a circular saw. This saw was provided by the defendants with a guard, but it is common ground that the guard was not in accordance with the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, because it did not extend from the top of the riving knife to a point as low as practicable at the cutting edge of the saw within the meaning of reg. 10 (c). The workman, according to his own evidence, did not like using a guard which was placed low down. He said that he was unable to see the wood he was cutting if the guard was put down as low as it was able to go. Therefore, instead of putting it down as low as possible, he kept it some 3½ inches up. On the day in question the wood chattered for some reason, his hand was thrown upwards and forwards and struck against the circular saw, and part of one of his fingers was cut off.

The workman's case is based on reg. 21 and 23 of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922. Regulation 21 provides :

The guards and other appliances required by these regulations shall be maintained in an efficient state and shall be constantly kept in position while the machinery is in motion, except when, owing to the nature of the work being done, the use of the guards or appliances is rendered impracticable. The guards shall be so adjusted as to enable the work to be carried on without unnecessary risk.

In the first place, the workman contends that reg. 21 imposes an absolute duty on the employer, in addition to the absolute duty imposed by reg. 10 (c), to keep the guard, which must extend in the way that I have explained under reg. 10 (c), so adjusted that the work can be carried on without unnecessary risk. He argues that, if a guard is of an improper form of construction, it is impossible for the employer to fulfil his obligation under reg. 21. Regulation 23 is headed "Duties of persons employed" and says :

Every person employed on a woodworking machine shall (i) use and maintain in proper adjustment the guards provided in accordance with these regulations . . . except when owing to the nature of the work being done, the use of the guards or appliances is rendered impracticable.

The workman contends that that obligation never came into existence, because there was no guard provided in accordance with the regulations. There is no doubt that the duty to adjust this guard had been entrusted to the workman. He was a man of experience, and, with working woodworking machinery, it is almost essential that the men working the machine should adjust it themselves.

A The workman maintains that there was no duty imposed on him by the regulations to do the adjusting and that the duty which rested on the employers could not be fulfilled because the guard was an improper guard. The workman also argues that, apart from the regulations, there being this breach of statutory duty on the part of the employers, he is freed from any duty at common law to take the care which an ordinary and reasonable man would take, and that, therefore, B however negligent he may be, he would not have been disentitled before the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, from bringing an action. He goes so far as to say that, since the Act of 1945, his negligence would not come into operation under that Act at all.

There are other facts in the case which are, in my opinion, of crucial importance, because, apart from the employer's breach of statutory duty in not supplying a proper guard, there was evidence which clearly establishes that the employers C had not carried out their duties of adjustment and of supervision under reg. 21.

The employers contended, first, that, if this guard had been adjusted as low as it would go, there would have been no accident. There was evidence to that effect; that was the view which the judge took; and counsel for the employers said that that showed the workman was alone to blame. He further argued that, in any event, the workman cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and he D cited a number of cases in support of that proposition, one of which was Gordon v. Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police (1) and Holman v. Johnson (2) (see 1 Cowp. 341, at p. 343). He also referred to Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co. (3). Next, he relied on the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio, and said that it was clear that the workman had aided and abetted the employers in their breach of statutory duty under reg. 21 in failing to adjust the machine, and that, therefore, the statute being in the nature of a criminal statute, that aiding and E abetting in the commission of a crime made the case one from which no action could properly arise. He said further that the workman had not discharged the onus of proving that the cause of the accident was the employers' failure to perform their statutory duty, and that, in any event, applying the rule laid down by the statute of 1945, the damages ought to be apportioned as 99 per cent. to the fault of the workman and as 1 per cent. to the fault of the employers.

F The Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, s. 1 (1), lays down a new rule in these words:

Where any person suffers damage as the result partly of his own fault and partly of the fault of any other person or persons, a claim in respect of that damage shall not be defeated by reason of the fault of the person suffering the damage, but the damages recoverable in respect thereof shall be reduced to such extent as the court thinks just and equitable having regard to the claimant's share in the responsibility G for the damage.

The principal difficulty in this case seems to me to be that here, the fault of the employers in not supplying a proper guard having been found by the judge to have had nothing to do with the accident, the other allegation of breach of duty against the employers is that they did not adjust the guard, but entrusted the adjustment to the workman himself. It does not seem to me a question which it is necessary for me to decide whether the workman, having undertaken H the duty of adjusting the guard himself, could assert that he had not adjusted it and had gone on knowingly with it improperly adjusted, but was entitled to set up a breach of statutory duty against the employers, because the evidence clearly establishes that the employers' foreman was negligent in that he knew that the guard was not being adjusted as well as it could be adjusted and yet he left the adjustment to the workman. That was a continuing breach of the statutory duty imposed by reg. 21 on the employers. Therefore, that is a breach of duty which the workman can assert. It being impossible to prove exactly how an accident with a circular saw happens, it would not be right to rely on the suggestion that there is no affirmative evidence sufficient to discharge the onus that the foreman's negligence substantially contributed to the accident, and, therefore, I think that the Act of 1945 does come into operation, and that the workman was guilty of fault within the meaning of that Act, not necessarily a fault under reg. 23, but a fault in failing to observe the care which a prudent person would have taken for his own safety. There is nothing in the Factories Acts or in the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, which, in my view, exempts him from responsibility from a lack of due care on his own part. Therefore, I think these damages of £600 ought to be apportioned between the employers and the workman and, in my view, they should be borne equally by each of the two parties. For these reasons I think that the appeal should be allowed.

TUCKER, L.J. : This accident happened on July 5, 1945. If it had happened three weeks earlier I should have agreed in the result with the judgment of HILBERY, J., because at that time contributory negligence on the part of the workman or negligence on his part causing the accident would have put him out of court, but the accident happened after the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, had come into force, and, therefore, it now becomes necessary to consider the effect of that Act on these claims, which are brought under the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922.

I propose, first, to state the conclusions that I have arrived at and then to examine some of the authorities and see whether those conclusions are inconsistent with any authority binding on this court. I need not repeat the facts save to mention that it is conceded that the guard on this machine was at all times in breach of reg. 21 of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, and that it was not possible to adjust the guard so as to enable the work to be carried on without unnecessary risk. Whenever this machine was being used by the workman or by anybody else, the employers were continuously and at all times in breach of their duty to maintain that machine in proper adjustment. That leaves for further consideration whether or not the workman was guilty of any breach of statutory duty or of negligence. Regulation 23 does not come into the picture because it lays down that every person employed on a wood-working machine shall use and maintain in proper adjustment the guards provided in accordance with the regulations. If a person employed on wood-working machinery has not been provided with a machine with guards in accordance with these regulations, he cannot use and maintain them in proper adjustment. That still leaves open the question whether or not the workman was absolved from the common law duty of using ordinary reasonable care for his own safety.

In my opinion, therefore, the employers were in breach of their statutory duty and that breach contributed to the accident which resulted. Furthermore, I agree with what has been said by LORD OAKSEY, L.J., that in any event the employers were negligent and in breach of their duty to provide adequate supervision over the work carried on in the factory, and that was a contributory cause to the accident which happened. The next matter for consideration is whether the workman is precluded from recovering anything by reason of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945. If this accident had happened before June 15, 1945, [when the Act came into force] he would have failed because he was clearly guilty of contributory negligence. He was an experienced man who knew the regulations, he was the properly appointed person to work this machine, and he owed a duty at common law to take reasonable care. To hold otherwise would be to produce very remarkable results and would be contrary to what was said by LORD ELLENBOROUGH in Butterfield v. Forrester (4) (11 East. 60, at p. 61) (which was recently referred to by LORD ATKIN in Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722, at p. 730) :

A party is not to cast himself upon an obstruction which has been made by the fault of another, and avail himself of it, if he do not himself use common and ordinary caution to be in the right. In cases of persons riding on what is considered to be the wrong side of the road, that would not authorise another purposely to ride up against them. One person being in fault will not dispense with another's using ordinary care for himself. Two things must concur to support this action, an obstruction in the road by the fault of the defendant, and no want of ordinary care to avoid it on the part of the plaintiff.

I can see no reason why those observations should not apply in cases which arise under the Factories Act, 1937.

I think that view is supported by the fact that this question has in recent years been more than once before the House of Lords, who have decided that contributory negligence is open to the employers by way of defence in cases of this kind. I would refer to a passage in the speech of LORD SIMON in Lewis v. Denye (6), dealing with these regulations ([1940] A.C. 921, at p. 929) :

A I am not satisfied that a breach of regulations for dangerous trades imposing duties on the workman in all cases automatically furnishes a defence to the employer whom he sues for damages for breach of statutory duties imposed on the employer. The workman's breach may, however, be such as to provide evidence of his negligence. And here, apart altogether from reg. 23, negligence of the appellant which caused the accident was in my opinion made out.

I think that that applies in the present case.

B I would emphasise that this is not a case where the only breach on the part of the employers is one committed by the workman himself. There may be cases where a proper machine is provided, as in Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co. Ltd. (7), and is originally adjusted properly and there is delegation under reg. 23 to a properly instructed and skilful man, who fails to adjust the machine. Different considerations may then arise. There the sole statutory breach is due to the act of the man himself. Here, in my view, apart altogether from the act of the workman, there was a continuous breach on the part of the employers by reason of the fact that they supplied a machine which could not be properly adjusted and which was, therefore, at all times out of adjustment and in breach of reg. 21.

I must refer to one or two cases which have been cited to see whether the decision at which I have arrived is contrary to them. The first of them is Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (7). That action was brought under these regulations and the headnote accurately states ([1945] 1 All E.R. 531) :

D The appellant, an experienced circular saw operator, was employed by the respondent company to operate a circular saw in its factory. The guard of the saw complied with the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, and it was part of the appellant's duties to adjust the guard to his requirements. At the material time the appellant was cutting planks which varied in thickness and he had so adjusted the guard as to allow the thickest part of the plank free passage. Whilst sawing the wood the appellant's finger passed under the guard and was injured on the saw. The appellant brought an action against the respondent company alleging breach of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, reg. 21 and/or breach of common law duty.

E LORD GODDARD, in giving his judgment, after explaining that the company could only carry out their obligations under these regulations by delegating their duties to somebody, said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 531, at p. 534) :

F The plaintiff adjusted the guard at what he considered was a suitable height to enable him to cut through this plank which was of varying or irregular thickness without stopping the machine. For myself I should have thought, provided, of course, that he had not left a wholly unnecessary gap, that he would put an adjustment on the guard which, in the circumstances, was practicable. But in any case it seems to me that the delegated duty had been put on him to adjust this guard and if he did not adjust the guard in such a way as was safe, it seems to be pretty clear—and that was the foundation of the decision in Vincent v. Southern Railway Co. (3)—that he cannot complain of it. He cannot take advantage of his own wrong and say to his employer : "Although you left me to adjust it and I did not adjust it, therefore I am going to claim damages against you." For myself I should say that there was no negligence in anybody in this case nor any breach of statutory duty. The employer had provided a perfectly proper machine and a perfectly proper guard. He had delegated the duty of seeing that the guard was properly adjusted to a perfectly competent person. He used the guard because the use of the guard was practicable and he adjusted it to such an extent that he considered it practicable for the work which he had to do. It does seem to me that if you are cutting one of these boards, which was to some extent of irregular thickness, that the guard was not unduly high. It was adjusted as far as practicable for the thickest part of the wood to pass through. Under those circumstances it seems to me there is no breach of statutory duty on the part of the employer. If it could be said there was, then the plaintiff, who was the person who had the duty of adjusting this guard, cannot be heard to say that he was not negligent or in breach of his statutory duty in doing what he did. I think, therefore, on the whole that this judgment was perfectly right and the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

I would emphasise, first, that LORD GODDARD was finding there had been no breach of statutory duty by anybody, which differentiates the case at once, and, secondly, that when he is saying that in any event "he did not adjust the guard in such a way as was safe, it seems to be pretty clear . . . that he cannot complain of it" and refers to Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co. (3), it was not necessary for him to consider whether or not under the Act of 1945 there might have been negligence or breach of statutory duty which would necessitate an apportionment. I think the language used by DU PARCQ, L.J., shows that that is the position. Speaking of the defendants he said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 531, at p. 535):

I think they are entitled to say "The fault is really yours and not ours. We were quite entitled to rely on you. True, if somebody else had been injured by any failure on your part to fulfil your obligation we should have had to pay the penalty, we should have been responsible to him. We cannot rid ourselves of our obligation. But it is quite absurd to think that if you, who are really the person to blame because you were reasonably and properly entrusted by us with this duty, failed to carry it out, therefore, we have got to pay damages to you."

That, again, leaves entirely at issue what the position would have been under the Act of 1945 in the case to which LORD GODDARD referred, Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co. (3). There the House of Lords held that there was an absolute duty on the railway company to provide a look-out man and to see that he was instructed to act. It was a case where the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, provided (see S.R. & O., 1902, No. 616, r. 9):

. . . the railway companies shall . . . in all cases where any danger is likely to arise, provide persons or apparatus for the purpose of maintaining a good look-out or for giving warning against any train or engine approaching such men so working . . .

The House held that that was an absolute obligation on the part of the company and that they did not fulfil it merely by making the necessary regulations. In holding that in those circumstances the widow of the injured man, whose duty it was to provide one of his gang to act as a look-out man, could not succeed, language was used which has been relied on in this case for the proposition that in such circumstances the workman would not be able to recover even after the Act of 1945. VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., in making the leading speech in that case, with which LORD ATKINSON and LORD SHAW agreed, said ([1927] A.C. 430, at p. 437):

The duty of a company in any case of danger is an absolute duty to provide a look-out man and to see that he is instructed to act; and if in any case it were proved that the foreman to whom, under the company's regulations, this duty was entrusted had failed in his duty and had not appointed a look-out man, the company might well be held liable for injury happening to any member of the gang other than the foreman himself. This does not mean that, in my opinion, the company in charging the foreman or ganger with the duty of deciding whether danger exists and of appointing a member of his gang to act as a look-out is taking an unreasonable course. Being a corporation, they must necessarily entrust that duty to some agent, and I see no sufficient reason why the foreman or ganger (who will be on the spot) should not be selected for that duty; but nevertheless if he should fail in that duty, the company may be liable for the consequences of the default to any person not concerned in it.

That is relied on by counsel for the employers. LORD SUMNER, after saying that he agreed with the view of the Court of Appeal that the plaintiff was in a dilemma, said ([1927] A.C. 430, at p. 441):

If Vincent failed to post a look-out or, being the look-out himself, failed to be duly vigilant, he contributed to his own death.

In that case it was not necessary for the House of Lords, any more than it was necessary for LORD GODDARD in Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., to express a view of what the position would have been under the Act of 1945, and I do not read any of the observations of their Lordships as compelling me to hold that the workman in the present case is entirely out of court by reason of his negligence. I think he was negligent and that that negligence contributed to the accident, as did the breach of statutory duty and common law negligence on the part of the employers. I, therefore, think that this is a case under the new Act for apportioning the damages. I agree with the figure proposed by my Lord and I will only say that I can quite conceive in a Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (7) type of case where a competent skilled man is left in charge of a properly constructed machine and there is proper delegation to him under reg. 23 and adequate supervision in the factory, if he is injured, I can imagine that some courts might take the view that somewhere in the neighbourhood of 90 per cent. might possibly fall on the workman. This case on its facts is to be distinguished altogether from a case of that kind. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

A COHEN, L.J. : It seems to me beyond dispute that the employers committed a breach of the statutory duty imposed on them by r. 21 of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922. It is also clear that if the duty had been fulfilled the accident could not have happened. In those circumstances, it seems to me that the position defined by SCOTT, L.J., in giving the decision of this court in Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros., Ltd. (8) applies ([1945] 2 All E.R. 547, at p. 549) :

B If there is a definite breach of a safety provision imposed on the occupier of a factory, and a workman is injured in a way which could result from the breach, the onus of proof shifts on to the employer to show that the breach was not the cause.

How do the employers seek to discharge that onus ? First, they rely on the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio. It is not necessary for the workman to allege or prove any of the facts which are alleged to form the turpis causa, but it did transpire in the course of his evidence that he was responsible for the position in which the guard was found. Counsel for the employers argued

C that the workman was aiding and abetting the employers in the neglect of their duty under reg. 21 and that, accordingly, the words of LORD MANSFIELD were applicable (see Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowper, 341, at p. 343) :

If, from the plaintiff's own stating or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa, or the transgression of a positive law of this country, there the court says he has no right to be assisted.

D I feel some doubt whether the workman could be said to be aiding and abetting the employers' breach of duty, but, even assuming in favour of the employers that they established the requisite facts, I still think this argument is ill-founded. The maxim ex turpi causa is based on public policy, and it seems to me plain that on the facts of this case public policy, far from requiring that this action shall be dismissed, requires that it shall be entertained and decided on its merits.

E The policy of the Act of 1945 makes it plain that such a defence as was put forward by counsel for the employers in this case would be inconsistent with the intention of Parliament when it passed the Act. Alternatively, counsel for the employers says that the workman was the sole cause of the accident, and he relies on the cases which have been dealt with by TUCKER, L.J.—Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (7), and Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co. (3). Smith v. A. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (7) is distinguishable because there was in that case no breach of statutory duty. That seems to me a most material distinction. As F I see the facts of this case, the workman is not seeking in any sense to take advantage of his own wrong. He is taking advantage of the independent continuing breach by the employers of their statutory duty under reg. 21, a breach of duty coincident with his own negligence, assuming that to be established, but continuing up to the very moment of the accident. Even if I were wrong on this point I should be still of opinion, on the evidence, that it was impossible to say that the workman was solely responsible for this accident.

G The last point raised by counsel for the employers related only to the question of contributory negligence. He said the workman owed a duty of care towards the employers. I agree so entirely with the reasons given by my brethren for holding the workman guilty of contributory negligence that I need not add anything on that point. The workman, therefore, being guilty of contributory negligence, I agree with my brethren that, for the reasons they have given, the damages should be apportioned fifty-fifty in accordance with the provisions of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945.

H Solicitors : Shaen, Roscoe & Co. (for the workman) ; Goldingham, Wellington & Co. (for the employers).

Appeal allowed.

[Reported by R. L. ZIAR, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

FRANKLIN AND OTHERS v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Henn Collins, J.) February 10, 11, 20, 1947.]

Town and Country Planning—New town—Duty of Minister—Quasi-judicial capacity—Need to support proposed Order by evidence at public enquiry—New Towns Act, 1946 (c. 68), s. 1 (1); sched. I (3)

Pursuant to the New Towns Act, 1946, sched. I, para. 3, the Minister of Town and Country Planning held a public local inquiry into objections to a proposed Order under s. 1 (1) of that Act, called the Stevenage New Town Designation Order, 1946, by which Stevenage was designated as a "new town" within the Act. Before the New Towns Act became law, the Minister had stated that Stevenage was to be the first of the "new towns." At the inquiry, no evidence in support of the Order was adduced, and the objections then made were subsequently considered and rejected by the Minister. He dealt in writing with the substance of all objections except that directed to the difficulties of water supply and sewage disposal, with regard to which he said he was taking advice. Although there was no indication how the outstanding objection was to be dealt with, the Minister confirmed the Order.

Sched. I, para. 3 of the Act provides: "If any objection is duly made to the proposed Order and it is not withdrawn, the Minister shall, before making the Order, cause a public local inquiry to be held with respect thereto, and shall consider the report of the person by whom the inquiry is held." By s. 1 (1): "If the Minister is satisfied . . . that it is expedient . . . he may make an Order designating [an] area as the site of the proposed new town."

HELD: (i) the fact that the Minister did not support his proposed Order by evidence at the inquiry did not make it ultra vires, as the word "thereto" in sched. I, para. 3, qualifies the word "objection" and not the word "Order."

(ii) the wording of s. 1 (1) should not be interpreted as bestowing arbitrary power depending solely on the Minister's state of mind.

(iii) in considering the objections at the public inquiry the Minister was bound to bring an open mind to bear on the controversy and to act in a quasi-judicial and not merely an administrative capacity, and, as it appeared from the Minister's words and conduct that he had not had an open mind, the Order involved a denial of natural justice and must be quashed.

[AS TO QUASI-JUDICIAL POWERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 284—288, paras. 604—606; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 94—98, Nos. 697—711.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Jackson v. Barry Railway Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 238; 68 L.T. 472; 2 Digest 379, 424.
- (2) Liversidge v. Anderson, [1942] 3 All E.R. 338; [1942] A.C. 206; 110 L.J.K.B. 724; 116 L.T. 1; Digest Supp.
- (3) Local Government Board v. Arlidge, [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 38 Digest 97, 708.

Appeal under the New Towns Act, 1946.

On Nov. 11, 1946, the respondent, the Minister of Town and Country Planning, after having held a public local inquiry, made the Stevenage New Town Designation Order, 1946. The appellants, William Vernon Franklin, George Leonard Hearn and Michael Robert Tetley, residents of Stevenage, objected to the proposed Order, and their grounds of appeal against it now were (a) that the Minister had not acted within his powers in making the Order; and (b) that, in considering the objections to the proposed Order and deciding on them, the Minister was exercising a quasi-judicial function, and that he failed to carry out his duty to give the objections fair and proper consideration. The facts appear in the judgment.

Capewell, K.C., and Squibb for the appellants.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and H. L. Parker for the Minister.

Cur adv. vult.

Feb. 20. HENN COLLINS, J., read a judgment in which he stated the grounds of appeal, and continued: The first of the objections—that the Minister acted ultra vires—depends on the proper construction of para. 3 of sched. I to the New Towns Act, 1946. The words are these: “If any objection is duly made to the proposed Order, and it is not withdrawn, the Minister shall, before making the Order, cause a public local inquiry to be held with respect thereto and shall consider the report of the person by whom the inquiry is held.” The contention of the appellants is that the word “thereto” qualifies both the objection and the proposed Order, from which they say it would follow that the proposed Order, being a subject of the inquiry, must be supported by evidence at the hearing, and no such evidence was adduced. I do not think it necessary for me to decide whether that consequence would follow if the proposed Order were made the subject of inquiry, because I do not think, on the true construction of the paragraph, that the word “thereto” refers to the “proposed Order” in the phrase “objection to the proposed Order.” I regard the words “to the proposed Order,” as being merely a definition of the objection with which the paragraph is concerned. Read like this, the paragraph is not ambiguous. Once the objection is identified, the words, “to the proposed Order,” can be omitted, and the paragraph would then read thus: “If any objection is duly made and is not withdrawn, the Minister shall, before making the Order, cause a public inquiry to be held with respect thereto . . .” That, in my judgment, is the meaning of the paragraph.

The second objection is more formidable. It raises, first, the question whether the Minister, acting under the New Towns Act, 1946, has, in relation to a public inquiry for which sched. I to that Act provides, merely ministerial acts to perform, or whether his duties are at any stage judicial, or what has been termed, in relation to somewhat similar legislation, “quasi-judicial.” If the true view is that his function is not only administrative but also judicial, the question arises whether he acted in his adjudication, to quote the words of BOWEN, L.J., from Jackson v. Barry Railway Co. (1), “as an honest judge of this very special and exceptional kind.”

It is a commonplace feature of this class of case that a Minister should exercise both ministerial and quasi-judicial functions, and it is often difficult to draw a line between the two. Here, if I accepted the argument of the Attorney-General, no such difficulty arises, for he contends that at no stage is the Minister put in a quasi-judicial position, but that he acts throughout administratively, not only in making the original Order and in having a public inquiry at which all concerned may state and elaborate their objections, but also in considering the report of the officer who holds the inquiry and in deciding whether or not to confirm his original Order.

If that is the true view of this legislation, the result, put it how you will, is that an objector, who may have everything at stake, has legislative permission to fulminate, but can do no more. However real his grievance, it can be forced on him without any consideration of the merits of his case. Although invited to state his case in public, he cannot secure that what he says will be weighed and considered on its merits, or, indeed, at all. This is, at any rate, a sturdy contention, particularly in view of the line which the courts have consistently taken in respect of the rights of objectors under earlier legislation providing for public inquiries. One of the functions of the court is to stand between the executive and the members of the public so far as the common law requires and legislation permits, and, if it sees that being done which is contrary to natural justice, then, within those limits, it will intervene. It is not, and should not be astute to find in legislation reason or occasion for curtailing the jurisdiction, nor should it assume that legislation involves anything which is contrary to natural justice. Natural justice—a sense of fairness—may be impossible to define, but it is none the less real, and is deeply embedded in the common law, and it would take, in my view, explicit words in a statute, or irresistible inference from the words used, to abrogate the rights which flow from the common law conception of natural justice. The words relied on as giving the Minister an arbitrary power, that is to say, a power tempered only by public opinion so far as it can make itself effectively heard, are to be found in s. 1 (1) of the Act. Omitting what is immaterial for this purpose, the words are: “If the Minister is satisfied . . . that it is expedient . . . he may make an Order designating an area as the site of the proposed new town.” As was pointed out in Liversidge v. Anderson (2), words of that kind may either mean that the Minister is to be satisfied on reasonable grounds, in which case his powers are not arbitrary in the sense which I have indicated, because they rest on something other than the state of his own mind, namely, the existence apart from his opinion of a state of things, or they may mean that the state of his mind—his “satisfaction”—is the sole basis of his power.

The answer to the question in which of these two senses such words are to be read requires a conspectus of the legislation in which they occur. In this Act I find substantially the same provisions made for the making and hearing of objections to the action of the Minister as have appeared in a number of statutes in which there is no colour for suggesting that the powers of the Minister are arbitrary. Under such provisions it has been held time and again that the functions of the Minister concerned are quasi-judicial and not arbitrary. The two conceptions are incompatible and I have no doubt that the words which I have quoted from the section are not intended to, and do not, mean that the Minister's power depends solely and absolutely on his state of mind. To take any other view would reduce the provisions for objections, the holding of a local public inquiry, the report of the officer who holds it, and the consideration of that report by the Minister to an absurdity, because, when all has been said and done, the Minister could disregard the whole proceedings and do just as he pleased. The Attorney-General argued that that was, indeed, the position, and that the sole use of the liberty to make objections was that the objectors (I am quoting his words) might “blow off steam” and so rally public opinion to which alone the Minister might bow.

The Attorney-General enforced his argument on the words of s. 1, and sought to discount the considerations to which the provisions as to objections give rise, by contending that to saddle the Minister with any functions which are not administrative but are quasi-judicial is to make him a judge in his own cause, and that that is so impossible a position that it is an irresistible inference that his functions are only administrative. He must have formed a view before he makes his original order. That is required of him by s. 1 of the Act. It is the correctness of that view which the appellants challenge. The Minister's view, the Attorney-General contends, is a matter of policy—the decision of the government, and, I suppose he would add, as such, immutable at the instance of objectors. I myself prefer the view that all matters of policy are embodied in the Act, and that its application to a particular place is not a matter of policy, but, be that as it may, the fact remains that, if there is a public inquiry, the Minister is bound to consider the report of it made by the officer who presides at the inquiry. But to what end if his first view of the matter is immutable? Why should Parliament have required the Minister, in a part of the Act which deals with the rights of objectors, to consider the report unless it be, to some extent at any rate, if not wholly, for the protection of the objector?

No doubt, the Minister is put in a difficult position. To act fairly in a matter about which one has, before hearing and considering all the evidence and arguments, formed and expressed a view, requires a firm mind and enough moral courage to say one was mistaken. But are those qualities out of reach of a Minister of the Crown? I should be loth to think so, or to suppose that those who passed the New Towns Act did not have that faith in the Minister. I see nothing in this statute which drives me to conclude that the Minister in giving his decision after a public inquiry, is acting only in an administrative capacity. He was bound, in my judgment, to bring to bear on the controversy between himself, as Minister, and the objectors, as the complainants of his administration, a mind open to conviction.

The next question is, did the Minister do so? If I am to judge by what he said at the public meeting which was held very shortly before the Bill, then published, became an Act of Parliament, I could have no doubt but that any issue raised by objectors was forejudged. The Minister's language leaves no doubt about that. He was not saying that there must be and shall be satellite towns, but he was saying that Stevenage was to be the first of them. But when he made that speech, and gave his answers to questions which were asked, he had no administrative functions in relation to the Act in question, for the Act had not then been passed. Though that was his attitude two days before the Bill received its second reading, it is on the objectors to prove that the Minister was in a like mind, or, at least, had not an open mind, from and after, at latest, the inception of the public inquiry, which was held in Oct., 1946.

I was invited to say that, even if the Minister was ever required to act judicially, it was enough if he fairly considered the objections, and that at that point his judicial capacity ceased so that he could then properly allow the administrator, at the critical moment of decision, to get the upper hand. I think that on further consideration the Attorney-General receded from that contention, but, whether he did or did not, I cannot accept it. It is idle to say that a judge has functioned properly if all that he has done is to see that the case is conducted in seeming fairness (without, for example, hearing one party behind the back of the other and so on), and even to apply his mind to the evidence, unless he has also brought an open mind to the decision. Any other view would reduce the necessity for fairness, or the appearance of it, to a farce.

This is to say not that, in making his decision, he must exclude from his consideration any of the material which was in his mind before the objections were made, but that he must weigh all fairly together. If objections have been raised which, in his honest opinion, are met by other information, albeit extrajudicial, he may simply overrule the objections and the objectors cannot complain. If he says nothing, but simply confirms the Order, this court might have little, if any, ground for saying that he had not acted fairly in the light of all his information. In other words, the objectors, as appellants in this court, might fail to discharge the burden of proof. It would, however, be lamentable, as the Attorney-General was quick to acknowledge, if a Minister of the Crown were to take refuge, as it were, in silence, for nothing could be better calculated to create the impression among the public that the inquiry was a mere sham and that all the trouble and expense of the objectors had been foredoomed to futility. As I have no reason to anticipate any such conduct on the part of a responsible Minister, I content myself with saying that this court might share the public impression.

In this case, however, as was only to be expected of him, the Minister has dealt, in writing, with the substance of the objections—with one exception, namely, that directed to the difficulties of water supply and sewage disposal. It is obvious that those difficulties must be met before the scheme can go through. The Minister acknowledges that they have not been met, and that he is taking advice as to how it can be done. Non constat that any way will be found, and yet with that fundamental problem still outstanding, the Minister confirms his Order. How can it be said that he weighed the objection with an open mind when he acknowledges that he did not, and does not, know the force of it? When, therefore, I ask myself whether the objectors have satisfied me that, from and after the inception of the inquiry up to and including the moment at which the Minister decided to confirm his Order, he had not an open mind, my answer is that they have. I am convinced that he did not consider the question: "Aye or No should the Order be confirmed?" with an open mind, but that he meant to confirm it whatever the force of the objections might be, trusting that some solution would be found. This, in my judgment, involves a denial of natural justice, and I, accordingly, quash the order, with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. (for appellants); Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re NORMAN, ANDREW v. VINE

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), February 19, 1947.]

Charities—Charitable purpose—Gift to editors of missionary magazine—"For such objects as they may think fit"—Trustees of charity.

The testatrix for over 50 years had been engaged in missionary work in China in association with a religious body known as the Brethren and being in some measure under the direction of the editors of a periodical entitled Echoes of Service and financially supported by and through them. The evidence showed that the editors were in reality trustees and treasurers of the churches of the Brethren as regarded their missionary activities. "Echoes of Service" was not only the title of a periodical, but had for many years been the accepted designation of a charity for (inter alia) distributing through the editors of the periodical gifts sent to them for the charitable objects of the Brethren. By her will, dated Sept. 23, 1931, the testatrix who died on Feb. 11, 1945, bequeathed "the residue of her moneys to the editors of the missionary periodical called Echoes of Service to be applied by them or him (sic.) for such objects as they may think fit."

HELD: the bequest was a valid gift to the editors for the use and benefit of the charity or charitable organisation known as "Echoes of Service."

Re Garrard ([1907] 1 Ch. 382) applied.

[AS TO GIFTS FOR RELIGIOUS PURPOSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 118-122, paras. 155-160; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 248-254, Nos. 74-160.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Dunne v. Byrne, [1912] A.C. 407; 81 L.J.P.C. 202; 106 L.T. 394; 28 T.L.R. 257; 56 Sol. Jo. 324 P.C.; 8 Digest, 294, 718.
- (2) Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Farley, [1939] A.C. 430; [1939] 3 All E.R. 491; 108 L.J. Ch. 307; 161 L.T. 103; 55 T.L.R. 943 H.L.; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Delany, Conoley v. Quick, [1902] 2 Ch. 642; 71 L.J. Ch. 811; 87 L.T. 46; 51 W.R. 27; 18 T.L.R. 741; 8 Digest 245, 50.
- (4) Re Garrard, Gordon v. Craigie, [1907] 1 Ch. 382; 72 L.J. Ch. 240; 96 L.T. 357; 23 T.L.R. 256; 51 Sol. Jo. 209; 8 Digest 294, 716.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether upon the true construction of the will of the testatrix a bequest "to the editors of the missionary periodical called Echoes of Service to be applied by them or him (sic.) for such objects as they may think fit" (a) was a valid gift to the editors beneficially, or (b) was a gift to them for the charitable purposes of Echoes of Service, or (c) that it failed for uncertainty. The facts are set out in the judgment.

Bower Alcock for the plaintiff (the executrix under the will).

J. Neville Gray, K.C., and W. G. H. Cook for the editors of Echoes of Service.

A. L. Ungood-Thomas for next-of-kin.

H. O. Danckwerts for the Attorney-General.

VAISEY, J.: By her will, dated Sept. 23, 1931, the testatrix, Ruth Norman, describing herself as a missionary in China, appointed her niece, the plaintiff, her executrix. After some legacies, including one of £50 to Henrietta Dunphy whom she calls her "dear fellow-worker in China," she in effect bequeathed what she designates as "the residue of her moneys to the editors of the missionary periodical called Echoes of Service to be applied by them or him (sic.) for such objects as they may think fit." It is these words which I have to construe.

The testatrix died at the Shanghai General Hospital on Feb. 11, 1945, and her will was proved by the plaintiff on Jan. 28, 1946. Her estate consisted of certain investments and moneys, and the summons raises the question whether they are all of them "moneys" within the meaning of the will. With that question I can deal at once by saying that they are, regard being had to the use of the word "money" in a later part of the will. The first three defendants are the present editors of the periodical called Echoes of Service. The other defendants are the testatrix's statutory next of kin and the Attorney-General.

It appears that the testatrix had for many years been a devoted member of the religious body of evangelical christians known as the Brethren, and for over 50 years she had been engaged in missionary work in China. Missionaries, such as the testatrix, belonging to or associated with the Brethren, appear to be in some measure under the direction of the editors of Echoes of Service and to be financially supported by and through them. Indeed, the evidence shows that the editors are in reality trustees and treasurers of the churches of the Brethren, so far as regards their missionary activities. It is they who receive and dispense contributions for the missions of the Brethren, these amounting in 1945 to upwards of £74,000. It further appears that Echoes of Service is not only the title of a periodical, but that for many years it has been also the accepted designation of a charity for (inter alia) distributing through the editors (usually at their discretion, sometimes for a specified purpose) gifts sent to them for the charitable objects of the Brethren. Such gifts are sent and legacies are bequeathed to them not for their personal benefit, nor even to carry on the publication of the periodical, but in furtherance of the missionary work represented by it. I am told that "Echoes of Service" (in this wide sense) is recognised by the revenue authorities as a charity. It is in evidence that during her 50 years (and more) of service the testatrix was in constant correspondence with the editors and their predecessors in office, and was supported as a missionary by gifts sent to them (among others) on behalf of the churches of the Brethren, and, though she had at the time of her death retired from active service, she was still maintained by funds at the editors' disposal.

I have to consider the meaning and effect of this will, and to decide between three possible results:—(1) that the bequest is a valid gift to the editors beneficially; or (2) that it is a gift to them for the charitable purposes of (putting it shortly) "Echoes of Service"; or (3) that it fails for uncertainty. No case for any general charitable intention can be made out. In two respects the case may be regarded as unusual. In the first place, the legatees, although called the "editors" of a periodical, are, in fact, the trustees, treasurers and managers of a charity. Secondly, the case is not one in which a charity has been supported by a testatrix in her lifetime, but one in which she herself has been supported by the charity.

As regards the first point, if the bequest had been, not to the editors of the periodical, but to the trustees, treasurers and managers of the charity going by the name of the periodical, I think the case would have been clearly distinguishable from such cases as Dunne v. Byrne (1) and Farley v. Westminster Bank (2) where the character or quality of the legatee has been held not to import a charitable intention into the terms of a gift. I think I am justified in the circumstances of the present case in reading the bequest here as made to the trustees, treasurers and managers of the charity and the reference to "objects" as merely indicating that the legacy was to be applied generally to the purposes of that charity and not (for example) exclusively to missionary activities in China: see and compare Re Delany (3). The standard form of bequest which has for some years been recommended by the editors to benevolent testators (see the exhibited Echoes of Service for June, 1946) names the editors as the appropriate legatees exactly as though they were trustees, treasurers or managers of the charity, as, in fact, I conceive that they are.

On the second point, I cannot doubt that the position and powers of the editors were well known to the testatrix, from whom communications were from time to time inserted in the periodical, and I am disposed to think that she may have regarded herself and her fellow-workers as "objects" within the meaning of that word as used in her will. The audited account for 1945, printed in the exhibit I have mentioned, shows that substantially the whole of the funds collected were expended on missionaries and missionary efforts in various parts of the world. In my judgment, the case falls within the principle of Re Garrard (4) where JOYCE, J., held that a bequest to a vicar and churchwardens of a named parish to be applied by them in such manner as they should in their sole discretion think fit was a good charitable gift for ecclesiastical purposes in the parish, and I see no reason why in this case I should draw a distinction between two expressions so similar as "for such objects" and "in such manner." If I am wrong, it may be that the reference to objects, etc., is merely an indication of absolute ownership, with the result that the defendant editors take beneficially, and, were I so to hold, it would make no practical difference, since they offer to undertake to apply the funds for the purposes of their trust. In my view, however, that is not what the testatrix meant nor what she has said.

For the reasons which I have indicated, I do not accept the contention of the next of kin that this is a gift to the editors as individuals on an undefined non-charitable trust resulting in an intestacy. I will declare, first, that the bequest is a valid gift to the defendant editors for the use and benefit of the charity or charitable organisation known and designated as "Echoes of Service," and, secondly, that the moneys of which the residue is so bequeathed include all the items of property mentioned in the originating summons, and I order the costs of all parties to be taxed as between solicitor and client and raised and retained or paid out of the estate of the testatrix in due course of administration.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Doyle, Devonshire & Co. (for the executrix and next of kin); Stunt & Son (for the editors of Echoes of Service); Treasury Solicitor (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re JAMES, LLOYD'S BANK, LTD., AND OTHERS v. ATKINS AND ANOTHER

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), February 12, 1947.]

Executors—Order of application of assets—Variation of statutory order—"Property specifically appropriated for payment of debts"—Property specifically given "after payment of debts"—Exoneration of residue—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 34 (3), sched. I, pt. II.

By his will the testator gave certain property to his trustee on trust to sell and, after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to invest. He then directed that the income was to be paid to his wife during her lifetime, and after her death the capital was to be held on trust for a class of nephews and nieces. The testator gave his residuary estate to his wife absolutely. The question was whether the specific gift or the residuary estate was the primary fund for payment of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses:—

HELD: on the true construction of the will, the testator had specifically appropriated or devised or bequeathed property for the payment of debts, within the meaning of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, sched. I, pt. II, para. 3, and the direction to pay debts out of a particular fund involved an intention to exonerate the residue of his estate. The debts and funeral and testamentary expenses were, accordingly, to be paid out of the property specifically given subject to their payment.

Re Kempthorne (1) and Re Gordon (7) distinguished.

Re Littlewood (5) applied.

[AS TO ORDER OF APPLICATION OF ASSETS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 375—377, para. 704; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp.; Executors and Administrators, Nos. 5908a—5919a.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Kempthorne, Charles v. Kempthorne, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J. Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Atkinson, Webster v. Walter, [1930] 1 Ch. 47; 99 L.J. Ch. 35; 142 L.T. 129; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Lamb, Vipond v. Lamb, [1929] 1 Ch. 722; 98 L.J. Ch. 305; 141 L.T. 60; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Petty, Holliday v. Petty, [1929] 1 Ch. 726; 98 L.J. Ch. 207; 141 L.T. 31; Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Littlewood, Clark v. Littlewood, [1931] 1 Ch. 443; 100 L.J. Ch. 243; 144 L.T. 718; Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Smith, Smith v. Smith, [1913] 2 Ch. 216; 83 L.J. Ch. 13; 108 L.T. 952; 23 Digest, 497, 5640.
- (7) Re Gordon, Watts v. Rationalist Press Association, Ltd., and Kemp, [1940] Ch. 769; [1940] 3 All E.R. 205; 109 L.J. Ch. 289; 163 L.T. 308.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the testator's funeral, testamentary and administration expenses, debts and liabilities were payable, primarily, out of property specifically devised and bequeathed subject to their payment, or out of the residuary estate which was bequeathed to his widow absolutely. The facts and the relevant provisions of the will appear in the judgment.

A. H. Droop for the executors.

R. Gwyn Rees for a nephew.

J. H. Boraston for the widow.

A ROXBURGH, J.: By his will, dated Feb. 28, 1933, Walter James, who died on Dec. 22, 1943, gave, devised and bequeathed unto his executor and trustee, Lloyds Bank, Ltd., his house No. 12, St. Thomas Square, Monmouth, and a parcel of land near Redbrook, together with any money standing to his credit at the bank:

B . . . upon trust as and when the bank shall think fit to sell call in and convert into money the same or such part as shall not consist of money and after payment of my just debts funeral and testamentary expenses to invest the proceeds in trustee securities . . .

